BIBLE EXAMINER.

MOST of the following articles were prepared for, and have appeared in, the Midnight Cry. They are now given in this new form by request. Some additions have been made to them ; particularly to the Exposition of the 8th and 9th chapters of Daniel. These articles are sent forth with a full conviction that they may not travel far before our Lord will have come in the clouds of heaven ; but still, they are sent under the conviction that the injunction of our Lord is to be regarded by all, viz., “ Occupy till I come ;” and, “ Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing.” GEO. STORRS.

Exposition of Nebuchadnezzar's Dream.

DANIEL II.—BY GEORGE STORRS.

There are those who, when they come to hear anything on the appearing of Christ and the end of the world, expect to hear us predict and prophecy on those matters. With predicting and prophesying, in the sense of foretelling future events, I have nothing to do. I take the prophecies that God has given us, and tell you how I understand them, and why I understand them as I do. When this is done, you will judge for yourselves, as each of you must give account for himself, whether the interpretation given accords with the general tenor of the Scriptures. I force not my exposition upon any man. Hear, then judge.

I cannot agree with some who tell us that the prophecies cannot be understood. I consider such language the language of infidelity. What is it but saying—"Revelation is no Revelation?" Revelation is something made known, and, of course, to be understood. To say, that any part of it cannot be understood, is, just so far, to be infidels. There are some men who denounce infidelity with an unsparing hand, who, at the same time, tell us, we cannot understand the prophecies! What is this but infidelity?

A man may say, with truth, that he does not understand the prophecies; but, to say, "they cannot be understood," is a very different matter; and he that does it, whatever his standing, or reputation, is infidel in his principles. Not that he rejects the whole of Revelation; but he denies that a part of the Bible is a revelation.

I most solemnly believe that God designed every part of the Bible should be understood; but not without searching the Scriptures, comparing one part with another, and earnest prayer to Him for that same Spirit, to guide us into truth, which at first inspired holy men to write the sacred pages. Hence, to come to a knowledge of the truth, we must first seek a childlike spirit, and pray much for divine aid. The blessed Jesus said—"I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." First, an humble spirit is necessary. Then, for our encouragement, the Saviour has said, "If you, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him."

Let us then humbly yet confidently seek the aid of the Holy Spirit to give us understanding, and in that light search the Scriptures to know what was the mind of the Spirit that inspired them, and we shall not search in vain.

Let us now examine the second chapter of Daniel. I shall, for the sake of brevity, begin at the 31st verse.

Verses 31—36. "Thou, O king, sawest, and behold, a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee, and the form thereof was terrible. This image's head was of fine gold—his breast and arms of silver—his belly and his thighs of brass—his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out, without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them in pieces: then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors, and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. This is the dream; and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king."

I wish to call the attention of my readers to an inquiry. Where did the stone strike the image? "UPON HIS FEET." Let that be remembered, for I shall have occasion to speak of that fact again.

Verses 37, 38. "Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the heaven, hath he given into thy hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all," [i. e., has given thee universal dominion on earth.] "Thou art [i. e., thy kingdom is,] this head of gold."

Babylon was the first kingdom of universal empire. It was founded by Nimrod, the great grandson of Noah. See Genesis x. 8—10. It lasted near seventeen hundred years, though under different names; sometimes called Babylon, sometimes Assyria, and sometimes Chaldea. It extended from Nimrod to Belshazzar, who was its last king.

Verse 39, first part. "And after thee shall arise another kingdom, inferior to thee." What kingdom succeeded Babylon? See chapter v. 28: "Thy kingdom [Babylon] is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians."

The Medo-Persian kingdom, then, was the second universal kingdom, and was represented by the "breast and arms of silver."

Verse 39, last part. "And another third kingdom of brass shall arise, which shall bear rule over all the earth." What kingdom was this? See chapter viii. verses 5—7, 21. Here we learn that Grecia conquered the Medo-Persian kingdom and became a kingdom of universal empire. This took place under Alexander. Here, then, we have the third kingdom, which was represented by the brass of the image.

Verse 40. And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron: forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things; and as iron that breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise."

What kingdom is this? It is generally admitted to be the Roman kingdom. It is a universal kingdom, that is to break in pieces all that went before it. Rome alone answers the description. That did have universal empire. See Luke ii. 1. "And it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cesar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed."—Who was Cesar Augustus? A Roman Emperor. Here, then, we have the fourth kingdom, represented by the "legs of iron."

Verse 41. "And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes part of potter's clay and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided." What kingdom shall be divided? "The fourth kingdom." Was it divided? It was. The western empire of Rome, between the years

A. D. 356 and 483, was divided into ten divisions, or kingdoms, viz.: 1. The Huns in Hungary, A. D. 356. 2. The Ostrogoths, in Mysia, 377. 3. The Visigoths, in Pannonia, 378. 4. The Franks, in France, 407. 5. The Vandals, in Africa, 407. 6. The Sueves and Alans, in Gascoigne and Spain, 407. 7. The Burgundians, in Burgundy, 407. 8. The Heruli and Rugii, in Italy, 476. 9. The Saxons and Angles, in Britain, 476. 10. The Lombards, in Germany, 483.* Thus the "kingdom was divided" as designated by the ten "toes." "But," after its division, "there shall be in it the strength of iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with the miry clay."

The Roman, or "iron" power, through the influence and authority of Papacy, or Papal Rome, stretched itself among the "clay" so as to be "mixed with" it, and thereby kept up "the strength of iron."

Verses 42, 43. "And as the toes of the feet were part of iron and part of clay; so the kingdom" [Roman kingdom] "shall be partly strong and partly broken. And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they" [Romanism] "shall mingle themselves" [i. e., Rome Papal] "with the seed of men; but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay."

How exactly has all this been fulfilled. Romanism, or the Romish church, while it has mingled with all nations, has not mixed with them, but has kept up its authority over its subjects, under whatever government they may have been located; so that the authority of Rome has been felt by all the nations where her subjects have been "mingled with the seed of men." The fourth, or Roman, kingdom is thus perpetuated, though "divided." That power will continue, not civilly, but by its ecclesiastical authority, till "broken without hands."

* This list is not made up for the occasion, nor is it given on doubtful authority. It is copied by Faber from the Italian historian, Machiavel, and quoted by the learned Dr. Scott, who introduces Faber's note applying the fourth beast, in the seventh of Daniel, to Rome, with the following endorsement: "His conclusion seems well grounded."

Verse 44. "And in the days of these kings [What kings, or kingdoms? Clearly, the kings of the divided fourth kingdom: for that is now the subject of discourse] shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom [the fifth universal kingdom] that shall never be destroyed: [and, therefore, must be in the immortal state, or "new earth"] and the kingdom [when set up] shall not be left to other people, [i. e., the subjects shall not pass from one set of rulers to another, as the four previous kingdoms have done,] but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, [See Rev. xi. 15, "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." "And (18th verse) the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy ('break in pieces') them that destroy ('break in pieces.' See Dan. vii. 23) the earth,] and it [the fifth kingdom] shall stand forever."

The question now arises, What are we to understand by this last kingdom? and when is it "set up?" Some tell us it must be the "kingdom of grace," because the stone that smote the image was a "little stone" at first. But where, I ask, do they learn that the stone was a little one? Not in the Bible, surely. It is not there. They must find it, then, among the inventions of men. "But," say they, "it grows, mark that." Well, my dear sir, will you be good enough to show me where the stone is said to grow? You do not find it in the Bible: it must be in your imagination, if anywhere. The "stone smote the image, and "it became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors, and the wind carried" it "away, that no place was found for "either of the four kingdoms: then, and not till then, "the stone became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth."

Still, the objector insists upon it, that "it must be the kingdom of grace, set up by our Lord Jesus Christ 1800 years ago, in the days of the Cesars." You speak of the "kingdom of grace;" but, I ask, then, if God had no "kingdom of grace" in the world till "the days of the Cesars?" If he had not, then Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Joshua, Samuel, David, Job, and all the prophets, must have gone to perdition, for surely no man can be saved without grace; and that grace must reign to bring salvation. Thus if Jesus Christ set up "the kingdom of grace" only 1800 years ago, all that lived the 4000 years previous have "perished."

But let us look at this subject a little further. Where did the stone strike the image when it smote it? Not on the "head"—Babylon; nor on the "breast and arms"—Media and Persia; nor on the "belly and thighs"—Grecia; nor yet on the "legs"—Rome pagan, as it should have done, if the kingdom was "set up in the days of the Cesars." Where, then, did it smite the image? Verse 34 tells us, it "smote the image upon the FEET." Now it could not smite the feet before they were in being; and they were not in being till several hundred years after Christ's crucifixion, i. e., till the fourth, or Roman kingdom was divided: which, we have seen, did not take place till between the years A. D. 356 and 483. Since that time, the "Man of Sin" has reigned on earth, instead of the Lord of Glory, and has trodden "under foot the holy city"—the church. But the kingdom of God is to be set up. That it was not set up at certain periods spoken of in the New Testament, will appear from the examination of a few passages. It was not set up when our Lord taught his followers to pray, "Thy kingdom come:" it must have been future then.—Again. The mother of Zebedee's children understood it to be future when she desired our Lord to grant that her two sons might sit, "the one on the right hand, and the other on the left, in thy kingdom." It was still future when our Lord ate the last passover. See Luke xxii. 18: "I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come." So, it had not then come. Let us see if it had come when Christ hung on the cross. See Luke xxiii. 42: "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Thus, to his death, it seems, his kingdom had not been set up.—But did he not set it up before his ascension to heaven? See Acts i. 6: "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" Not done yet. Now see 1 Cor. xv. 50: "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." This settles the question that the kingdom of God is not set up till the saints put on immortality, or not till they enter the immortal state, which Paul tells us, verse 52, is "at the last trump," and answers to Rev. xi. 15, which see; and the apostle Paul tells us, 2 Timothy iv. 1, that "the Lord Jesus Christ shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." And again he tells us, Acts xiv. 22, that "We must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God," and this address was made to those who were already Christians, and shows that the kingdom of God was still future, in the apostle's estimation.

It is said, "Our Lord taught the Jews that the kingdom of God was within them." This is inferred from Luke xvii. 20, 21. "And when he was demanded of the Pharisees when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation:" [marginal reading 'outward show.'] "Neither shall they say, lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you." Did our Saviour mean to say that the kingdom of God was within the Pharisees? He says of them, Matt. xxiii. 13, "Ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in." Surely our Lord could not mean, in Luke xvii., to say, the kingdom of God was, at that time, within the Pharisees. "True," says the objector, "but the margin has it, among you." But, I ask, did our Lord intend to teach that it was then among them? If so, why did he speak a parable in the 19th chapter, 11th verse and onward, to disabuse the minds of the people, "because they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear?" He clearly teaches in that parable that they were not to expect the kingdom of God till he should "return" from heaven, at which time he would reward his faithful servants, but would say, at the same time, "Those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither and slay them before me." See, in connection with this, Rev. xi. 15, 18. What then does our Lord mean in Luke 17th? I understand him to say, that when the kingdom of God does come, it will not be with outward show, or signs; but, the first the wicked will know, it is upon them; and thus the twenty-fourth verse seems to explain it. "For as the lightning—so also shall the Son of man be in his day." That kingdom will come sudden and unexpected to all the wicked.

The parables of the "mustard seed" and "leaven," are brought forward as an argument in defence of the doctrine that the kingdom of heaven was set up in the days our Saviour was on earth. I admit that those parables refer to a work of grace wrought in this world; but they cannot be so interpreted as to contradict the overwhelming testimony of our Lord, the prophet Daniel, Paul, and St. John, as already presented. The language of these parables must, to harmonize with the other Scriptures, be understood as spoken in a borrowed sense; that is, as the grace of God, in men, works that preparation which is necessary to constitute us, finally, subjects of the kingdom of heaven, so it is called "the kingdom of heaven," in relation to the result. In the same way I understand the text, Rom. xiv. 17.

"But," says the objector, "Christ and the apostles preached the kingdom of heaven at hand; surely, therefore, it must have been set up about that time." I reply,—A thing at hand is the next to come. Let me ask, what kingdom was at hand when Babylon was in power? Answer.—The Medo-Persian. Why? Because it was next to come. What kingdom was at hand when the Medo-Persian was in power? Answer.—The Grecian. Why? Because it was next to succeed it. What kingdom was at hand when Grecia was in power? Rome. Why? Because next to come, as a kingdom of universal empire. What kingdom is at hand when Rome is in power? God's everlasting kingdom. Why? Because that is the next kingdom of universal empire. Thus we see how it could be said, in truth, the kingdom of heaven is at hand in the very commencement of the Roman kingdom.

James, ii. 5, tells us that the kingdom is a matter of promise to them that love God; of course, if "promised," it was future. Our Saviour saith, Luke xii. 32, "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom;" not yet given. It is something still to come. To represent it as already set up, is to take away one of the strongest motives the Bible furnishes to endure trials, and to suffer patiently while in an enemy's country. What a soul-cheering thought, the kingdom of God is to come. Christ's subjects will be gathered out of all their tribulations—his territory, the earth, will be cleansed, and the wicked rooted out of it; and Christ himself personally reign over his people forever; not in a dying state, but in a state of immortality, peace, and glory, in the new earth. Such a thought gives new life to the soul, now struggling in this "tabernacle," groaning, "being burdened." The kingdom will come; yea, it is now at the door. "Ye feeble saints, fresh courage take." "Behold, your God will come with vengeance [to your enemies,] even God with a recompense; he will come and save you." Isa. xxxv. 4.

But when will the kingdom of God be set up? See Matthew xxv. 31—34: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Then, and not till then, will the kingdom of God be set up on earth; for, "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," as we have already seen; and that kingdom is not set up till the "seventh angel" sounds his "trumpet." Rev. xi. 15—18.

Some men will not enter the kingdom of God. See 1 Cor. vi. 9, 16: "Know you not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners shall inherit the kingdom of God." See, also, Rev. xxi. 27: "And there shall in no wise enter into it [the new Jerusalem] anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie."

Who will be subjects of this kingdom? See Rev. xx. 6: "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and Christ, and shall reign with him," &c. Here it is seen that holiness is the indispensable qualification for an inheritance in the kingdom of God. See 2 Peter iii. 14: "Wherefore, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye be found of him in peace without spot and blameless." There must be no spot of known sin upon us if we would enter the kingdom of God. Again, John iii. 3: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." The new birth, then, is indispensable to a part in the kingdom of God. See also 1 John iii. 2, 3: "We know that when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And

Are we thus purifying ourselves? Are we striving to be Christ-like? Have we the same love to God? The same love to men? The same hatred to sin? The same deadness to the applause of men? In short, do we set Christ before our eyes as our pattern and example? And are we, from beholding, changed into the same image from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of God? "He that saith, he abideth in him, ought himself also to walk even as he walked." See 1 John ii. 6. See also Matt. xxv. 34—36. Here we learn who will enter into the kingdom of God.

Now comes the inquiry, "Watchman, what of the night?" In what period of prophecy are we now? What are our "soundings," in relation to the setting up of this kingdom? Are we in the kingdom of Babylon, under the "head of gold?" No. That has passed long ago.—Are we in the Medo-Persian empire? No. Long since that kingdom was numbered with things past. Are we in Grecia? Certainly not. That too was numbered and finished more than two thousand years since. Are we in Rome in its undivided state, or in the "legs of iron?" No. Long since that empire fell. Where are we, then? Down among the feet and toes. How long since those divisions came up which constitute the feet and toes? Nearly fourteen hundred years! Almost fourteen hundred years we have travelled down in the divided state of the Roman empire. Where does the stone strike the image? Is it on the head? No. Is it on the breast and arms? No. Is it on the belly and thighs? No. Is it on the legs? No. Where then? On the feet. Where are we now? In the feet. What takes place when the stone smites the image? It is all broken to pieces, and becomes like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors, and the wind carries it away that no place shall be found for it. Then will this world be cleansed and the everlasting kingdom of God set up which shall never be destroyed. How far off, reader, do you think that event can be? What is to come next as the subject of prophecy? The stone. Are you ready? The Lord help thee to be awake.—Suffer not thyself to be lulled to sleep by the cry of, “My Lord delayeth his coming.”

Exposition of Daniel 7th Chapter;

OR, VISION OF THE FOUR BEASTS.—BY G. STORRS.

In communicating instruction to the children of men, God is pleased to give “line upon line, precept upon precept—here a little, and there a little.” The Saviour saith, John xvi. 12, “I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now.” Revelation has been not only progressive, but the same truths have been repeated again and again, under different figures, emblems, and forms of speech. As a kind parent enforces important truths upon the minds of his offspring, illustrating and repeating to make the deeper impression, so our Heavenly Father labors to impress our minds with truths connected with, and having a bearing on, our eternal destiny, and necessary to establish the faith of his people, and inspire in them confidence in his word. He has given them waymarks to determine the truth of his word, and to mark the period of the world in which they are living, and to show them that their Heavenly Father was perfectly acquainted with all the road his church would have to travel to the end of the world, and the termination of all their labors and sufferings.

To illustrate. Suppose you were travelling a road with which you were unacquainted. You inquire of a stranger—he tells you, that road leads to a glorious city, filled with every good thing, governed by the most lovely, mild, and benevolent Prince that the world ever saw ; that in that city there was neither sickness, sorrow, pain, nor death. He then proceeds to tell you what you may expect to pass on the road, by which you may know he has told you the truth, and which will mark the progress you have made. First, then, he tells you, after leaving him, and travelling awhile, you will come to a monument that can be seen at a great distance ; on the top of it you will see a "lion" having "eagle's wings ;"—at a distance beyond that, you will come to another monument, having on it "a bear" with "three ribs in his mouth :"—passing on still, you will at length arrive at a third monument, on the top of which you will behold a "leopard" having "four wings of a fowl" and "four heads :"—after that, you will come to a fourth, on which is a beast "dreadful and terrible," with "great iron teeth" and "ten horns :"—and lastly, you will come to another place, where you will see the same beast, with this difference—"three" of its "first horns" have been "plucked up," and in the place of them has come up a peculiar horn, having "eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth." The next thing you will look for, after passing the last-mentioned sign, is the city of which I have told you.

With these directions you commence your journey. What do you look for first ? The lion. At length you see it. That inspires in you some faith in the person's knowledge and truth who had directed you. Having passed that sign, the next thing you expect to see, as marked in the directions, is the bear. At length you come in sight of that. "There," say you, "is the second sign he gave me. He must have been perfectly acquainted with this road, and has told me the truth." Your faith increases as you travel on. What next do you look for ? Not the city, certainly. "No," say you, "I look for the leopard." Well, by and by you behold that, in the distance. "There it is," you cry ; "now I know he has told me the truth, and it will come out just as he said." Is the next thing you look for now, the city ? No—you look for that "terrible beast" with "ten horns." You pass that, and say as you pass, "How exactly the man who directed me described everything." Now your faith is so confirmed that you almost see the city; "but," say you, "I have got one more sign to pass, viz. the 'horn' with 'eyes'—then the city comes next." Now hope is high, and your anxious eyes gaze with intense interest for the last sign. That comes in view, and you exclaim in raptures, "There it is!" All doubt is now removed—you look for no more signs—your longing eyes are fixed to gaze on the "glorious city" next—and probably no man now, however wise he might profess himself, could make you discredit what your director had told you. "The city—the city," is now fixed in your eye, and onward you go, hastening to your rest.

Now, if we find, on examination, that all the events or signs that God has given us, which were to precede the judgment day and the setting up of his everlasting kingdom, have actually transpired, or come to view, what are we to look for next? Most clearly, the judgment of the great day! Let us, then, examine the chapter before us.

Verse 1. "In the first year of Belshazzar, king of Babylon, Daniel had a dream, and visions of his head, upon his bed: then he wrote the dream, [thus it became a part of the Scriptures] and told the sum of the matters."

V. 2 and 3. "Daniel spake and said, I saw in my vision by night, and behold the four winds [denoting commotions] of the heaven strove upon the great sea, (waters, denoting "people." See Rev. xvii. 15,) and four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another." The angel explains these four beasts to be "four kings, verse 17, or four kingdoms, as you will see verse 23. "The fourth beast is the fourth kingdom," &c.; which shows that the term king, in these visions, signifies kingdom.

V. 4. "The first was like a lion, and had eagle's wings:" Babylon, as described in this vision. We have already seen, chapter ii. 38, that Babylon was the first universal "kingdom upon earth;" aptly represented here by a lion—"the king of beasts," denoting the glory of that kingdom, and corresponding with the "head of gold" in the second chapter—the "eagle's wings" denoting the rapidity of its conquests, and the soaring pride of its monarchs. It is described by Habakkuk, chapter i. 6—8, "For, lo! I raise up the Chaldeans [Babylon]—they shall fly as the eagle that hasteth to eat." See Isa. v. 26, 29, and Jer. iv. 7; also, Ezek. xvii. 3, 4. Daniel goes on to say—"I beheld till the wings thereof were plucked, wherewith * it was lifted from the earth, [its glory departed,] and it was made to stand upon its feet as a man, and a man's heart was given to it." This may refer to the humiliation of the proud monarch of Babylon, chapter iv. 31—37, or to the cowardice of Belshazzar, who, instead of driving away his foes like a lion, shut himself up in the city, feasting and drinking with his lords, till he was killed, and the kingdom was given to the Medes and Persians.

V. 5. "And behold, another beast, a second, like to a bear, and it raised up itself on one side, [representing two lines of kings, one much longer than the other,] and it had three ribs in the mouth of it, between the teeth of it; and they said unto it, Arise, devour much flesh."

We have already seen that the Medo-Persian kingdom succeeded Babylon, and is clearly the kingdom here described. It was noted for cruelty and thirst of blood, and the nation is emphatically called "the spoiler." See Jer. li. 48—56. The three "ribs" in its mouth may denote the union of Media, Persia, and Chaldea. It subdued many and populous kingdoms. Ahasuerus, or Artaxerxes, reigned over 127 provinces. See Esthé*r* i. 1.

V. 6. "After this I beheld, and lo, another, like a leopard, which had upon the back of it four wings of a fowl ; the beast had also four heads, and dominion was given to it." There can be no dispute with respect to this being Grecia ; " four wings " denoting the rapidity of its conquest under Alexander ; the " four heads " its division into four parts after Alexander died and his posterity were murdered.

V. 7 and 8. " After this I saw in the night visions, and behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly ; and it had great iron teeth : it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it : and it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it ; and it had ten horns. I considered the horns, and behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots : and behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things." On these verses I shall remark when I come to consider the angel's explanation.

V. 9 and 10. " I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool : his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him ; thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him : the judgment was set, and the books were opened." If we have not here a description of the final judgment, we may despair of finding any such description in the book of God. There is nothing clearer.

V. 11. " I beheld then [When ? Ans. When ' the judgment set ' ] because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake, I beheld till the beast was slain, [What beast ? Ans. The fourth beast, on which the horn had stood,] and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." That is the punishment of the beast for having sustained and carried the little horn. Nothing is said of " the dominion " of this beast being “taken away,” as is said of the others. The others lost their dominion after a time, but their subjects survived and were transferred to the succeeding governments, but the very body [subjects] of this fourth kingdom is destroyed, and given to the burning flame; as Isaiah saith, (xxxiii. 12,) “The people shall be as the burnings of lime; as thorns cut up shall they be burned in the fire.” No transferring of its subjects to another kingdom. Then “The wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it.” Prov. ii. 22. Then God will “destroy them which destroy [corrupt] the earth.” Revel. xi. 18. But—

V. 12. “As concerning the rest of the beasts, they had their dominion taken away; yet their lives were prolonged for a season and a time.” [Babylon ruled about 1700 years—Media and Persia about 200—Grecia about 175.] These kingdoms successively lost the dominion, but the lives of the respective nations were prolonged, being merged in the succeeding governments.

V. 13 and 14. “I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed.”—Thus we see the kingdom of God, or of Christ, is not set up till the “judgment sits;” hence no room for a temporal millennium before the judgment, and before the kingdoms of this world are destroyed. “All people, nations, and languages,” that shall “serve him,” are described by the Revelator, chapter v. 9, 10, as “redeemed OUT OF every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation,” &c.

V. 15—18. “I Daniel was grieved in my spirit in the midst of my body, and the visions of my head troubled me. I came near unto one of them that stood by, and asked him the truth of all this. So he told me, and made me know the interpretation of the things. These great beasts, which are four, are four kings, which shall arise out of the earth. But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever." Not a "thousand years," but forever, even FOREVER and EVER." If any language can express unending duration, this must do so. Some think the language too strong to be applied to a thousand years, and so make it mean "three hundred and sixty thousand years." But that is infinitely short of "forever, even forever and ever."

V. 19—25. "Then I would know the truth of the fourth beast, which was diverse from all the others, exceeding dreadful, whose teeth were of iron, and his nails of brass; which devoured, brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with his feet: and of the ten horns that were in his head, and of the other which came up, and before whom three fell; even of that horn that had eyes, and a mouth that spake very great things, whose look was more stout than his fellows. I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them; until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom. Thus he said, The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces. And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise; and another shall rise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings. And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time."

There is but little dispute about what is here meant by the "fourth kingdom." No kingdom that ever has existed on earth will answer to it, except the Roman kingdom. That has been, truly, "diverse from all kingdoms," especially in its forms of government, which were not less than seven—being, at different times, Republican, Consular, Tribune, Decemvirate, Dictatorial, Imperial and Kingly. It was at length divided into the Eastern and Western empires; Rome proper being in the Western empire. Between the years A. D. 356 and 483, it was divided into ten kingdoms, as I have noticed in my remarks on chapter ii.; thus the "ten horns are ten kings" [kingdoms] that arose out of this empire, and are the same that John saw, Rev. xii. 3, "a great red dragon having seven heads and ten horns;" and, chapter xvii. 12, he is told—"The ten horns which thou sawest, are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet:"—it was something still future in John's time.

We are now prepared for the inquiry—who, or what is the little horn here spoken of? We will inquire,

1st. What is the character of this horn? 1. It makes "war with the saints." 2. It speaks great words against the Most High.

Let us see if we can find a description of the same character elsewhere in the Bible. See Rev. xiii. 6, 7: "And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints and to overcome them:"—Daniel says, he "prevailed against them." Now see 2 Thess. ii. 3, 4: "That man of sin be revealed, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God," &c. Can there be any doubt of the identity of the character? Daniel's "little horn"—Paul's "man of sin"—and John's "blasphemous beast" are clearly identified.

2d. Let us inquire, has a power of this description arisen? It must be admitted that there has; and that that power is Papacy. The titles the Popes have assumed, of "MOST HOLY LORD," and their pretensions to pardon sin, even before its commission, if we had nothing else, sufficiently establishes the blasphemous character of that power. Pope Innocent III. writes—"He [Christ] hath set one man over the world, him whom he hath appointed his vicar on earth; and as to Christ is bent every knee in heaven, in earth and under the earth, so shall obedience and service be paid to his vicar by all, that there may be one fold and one shepherd." Again, Pope Gregory VII. says, "The Roman Pontiff alone is by right universal. In him alone is the right of making laws. Let all kings kiss the feet of the Pope. His name alone shall be heard in the churches. It is the ONLY NAME IN THE WORLD. It is his right to depose kings. His word is not to be repealed by any one. It is to be repealed by himself alone. He is to be judged by none. The church of Rome has never erred; and the Scriptures testify it never shall err." Surely here is a power "diverse from" all others, and proud and blasphemous enough to answer the character of the "little horn."

3d. Let us now inquire, When this little horn arose? Or, which is the same thing, When did Papacy arise? There has been a difference of opinion on that question. But it appears to me the question is not one so difficult to settle now as in former years. First, then—it did not arise before the ten horns. Hence it did not arise before A. D. 483, when the tenth horn came up. It did not arise until "three of the first horns" fell, or were "plucked up." It did not come up after that, because it "came up among" the "ten horns," and three of those horns fell "before" it. It must then have come up or been established at the identical point where the third horn fell. If that point can be settled, it seems to me there can be no reasonable doubt as to the time Papacy arose. In the year of our Lord 493, the Hefuli in Rome and Italy were conquered by the Ostrogoths. In 534, the Vandals, who were under Arian influence, were conquered by the Greeks, for the purpose of establishing the supremacy of the Catholics. The Ostrogoths, who held possession of Rome, were under an Arian monarch, who was an enemy to the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome; hence, before the decree of Justinian, (a Greek emperor at Constantinople,) could be carried into effect, by which he had constituted the Bishop of Rome "head of all the churches," the Ostrogoths must be plucked up. This conquest was effected by Justinian's army in the month of March, 538; at which time, the Ostrogoths, who had retired without the city, and besieged it in their turn, raised the siege and retired, leaving the Greeks in possession of the city: thus the third horn was plucked before Papacy, and for the express purpose too of establishing that power. [See Gibbon's Decline and Fall of Roman Empire.]

How exactly do the facts answer to the prophecy? I will here introduce the letter of Justinian to the Bishop of Rome, of A. D. 533:

"Justinian, pious, fortunate, renowned, triumphant, emperor, consul, &c., to John, the most holy Archbishop of our city of Rome, and patriarch:

"Rendering honor to the apostolic see, and to your holiness, (as always was and is our desire,) and, as it becomes us, honoring your blessedness as a father, we have laid without delay before the notice of your holiness all things pertaining to the state of the church. Since it has always been our earnest study to preserve the unity of your holy see, and the state of the holy churches of God, which has hitherto obtained, and will remain, without any interfering opposition; therefore we hasten to SUBJECT, and to unite to your holiness, all the priests of the whole East. As to the matters which are presently agitated, although clear and undoubted, and, according to the doctrine of your apostolic see, held assuredly resolved and decided by all priests, we have yet deemed it necessary to lay them before your holiness. Nor do we suffer anything which belongs to the state of the church, however manifest and undoubted, that is agitated, to pass without the knowledge of your holiness, who are the head of all the holy churches. For in all things (as had been said or resolved) we are prompt to increase the honor and authority of your see."

"The authenticity of the title," says Mr. Croley, "receives unanswerable proof from the edicts of the 'Novellæ' of the Justinian code. The preamble of the 9th states, 'that as the elder Rome was the founder of the laws; so was it not to be questioned, that in her was the supremacy of the pontificate.' The 131st, on the Ecclesiastical Titles and Privileges, chapter ii., states: 'We therefore decree that the most holy Pope of the elder Rome is the first of all the priesthood, and that the most blessed archbishop of Constantinople, the new Rome, shall hold the second rank, after the holy apostolic chair of the elder Rome.'"
Croley, pp. 114, 115.

Some suppose that Phocas, A. D. 606, by applying the title "universal Bishop" to the Pope, first gave him his supremacy: but this cannot be, for it does not agree with the prophecy that three of the first horns were to be plucked up before it, as it came up, and this happened more than half a century before. Again, Mr. Croley, a writer of the Church of England, says—"The highest authorities among the civilians and annalists of Rome spurn the idea that Phocas was the founder of the supremacy of Rome; they ascend to Justinian, as the only legitimate source, and rightly date the title from the memorable year 533."

Imperial Rome fell about A. D. 475, and was in the hands of the barbarians. Thus it continued till the conquest of Rome by Belisarius, Justinian's general, 536 to 538, when the Ostrogoths left it in possession of the Greek emperor, March, 538. Thus the way was open for the "dragon" to give the "beast his power, and his seat, and great authority." Rev. xiii. 2. This fact, from Revelation, also, settles the point that the Pope did not receive his power from Clovis, king of France. It was the "Dragon" that gave him "his seat"—Rome, "his power," as head of the churches. The Roman emperors had stood at the head of the churches with "power" to make important decisions for the church—it is now transferred to the Pope: and he has given him, also, "great authority," under the Justinian code of laws, to judge and punish heretics.

4th. The next point we want to settle is, the length of time this power was to continue. Daniel says, "a time, times, and the dividing of time." The Revelator says, chap. xiii. 5, "Power was given unto him to continue 42 months." He was to make war upon the saints—the church; and in Rev. xii. 6, we are told, "the woman," the church, "fled into the wilderness" 1260 days; and at the 14th verse, that it was for "a time, and times, and a half time." Here then we have the period of the continuance of this power given us in three forms of expression, which settles the point that the time, times and dividing of time is 42 months, or 1260 prophetic days or years.

5th. Did the continuance of papal dominion, as a horn of the beast, cease at the end of that period? 1260 years from 538 would extend to 1798. Did anything transpire that year to justify the belief that the dominion of Papacy was taken away that year? It is a historical fact that, on Feb. 10th, 1798, Berthier, a French general, entered the city of Rome and took it. On the 15th of the same month the Pope was taken prisoner and shut up in the Vatican. The papal government, which had continued from the time of Justinian, was abolished, and a republican form of government given to Rome. The Pope was carried captive to France, where he died in 1799. Thus, "he that" led others "into captivity," went "into captivity;" and he who killed "with the sword" those he was pleased to call heretics, was himself "killed [subdued] with the sword;" i. e., his "dominion was taken away" by war. See Rev. xiii. 10. Verse 26: "But the judgment shall sit, and they [the kings that 'hate the whore,' Rev. xvii. 16] shall take away his dominion, [he is cut off from being a horn on the beast, or deprived of his civil power, so that he can no longer wield the sword against dissenters] to consume and destroy it unto the end." See 2 Thess. ii. 8: "Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth [the "Reformation"] and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming" to judge the world in the great burning day, when the "beast and false prophet" will be "cast alive into the lake of fire, burning with brimstone;" then the "little horn" will be destroyed.

Some tell us the civil power of Papacy is not taken away. That the Pope was restored, or a new one chosen, is admitted, and that he may have some civil power in Italy is not denied. But that he has power to depose kings and put to death the saints now, is denied. When he was a horn on the beast, he deposed kings at pleasure, for centuries, and silenced "heretics" by the flame, the rack, prison, and the sword. Can he do it now? No. Nor has he been able to do it since 1798—since that time the church is out of the "wilderness," and Papacy is compelled to tolerate Protestantism. Hear the Pope himself on that subject. Here is his letter, dated Sept., 1840, at Rome. Read it, and see if you think Papacy is now a horn on the beast, or is possessed of power to war against the saints unto death, as formerly.

"ENCYCLICAL LETTER of OUR MOST HOLY LORD GREGORY XVI. by Divine Providence Pope, to all Patriarchs, Primates, Archbishops, and Bishops.

GREGORY XVI. POPE.

"Venerable Brethren,—Health and the apostolic Benediction.

"You will know, Venerable Brothers, how great are the calamities with which the Catholic Church is beset on all sides in this most sorrowful age, and how pitifully she is afflicted. You know by what a deluge of errors of every kind, and with what unbridled audacity of the erroneous, our Holy Religion is attacked, and how cunningly and by what frauds heretics and infidels are endeavoring to prevent the hearts and minds of the faithful. In a word, you know there is almost no kind of effort or machination which is not employed, to overthrow, from its deepest foundations, if it were possible, the immovable edifice of the Holy City.

“Indeed, are we not, (Oh, how shameful!) compelled to see the most crafty enemies of the truth ranging far and wide with impunity; not only attacking religion with ridicule, the church with contumely, and Catholics with insults and slander, but even entering into cities and towns, establishing schools of error and impiety, publishing in print the poison of their doctrines, skilfully concealed under the deceitful veil of the natural sciences and new discoveries, and even penetrating into the cottages of the poor, travelling through rural districts, and insinuating themselves into familiar acquaintance with the lowest of the people and with the farmers! Thus they leave no means unattempted, whether by corrupt Bibles in the language of the people, or pestiferous newspapers and other little publications, or caviling conversation, or pretended charity, or, finally, by the gift of money, to allure ignorant people, and especially youth, into their nets, and induce them to desert the Catholic faith.

“We refer to facts, Venerable Brethren, which not only are known to you, but of which you are witnesses; even you, who, though you mourn, and, as your pastoral duty requires, are by no means silent, are yet compelled to tolerate in your diocese these aforesaid propagators of heresy and infidelity; these shameless preachers, who, while they walk in sheep’s clothing, but inwardly are ravening wolves, cease not to lay in wait for the flock and tear it in pieces. Why should we say more? There is now scarcely a barbarous region in the universal world, to which the well known Central Boards of the heretics and unbelievers have not, regardless of expense, sent out their explorers and emissaries, who either insidiously, or openly and in concert, making war upon the Catholic religion, its pastors and its ministers, tear the faithful out of the bosom of the church, and intercept her approach to the infidels.

"Hence it is easy to conceive the state of anguish into which our soul is plunged day and night, as we, being charged with the superintendence of the whole fold of Jesus Christ, and the care of all the churches, must give account for his sheep to the Divine Prince of Pastors. And we have thought fit, Venerable Brethren, to recall to your minds by our present letter the causes of those troubles which are common to us and you, that you may more attentively consider how important it is to the church, that all holy priests should endeavor, with redoubled zeal, and with united labors, and with every kind of efforts, to repel the attacks of the raging foes of religion, to turn back their weapons, and to forewarn and fortify the subtle blandishments which they often use. This, as you know, we have been careful to do at every opportunity; nor shall we cease to do it; as we also are not ignorant that you have always done it hitherto, and confidently trust that you will do hereafter with still more earnest zeal.

"Given at Rome, at St. Mary the Greater, on the 18th of the Kalends of September, of the year 1840, the tenth of our pontificate.

GREGORY XVI. POPE."

You see what is to come next after the fall of the "little horn."

Now let us see whereabouts we are in the prophetic chain. Have we passed the "Lion"—Babylon? Yes. Have we gone by the "Bear with three ribs in his mouth?" Yes. Has the sign of the "Leopard with four wings of a fowl and four heads" been passed? It has. The "dreadful and terrible beast, with ten horns,"—has he been seen? Yes. Have we got past the "little horn" having "eyes like the eyes of a man?" That is among the things numbered with the past. How far beyond it are we? Forty-five years, nearly. What comes next? The Judgment, followed by the everlasting kingdom of God. How far off is that? That question I shall answer, hereafter, DEFINITELY. But one thing is certain; it cannot be at a great distance. It is the NEXT prophetic event. Awake, ye slumbering virgins! "Behold the Bridegroom cometh go ye out to meet him." No time to sleep now. The seventh angel is preparing to sound. "AWAKE, YE DEAD!" will soon thunder through the skies, Happy day to those that are waiting. Awful day to those who are saying—"My Lord delayeth his coming." AWAKE—AWAKE!!!

Exposition of Daniel, 8th Chapter;

OR,

THE VISION OF THE RAM, HE-GOAT, AND EXCEEDING GREAT HORN.

BY GEO. STORRS.

I have already remarked, elsewhere, that our Heavenly Father employs various figures and representations, to enforce the same truths, to make the deeper impression on our minds. Thus the dream of Pharaoh, Genesis xli. 1—7, was doubled to him, thereby making the stronger impression on his spirit. In the vision of Peter, Acts x. 9—16, the "sheet was let down to the earth," and the voice three times calls upon him to "rise, kill and eat;" and as many times tells him, "What God has cleansed, that call not thou common." Thus God enforces important truths by a repetition. This was the case in the visions of Daniel. We have already seen that the vision of the seventh chapter was like that of the second, with, however, additional circumstances, viz., the sitting of the judgment, and the "little horn." In the last chapter, then, while the same truths are brought to light as in the second, we have some additional information: so, we may see the same principle carried forward in the chapter before us.

Verses 2—4. “And I saw in a vision ; (and it came to pass, when I saw, that I was at Shushan, in the palace, which is in the province of Elam ;) and I saw in a vision, and I was by the river Ulai. Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and behold, there stood before the river a ram which had two horns ; and the two horns were high ; but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last. I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward ; so that no beasts might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand ; but he did according to his will, and became great.”

The angel informs Daniel, at the 20th verse, “The ram which thou sawest, having two horns, are the kings [kingdoms] of Media and Persia.” Thus it exactly agrees with, or is like the “breast and arms” of the image, chapter ii., and the “bear” in the seventh chapter. Daniel sees nothing of Babylon in this vision : that was now passing away ; and his attention was particularly called to the “ram pushing.” It would seem that that circumstance was to mark the commencement of the vision.

Verses 5—8. “And as I was considering, behold, a he-goat came from the west, on the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground : and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes. And he came to the ram that had two horns, which I had seen standing before the river, and ran unto him in the fury of his power. And I saw him come close unto the ram, and he was moved with choler against him, and smote the ram, and brake his two horns ; and there was no power in the ram to stand before him, but he cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him ; and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand. Therefore, the he-goat waxed very great ; and when he was strong the great horn was broken ; and for it, came up four notable ones toward the four winds of heaven.”

The angel explains this, verses 21 and 22. “And the rough goat is the king [kingdom] of Grecia ; and the great horn that is between his eyes is the first king ;" not Alexander merely, as some suppose, for Alexander was not strictly the first king ; but he belonged to the kingdom in its undivided state, or to the first part of the kingdom of Grecia. The great horn, then, I consider as a representation of Grecia while it was united in one, which union continued some years after Alexander's death, say fifteen or twenty, when his brother and two sons, who succeeded him, at least nominally, were murdered, and the kingdom was divided, as indicated at verse 22.—“ Now that being broken, whereas four stood up for it, four kingdoms [not kings, as some try to make us think] shall stand up out of the nation, but not in his power,” [not in the power of Grecia united.]

Alexander conquered a part of Europe and all Asia in the short space of about twelve years ; and the kingdom under him may well be represented as running in the “fury” of its power, and “touching not the ground.” With an army of not more than thirty thousand, he overthrew Darius, king of Persia, who had six hundred thousand, and thus “brake his two horns,” or overthrew the Medo-Persian kingdom : then Grecia became a kingdom of universal empire. Alexander dies, and within twenty years after, four kingdoms come up in Grecia, viz., Macedonia, Thrace, Syria, and Egypt.

Thus we see, the vision is like the “leopard” of the previous vision, and the “brass” division of the image.

The evidence thus far is so clear that this vision is like the two previous ones, that some of our opponents have admitted that the angel has clearly shown us so ; but one of our opponents, when he has arrived at this point, says—“Here the heavenly messenger leaves us.” I do not wonder he thought so ; for he then goes on to apply the horn that “waxed exceeding great” to little Antiochus. It would seem that author recorded one truth. It appears clear, to my mind, that the heavenly messenger left him, but he did not leave Daniel till he made him understand the vision. Let us now proceed to, and examine this point.

Verses 9—12. “And out of one of them came forth a little horn, which waxed exceeding great toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land. And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven; and it cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them. Yea, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down. And a host was given him against the daily sacrifice by reason of transgression, and it cast down the truth to the ground; and it practised, and prospered."

The angel explains these verses thus—

Verses 23—25. "And in the latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, shall stand up. And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power; and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper, and practise, and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people. And through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand; and he shall magnify himself in his heart, and by peace shall destroy many: he shall also stand up against the Prince of princes; but he shall be broken without hand."

Now, the question arises, who, or what power is here brought to view?

So far as I know, there are but three opinions. The first is, that it is Antiochus Epiphanes, one of the kings of Syria. The second is, that it is Mahomedanism; and the third, that it is Rome, Pagan and Papal. Each of these I shall examine.

I. Mahomedanism. This is the opinion of Faber, followed by some others. I conceive it cannot be Mahomedanism; first—because the "little horn stood" up against the Prince of princes, v. 25, and Mahomedanism itself did not stand up till about 600 years after Christ. If it be said, it stood up against the church, and therefore may be said to stand up against the Prince of princes, because our Lord considers that done against himself which is done unto his people—I reply, that interpretation, in this case, would make the prophecy use a vain repetition; for, it expressly says, it "shall destroy the mighty and holy people." Now, Mahomedanism neither stood up against Christ, in person, nor did it destroy the holy people. For this assertion I have something more than the word of man. "Let God be true" though every man should be proved a "liar." All admit that Rev. 9th chapter is a description of Mahomedanism. Read the fourth verse of that chapter, and see if Mahomedanism stood up against the true church of God. "It was commanded them [Mahomedans] that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but [mark it] only those men WHO HAVE NOT the seal of God in their foreheads." Here then is evidence, strong as the truth of God, that Mahomedanism was not to hurt the true church; and, of course, did not "stand up against the Prince of princes" in any sense to answer the application of the text in Daniel to that power.

II. The next opinion I shall examine is, that it is Antiochus Epiphanes, one of the kings that ruled, for a time, over one of the "four horns," viz., over Syria.

To this interpretation I urge the following objections—

1. Such an interpretation does violence to the whole subject. How is this vision like the previous, if Antiochus is the "little horn?" We have seen that it exactly agrees with the previous visions hitherto; and we see also that the little horn extends down to the end of this vision. If, then, Antiochus is the little horn, it is not like the other vision by more than two thousand years; for, Antiochus died 164 years before Christ was born.

2. This "little horn," as I have said, ends the vision, v. 17: "For at [unto] the time of the end shall be the vision." What end? Evidently the end spoken of in the vision it is like, chap. vii. 26—"They shall take away his dominion, to consume and destroy unto the end." 2 Thess. ii.: "That wicked, whom the Lord shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." The end, when the Lord Jesus will be revealed from heaven.

3. Again—This little horn was to extend to "the last end of the indignation." Surely, none will pretend the death of Antiochus was the last end of indignation, even to the Jews. If they do, let them cease to talk of the great tribulation at the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans.

4. The attempt to apply the 2300 days of this vision to Antiochus, has been a total failure. Those who make this attempt cannot agree among themselves how to reckon the time; some of them maintaining that the days are entire days, and others, that they are to be reckoned half days, or 1150 days, because the expression in the original is 2300 "evening-mornings." But let them count as they will, they cannot match it with Antiochus. Professor Stuart admits that the time is 2300 entire days; but after attempting to match them with Antiochus he has totally failed. He reckons back from the cleansing of the sanctuary by Judas Maccabeus, after it had been polluted by Antiochus, and he finds what? Why, he finds the 5th of August, 171 B. C. !!! Yes, reader, he finds that marvellous day, but he finds no event to mark that as the beginning of the 2300 days. Perhaps he thought it would be taken for granted that it must begin then. Now if "Millerites," as they are called by their opponents, should attempt to make their theories pass by such an argument, we should scarcely get the people to hear us more than once, and they would justly accuse us of an attempt to impose upon them. Show us facts, from history, that the 2300 days begun when you "guess" they did; till then we deny that there is a particle of proof that the 5th of August, 171 B. C., is marked with anything that could show that to be the beginning of those days.

Mr. Dowling, the mouth-piece of most of our opponents, makes 1150 days of the 2300; and when he has attempted to match that number with the history of Antiochus, he comes out within about 55 days of making a fit. He admits he wants 55 days; and that he cannot make them out for want of not being "informed by any historian exactly how many days elapsed between the time Athenæus stopped the daily sacrifices and the 25th of the month Casleu, when Jupiter was worshipped in the temple." But Mr. D. supplies this defect in history, by a "guess;" for he adds, "Had we been thus informed, [IF] I have no doubt, [II] that we should find that time to be [IF] exactly [II] fifty-five days." "If and if;" that is a fatal affair for Mr. D; the naughty historian should have been more particular. But, seriously, Mr. D. admits two facts that prove fatal to his argument. 1st. That he has no history to warrant his application of the days to Antiochus; and 2d, that his argument is spoiled, unless he can be allowed to supply the defect by his "no doubt," i. e., his "guess."

The fact is, the "little horn," and 2300 days, never have been, and never can be made to agree with the history of Antiochus. The attempt may delude the uninformed, but cannot endure the light. I will here oppose a great name to great names. As my words, who am but an obscure individual, will not weigh much against such men as Prof. Stuart, &c., I will introduce Sir Isaac Newton. On Dan. viii. 9—12, 23—25, he says—

"A horn of a beast is never taken for a single person: it always signifies a new kingdom; and the kingdom of Antiochus was an old one. Antiochus reigned over one of the four horns; and the little horn was a fifth, under its proper kings. This horn was at first a little one, and waxed exceeding great; but so did NOT Antiochus. His kingdom, on the contrary, was weak, and tributary to the Romans; and he did NOT enlarge it. The horn was 'a king of fierce countenance, and destroyed wonderfully, and prospered and practised:' but Antiochus was frightened out of Egypt by a mere message of the Romans, and afterwards routed and ~~humbled~~ by the Jews. The horn was mighty by another's power; Antiochus acted by his own. The horn cast down the sanctuary to the ground, and so did NOT Antiochus; he left it standing. The sanctuary and host were trampled under foot 2300 days, (verse 14) and in Daniel's prophecies days are put for years; but the profanation of the temple, in the reign of Antiochus, did NOT last so many natural days. These were to last to 'the end of the indignation' against the Jews; and this indignation is NOT YET at an end.—They were to last till the sanctuary which has been cast down should be cleansed; and the sanctuary is NOT YET cleansed."

5. Another fact fatal to the application of the 2300 days to Antiochus, is, that Daniel was to stand in his "lot" at the end of the days, i. e., at the end of the 1335 days, chap. xii. 12, 13, which are admitted to be a part of the 2300. Did Daniel stand in his lot at the death of Antiochus, 164 years B. C.? That is, did Daniel rise from the dead then? For that, and nothing less, I conceive to be the meaning of the expression.

But one other consideration, it seems to me, must settle this whole question, that the polluting the temple by Antiochus was not intended by placing "the abomination that maketh desolate." Our Saviour, Matt. xxiv. 15, speaks of that abomination as something still future, 200 years after Antiochus was dead. He says, "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place." Now, unless it can be proved that Antiochus' desolations were after Christ, instead of 200 years before, the attempt of our opponents, to make Antiochus the scape-goat, to bear away all the sins of Papal Rome, and their modern apologists, will be vain.

The Junior Editor of the "Midnight Cry," in the 24th number of that paper, thus notices the absurdity of applying the little horn to Antiochus:

"First Absurdity.—The four dynasties, dominions, or sovereignties, which succeeded Alexander's dominion,—of Grecia,—are represented each by its appropriate horn, one for Egypt, one for Syria, one for Macedonia, and one for Thrace and Bythinia. Now, Antiochus Epiphanes was but one of twenty-five individuals, who constituted the Syrian horn. Could he, at the same time, be another remarkable horn?

“Let us give the degrees of comparison, according to the angel’s rules, and thus compare truth with error. How easy and natural is the following gradation :

Great.	Very Great.	Exceeding Great.
PERSIA,	GREECE,	ROME.

“How absurd and ludicrous is the following !

Great.	Very Great.	Exceeding Great.
PERSIA,	GREECE,	ANTIOCHUS.

“Third Absurdity.—The Medo-Persian power is simply called ‘GREAT,’ (verse 4.) This power, the Bible tells us, ‘reigned from India to Ethiopia, over a hundred and seven and twenty provinces.’ This was succeeded by the Grecian power, which is called ‘VERY GREAT,’ (verse 8.) Then comes the power in question, which is ‘EXCEEDING GREAT.’ Was Antiochus exceedingly (or abundantly) great, when compared with the conqueror of the world? Let an item from the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge answer : ‘Finding his resources exhausted, he resolved to go into Persia, to levy tributes, and to collect LARGE SUMS, which he had AGREED TO PAY TO THE ROMANS.’ Surely, we need not question, which power was exceeding great, that which exacted tribute, or that which was COMPELLED to pay it.

“Fourth Absurdity.—The power in question was ‘little’ at first, but it waxed or grew ‘exceeding great, toward the SOUTH, and toward the EAST, and toward the pleasant land.’ What can this describe but the conquering marches of a mighty power? Rome was almost directly northwest from Jerusalem, and its conquests in Asia and Africa were of course towards the east and south : but where were Antiochus' conquests? He came into possession of a kingdom already established, and Sir Isaac Newton says, 'He did NOT enlarge it.' He did not fulfil this prophecy, and therefore was not the object predicted in it. Rome did fulfil it, and therefore is the object predicted. Rollin says, 'He assumed the title of Epiphanes, that is, illustrious, which title was never WORSE applied. The whole series of his life will show that he deserved much more that of Epimanes, (mad or furious,) which some people gave him.' Rollin then records a catalogue of his foolish actions, to show 'how justly the epithet vile is bestowed upon him;' then gives a detailed account of his life, and records the success he met with in attempting to take the city of Elymais, and plunder the temple of Diana. It seems that Antiochus had grown so weak, (instead of waxing exceeding great,) that the people, who had formerly paid tribute, were not afraid to withhold it. When he came against them, they 'took up arms to defend their temple, and gave him a shameful REPULSE.'

"Fifth Absurdity.—The crowning absurdity of all is, to suppose that Rome is left out of a vision which extends to 'the LAST end of the indignation.' Daniel had a view through the dark clouds which conceal the wonderful landscape of futurity from uninspired eyes. His vision is expressly directed to the things which shall befall his people in the LATTER DAYS. His eye pierces even to the resurrection of the dead, and the glorious kingdom beyond it. Now what are some of the objects in this wondrous prospect? The great object is his Saviour on the cross, dying under a Roman governor, and pierced by a Roman spear. Will he not see this object, on which all heaven gazes?

"There the 'latter days' commence. Daniel's people, after that, are still Abraham's seed, Christ's true Israel, and will he see nothing relating to them? Will he not see that 'exceeding great' power, under which the Jews 'fell by the edge of the sword, and were led away captive into all nations,'—under which Jerusalem was desolated, and the temple burned,—under which 3,000,000 of Christians were killed, crucified, burnt, tortured, torn, or devoured, while it denied Christ,—and under which FIFTY MILLIONS have fallen, 'by flame, sword, captivity, and spoil,' during 'many days' since?"

III. The way is now prepared to inquire, distinctly, what power is represented by the little horn? Can there be any doubt of its being Rome?—Rome Pagan and Papal? Let us first look at its origin, verse 9; and let us remember, that in the Old Testament, nations are not brought into prophecy till somehow connected with the people of God. Rome had been in existence years before it is noticed in prophecy; and Rome had made Macedonia, one of the four horns of the Grecian goat, a part of herself 168 years B. C.; so that Rome could as truly be said to be "out of one of them," as the ten horns of the fourth beast, in the 7th chapter, could be said to come out of that beast, when they were ten kingdoms set up by the conquerors of Rome.

Having noticed the origin of the little horn, let us now inquire for the time it comes up.

23d verse: "When the transgressors are come to the full." It is clear that God designed that his people should trust in him alone;—hence he prohibited their making any "league" with other nations. See Judges ii. 2: "Ye shall make no league with the inhabitants of this land," &c. The Jews broke covenant with God, and about the year 158, B. C., they entered into a league with the Romans. See 1 Mac. 8th and 9th chapters. See Dan. xi. 23. It was at this point the "king [kingdom] of fierce countenance should stand up;" i. e., come to rule, as first noticed in the prophecy, because now they are first connected with the people of God. This, it will be seen, is after Macedonia, one of the four horns, has become a part of Rome.

Let us now look at the character and acts of the little horn. It is of "fierce countenance." See Deut. xxviii. 49, 50 : "The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as swift as the eagle flieth, a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand; a nation of fierce countenance, which shall not regard the person of the old, nor show favor to the young."

All admit the nation here spoken of is the Roman. The "little horn" has "understanding" of "dark sentences." In the text just quoted, from Deut., we are told the Romans are "a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand." Dr. Clarke says, "The learning of Rome is proverbial." The "power" of the "little horn" was to be "mighty." How unlike Antiochus! How like Rome! The little horn was to wax "exceeding great." How ridiculous to apply this to Antiochus; but how appropriately applied to Rome, which added to herself all the four horns of the Grecian goat, and subdued many other provinces. It stands up against the Prince of princes. Our Lord was crucified under the reign of Rome. If it be said, "the Romans did not put the Saviour to death, but that it was done by a Jewish mob;" I reply, let the objector read Acts iv. 26, 27—"The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ. For of a truth, against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles," &c., "were gathered together." This settles that point.

The "little horn" cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, &c., v. 10. Compare this with Rev. xii. 3, 4 : "A great red dragon," &c., "and his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven and did cast them to the earth." All admit that this dragon is Rome; but who can fail of seeing its perfect agreement with the little horn?

"He shall destroy wonderfully." Do any say, "this is applicable to Antiochus?" I reply: If Antiochus destroyed wonderfully, Rome, pagan and papal, destroyed "SEVENTY AND SEVEN FOLD" more so. For, while Antiochus destroyed a few of the Jews, Rome has destroyed millions of them, and more than fifty millions of Christians besides. Rome truly has "destroyed wonderfully." Mark another fact:—"By peace shall" he "destroy many." Antiochus did no such thing: but papal Rome, under pretence of being the vicegerent of the Prince of Peace, did destroy millions. Thus the little horn is distinctly marked to be Rome, pagan and papal. Once more,—mark its end: "broken without hand." How clear the reference to the stone that smites the image "cut out without hands." Rome is not only designated by its origin, time of its standing up, character and acts, but by its end. "Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming," 2 Thess. ii. 8. "Broken without hand."

This construction makes the vision in truth like the first. The application of it to Antiochus originated with a Jew, who wished to magnify his own nation, and has been backed up by Papacy, to keep its own prophetic portrait out of sight; and Protestants have put on the "Babylonish garment," and wear it as though it was the spotless robe of salvation; for, if that robe fails them, the end of the world is upon them in an hour they think not.

Verses 13, 14. "Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

Let us now decide, if we can, what "sanctuary" it is that is to be "cleansed," or "justified," as the margin has it.

Several things are called a sanctuary in the Bible.

1. The Lord, Isa. viii. 14.
2. Heaven, Ps. cii. 19. Neither of these can be meant in the verses before us.

3. Judah, Ps. cxiv. 2. But Judah is utterly cut off. See Isa. lxxv. 15: "The Lord God shall SLAY THEE, and call his servants by another name." Literal Judah, then, is not to be cleansed, but is slain.

4. The Temple is called a sanctuary, 1 Chron. xxii. 19. But that is destroyed, and hence cannot be cleansed.

5. The Holy of Holies, Lev. iv. 6. That also is destroyed; and besides, it is superseded. See Heb. ix. 1—12.

There are only two things more, in relation to God's people, that are called a sanctuary, in the Bible. The sanctuary to be cleansed, spoken of in this chapter, is the one "trodden under foot" with "the host." If the "Prince of the host," v. 11, is the Lord Jesus Christ, then, there can be no doubt, his true church is "the host." By whom, or what, was the host to be trodden under foot? Two desolating powers, called "the daily and the transgression of DESOLATION." The word "sacrifice" is not in the text, and has no warrant for its insertion, except the mere opinion of the translators. The whole period of these desolating abominations, as noticed in this vision, from the Ram pushing, (for there the vision commences,) is 2300 days; then was to terminate the treading under foot. In the detailed explanation of the vision, in chapters xi. and xii., we have the time from the taking away of the first of these abominations to the removing of the second, viz. 1290 days; Dan. xii. 11; then we are assured that 45 days more are to bring us to the "end of the days;" then Daniel was to have his resurrection. If the sanctuary means here, as some suppose, the church, then it is to be cleansed, or, as the margin has it, justified, at the resurrection of Daniel, with all the saints.

The church is sometimes called a sanctuary, or temple of God. See 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17, and Eph. ii. 21, 22. If, then, by "sanctuary" the church is to be understood, what is meant by its being cleansed, or justified? To justify, signifies "to absolve or declare one innocent." To justify an individual is to acquit him. The term is applied to the acquittal of a sinner through faith in Christ; but the full discharge from all the consequences of sin does not take place till the resurrection of the just. See Rom. iv. 25: "Who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification." Compare this with 1 Cor. xv. 17, 18: "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." See, also, Isa. xlv. 25: "In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and shall glory:"—till then, the church groans, being burdened,—for that event she waits. See Rom. viii. 18—23: "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope. Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now: and not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit; even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."

When will this justification of the church take place? See Phil. iii. 20, 21: "Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body," &c. See, also, 1 John iii. 2: "It doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him," &c.

We may expect the church to be completely, fully, and eternally justified from all the consequences of sin, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels. So that if the church is the sanctuary to be cleansed, or justified, it is at the end of this world.

Let us now see if we can find any other sanctuary to be cleansed. The earth or land is called a sanctuary. See Ex. xv. 17: "Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in; in the sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established." See, also, Psa. lxxviii. 54: "He brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to this mountain which his right hand had purchased." Compare these with Eph. i. 14: "Which is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession." See, also, Rom. iv. 13: "For the promise that he should be HEIR OF THE WORLD, was not to Abraham, or his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." Thus, we see, the earth is the inheritance, the sanctuary of Christ and his saints. Has it been defiled? and does it need cleansing? See Isa. xxiv. 5: "The earth is defiled under the inhabitants thereof, because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, broken the everlasting covenant." God created the world to be a mountain of holiness: but the wicked have corrupted it, so that the Lord is to purify it by destroying "those who destroy [corrupt, as the margin reads] the earth." See Rev. xi. 18. The very ground is now under the curse, in consequence of sin. See Gen. iii. 17: "Cursed is the ground for thy sake." This world has been trodden under foot by wicked men and wicked governments unto this day. See Dan. vii. 23: "The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth—which shall devour the whole earth, and shall TREAD IT DOWN and break it in pieces." Such is emphatically the character of all worldly governments; they are a usurpation of the territory of God, and have corrupted the earth.

How will the earth be cleansed? I answer—By fire. See 2 Pet. iii. 7: "The heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto FIRE, against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."

When will this earth be cleansed? We have already seen it is to be at the day of judgment; but before I give a direct answer to the question, I wish to call attention to the following texts: Titus ii. 13: "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." Ps. l. 3: "Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him." Also, Ps. xlv. 6—9: "The heathen raged, the kingdoms were moved: he uttered his voice, and the earth melted. The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge. Selah. Come, behold the works of the Lord, what desolations he hath made in the earth. He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariot in the fire." See, also, Ps. xcvii. 3—5: "The fire goeth before him, and burneth up his enemies round about. His lightnings enlightened the world; the earth saw and trembled. The hills melted like wax at the presence of the Lord, at the presence of the Lord of the whole earth." See Nahum i. 5, 6: "The mountains quake at him, and the hills melt, and the earth is burned at his presence, yea, the world, and all that dwell therein. Who can stand before his indignation? and who can abide his anger? his fury is poured out like fire, and the rocks are thrown down by him." See Matt. xiii. 40—43: "As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be at the end of this world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth." Lastly, see 2 Pet. iii. 10—13: "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night: in which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up. Seeing, then, that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for, and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat. Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

Having now decided what the sanctuary is,—that it is to be cleansed at the end of this world; and that it is to be done by fire,—the way is now prepared to show when the END of this world will come.

We will now give you the 13th and 14th verses of the eighth chapter of Daniel, leaving out what our translators have supplied :—"Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain which spake, How long the vision, the daily and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand three hundred days: then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

The inquiry, "How long the vision," clearly related to the "Ram" and "Goat," as well as "little horn"—and, the 2300 days are given in answer to the question,—"How long the vision?"

It was the meaning of the vision Daniel sought—verse 15: "It came to pass, when I had seen the vision, and sought for the meaning," &c.

It was to make Daniel understand the vision Gabriel was sent—verse 16: "I heard a man's voice between the banks of Ulai, which called and said, Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision."

It was to make Daniel understand the vision Gabriel came—verse 17: "So he came near where I stood, and said unto me, Understand, O son of man."

The first thing Gabriel would have Daniel understand, was, that the vision was down to the end,—verse 17: "At [or unto] the time of the end shall be the vision." He would have Daniel understand that the end intended was the last end of indignation,"—verse 19: "Behold, I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation;" and he would have Daniel know that, "at the time appointed, the end shall be."

The 2300 days is the only time appointed. That time cannot be applied to a particular agent or event, without violence to the whole subject.

Now, let us inquire what Daniel did understand, and what not. The angel explained everything to him respecting the Ram, He-Goat, and Little Horn. But Daniel tells us in the last verse, "I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." What did not Daniel understand? There were, evidently, three things he did not understand: 1st. What "sanctuary" was intended in verse 13; 2d. He did not understand how to reckon the days; and, 3d. Where to commence his reckoning. As Gabriel is not to be charged with disobedience to the command to make Daniel understand the vision, and as he has not fulfilled that command in this chapter, we must look elsewhere to see if he ever did what he was directed to do, and what he promised Daniel he would do.

Let us now look into the 9th chapter. Daniel there informs us that he found out "by books, the number of years, whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem." We might here inquire, Why did not Daniel "find that out before?" It was written in the book, but he did not discover it till now. Our opponents seem to think it is a conclusive argument that we are wrong, because the time of the end of the world has not been found out before now. But is it any more marvellous than that Daniel did not learn that the captivity of the Jews in Babylon was to be seventy years, till those years were accomplished?

When Daniel discovered this fact, fifteen years had passed since the vision of the eighth chapter, and he had all that time been in uncertainty about the points that were not explained to him in that vision. He now seems to catch at the thought, that it must be the "sanctuary" at Jerusalem, to which the vision related, and he at once commences praying accordingly. He, at the 17th verse, prays especially about the sanctuary. "Now, therefore, O our God, hear the prayer of thy servant, and his supplications, and cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary that is desolate, for the Lord's sake." Daniel's mind is evidently on the vision, and he seems to suppose he has got the clue to the sanctuary that is to be "cleansed;" but Gabriel comes flying "swiftly," to stop Daniel in the midst of his prayer. See verse 21: "Yea, while I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation."

Gabriel, why this haste? Why, I see Daniel is wrong—he don't understand the matter—he thinks the vision related to the sanctuary at Jerusalem, and I must stop him, for he is going astray.

"Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision," says Daniel. What vision? Where had Daniel seen Gabriel in vision? Evidently nowhere but in the vision of 2300 days. "Well," says Gabriel, "I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding—therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision."

How is it possible that anything can be plainer than that both Daniel and Gabriel have the vision in mind, that "none understood," at the close of the eighth chapter? "Now," says Gabriel, "understand the matter, as by your prayer I see you did not, and consider the vision—direct your attention to what I have now to say of it. Seventy weeks are determined [cut off, so the word signifies] upon thy people." "Cut off from what?" Surely not from indefinite space; but from some time previously given. What time had Daniel given him before? None, except the 2300 days. The natural inference, then, is that the 70 weeks were cut off from those days : there is nothing else to cut them off from. For what are they cut off? Several objects are specified ; but one especially, viz., “to seal up [or, as the word signifies, see Dan. vi. 17, make sure] the vision.” That is, to confirm and establish the vision : so that, as certain as 70 weeks are accomplished at the death of Messiah, so shall all the vision be accomplished in 2300 days. Now if these 70 weeks are weeks of years, so are all the 2300 days, years. Can the things to be accomplished in those 70 weeks, transpire in so many literal weeks, i. e., in one year and 18 weeks? Certainly not. Then they must be reckoned in some other way. How else can they be reckoned? Is there any Scripture rule for reckoning days for years? See Ezekiel iv. 4—6 : “Lie thou also upon thy left side, and lay the iniquity of the house of Israel upon it : according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon it thou shalt bear their iniquity. For I have laid upon thee the years of their iniquity, according to the number of the days, three hundred and ninety days, so shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel. And when thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy right side, and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days ; I have appointed thee each day for a year.” Here, then, we have an example of days being put for years. The 70 weeks, then, may be reckoned a day for a year, or 490 years. “But,” say some, “the expression is seventy sevens, and means seventy sevens of years, or 490 years.” Thank the objector ; for he only strengthens my argument ; for they are cut off from the 2300, and as you cannot cut off 490 years from 2300 days, it establishes the fact that those 2300 days are years, and that that was what the angel intended to teach Daniel.

The next point on which the angel would inform Daniel, is, where to commence his reckoning. This he does at the 25th verse : “Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks : the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times. And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself : and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary ; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week : and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate."

Here we observe, that the point of beginning is at the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, and the termination of the 70 weeks is at the cutting off of Messiah : the angel then briefly states, that "the people of the prince that shall come," i. e., the same power denoted by the "exceeding great horn," "shall destroy the city and the sanctuary," thus giving Daniel to understand that so far from the sanctuary at Jerusalem being cleansed, it was to be utterly destroyed. The angel, also, runs down in his explanation to the "consummation" of the whole 2300 years.

Let us now inquire when the "commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem" went forth. It is true, there were several decrees relating to that subject. It cannot be either of the first two ; because, neither of them can be made to harmonize with the history of Christ's death. There is but one of the four decrees relating to this matter that can agree with the event ; and the commencement of the vision is clearly at the height of the Persian empire, as Daniel sees the "last horn" of the ram at its highest point when the vision first presents itself to him, and the ram is "pushing," also, in the detailed explanation that the angel gives Daniel in the eleventh chapter, second verse, he points directly to the king of Persia, who "by his strength through his riches" should "stir up all against the realm of Grecia." The Persian empire was at its height under Artaxerxes. In that period, therefore, we should expect to find the decree referred to. Accordingly we find it, in Ezra vii. 21—26, given by Artaxerxes; and Ezra tells us, 8th chap. 31st verse, "Then we departed from the river Ahava, on the twelfth of the first month, to go unto Jerusalem." The Jews reckoned their year from the spring equinox; hence, the 12th of the first month would be the fore part of our April. This, according to the chronology of our Bibles, was in the year before the birth of Christ, by the common reckoning, 457. Now from 2300, the whole length of the vision, take 457

But, for the sake of the argument, suppose we are mistaken in respect to the precise year in which the commandment went forth; all commentators, I believe, agree in the fact, that our Lord was crucified just 490 years from that period. This admission is necessary in any argument with a Jew in proof that Jesus is the promised Messiah, and hence all Christians have used it. Dr. Adam Clarke says, that 490 years, to a day, transpired from the going forth of the commandment to the time that our Lord hung upon the cross. Thus, then, we have settled, by common consent, that 490 years terminated at the cross. But it will be seen that these 490 years, or 70 weeks, are divided into three very unequal parts, as follows:

7 weeks; 7 times 7 are	49 years.
62 weeks; 7 times 62 are	434 years.
1 week; 7 times 1 are	7 years.
70 weeks,	490 years.

The 49 years were employed under Ezra and Nehemiah in restoring and building Jerusalem; then 434 years more to Messiah, making 69 weeks. The term Messiah, signifies "anointed." When was Jesus anointed? At his baptism, when the Holy Spirit descended upon him, and the voice from heaven proclaimed, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Then when our Lord came preaching, Mark i. 15, he says, "the time is fulfilled." What time? Clearly, the 69 weeks: no other time had been given for his manifestation. One week more remains to be filled up before he is cut off; and the chronology of nearly all our Bibles shows that his ministry lasted seven years. Turn to your Polyglott Bibles, and you will see, Matt. ii. 1: "Now when Jesus was born"—the note, by the translators, in the margin, saying, "4th year before the account called Anno Domini." Then turn to the 27th chapter, and you will find 33 as the year of his crucifixion; making his ministry 7 years. You will also find by an examination of the other Evangelists, that the chronology of our Lord's baptism is the year 26, and his death 33. The 70 weeks, or 490 years, then, extend to the year of our Lord which we call 33; and it has been made certain, by astronomical calculations, that that was the year of our Lord's death.

Some tell us, "Messiah was cut off in the midst of the week." The text says no such thing. It simply says—"In the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease." The first inquiry here is, what are we to understand by "the midst?" It does not necessarily mean, in the middle of a thing. Absalom was "in the midst of the oak;" 2 Sam. xviii. 15. David would praise God "in the midst of the congregation;" Psalm xxii. 22. "God is working salvation in the midst of the earth;" Psalm lxxiv. 12. God let "flesh fall in the midst of" the Israelites' "camp;" Psalm lxxviii. 28. Christ is to "rule in the midst of his enemies;" Psalm cx. 2. Some men lie "down in the midst of the sea;" Prov. xxiii. 34. "Thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us;" Jer. xiv. 9. Christ is "in the midst of" two or three who meet in his name; Matthew xviii. 20. Jesus "stood in the midst of" his disciples when they were gathered together, after his resurrection. All these expressions show, that the phrase "in the midst of," denotes no more than, somewhere within the thing spoken of. It may signify throughout the entire period, or place, spoken of. Thus, in the text under consideration, I understand it to signify that the Messiah was to cause the sacrifice and oblation of the Mosaic law to cease during the entire period of his ministry. That is—He never sent a soul to offer those offerings, under the law, as a condition of any benefit he bestowed upon them. It was simply—“According to thy faith be it unto thee.” And this was the case through the entire period of his ministry. He showed, from the very commencement of his preaching, that the great principle of faith was now to take the place of the sacrifices offered under the law. There is but one instance of our Saviour sending any one to offer the sacrifices of the law; and that, not as a condition of healing, but as a “testimony to the priests” that he was healed.

Now, as we have settled the point that the 70 weeks, or 490 years, are cut off from the 2300, we have only to subtract, thus:

2300 years, the whole length of the vision.

490 years to the death of Christ, or the year 33.

1810 remain from the cross. 1810 years, from the year 33, will terminate in 1843.

But some say “Our Lord was crucified in the year 29, and not 33.” They argue this from the fact that he was born four years before the commencement of the vulgar, or common era of his birth. This, it is true, would alter the calculation, if it could not be demonstrated that our Lord was crucified in the year that we call 33. But this has been demonstrated by the best of all evidence, aside from revelation, viz., by astronomical calculations. The crucifixion took place at a passover full moon, or the first full moon after the spring equinox; and it took place on Friday. On this point Ferguson, the astronomer, says:—“The dispute among chronologers about the year of Christ’s death is limited to four or five years at most. I find by calculation the only passover full moon that fell on a Friday for several years before or after the disputed year of the crucifixion, was on the 3d of April, in the 4746th year of the Julian period." The Julian period is a period used by astronomers. The year 1843 is the 6556th year of that period. Now and we have      1810 remaining.

Thus it is demonstrated that the year 1843 is 1810 years from the crucifixion; and I have before shown, that only that number of years remain of the vision after the death of Christ; and as we have proved that his death occurred in the year we call 33, we have only to add thus—

33      the year of the crucifixion.

1843      "the end of the vision."

But, says the objector, "our Lord, then, was in his 37th year at the crucifixion, and that will make an alteration in the calculation." It is admitted he was in his 37th year: and this is proved by astronomical calculation also, and is as follows: Josephus, in giving a history of the last sickness of Herod, who commanded the children to be slain at our Lord's birth, records an eclipse of the moon to have taken place during that sickness. From Christ's death to that eclipse is 36 years. One year more added for the age of our Lord, at that time, would make him in his 37th year at his death. He was baptized and commenced his public ministry at 30. See Luke iii. 33. His age at his death cannot alter the calculation, so long as it is demonstrated that he was actually put to death in our year 33. The CROSS is the SEAL of the vision, and not the birth. Let me illustrate this point. Here is a rail-road 2300 miles long.

from which to start. +	1810 miles, the remainder.
490 miles to an inter   mediate depot.

We have travelled over 490 miles of this road to the intermediate depot; then a dispute arises in reference to a passenger who took his seat in the car some distance back. One says, he took his seat 29 miles back—no, says another, it was 33—not so, cries a third, he got into the cars 37 miles back. Now, I ask, can it make the distance one mile longer or shorter, from the starting depot to the intermediate one, whether the passenger took his seat 29, 33, 37 or 50 miles back? It is just 490 between the two depots, let the passenger take his seat at what point he would.

So, let our Lord's age be what it might, so long as it is settled that he died in our year 33, and that that terminated the 70 weeks, or 490 years, it cannot at all alter the calculation with regard to the termination of the vision.

Let me illustrate the subject before us. You are travelling a road with which you are unacquainted: night overtakes you: you inquire of a stranger, who tells you the road is a dangerous one, and you must not travel it in the dark: you tell him you must proceed; but, says the stranger, you will have to pass a river, the banks of which are perpendicular, and there is only a narrow bridge to pass that river—a single misstep will plunge you in irrecoverable ruin. You ask, how far it is to that river. He tells you, it is 2300 rods. You desire to know how you can determine the stranger has told you the truth. He informs you that just 490 rods from his door you will come to a high pillar, on the top of which is a flaming torch that can be seen at a great distance. You now take a measuring line and go forward, measuring as you go,—you see the torch, and find, on measuring to the foot of the pillar, it is just 490 rods. What now? Why, you reason thus—I find the stranger has told the truth thus far. What is the inference? Why, I shall find all he has told me is true. How far did he tell me it was to the river? 2300 rods. How far to this pillar? 490. How much farther then have I to go, to arrive at the river?

1810 left. You proceed, measuring as you go. I ask you if when you have measured off 1809 rods, you would not walk carefully the next rod, feeling every inch? Undoubtedly you would; and if you did not take heed you would be likely to perish.

Thus God has measured off 2300 years: that we might know that he had told us the truth, he gave us the death of Christ to seal, or make sure the vision, just 490 years from the commencement of the long period. Then the sum stands thus—As 490 years reach exactly to the Cross of Christ, so 1810 more will reach to the end of the vision.

We came to the cross, and found it just 490 years; we have passed that cross, and are closing up the last weeks of the 1810th year since that period. Ought we not to walk carefully—we stand on the verge of the termination of a period of solemn importance.

This year the vision of 2300 years will end: every hour, now, we are to look for the revelation of the Son of Man in the clouds of heaven. This year, Daniel will stand in his "lot," or have his "inheritance," and all the saints with him. This year, the elements will melt with fervent heat, and the earth also: and the works that are therein shall be burned up. This year, "the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it." Prov. ii. 22. This year—"the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men" will come. 2 Pet. iii. 7.

Are we ready for the solemn, the tremendous events? Have we repented of and forsaken our sins? Have we fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before us, in Jesus Christ? Have we made our Judge our friend?—Not a moment is to be lost. When once the Lord Jesus has left his Mediatorial seat, the door of mercy is closed, and closed FOREVER!

The Return of the Jews.

BY GEO. STORRS.

It is said, "The world cannot come to an end yet, for the Jews are to be brought in first:" it is added, "God must have some great design in having kept the Jews a distinct people for the last 1800 years;" and, it is asked, "What can that design be but their conversion to Christianity?"

In reply, I remark, God has not "kept the Jews a distinct people." Here is the root of the error of our opponents, in regard to the Jews. I will not deny but that they are a distinct people; but, the question is, who has kept them so? Our opponents say God has; but I deny it. God has no more kept the Jews a distinct people than he has kept drunkards "a distinct people," or than he has kept Mormons, or Mahomedans, or Papists, or liars, or any other class of wicked or deluded men, "a distinct people." The fact is, God broke down the "partition wall" between Jews and Gentiles by the death of his Son; and never intended that any distinction should exist after "the seed should come to whom the promise was made." That "seed is Christ." See Gal. chap. iii. Christ, says Paul to the Ephesians, (ii. 14,) "is our peace, who hath made both one, [Jews and Gentiles] and hath broken down the middle wall of partition."

To talk about God's keeping "the Jews a distinct people," in the face of such positive declarations of the Bible to the contrary, it seems to me, shows a strong disposition to maintain a theory at all hazards. The truth is, God has abolished all distinction, under the gospel dispensation, between Jews, as the natural descendants of Abraham, and Gentiles. That very circumstance was what enraged the proud Jews, and they united in rebellion against God's purpose, and blasphemously said they would not be put on a level with the Gentiles ; and they have labored for 1800 years to keep up a " wall " of distinction, which, in the purpose of God, was to exist no more after his Son broke it down by his death upon the cross.

The Jews, then, have kept themselves " a distinct people," and have done it in opposition to the will of God unto this day, as really and as criminally as drunkards have kept themselves " a distinct people ;" and it may just as well be claimed that God has kept the drunkards a distinct people with the design to convert them, as to set up such a claim for the Jews. I repeat it, the Jews are a distinct people by their own fault, and as criminally as drunkards, or any other class of sinners.

I shall now call attention to a few texts of Scripture which show that the natural descendants of Abraham, under the gospel, have no peculiar privileges or promises. See Matt. iii. 9: " And think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father : for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham." Thus John the Baptist lays the " axe unto the root of the trees " of Jewish prejudice and pride, and gives them to understand that a dispensation is now opening in which the being a literal descendant of Abraham would avail nothing. This was a dreadful blow to Judaism, and it made the " dry tree " shake to its very roots. Now let us see if our Saviour did not cut it entirely down. See John viii. 39: " They answered and said unto him, Abraham is our father. Jesus saith unto them, IF ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham." Here is a plain, positive denial that the Jews, as such, were the children of Abraham ; and a clear statement of what constitutes a real child of Abraham, viz., doing " the works of Abraham." Our Lord tells the Jews in the 44th verse, " Ye are of your father the devil." This gives us a clue to the inquiry, who has kept them a distinct people ? It is their father, the devil. Let none attribute such a devilish work to God any more. They are a " distinct people " because they choose to obey the devil rather than God ; and to suppose that their conversion is to be the result of their serving devils is to suppose that God gives to men a reward for rebellion. Besides, whenever a Jew is converted, his distinctive character as a Jew ceases at once. This shows that their being a distinct people is a work of the devil and not of God, as God abolishes that distinction when they obey him. Now let us look at Rev. ii. 9 : " I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are of the synagogue of Satan." Again, Rev. iii. 9 : " Them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie." Can any doubt who are meant by real Jews in these verses? Are they not real Christians? While the natural descendants of Abraham, as such, or Christians, who are so only in pretence, " are of the synagogue of Satan." In connection with these texts, see Rom. ii. 28, 29 : " For he is NOT a Jew which is one outwardly ; neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh. But he is a Jew which is one inwardly ; and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter ; whose praise is not of men, but of God."

Here inspiration settles the question, that those whom we call Jews are not Jews ; and God no more regards them as Jews than he regards drunkards as sober men ; or, than he regards wicked apostates as real Christians. We are here also given to understand distinctly, who are Jews under the gospel dispensation—they are real Christians.

That the literal descendants of Abraham, as such, are utterly rejected, except on the same conditions of other sinners, see Isa. lxx. 11—15 : " But ye are they that forsake the Lord, that forget my holy mountain, that prepare a table for that troop, and that furnish the drink-offering unto that number. Therefore will I number you to the sword, and ye shall all bow down to the slaughter : because when I called ye did not answer ; when I spake, ye did not hear ; but did evil before mine eyes, and did choose that wherein I delighted not. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, my servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry : behold, my servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty : behold, my servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be ashamed : behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit. And ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen, for the Lord God shall SLAY THEE, and call his servants by another name."

What language could more forcibly express an utter rejection from the very name of being God's people than that here employed? Read over these verses again, and see how carefully and clearly God distinguishes between the Jews, as such, and his people. That this rejection of them from being his people was to last till the end of this world, see the following verses, where we are carried down to the new heavens and the new earth ; and then God tells his people, whom he shall call "by another name," "Be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create : for behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy."

What Jerusalem? See Rev. xxi. 1, 2. "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth : for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away ; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband."

Here is a perfect parallel, and when compared together, give us a clear idea of the language of God by Isaiah, in the verses under consideration. The Lord adds, 19th verse, "And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people ; and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying." This exactly corresponds with Rev. xxi. 4: "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes ; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain : for the former things are passed away."*

Now see Rom. ix. 6—8 : "Not as though the word of God hath taken none effect. For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel; neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children; but, in Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God; but the children of the promise are counted for the seed." Compare this with Gal. iv. 28: "Now we, brethren, [We. Who? Believers— whether from among the Jews or Gentiles] as Isaac was, are the children of promise."

Here the apostle settles the question who are children of promise; and settles it to be those who have faith in Christ, without regard to their previous nationality. These are the persons to whom the promises are made, and not the natural descendants of Abraham.

What has become of old Jerusalem and her children? The apostle tells you in the 25th verse of this chapter—"For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children." Is this old bond-woman and her children to inherit the promises of God with real Christians? See 30 and 31st verses of this chapter—"Nevertheless, what saith the Scripture? Cast out the bond-woman and her son: for the son of the bond-woman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman. So then, brethren, we are not children of the bond-woman, but of the free."

But where is the Jerusalem to which the promises are made? See 25th verse: "But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all."

Thus we learn, that old Jerusalem, or the Jews, as such, are rejected from the promises of God; and that all the promises pass over to the "servants" of God, who are called "by another name," viz., to true Christians, who are the only true Jews and children of Jerusalem; so that there are no promises of restoration, or conversion, to the literal descendants of Abraham, more than to any other class of sinners.

"But," says the objector, "the Jews must be brought in with the fulness of the Gentiles ;" and he adds—" that 's Bible language." Thus spake a Doctor of Divinity of this city. Well, Doctor, where in the Bible do you find such language? Please tell us. Ans. Nowhere! It 's not there! It 's only in the Doctor's Creed! That 's all! But is there nothing that sounds like it in the Bible? Perhaps there is; but when D. D.'s tell us such words are "Bible language," they should be careful that they quote correctly. The portion of Scripture, doubtless, referred to, is Rom. xi. 25: "For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, (lest ye should be wise in your own conceits,) that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in."

Now if this verse proves the return or conversion of the Jews, it proves also that it will not take place "UNTIL the fulness of the Gentiles be come in." Of course, there is to be no more of the Gentiles converted after the bringing in of the Jews commences; and as I understand the aforesaid Doctor thinks the return of the Jews is to commence this year, his doctrine is as fatal to the Gentiles as ours. Let all then who are not Jews, be aroused to seek salvation immediately. This year, remember, "our enemies themselves being judges," probation is to cease to the Gentiles.

As the strength of the whole argument, so far as the New Testament is concerned, lies in the 11th chapter of Romans, I will give that chapter a full examination.

First. Who was the apostle addressing in that chapter? The 13th verse will tell you: "For I speak to you Gentiles, inasmuch as I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office." What was his controversy with the Gentile converts? It is evidently about the nature of that rejection, of which the Jews were the subjects. It seems, the Gentiles had imbibed the notion that God had utterly rejected the Jews, so that they were placed beyond the reach of salvation. Paul undertakes to refute that idea. How does he do it? Let us begin the chapter. "I say then, hath God cast away his people? [That is—has he so rejected them that there is no salvation for them?] God forbid." But, how do you prove that, Paul? "I will tell you," says the apostle. First—"For I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin," and I have obtained salvation. This is my first proof that God has not cast away the Jews so but that they may have salvation. But, Paul, you are a favored character—have you any other proof that God has not put the Jews beyond the reach of his mercy? Yes, says the apostle—"God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew. Wot ye not what the Scripture saith of Elias? how he maketh intercession to God against Israel, saying, Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars; and I am left alone, and they seek my life. But what saith the answer of God unto him? I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal." The apostle adds—"Even so then, at this present time, also, there is a REMNANT according to the election of grace; this is my second argument that salvation to the Jews is possible, wicked as they are; I am saved, and a remnant besides are saved." Paul then proceeds to say—"And if by grace, then is it no more of works; otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then it is no more grace; otherwise work is no more work. What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded, (according as it is written, God hath given them the spirit of slumber, eyes that they should not see, ears that they should not hear;) unto this day."

Who were the "election?" Ans. Paul, and that part of the Jews who embraced the gospel: because they "were obedient to the faith," (see Acts vi. 7,) the Lord elected, or chose them to the enjoyment of his favor, as his spiritual Israel. Those who did not obey [see chap. x. 16 and 21st verses,] "were blinded." The apostle then goes on to say, verses 9 and 10, that David propheesied of this thing—"And David saith, Let their table be made a snare, and a trap, and a stumbling block, and a recompense unto them : let their eyes be darkened, that they may not see, and bow their back always."

Why were their eyes darkened? Because they rejected "the true light,"—the Lord Jesus Christ. But the apostle adds, 11th verse, "I say, then, Have they stumbled that they should fall," beyond the possibility of salvation? "God forbid;" or by no means, as the phrase signifies; "but through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealousy:"—that is, the Jews were provoked to jealousy by the salvation of the gospel being preached to the Gentiles. See Acts xiii. 45, 46: "But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and spake against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming. Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you : but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles."

The middle wall was now broken down—the Jews fell from the peculiarity they had enjoyed, and through, or by means of that fall, salvation came to the Gentiles on the same terms that it flowed to a Jew; viz., by faith in Jesus Christ. "Now," says the apostle, 12th verse, "if the fall of them be the riches of the world," [or be the means of enriching the world, by salvation flowing to all men with equal freedom,] and the diminishing of them [or, as the margin reads, "loss" of them, or their "loss,"] the riches of the Gentiles, [or, has been the means of riches to the Gentiles,] "how much more their fulness." As though the apostle had said, "Salvation has richly flowed to you Gentiles through the loss to the Jews of their peculiarity, but if they could be induced, generally, to embrace the gospel, there would be a still greater blessing flow to the world." And surely the unbelief of the Jews has prevented thousands and millions, probably, from embracing Christianity; and what a work of enriching the world they might have accomplished had they espoused the cause of Christ, instead of employing all their influence against it!

The apostle now proceeds to say, verses 13 and 14: "I speak to you Gentiles; inasmuch as I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office; IF BY ANY MEANS I may provoke to emulation them which are my flesh, and might save SOME OF THEM."

Surely this language does not look much as if the apostle thought that the Jews were all to be converted. He even expresses a doubt as to the salvation of any of them; but says, he labors, "if by any means" he "might save some of them." He must have been peculiarly unfortunate in his expressions, if he intended to teach that the Jews were certainly to be converted. But, says the apostle, verse 15, "If the casting away of them [viz., the unbelieving Jews] be the reconciling of the world, [i. e., the cause of the gospel of reconciliation being preached to the world; or, perhaps, more strictly, the means of destroying the cause of enmity between Jews and Gentiles, bringing all on to the same ground in relation to God and one another, thus destroying 'the enmity' which had existed, 'by his cross,' see Eph. ii. 15—18,—if this casting away of them resulted so gloriously for the world,] what shall the receiving of them be ['if by any means I might save some of them'] but life from the dead?" That is, if the Jews could "by any means" be brought to give up their unbelief, and embrace Christianity, it would give new life and power to the gospel itself. But Paul is very far from teaching that they should actually do so. All the apostle's language shows a doubt about the Jews, many of them, ever embracing the religion of Jesus. But he says, verse 16th, "If the first fruit be holy, the lump also" [may be holy.] Is not that the sense? The verb "is," is not in the original. What is the apostle's argument? Is it not this? "Though I have my doubts whether many of the Jews will be saved, yet their salvation is possible; for if the first fruit [viz., the apostle himself, and the remnant of whom he had spoken in the 5th verse] be holy, [or have been made holy] the lump [or body of the Jews may be made holy] also : and if the root [Christ, see Isa. xi. 10,] be holy, so are the branches." That is—if those who are now unbelieving, would believe on Christ, the root, they would become holy, as well as we who are the "first fruits," and so they might be saved. The whole argument goes to prove the possibility of the salvation of the Jews ; but, at the same time, shows that the apostle had doubts whether many of them would be saved, though he hoped to "save some of them."

He now proceeds to caution the Gentile converts against being puffed up because they had been brought into exalted privileges : and he does this with tremendous effect, in verses 17—22. He says, "And if some of the branches be broken off, and thou, being a wild olive tree, wert grafted in among them, and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the olive tree ; boast not against the branches. But if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee. Thou wilt say, then, The branches were broken off, that I might be grafted in. Well ; because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. Be not high-minded, but fear : for if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee. Behold, therefore, the goodness and severity of God ; on them which fell, severity ; but toward thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness ; otherwise thou also shalt be cut off."

The apostle then goes on to say, verse 23, "They also, IF they abide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in : for God is able to graft them in again," IF they abide not still in unbelief. Here the apostle carefully sets his sentinel. It is a small word, it is true, but it is of tremendous import, showing that the apostle never designed to be understood as teaching the certainty of the Jews' conversion : if he had intended to teach it, he would not have set the unbending word

"if" to stand sentinel to keep all carnal Jews and Gentiles out of the church of God.

The apostle now proceeds to argue this case still further, and says, verse 24, "For if thou wert cut out of the olive tree which is wild by nature, and wert grafted contrary to nature into a good olive tree; how much more shall these, which be the natural branches, be grafted into their own olive tree?"—"if they abide not still in unbelief." He then goes on to say, 25th verse, "For I would not have you to be ignorant of this mystery, lest you should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness in part is happened to Israel, [or to a part of Israel, viz., those who believed not, and this blindness will continue] until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in;" that is, till the end of the world; for, till then, we have no reason to suppose the fulness of the Gentiles will be come in. The apostle saw that a part of the Jews would continue to reject Christ till the end of the world; but that was no evidence of the impossibility of their salvation, "if" they would give up their "unbelief." Paul then adds, verse 26, "And so all Israel shall be saved—['if they abide not still in unbelief;'—for, the apostle speaks constantly in reference to the trusty sentinel he has set to guard against intruders] as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins."

Where is this written? See Isa. lix. 20, 21:

"And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord; my spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and forever."

Here the prophet helps us to understand the apostle; and he teaches us that the promise is that the Redeemer shall come unto them that turn from trans- gression in Jacob ; and that the covenant relates to an eternal inheritance, and not to a mere conversion of any class of wicked men.

The apostle next proceeds to say, verse 28, that, "As concerning the gospel, they [the unbelieving Jews] are enemies for your sakes, [or, on your account, i. e., they were enemies because the partition wall was broken down, and the Gentiles were admitted to the same favor of God as themselves, and on the same terms—see Acts xiii. 42—46 ;] but, as touching the election, [that is, the believing Jews—see verse 7,] they are beloved for the fathers' sakes." God has a special love to a believing Jew for the fathers' sake, on the principle that he "keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him, to a thousand generations." See Deut. vii. 9. Thus, the Gentile converts were made to understand, that though God had rejected the unbelieving Jews from his favor, yet, when they believed, as they all might if they would, they were regarded with special favor for the fathers' sake ; for, God had not forgotten the faith of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob ; and his "gifts and calling" to the "fathers," he had never repented of, or changed his purpose of making them the chosen vessels through whom he would bless the world.

Now let us examine the ORIGINAL PROMISES made to the fathers. See Gen. xiii. 14, 15 : "And the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward : for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever."

Now see 17th chapter, 7th and 8th verses : "And I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee, in their generations, for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee. And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession ; and I will be their God."

Now compare these promises with Acts vii. 4, 5 : " Then came he out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran ; and from thence, when his father was dead, he removed them into this land, wherein ye now dwell. And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on : yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child."

Now, if the promise to Abraham related to literal Canaan, then the promise of God utterly failed. But it did not relate to that ; and Abraham never so understood it. In proof of this, see Heb. xi. 8—10 : " By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed ; and he went out, not knowing whither he went. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise : for he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

The apostle goes on to say, verses 13 to 16 : " These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. For they that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country. And truly, if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned : but now they desire a better country, that is, a heavenly : wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God ; for he hath prepared for them a city."

The apostle continues to discourse, and enumerates " David, Samuel and all the prophets," who dwelt in the literal Canaan, and yet he tells us, verses 39, 40 : " And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise ; God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect."

If the promise related to the possession of literal

Canaan, they did receive it; but Paul declares they did not receive the promise; which shows that the promise related to a different inheritance; even an heavenly, or the new earth; for “the meek shall inherit the earth.”

Let us now examine the original promises as made to Isaac and Jacob. See Gen. xxvi. 3, 4: “Sojourn in this land; and I will be with thee, and will bless thee: for unto thee and unto thy seed, I will give all these countries: and I will perform the oath which I swore unto Abraham thy father: and I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven, and will give unto thy seed all these countries: and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.” See, also, Gen. xxviii. 13, 14: “And, behold, the Lord stood above it, and said, I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac: the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed. And thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth; and thou shalt spread abroad to the west, and to the east, and to the north, and to the south: and in thee, and in thy seed, shall all the families of the earth be blessed.”

Now let us inquire, who “thy seed” is, to whom those promises are made. See Gal. iii. 16: “Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ.”

“Thy seed,” then, “is Christ.” Did Christ ever possess a foot of old Canaan? No. He had “not where to lay his head;” so he testifies himself. The promise, then, was not fulfilled to Abraham, Isaac, nor our blessed Lord; and hence remains to be fulfilled.

Let us now see if we can determine to what the promise related, and who are the heirs of it. See Rom. iv. 13—16: “For the promise, that he should be the HEIR OF THE WORLD, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith. For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect. Because the law worketh wrath : for where no law is, there is no transgression. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace ; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed : not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all."

Now we have found what the inheritance is—who the heirs are—and who the children are to whom the promises are made, not the literal descendants of Abraham, but all who are "of faith." The world belongs to Christ and his people : they have been persecuted and destroyed out of the earth ; but our Lord is coming to glorify his saints, and to destroy his and their enemies, and take possession of the inheritance, after purifying it by fire, and renewing it in glory.

But let us examine the subject still further as to who are the heirs, and to whom the promises belong. See Gal. iii. 6—9. "Even as Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness ; know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham."

Now see the 15th to 19th verse, same chapter :

"Brethren, I speak after the manner of men ; though it be but a man's covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto. Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many ; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ. And this I say, That the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise ; but God gave it to Abraham by promise. Wherefore then serveth the law ? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made ; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator."

See also 26th to 29th verse, same chapter: "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

If this does not settle the question, as to whom the promises belong, it seems to me impossible to settle any question.

Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, neither received nor looked for a temporal inheritance. They understood the promises in a higher sense. They will be "brought in," and all the true "seed" with them; but, it is into an eternal inheritance, in the "new heavens and new earth."

When God brought Israel into literal Canaan, he directed all the wicked inhabitants to be destroyed out of it; so when he is about to bring his true Israel into the promised inheritance, and give them "the world" for their "everlasting possession," he will destroy all the wicked out of the earth. See Prov. ii. 22: "But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it."

See, also, Malachi iv. 1—3: "For behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet, in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts."

Look at Rev. xi. 15—18: "And the seventh angel sounded: and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever. And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces and worshipped God, saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art and wast, and art to come ; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great ; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth."

In view of the fact that the heirs of the promises are Abraham's children by faith, and not by natural descent, read the following Scriptures: Isa. xxxiii. 15—17, 20—22 : "He that walketh righteously, and speaketh uprightly ; he that despiseth the gain of oppressions, that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil ; he shall dwell on high ; his place of defence shall be the munitions of rocks : bread shall be given him ; his waters shall be sure. Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty : they shall behold the land that is very far off. Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities : thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down : not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken. But there the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams ; wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ship pass thereby. For the Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our Lawgiver, the Lord is our King ; he will save us." Isa. xxxv. 3—6, 9, 10 : "Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees. Say to them that are of a fearful heart, be strong, fear not : behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense ; he will come and save you. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing; for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon: it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there; and the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Isaiah lv. 12, 13: "For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace; the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle-tree; and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off." Isaiah lx. 18—22: "Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls salvation, and thy gates praise. The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. Thy son shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself; for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended. Thy people also shall be all righteous; they shall inherit the land forever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified. A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation—I the Lord will hasten it in his time."

See also Ezekiel xxxiv. 23—28: "And I will set up one Shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd. And I the Lord will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them: I the Lord have spoken it. And I will make with them a covenant of peace, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land—and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods. And I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing; and I will cause the shower to come down in his seasons—there shall be showers of blessing. And the tree of the field shall yield her fruit, and the earth shall yield her increase, and they shall be safe in their land, and shall know that I am the Lord, when I have broken the bands of their yoke, and delivered them out of the hand of those that served themselves of them. And they shall no more be a prey to the heathen, neither shall the beasts of the land devour them; but they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid."

Thus we have "given unto us exceeding great and precious promises." But take those promises and give them to carnal Jews, and you "take the children's bread and cast it unto dogs." Such is the work, I think, those are doing who apply such promises to any but Abraham's children by faith: to them "the promises are made," and to them alone. The true Israel shall all be gathered when Christ appears in the clouds of heaven—then "He shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet; and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of the heaven to the other." Wherever they have been scattered, they shall now all be gathered; yea, into "their own land," and shall be "HEIRS OF THE WORLD;" then will "the saints" have taken "the kingdom," and they shall "possess the kingdom forever, even for EVER and EVER."

That glorious day is now "nigh, even at the doors." Let the children of God "lift up" their "heads, for" their "redemption" is at hand; now ready to be revealed. Let us wait, watch, and keep ready for that day.

In conclusion, I wish my readers to look at the following texts. 2 Cor. i. 19, 20: "For the Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us, even by me, and Sylvanus and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, but in him was yea. For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him Amen, unto the glory of God by us." Compare this with 1 John v. 12: "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life."

Can it be plainer, that ALL THE PROMISES of God are IN CHRIST? and therefore they are not to any soul OUT of him; whether carnal Jews or any other class of wicked men. May the Lord give us understanding in all things, and guide us unto his eternal kingdom.

Exposition of Isaiah LXV. 17—25.

BY GEORGE STORRS.

THERE are many who think this portion of Scripture relates to some regeneration in this world prior to the end, or a second coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; or else that it is to be understood as figurative. I apprehend it is neither the one nor the other, but that it is a plain literal description of the final abode of the saints. The apostle Peter, after showing that the heavens and the earth which are now are to be dissolved, or melted, adds—"Nevertheless, we, according to HIS PROMISE, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

Where did Peter find that promise? Let us now proceed to an examination of Isa. lxxv.

Verse 17. "For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind;" or, as the margin has it, "come upon the heart," or be desired. Such will be the glory of the new earth that there will be no desire for the old which has passed away."

Verse 18. "Be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create: for behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy." What Jerusalem? See Rev. xxi. 1, 2: "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband."

Here is a perfect parallel, and when compared together, give us a clear idea of the language of God by Isaiah, in the verses under consideration. The Lord adds, 19th verse: "And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people; and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying." This exactly corresponds with Rev. xxi. 4: "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."

But some will say, the 20th verse of the 65th chapter of Isaiah shows that it cannot be speaking of the immortal state. Let us see. "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die a hundred years old; but the sinner being a hundred years old shall be accursed."

Now, what is the instruction intended to be communicated in this verse? Not that there is dying in that state, or in the new earth spoken of; for such an interpretation would contradict the 19th verse, which expressly says, "The voice of weeping shall no more be heard in her, nor the voice of crying." Now, this cannot be true if there is death there. What then does the 20th verse mean? Let us examine it. There is to be new heavens and a new earth. The inhabitants are to correspond with such a regeneration; then there must be no more helplessness, for, this would produce both sorrow and crying, which are not to exist in that state. But, will not the helpless infants enter that world, who leave this in all their helplessness? Yes. But when they enter there they shall be as perfectly free from helplessness as though they had died a "hundred years old." "The child shall die a hundred years old;" or, he shall at once attain to as great perfection as though he had been at that age when he left this world; and this is given as a reason why "there shall be no more thence an infant of days," or helpless infants there. They will be at once as capable of taking care of themselves as though they had left this world "a hundred years old." There shall not be there "an old man that hath not filled his days." As there shall be no sorrow from infancy, so there shall be none from age; for, old men who have "filled" their days, i. e., the righteous old men, shall have their "youth renewed like the eagle;" Ps. ciii. 5; while "the sinner an hundred years old shall be accursed;" that is, he shall not enter that new earth at all; for nothing that is cursed can come there.—This I believe to be the plain sense of this 20th verse. In this interpretation I am sustained by the reading and notes in some of the oldest Bibles. One copy, printed before 1580, reads thus: "There shall be no more there a child of years, nor an old man that hath not filled his years; for he that shall be an hundred years old shall die as a young man." A note in the margin says, "Meaning, in this wonderful restoration of the church, there shall be no weakness of youth nor infirmities of age, but all shall be fresh and flourishing: and this is accomplished in the heavenly Jerusalem when all sins shall cease and the tears shall be wiped away." On the last clause of the verse, "the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed," the same note says, "Whereby he showed that the infidels and unrepentant sinners have no part of this benediction."

"But," continues the objector, "it cannot refer to the immortal state, for the 21st verse says—They shall build houses and inhabit them. Surely nothing of that can take place in heaven."

Where is heaven? Most people suppose that heaven is somewhere in indefinite space, but seem to have no definite idea what it is, nor where it is. Of course, their faith has no object to rest upon; the result is, they have become reconciled to make the best of this world, and are striving to make themselves so comfortable in their fine houses, pleasant walks, and worldly joys, that you cannot give them greater trouble than to tell them Christ is coming to put his saints into their inheritance: they are well satisfied to live here forever, without Christ, in preference to going to 'a heaven of which they have no definite idea.

But let us see what the Scriptures teach about the saints' inheritance. See the following texts. Psa. xxxvii. 9: "For evil doers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the LORD, they shall inherit the earth."

Verse 11: "But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace."

Verse 22: "For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off." Verse 29: "The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever."

Verse 34: "Wait on the LORD, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land: when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it." "See" what? See the land they are to inherit. When? "When the wicked are cut off;" according to Proverbs ii. 22: "But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it." Then "the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it." And our Saviour saith—"Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth."

Have these and similar promises ever been fulfilled to the saints? No; their portion has been and will be, "in this world, TRIBULATION." But the promise is, that they shall inherit the earth—be "HEIRS OF THE WORLD." See Rom. iv. 13.

The earth, then, renewed, regenerated by fire, and the power of God, is to be the eternal inheritance of the saints, and they shall "DWELL THEREIN FOREVER."

Having now settled the place of the saints' abode, we may attend to what Isaiah saith. "They shall build houses and inhabit them." "Will they build houses in the new earth?" So Isaiah saith: and shall

I dispute it! God says they will, and I dare not say, no. See the description of the New Jerusalem, Rev. 21st chapter. Here are "walls—gates," &c. It looks very much like building; and I know of no right we have to make the language figurative. I agree with Isaiah, then; they will build houses and inhabit them. "Let God be true," if "every man" is proved a "liar."

But says the objector—"The prophet tells us 'They shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them.' Do you think they will eat there?" Why not? Angels eat. See Psa. lxxviii. 25: "Man did eat angels' food." Where? In the wilderness, when God gave them "manna," "the corn of heaven." See also Gen. xviii., where the "Lord" and "two angels" appeared to Abraham. What was done on that occasion? "And Abraham hastened into the tent unto Sarah, and said, Make ready quickly three measures of fine meal, knead it, and make cakes upon the hearth. And Abraham ran unto the herd, and fetched a calf tender and good, and gave it unto a young man; and he hastened to dress it. And he took butter, and milk, and the calf which he had dressed, and set it before them: and he stood by them under the tree, and THEY DID EAT." Our Lord ate after his resurrection. See Acts x. 40, 41: "Him God raised up the third day, and shewed him openly: not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead." Thus we see our Lord eat, and why may not his members after their resurrection?

Now look at the following texts. Luke xxii. 29: "And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me:" Verse 30: "That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Rev. vii. 17: "For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." I might multiply this teatimony, but enough has been given to show what the Scriptures teach on the question; and that, in the immortal state, there is eating and drinking; not figuratively, but really.

"But that makes heaven very carnal!" I ask,—Does it make it any more carnal than the Bible makes it? I think not: and I dare not alter it.

Verse 22: "They shall not build and another inhabit;" [as men often do in this world;] "they shall not plant and another eat;" [i. e., they shall not have the fruit of their efforts wrested from them, as is frequently done in this state of sin and covetousness;] "for as the days of a tree" [even "the tree of life which is in the midst of the Paradise of God"] "are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands," [even "forever and ever."]

Verse 23: "They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth [the fruit of that labor] for trouble;" [because there is none to "hurt or destroy" in the new earth;] "for they are the seed of the blessed of the LORD, and their offspring with them." ["Behold, I and the children which thou hast given me." Such will, no doubt, be the language of many who have been instrumental in bringing their children into the new earth.]

Verse 24: "And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear."

This denotes the special and constant attention that God will give to their "desires," all of which will there "be granted," and that without delay.

Verse 25: "The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock; and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the LORD."

"That shows," says the objector, "that it cannot be in the immortal state, or new earth." But I ask—Why not? Can any man prove that there are to be no animals in that land? I think none can do it. When Adam was created there were animals on the earth; and none, I apprehend, can show that those animals would ever have died, had it not been for the introduction of sin. The animal creation have suffered by the sin of man, and not by their own fault. God pronounced his work, at the close of creation, "very good;" and when the work of "restitution" is accomplished, let any man show, who can, that there are no animals in that regenerated state. It is true, their ferocious character will be changed, and will correspond with the peaceable character of the inhabitants of the new earth. Can any man believe the earth, itself, would ever have been "cursed," [see Gen iii. 17,] had it not been for sin? The animals felt the shock, and "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now;" but when the "times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," comes, then, let him show, who can, that animals will not be restored to that which they lost by no fault of their own. The new earth will be no more than "very good;" and when the earth was very good there were animals. See Gen i. 24, 25, 26: "And God said; Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beasts of the earth after his kind: and it was so. And God made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and everything that creepeth upon the earth after his kind: and God saw that it was good. And God saw everything he had made, and behold it was very good. And the evening and the morning were the sixth day."

When "the redemption of the purchased possession" is fully accomplished, and God says "IT IS DONE," then shall all things which are not cursed by their own fault, again be very good; nor can I see any reason why animals, which were included in the approbation God gave to his works, are to be excluded from that regeneration.

This view presents to the mind a heaven, not of imagination, but of reality: a heaven such as the ancient worthies looked for, and "took joyfully the spoiling" of their "goods, knowing" that they had "in heaven a better and an enduring SUBSTANCE."

Harmony of Zechariah XIV.

BY GEO. STORRS.

WE will now attempt a harmony of Zechariah xivth. Let us remember that the prophets see different events at the same glance, in the prophetic glass, and often record the events without noting the chronological order. Apply this idea to the chapter under consideration, and read it as follows :

Verses 1—2 : "Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle ; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished ; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city."

Verses 12—15 : "And this shall be the plague wherewith the Lord will smite all the people that have fought against Jerusalem ; their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongue shall consume away in their mouth. And it shall come to pass in that day, that a great tumult from the Lord shall be among them ; and they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbor, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbor. And Judah also shall fight at Jerusalem, and the wealth of all the heathen round about shall be gathered together, gold, and silver, and apparel in great abundance. And so shall be the plague of the horse, of the mule, of the camel, and of the ass, and of all the beasts that shall be in these tents, as this plague."

Verses 17—19 : “ And it shall be, that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem, to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain. And if the family of Egypt go not up, and come not, that have no rain ; there shall be the plague, wherewith the Lord will smite the heathen that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles. This shall be the punishment of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles.”

Verses 3—11 : “ Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle. And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley ; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south. And ye shall flee to the valley of the mountains ; for the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azal : yea, ye shall flee like as ye fled from before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah, king of Judah : and the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the light shall not be clear nor dark : but it shall be one day which shall be known to the Lord, not day, nor night ; but it shall come to pass, that at evening time it shall be light. And it shall be in that day that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem : half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea : in summer and in winter shall it be. And the Lord shall be King over all the earth ; in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one. All the land shall be turned as a plain from Geba to Rimmon, south of Jerusalem : and it shall be lifted up, and inhabited in her place, from Benjamin's gate unto the place of the first gate, unto the corner gate, and from the tower of Hananeel unto the king's wine-presses. And men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction ; but Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited."

Verse 16 : " And it shall come to pass that EVERY ONE that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles."

Verses 20—21 : "In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses, HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD ; and the pots in the Lord's house shall be like the bowls before the altar. Yea, every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness unto the Lord of hosts ; and all they that sacrifice shall come and take of them, and seethe therein ; and in that day there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord of hosts."

Harmony of Revelation 19th, 20th, 21st.

BY GEO. STORRS.

THERE are many who suppose it is impossible to understand the Book of Revelation. The reason of this mainly is, I apprehend, because they suppose that it must be interpreted in such a manner as to make the events transpire in the same order, or succession, as they find them written. In this way it is utterly impossible to give that book an interpretation. To understand the words of the prophets, we must, in our imagination, carry our minds back to the time when they lived. They look down through the prophetic glass and see future events passing before their eyes often without regard to the precise period or order in which they are to take place ; and when they have seen these events they frequently record each topic, or subject of discourse, to its termination, before they take up another which transpired in the same period, or during some part of the same period, and was a parallel event, though, in the record made of it, it follows after. By not observing this fact, we are constantly getting into confusion, in our attempts to explain the prophecies; and becoming bewildered, we give up in despair, and conclude none can understand them. The principle to which I have called attention, is overlooked, though it is a principle which we find acted upon by historians. For example, see Mosheim's Church History. He first divides the history into periods of a hundred years each. Then he takes up a topic—perhaps “The prosperous events of a Church”—he traces that topic to the close of that century; then in the following chapter he takes up another topic—perhaps “The doctrine of the Church,” which he traces to the termination of the same period: thus each succeeding chapter takes up a new topic, and yet travels on through the same century. Now, if, in reading Mosheim, you were to suppose, when you came to the end of the first chapter, that the following one must begin a new century, or period, because it follows the first, which closed at the end of the period it treated of, you would commit just such an error as is committed in the usual attempts at explaining the prophecies, especially the book of Revelation. The fact is, in that book we are carried down to the end seven or eight times at least: and in the 20th, 21st, and 22d chapters several topics are introduced, viz., the resurrection—the judgment—the new earth—the new Jerusalem, &c.; and yet all these topics belong to the same period, or thousand years, and are events presented to John's mind at one and the same time, though recorded as if they followed each other in succession. That the “beloved city” was on earth when Satan was loosed out of his prison, is clear from the 9th verse of the 20th chapter; and yet the descent of that city upon the earth is not recorded till the commencement of the following chapter.

I will now try to give what I conceive to be a harmony of the last part of the 19th chapter, with the 20th and the first part of the 21st. That the reader may see the beauty and force of this part of the word of the Lord, I shall put down every word from the 11th verse of the 19th chapter to the eighth verse of the 21st chapter; paying no attention to the present division into chapters and verses, giving you the whole in paragraphs.

“And I saw heaven opened, and behold, a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns: and he had a name written, that no man knew but he himself. And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is called The Word of God. And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in linen, white and clean. And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God. And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS. And I saw an angel standing in the sun: and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come, and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God: that ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great. And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone. And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth: and all the fowls were filled with their flesh.

“And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled; and after that he must be loosed a little season.

“And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them. And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and heaven fled away; and there was no place found for them. And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes: and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away.

“And I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither had received his mark upon their forehead, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. This is the first resurrection: blessed and holy is he which hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the BOOK OF LIFE; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.

“But the rest of the dead lived not AGAIN until the thousand years were finished; and [then] the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them. And when the thousand years are expired Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle; the number of whom is as the sand of the sea; and they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; and they were judged, every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire: this is the second death; and whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire; and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them: and the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night forever and ever.

“And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write, for these words are true and faithful. And he said unto me, It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely. He that overcometh shall inherit all [these] things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son. But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which [part] is the second death.”

This is what I conceive to be a harmony of this part of Revelation. In this view all is plain.

Exposition of Revelation XI.

BY GEO. STORRS.

THE TWO WITNESSES.

"AND there was given me a reed like unto a rod : and the angel stood, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. But the court which is without the temple, leave out, and measure it not ; for it is given unto the Gentiles ; and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months."

"The angel." What angel? Evidently the same that John had described in the tenth chapter. What angel was that? Read the first verse of that chapter. "And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud : and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire." Compare this description with first chapter, 15th and 16th verses. "And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace : and his voice as the sound of many waters. And he had in his right hand seven stars : and out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword : and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength."

This person all admit to be the Lord Jesus Christ. Can there be any doubt as to the identity of the person in the first chapter and the angel in the tenth? It seems to me there can be none. This same angel commands John to "measure the temple of God," &c. By the temple of God, though a reference is had to the literal temple at Jerusalem, I understand the church of God. See Ephesians ii. 19—22 : "Now, therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God ; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone ; in whom all the building fitly framed together, groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord ; in whom ye also are builded together, for a habitation of God through the Spirit."

This temple was now to be measured. The idea of measuring is to take the dimensions of a thing. This must be done by some rule. The rule, by which to measure the church of God, is the word of God. In this measurement, therefore, that which does not comport with that rule will not come within the temple—it is to be left out—it is the "outer court." The courts of the temple, at Jerusalem, were three: the first, called the court of the Gentiles, because the Gentiles were allowed to enter so far and no farther: they were not of the Jews, though they came to the same temple. They were properly representatives of nominal professors of Christianity, as the Jews were of real Christians.

John is not to measure the nominal professors of religion, as they come not within the true church, and will be the greatest persecutors of that church—treading it "under foot" for a specified period. The phrase "holy city" is used by the Revelator to denote the true church, or its habitation. See chap. xxi. 2, and xxii. 19. The real church of God was to be trodden under foot, by these Gentiles, in a peculiar sense, "42 months." I have shown, in my exposition of Daniel 7th chap., that "42 months," in prophetic language, is 1260 years; and this treading under foot of the holy city exactly corresponds with the time given to the "little horn" that "made war with the saints." By the Gentiles, then, treading the holy city under foot, we can understand nothing else than the terrible havoc the papal church has made of the true church of God; which bloody work lasted from A. D. 538 to 1798, at which the popes had carried on their war against dissenters for 1260 years, was abolished. Since that period, the true church has been free from the civil despotism of Papacy.

Verse 3: "And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth."

Here I would remark, first—The same period is occupied by the prophecy of these two witnesses in sackcloth, that the holy city is trodden under foot; and this appears to mark the periods as identical.

Let us now inquire—Whose witnesses are these? "My two witnesses," says the speaker. Who is the speaker? "The angel"—the Lord Jesus Christ, as I have already shown.

What is a witness? It is one who gives testimony. Testimony is oral—that is, a witness testifies to what he knows, by word of mouth—or it is written; this last kind of testimony, in some cases, is stronger than oral. For example: You may produce twenty persons, in court, to prove my indebtedness to you, but if I can produce a receipt, in your hand-writing, that I have paid the alleged debt, your twenty witnesses fall before it, and their entire testimony is outweighed by this one witness.

The witnesses spoken of in the verse under consideration, are Christ's. Let us then inquire who are his two witnesses. Observe, they are not two of his witnesses; but emphatically, "my TWO witnesses." It would not, therefore, be proper to call them men, though men are sometimes called the Lord's witnesses. Let us now look at John v. 31—34, 36—39: "If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true. There is another that beareth witness of me, and I know that the witness which he witnesseth of me is true. Ye sent unto John, and he bare witness unto the truth. But I receive not testimony from man; but these things I say that ye might be saved. But I have a greater witness than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me. And the Father himself, which hath sent me, hath borne witness of me. Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape. And ye have not his word abiding in you; for whom he hath sent, him ye believe not. Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which TESTIFY OF ME."

Do we not here find one of Christ's witnesses? namely, the Old Testament Scriptures. Let us now see if we can find the other. See Matt. xxiv. 14: "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a WITNESS unto all nations."

Is not this the other witness of Christ? And if so, are not the Old and New Testaments the "two witnesses" in question? But again,

Verse 4: "These are the two olive-trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth."

Where do we find these two olive trees? See Zech. iv. 2—6: "And [the angel] said unto me, What seest thou? And I said, I have looked, and behold, a candlestick, all of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it, and his seven lamps thereon, and seven pipes to the seven lamps, which are upon the top thereof: and two olive-trees by it, one upon the right side of the bowl, and the other upon the left side thereof. So I answered and spake to the angel that talked with me, saying, What are these things, my lord? Then the angel that talked with me answered and said unto me, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my lord. Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, THIS IS THE WORD OF THE LORD unto Zerubbabel, saying, Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."

Here, then, we are told that the two olive-trees are the word of the Lord. The Revelator says, "My two witnesses are the two olive-trees." Let us now look at 1 Kings vi. 23—28: "And within the oracle, he made two cherubims of olive-tree, each ten cubits high. And five cubits was the one wing of the cherub, and five cubits the other wing of the cherub : from the uttermost part of the one wing unto the uttermost part of the other were ten cubits. And the other cherub was ten cubits : both the cherubims were of one measure and one size. The height of the one cherub was ten cubits, and so was it of the other cherub. And he set the cherubims within the inner house ; and they stretched forth the wings of the cherubims, so that the wing of the one touched the one wall, and the wing of the other cherub touched the other wall ; and their wings touched one another in the midst of the house. And he overlaid the cherubims with gold."

Compare this with Exodus xxxvii. 6—9 : " And he made the mercy-seat of pure gold ; two cubits and a half was the length thereof, and one cubit and a half the breadth thereof. And he made two cherubims of gold, beaten out of one piece made he them, on the two ends of the mercy-seat ; one cherub on the end on this side, and another cherub on the other end on that side ; out of the mercy-seat made he the cherubims on the two ends thereof. And the cherubims spread out their wings on high, and covered with their wings over the mercy-seat, with their faces one to another ; even to the mercy-seat-ward were the faces of the cherubims."

It would seem, then, that the "two olive-trees" and the "two cherubims" were the same, and represent "the word of the Lord." Their position is worthy of notice. They stand one on each side of the "mercy-seat," looking inwards and downwards upon that seat. Does that mercy-seat represent Christ? So all Christians seem to admit. The cherubims, one on the left hand, with his outer wing touching the wall and his inner wing reaching to the mercy-seat while he is looking down upon that seat, denoting that the Old Testament begins at the beginning of the world, looking to Christ to come, and, extending to that period, is a witness for Christ, testifying of him :

the other cherub stands on the right side of the mercy-seat ; its inner wing extending to the mercy-seat, and its outer wing reaching to the other wall, denoting that the New Testament begins at Christ, or the mercy-seat, and extends down to the everlasting kingdom of God, but is constantly looking to Christ. Thus the two cherubims are at perfect agreement, as indicated by their being of "one size and one measure." A beautiful harmony and agreement is found to exist throughout the Old and New Testaments ; a beauty that can only be seen by a careful comparing of the one with the other. He, therefore, that rejects either, or exalts one above the other, breaks the harmony and introduces confusion into the testimony of Christ's two witnesses, and thereby "hurts" them. Let all who would be guided aright, examine these two witnesses together. There are too many who seem to think that the New Testament supersedes the Old : this is a most fatal error. Those who do this, act as foolishly as the mariner who should cast away his rudder because he has a compass.

But again ; these two witnesses are "the two candlesticks standing before the God of the whole earth." For an account of the candlestick made by Moses see Exodus xxv. 31, and onward. Our Saviour saith, Matt. v. 15 : "Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick : and it giveth light unto all that are in the house."

The Psalmist says, Ps. cxix. 130, "The entrance of thy word giveth light." Again, in the 105th verse, he says, "Thy word is a lamp [margin, candle] unto my feet," &c. It seems, then, that the candlestick is a representation of God's word. Zechariah sees one—the Old Testament ; John has two brought to his consideration, viz., the Old and New.

Let us now look at the clothing of the two witnesses—"sackcloth" for "42 months."—Sackcloth indicates a state of mourning. See Isa. xxii. 12 : "And in that day did the Lord God of hosts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth."

Did the two witnesses go into such a state? They did. About the year A. D. 538, the Greek and Latin languages ceased to be spoken in Italy. The Scriptures were written in those languages, and the Romish priesthood prohibited their translation for the use of the people. Thus the witnesses were hid from the common people, and their testimony was corrupted by the pretended interpreters. In other words, the two witnesses went into their "sackcloth" state.

Verse 5: "And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man hurt them, he must in this manner be killed."

Compare this with Jer. v. 14: "Wherefore, thus saith the Lord God of hosts, Because ye speak this word, behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them." See Num. xvi. 35: "And there came out a fire from the Lord, and consumed the two hundred and fifty men that offered incense." They "hurt" the word of the Lord by acting contrary to its requirements.—See Rev. xxii. 18, 19: "For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, if any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book; and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from those things which are written in this book." Men hurt the word of the Lord by adding to it or taking from it; and those that do so, knowingly, or from love to sin, or opposition to its requirements, will be "killed," or "devoured" by the word, or witnesses; or, according to their testimony.

Verse 6: "These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will."

Here is an evident allusion to Elijah, 1 Kings xvii. 1: "And Elijah the Tishbite, who was of the inhabitants of Gilead, said unto Ahab, As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word ;” and to Moses, Exodus vii. 19 : “ And the Lord spake unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, take thy rod and stretch out thy hand upon the waters of Egypt, upon their streams, upon their rivers, and upon all their pools of water, that they may become blood : and that there may be blood throughout all the land of Egypt, both in vessels of wood and in vessels of stone.”

The judgments threatened by the mouth of these two witnesses will as certainly come upon individuals and nations, as drought and blood followed the words of Elijah and Moses. It will be vain, therefore, for any man or body of men to think to escape those judgments by a war on the truths of the Bible ; for what the witnesses have spoken, will surely come to pass. The plagues written in God’s word will be inflicted, let men scoff as they may.

Verses 7 and 8 : “ And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them. And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified.”

“ When they shall have finished their testimony ” —that is, “ in sackcloth ;” or, as the original signifies, when they are “ finishing,” &c., just as they are coming to the termination of their sackcloth state. A “ beast,” in prophecy, denotes a kingdom or power. See Dan. 7th chap. 17th and 23d verses. The question now arises, when did the sackcloth state of the witnesses close ? and did such a kingdom as described make war on them at the time spoken of ? If we are correct in fixing upon A. D. 538 as the time of the commencement of the sackcloth state ; 42 months, being 1260 prophetic days, or years, would bring us down to A. D. 1798. About this time, then, did such a kingdom as described appear and make war on them? &c. Mark,—this beast, or kingdom, is out of the bottomless pit—no foundation—an atheistical power—"spiritually Egypt." See Ex. v. 2: "And Pharaoh said, Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Israel go."

Here is atheism. Did any kingdom, about 1798, manifest the same spirit? Yes, France—she denied the being of God, in her national capacity, and made war on the "Monarchy of Heaven." "Spiritually" this power "is called Sodom." What was the characteristic sin of Sodom? Licentiousness. Did France have this character? She did,—fornication was established by law during the period spoken of. "Spiritually" the place was "where our Lord was crucified." Was this true in France? It was, in more senses than one. First, in 1572 a plot was laid in France to destroy all the pious Huguenots; and in one night, fifty thousand of them were murdered in cold blood, and the streets of Paris literally ran with blood. Thus our Lord was "spiritually crucified" in his members. Again; the watch-word and motto of the French Infidels was, "CRUSH THE WRETCH;" meaning Christ. Thus it may be truly said, "where our Lord was crucified." The very spirit of the "bottomless pit" was poured out in that wicked nation.

But did France "make war" on the Bible? She did; and in 1793 a decree passed the French Assembly, forbidding the Bible, and under that decree, the Bibles were gathered and burned, and every possible mark of contempt heaped upon them, and all the institutions of the Bible abolished; the Sabbath was blotted out, and every tenth day substituted for mirth and profanity. Baptism and the communion were abolished. The being of God was denied; and death pronounced to be an eternal sleep. The Goddess of Reason was set up, in the person of a vile woman, and publicly worshipped. Surely here is a power that exactly answers the prophecy. But let us examine this point still further.

Verse 9 : " And they of the people, and kindreds, and tongues, and nations, shall see their dead bodies three days and a half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves."

The language of this verse denotes the feelings of other nations than the one committing the outrage on the witnesses. They would see what war infidel France had made on the Bible, but would not be led, nationally, to engage in the wicked work, nor suffer the murdered witnesses to be buried, or put out of sight among themselves, though they lay dead three days and a half, that is, three years and a half, in France. No, this very attempt of France served to arouse Christians everywhere to put forth a new exertion in behalf of the Bible, as we shall presently see.

Verse 10 : " And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another, because these two prophets tormented them that dwell on the earth."

This denotes the joy those felt who hated the Bible, or were tormented by it. Great was the joy of infidels everywhere, for a while. But "the triumphing of the wicked is short;" so was it in France; for their war on the Bible and Christianity had well nigh swallowed them all up. They set out to destroy Christ's "two witnesses," but they filled France with blood and horror, so that they were horror-struck at the result of their wicked deeds, and were glad to remove their impious hands from the Bible.

Verse 11 : " And after three days and a half, the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw them."

In 1793, the decree passed the French Assembly suppressing the Bible. Just three years after, a resolution was introduced into the Assembly going to supersede the decree, and giving toleration to the Scriptures. That resolution lay on the table six months, when it was taken up, and passed without a dissenting vote. Thus, in just three years and a half, the wit nesses "stood upon their feet, and great fear fell upon them that saw them." Nothing but the appalling results of the rejection of the Bible, could have induced France to take its hands off these witnesses.

Verse 12 : "And they heard a great voice from heaven, saying unto them, Come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud, and their enemies beheld them."

"Ascended up to heaven." To understand this expression, see Daniel iv. 22 : "Thy greatness is grown, and reacheth unto heaven." Here we see that the expression signifies great exaltation. Have the Scriptures attained to such a state of exaltation as here indicated, since France made war upon them? They have. Shortly after, the British Bible Society was organized; then followed the American Bible Society, and these, with their almost innumerable auxiliaries, scattering the Bible everywhere. The Bible has been translated into nearly 200 different languages, since that period, that it was never in before; and then the improvements in paper-making and printing, within the last forty years, have given a power in scattering Bibles unparalleled.

The Bible has been sent to the destitute, literally, by ship-loads. One vessel carried out from England fifty-nine tons of Bibles for the emancipated slaves in the West Indies. The Bible has had almost all classes in community engaged, either directly or indirectly, in sending it abroad. The Bible has risen to be respected by almost every one, whether saint or sinner. The infidel is ashamed to speak against that book in decent company: he must go to the grogshop, or some other place of infamy, if he expects to have hearers to his mad frothings against the Bible. It is exalted as above all price, and as the most invaluable blessing of God to man, next to his Son, and as the glorious testimony concerning that Son. Yes, the Scriptures may truly be said to be exalted "to heaven in a cloud," a cloud being an emblem of heavenly dignity.

Verse 13 : And the same hour, [period or time,] was there a great earthquake, [revolution,] and a tenth part of the city fell. What city? See chap. xvii. 18: "And the woman which thou sawest, is that great city which reigneth over the kings [kingdoms] of the earth." That city is the Papal Roman power. France is one of the "ten horns" that gave "their power and strength unto the [papal] beast; or is one of the ten kingdoms that arose out of the western empire of Rome, as indicated by the ten toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image, Daniel's ten-horned beast, and John's ten-horned dragon. France, then, was a tenth part of the city;" and was one of the strongest ministers of Papal vengeance; but in this revolution it "fell," and with it fell the last civil messenger of Papal fury. "And in the earthquake were slain of men [margin, names of men, or TITLES of men] seven thousand." France made war, in her revolution of 1798 and onward, on all titles and nobility. It is said, by those who have examined the French records, that just seven thousand titles of men were abolished in that revolution. "And the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven." Their God-dishonoring and heaven-defying work filled France with such scenes of blood, carnage, and horror, as made even the Infidels themselves to tremble and stand aghast, and the "remnant," that escaped the horrors of that hour, "gave glory to God," not willingly, but the God of heaven caused this "wrath of man to praise him," by giving all the world to see, that those who make war on heaven, make graves for themselves: thus glory redounded to God by the very means that wicked men employed to tarnish that glory.

I will here introduce an extract, on the French Revolution, from Dr. Croly, a minister of the Church of England. He says:

"France, from the commencement of the Papal supremacy, had been the chief champion of the pope-dom; so early as the ninth century, had given it temporal dominion ; and continued, through all ages, fully to merit the title of 'Eldest Son of the Church.' But France had received in turn the fatal legacy of persecution. From the time of the Albigenses, through the wars of the League, and the struggles of the Protestant Church during the seventeenth century, closing with its ruin, by the revocation of the edict of Nantes, in 1685, the history of France was written on every page with the blood of the Reformed. Frequently contesting the personal claims of the popes to authority, but submissively bowing down to the doctrines, ceremonial, and principles of Rome, France was the most eager, restless, and ruthless of all the ministers of Papal vengeance.

"In a moment all this submission was changed into the direst hostility. At the exact close of the prophetic period, in 1793, the 1260th year from the birth of the Papal supremacy, a power new to all eyes suddenly started up among nations : an Infidel Democracy ! France, rending away her ancient robes of loyalty and laws, stood before mankind a spectacle of naked crime. And, as if to strike the lesson of ruin deeper into the minds of all, on the very eve of this overthrow, the French monarchy had been the most flourishing of continental Europe—the acknowledged leader in manners, arts, and arms—unrivalled in the brilliant frivolities which fill so large a space in the hearts of mankind—its language universal—its influence boundless—its polity the centre round which the European sovereignties perpetually revolved—its literature the fount from which all nations 'in their golden urns drew light.' Instantly, as by a single blow of the divine wrath, the land was covered with civil slaughter. Every star of her glittering firmament was shaken from its sphere ; her throne was crushed into dust ; her church of forty thousand clergy was scattered, exiled, ruined ; all the bonds and appliances which once compacted her with the general European commonwealth, were burst asunder, and cast aside for a conspiracy against mankind. Still there was to be a deeper celebration of the mystery of evil. The spirit which had filled and tortured every limb of France with rebellion to man, now put forth a fiercer malice, and blasphemed. Hostility was declared against all that bore the name of religion. By an act of which history, in all its depths and recesses of national guilt, had never found an example—a crime too blind for the blindest ages of barbarism, and too atrocious for the hottest corruptions of the pagan world, France, the leader of civilized Europe, publicly pronounced that there was no God. The decree was rapidly followed by every measure which could make the blasphemy practical and national. The municipality of Paris, the virtual government, proclaimed, that as they had defied earthly monarchy, 'they would now dethrone the monarchy of heaven.' On the 7th of November, 1793, Gobet, the Bishop of Paris, attended by his vicars general, entered the hall of the legislature, tore off his ecclesiastical robes, and abjured Christianity, declaring that 'the only religion thenceforth should be the religion of liberty, equality, and morality.' His language was echoed with acclamation. A still more consummate blasphemy was to follow. Within a few days after, the municipality presented a veiled female to the assembly as the Goddess of Reason, with the fearful words, 'There is no God; the worship of Reason shall exist in his stead.' The assembly bowed before her and worshipped. She was then borne in triumph to the cathedral of Paris, placed on the high altar, and worshipped by the public authorities and the people. The name of the cathedral was thenceforth the Temple of Reason. Atheism was enthroned. Treason to the majesty of God had reached its height. No more gigantic insult could be hurled against heaven.

"But persecution had still its work. All the churches of the republic were closed. All the rites of religion were forbidden. Baptism and the communion were to be administered no more. The seventh day was to be no longer sacred, but a tenth was substituted, and on that day a public orator was appointed to read a discourse on the wisdom of Atheism. The reign of the demon was now resistless. While Voltaire and Marat (infidelity and massacre personified) were raised to the honors of idolatry, the tombs of the kings, warriors, and statesmen of France were torn open, and the relics of men, whose names were a national glory, tossed about in the licentious sport of the populace. Immortality was publicly pronounced a dream; and on the gates of the cemeteries was written, 'Death is an eternal sleep!' In this general outburst of frenzy, all the forms and feelings of religion, true or false, were alike trodden under the feet of the multitude. The Scriptures, the lamps of the holy place, had fallen in the general fall of the temple. But they were not without their peculiar indignity. The copies of the Bible were publicly insulted; they were contemptuously burned in the havoc of the religious libraries. In Lyons, the capital of the south, where Protestantism had once erected her especial church, and where still a remnant worshipped in its ruins, an ass was actually made to drink the wine out of the communion cup, and was afterwards led in public procession through the streets, dragging the Bible at its heels. The example of these horrors stimulated the daring of infidelity in every part of the continent. France, always modelling the mind of Europe, now still more powerfully impressed her image, while every nation was beginning to glow with fires like her own. Recklessness, licentiousness, and blasphemy were the characters and credentials by which the leaders of overthrow, in every land, ostentatiously proceeded to make good their claims to French regeneration. The Scriptures, long lost to the people in the whole extent of Romish Christendom, were now still more decisively undone. No effort was made to reinstate them, by the Romish Church. Thus spake the prophecy, 'They shall lie in the street of the great city.'"

Now let me ask my reader, Have we made a right application of this portion of the word of the Lord? If so, where are we now in prophetic history? Mark. The tremendous scenes in France close up the second wo. Vers 14: "The second wo is past." That is, the second wo trumpet, which was the sixth trumpet in the series. If we are correct in the interpretation of this chapter, we are past the sixth trumpet and second wo! What follows!— "BEHOLD." Mark it—be not deceived—O hear—see—listen, all ye ends of the earth—"Behold, the third wo [the last] cometh QUICKLY."

Where are we now? Looking for a "temporal millennium!!!" a thousand years of "peace and safety!!" O that the thunder of the midnight cry might wake up such souls. Once more let me utter the angel's cry, "Behold, the third wo cometh quickly."

Verses 15 to 18: "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever. And the four and twenty elders which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God, saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy [margin—"corrupt"] the earth."

The seventh angel, then, will "quickly" sound—then the wicked will be "destroyed," not "converted"—then the dead are to be "judged"—then the "saints" are to be "rewarded"—then will the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord, and his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever. Then will the stone have smitten the "image upon his feet," and all the kingdoms of this earth will be dashed in pieces. Then will the saints of the Most High take the kingdom and possess it forever, even FOREVER AND EVER.

O my fellow-men, I beseech you awake, AWAKE, AWAKE, before that glorious day to saints, but dreadful, awfully dreadful day to sinners overtake you. In the name of the Lord, I beseech you, awake. O ye ministers of Christ, awake. Souls are looking up to you for direction at this hour. If you by a word, a look, or a gesture, seem but to say, "it is all moonshine, humbuggery;" or anything by which your hearers can infer that you think they have no cause of alarm, you may peril their souls, and their blood may be required at your hands. You do not know that it will not come this year. Many of you say, yourselves, "No man knoweth the day nor the hour." Then you do not know that it will not come this year. I pray you, then, don't strengthen the hands of the wicked. O remember "the third wo cometh quickly."

Sinner, fly to Christ—the storm will soon fall—a storm before which you will be as incapable of standing as "stubble" before the devouring fire. May the Lord incline your heart to heed the warning.

Exposition of Matthew, 24th Chapter.

In contemplating this chapter our minds are apt to be biased by our previous modes of thinking. We seem to suppose that the disciples, in their inquiry, in the third verse, understood that Jerusalem was to be destroyed before the end of the world, as much as though it was an historical fact at the time. To my mind, it is clear that they had no idea that "the temple" was to be destroyed prior to the coming of Christ at the end of the world. The previous chapter closes by our Saviour proclaiming his future coming; and as he departed out of the temple, his disciples called his attention to the buildings of the temple. He tells them—

"There shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down." This expression could convey no idea to the minds of the disciples of what we call "the destruction of Jerusalem," as an event disconnected with his second coming. Let us consider—he had, just before leaving the temple, spoken of his coming; as he leaves the temple, he speaks of its utter demolition. The most natural idea to the minds of the disciples, must be that their Master spoke of the overthrow of those buildings at the end of the world, when he would come again. In this view, it appears to me, the question (for I consider the question one) was asked, "When shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?"

"These things,"—what THINGS? Christ's coming and the end of the world; to which time, it seems to me, they supposed our Saviour referred, in speaking of the destruction of the temple.

The point, therefore, on which they wanted information was about their Lord's coming and the end of the world. Our Saviour commences a connected chain of events which were to reach from that generation to his coming in the clouds of heaven. From the fourth to the fourteenth verse, he gives them a kind of general description, or synopsis, of events to take place at no very distant period after his leaving them.

Verse 4: "Jesus said unto them, Take heed that no man deceive you." He would have them on their guard against deception: knowing the temptations they would have, from the tribulations they were to pass through, to accept of some deliverer who might profess to come in Christ's name, to lead them out of their troubles.

Verse 5: "For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ, and shall deceive many." Many such did arise.

Verses 6 and 7: Here our Lord tells his followers of wars, &c., and cautions them against being "troubled." These wars did come—Jerusalem was destroyed in one of the first, if not the very first of those wars; and by these wars the Roman empire itself was divided into ten kingdoms, according to Daniel's prophecy, chap. vii. 24 : "The ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings [kingdoms] that shall arise." All this took place before "the end came" to paganism, or the "daily," as Daniel calls it.

Verse 9 : "Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you," &c. "Then"—when? While these commotions are going on in the Roman empire.

Verse 10 : "Then shall many be offended, [stumbled, apostatize,] and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another."

It does not come within my design to show particularly how this prophecy was fully accomplished under heathen or pagan Rome. All acquainted with history know it was fulfilled to the very letter; and it is supposed that not less than three millions of Christians suffered death under that persecuting power.

Verse 11 : "And many false prophets [teachers] shall arise, and shall deceive many." The history of the church shows that many such teachers did arise at the period here indicated.

Verse 12 : "And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." When Christianity became, by profession, the religion of the Roman empire, then the church was corrupted by a worldly policy, and the introduction of heathen customs into their religious services, so that iniquity abounded, and the love of many waxed cold; then came the "falling away," spoken of by Paul, 2 Thess. ii. 3; thus preparing the way for the appearing of the "man of sin."

Verse 13 : "But he that shall endure unto the end [death—see Rev. ii. 10,] the same shall be saved." The trials of those days should be severe, but faithfulness "unto death" should be rewarded with "a crown of life."

Verse 14 : "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations ; and then shall the end come."

The inquiry arises—The end of what? Some say, the end of the Jewish economy, or of their nationality; others say, the end of the world. I cannot adopt the first position ; because, it appears to me, our Saviour was speaking of an end that was to come after a bloody persecution of his followers, and a falling away in consequence of the abounding of iniquity, [verse 12,] and not that only, but also of many wars. These things did not all take place before the destruction of Jerusalem. If I am not much mistaken, the first war, of any importance, after our Saviour, was that in which Jerusalem was destroyed ; and the Saviour told his disciples that the end was "not yet" when those wars commenced. See verse 6.

I cannot adopt the interpretation, that the end spoken of in the 14th verse is the end of the world. Not that that interpretation is an objection to the end of the world being now at hand, as some suppose, but because, if that construction is true, the world should have come to an end long ago. The apostle, in his Epistle to the Romans, x. 16, says, "They have not all obeyed the gospel ;" and adds, 18th verse, "I say, Have they not heard? Yes, verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world." Compare this with Acts ii. 1—5: "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven, as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, OUT OF EVERY NATION UNDER HEAVEN." Thus it was true that the sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world, in the days of the apostles. And again, in Colossians i. 5, 6 : "The truth of the gospel, which is come unto you, as it is in all the world." And again, at the 23d verse : "If ye continue in the faith, grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature under heaven; whereof I, Paul, am made a minister." To my mind, it seems next to impossible to reconcile this testimony of the apostle with the idea that the gospel has not, hundreds of years ago, been "preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations." Hence, I am compelled to look for some other interpretation of the 14th verse. The "end" of something is spoken of in that verse, which, it would seem, was brought about by the agency of the gospel. By the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom in all the world for a witness, or testimony, some kind of a change or revolution was to be effected that should bring an "end" to something. The inquiry returns—what is that something? In my opinion, it was that persecuting power of which the Saviour had spoken in the previous verses; in other words, it was Pagan Rome, paganism, or the same power called by Daniel "THE DAILY."

Let us see if we can determine what we are to understand by the "daily sacrifice," spoken of in Daniel 8th, 11th, and 12th. It will be seen by a reference to those chapters, that the word "sacrifice," connected with "daily," is in italics, and therefore is not in the original text, but has been supplied by our translators. The expression in those texts is perfect without the supplied word, and the sense much clearer. The text, Dan. viii. 13, is simply "the daily, and the transgression of desolation:" and in the 11th chap. 31st verse, it is, "They shall take away the daily, and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate." This language shows that "the daily" is a daily or continual abomination, or desolating power, that should desolate the people and church of God till it was taken away," and that then should come up another abomination to take its place, still more desolating : then, in the 12th chap. 11th verse, the time is given us from the taking away of the daily "to set up [as the margin has it] the abomination that maketh desolate," and that time carries us to the taking "away the dominion" [Dan. vii. 26] of this last abomination.

That these things do not relate to anything done by Antiochus Epiphanes, is certain from the fact that Antiochus died 164 years before our Lord's birth, and Christ directed his followers to look for the "abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel," as still future.

Some tell us the "daily" is the daily sacrifice of the Jews, which was taken away at the destruction of Jerusalem. If so, can they tell what event took place answering to the 1290 days, which, if understood as literal days, can be made to agree with no event? Then it is added, "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the 1335 days." What took place then? Nothing that marks that as a peculiar period. It was at the end of those days that Daniel was to stand in his lot, or have his resurrection. Did he have it 1335 days after the destruction of Jerusalem? If the days stand for years, what event, answering to the prophecy, took place 1290 years from the cessation of the Jewish sacrifices? It was in the darkness of Papal Rome. Did Daniel have his resurrection under the dark reign of Papacy? We have nothing in history to show that anything took place at the end of those days, if reckoned from Jerusalem's destruction.

We are now led to inquire what "daily" it was that was "taken away." I answer, it appears to me, clearly, it was the daily or continual abomination of paganism, which oppressed the people and church of God till it was "taken out of the way;" which event, it seems, from Gibbon's History of Rome, took place about A. D. 508, when "Vitalian, a Gothic chieftain, with an army of Huns and Bulgarians, declared themselves the champions of the Catholic faith." Thus an end came to pagan sacrifices at Rome, or paganism was "taken out of the way" and no longer "hindered" the revelation of the "man of sin," or "abomination that maketh desolate," i. e., Papacy. What event transpired 1290 days from the taking away of paganism, or the "daily," in 508? 1290 years from that time, viz., in 1798, Berthier, a French general, entered Rome, deposed the Pope, abolished the Justinian code of laws, under which the Pope had carried on his "war with the saints" for 1260 years, and gave to Italy a republican form of government, carried the Pope captive to France, where he died in 1799:—thus was the "dominion" of Papacy taken "away, to consume and destroy unto the end." See Dan. vii. 26. The 1335 days, or years, from the taking away of "the daily" in 508, carry us down to 1843, when Daniel, with all the saints, will stand in their lot, i. e., will be raised from the dead.

"The daily," then, and "the abomination of desolation," are two desolating powers acting against the people and church of God. An end comes to one, and then the other comes up in its place.

The gospel of the kingdom, Mark says, xiii. 10, "must first be published among all nations." This was done in the apostles' days, as we have already seen; but the influence of it did not at once work the revolution by which paganism fell: but it began to work its fall, and at length produced that change, by which Constantine declared in favor of Christianity in the fourth century; but paganism had its temple and altar at Rome still, and was not utterly thrown down, or "taken away," till about A. D. 508, when "Vitalian, with an army of Huns and Bulgarians, mostly idolaters, declared themselves the champions of the Catholic faith." That mighty revolution caused the taking away of the pagan rites at Rome, as we have seen, and thus "the end came" to the pagan persecuting power. But, observe, this was not till after "a falling away," as Paul calls it, and "the love of many" waxing "cold," as our Saviour saith. This took place from the time the Roman emperors espoused the cause of the church, and Christianity became the religion of the empire. This prepared the way for the revelation of the "man of sin," or "the abomination that maketh desolate." "The end came" to one abomination, or persecuting power "spoken of by Daniel," viz., "the daily;" then, in the 15th verse, our Saviour speaks of the coming up of the other "abomination," and of its standing "in the holy place," viz., the church; or, as Paul saith, "sitting in the temple of God." See 2 Thess. ii. 4. The mode of persecution is now changed; before, it was heathen, or pagan; now it is professedly Christian. Christians who lived previous to the coming up of this latter power, foresaw its rise, and were filled with terror at the thought. R. Fleming, of Rotterdam, writing previous to 1693, on "The Fulfilling of Scripture," says, on 2 Thess. 2d chapter, "The mystery of iniquity, even in the times of the apostles, did begin to work, and what for a time withheld his coming, the heathen empire of Rome, hath long since been taken out of the way, which caused some Christians, in those days, to wish the standing and continuance of that empire, from the terror they had of that adversary, who, according to the word, they knew was to fill his room."

The end, then, spoken of by our Saviour, was the end of the "daily," or pagan abomination, under which the wars and persecutions had been carried on, spoken of in the previous verses.

Let me now show you the perfect agreement and harmony there is between Daniel, our Lord, and Paul. See Dan. xi. 30: "He shall return, and have intelligence with them that forsake the holy covenant." Compare this with Matt. xxiv. 12: "Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold:" also 2 Thess. ii.: "There shall come a falling away first." Now, see again Dan. xi. 31: "They shall take away the daily." Matt. xxiv. 14: "Then shall the end come." 2 Thess. ii. 7: "He who now letteth [hindereth] will let, until he be taken out of the way." See again Dan. xi. 31: "They shall place the abomination that maketh desolate." Matt. xxiv. 15: "When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place." 2 Thess. ii. 3, 4, 8—after the falling away, "that man of sin" shall "be revealed, so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God. Then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming."

Can there be any doubt here of the identity of the times and of the characters represented by these three witnesses, our Lord, Daniel, and Paul? The harmony is too perfect to be overlooked. It seems to me there can be no mistake—the agreement is complete. They are each, evidently, looking to the same events, and each explains and confirms the other.

The way is now prepared for an examination of

Verses 15 to 28. Our Lord here calls attention particularly to a desolation which was to extend down to, and be connected with, the signs of his immediate appearance, and notices this desolating power particularly, because it would have a more important bearing on the interests of his church than any other matter that was to transpire before his coming. From the application of this part of the chapter to the destruction of Jerusalem, I am compelled to dissent: because I have never been able to make such an interpretation harmonize with what appears to me to be truth.

1st. Our Saviour calls attention expressly to the "abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet;" and adds, "Whoso readeth, let him understand." Understand what? Why, that the abomination I speak of is not the "daily," but the "abomination of desolation." What is the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel? Clearly, not the pagan abomination, as our opponents would have us think, under Antiochus Epiphanes, who died 200 years before our Saviour directed his followers to look for that abomination as still future: nor was it the "daily abomination," as most second advent folks hold; nor does a reference to the ninth chapter of Daniel prove that it is; for that chapter speaks of abominations, plural; whereas our Lord speaks of a particular abomination, singular, and cautions against a misunderstanding. It has often enough been shown that the "daily," spoken of by Daniel, is not the Jewish sacrifices, but that it is the pagan, or continual abomination, and relates to a desolating power that should desolate the people and church of God till it should be "taken away," and there should come up, in its place, another power called the "transgression of desolation" [chap. viii. 13,] and "the abomination that maketh desolate," [chapters xi. 31, and xii. 11.] Though they were both desolating powers, they are designated by different names, as we have seen.

Now Jerusalem was not destroyed by the "transgression of desolation," or the "abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel," but under the reign of the "daily" or pagan abomination. Then, the desolation, spoken of by our Saviour, was not the destruction of Jerusalem.

2d. The abomination of desolation was to be a "sign" to Christians; but it was to be so only when they should "see" it "stand IN the holy place." Where was the holy place at Jerusalem? Certainly it was not outside the city; for that is nowhere called, in the Scriptures, "THE holy place." The holy place was not only in the city, but in the temple at Jerusalem. But that was not the holy place at the time that wicked city was destroyed; for God had departed from that wicked people,—Christ had ascended into the true holy of holies, and the sacrifices which the Jews continued to offer in the temple were no better than the heathen sacrifices; because the very offering of them, after the death of Christ, was a daily denial and rejection of the Lord of glory. But admitting that within the temple was the holy place at the time of Jerusalem's destruction, the Christians did not see the Roman or pagan abomination "stand in" it at the time they fled out of the city—the Romans had not yet entered the city ; besides, the Roman or "daily" abomination never did "stand in the holy place," for that was destroyed, immediately on the taking of the city, by the burning of the temple. How then could that be a sign which in fact never took place, either before or after the Christians left Jerusalem ?

3d. The connexion shows that the fleeing was of a more general character than of those in the city. "Neither let him that is in the field return back to take his clothes," v. 10. It looks like a general time of trouble to the church.

4th. Apply this description to the destruction of Jerusalem, and it appears impossible to reconcile it with what is said in verse 21 : "Then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." How can this be true, if our Saviour was speaking of the destruction of Jerusalem ? Surely the destruction of the old world by a flood was a greater tribulation, and also the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah ; and a greater one is still to come, when "the elements shall melt with fervent heat, and the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up ;" when "all the proud, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up."

5th. If Jerusalem's destruction is the subject of discourse, I cannot see the truth of the 22d verse : "Except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved ; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened."

If all the Jews in Jerusalem had perished in the siege, there would have been "flesh" or persons "saved." If it be said, it means none of the "elect," or Christians, would have been saved if Titus had not, for a time, so far have withdrawn his army as to have given them a chance to escape—I reply, if every Christian in Jerusalem had perished, it would have been very far from cutting off all Christians, as churches had been planted almost all over the then known world, before Jerusalem was destroyed.

6th. Lastly. Our Saviour says, v. 29 : “ Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened,” &c.; and he adds, v. 30, “ Then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven—and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory.”

Now, as this was not literally true, immediately after the destruction of Jerusalem, we must resort to a figurative interpretation; (which would leave us in the wide fields of conjecture,) or understand our Lord as speaking of a different matter from Jerusalem’s downfall.

I now ask if it is likely that our Saviour would speak so much at length, and particularly, of the destruction of Jerusalem, and only darkly hint at, if mention at all, a far more dreadful calamity to his church, viz., its desolation under Papacy? I think not.

It appears to me, that the “ abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel ” is none other than the Papal abomination. By its standing in the holy place, I understand its rising up in the church; and is none other than Paul’s “ man of sin ” who “ sitteth in the temple of God. ” Let us again look at the correspondence between our Lord’s description and that of Paul. Our Saviour says, v. 12, “ The love of many shall wax cold. ” Paul says, 2 Thess. ii. 3, “ There ” will “ come a falling away first.” Saith our Lord, v. 15, “ The abomination of desolation ” shall be seen standing “ in the holy place.” Paul says, the “ man of sin ” shall “ be revealed,” “ sitting in the temple of God. ” Can we mistake in the fact that Christ and Paul have their eye on the same desolation of the church?

When Christians should see this desolating power “ stand in the holy place ”—the church—“ then let ” all Christians, wherever that anti-Christian power should sway, “ flee, ” and not stop to save “ anything out of their houses,” nor “ return back ” from their “ fields to take their clothes ”—then “ wo to them that ” have little children, &c., in those times of persecution and flight from place to place ; and “pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day ;” i. e., that the persecution may not be permitted to rage with such fury as to allow you no respite from trouble, or time for rest ; “for then shall be great tribulation [to the church,] such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, [how true,] no, nor ever shall be ;” such a time of trouble to the church is never to return. “And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved,” i. e., none of the church ; “but for the elect’s sake those days shall be shortened.” The severity of that tribulation began to be broken before the 1260 days or years expired that the church was to remain in the “mountains,” i. e., “wilderness,” [see Rev. xii. 6 ;] the kings began to make war on that desolating power [see Rev. xvii. 16] 200 years before the whole period allotted to it had expired, and the “Reformation” commenced about the same time ; and thus the days, in the violence of the persecution, were “shortened,” and for the sake of the “elect,” the church.

Verse 23 : “Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there ; believe it not.”—“Then.”

When? Under this papal abomination. The Pope has claimed to be Christ’s vicegerent ; i. e., to be intrusted with Christ’s power to pardon sins, and has “exalted himself above all that is called God.” See 2 Thess. ii. 4.

Verse 24 : “For there shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders ; in-somuch, that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.” Compare this with the Papal Beast, Rev. xiii. 13 : “He doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by those miracles which he had power to do.” See also Rev. xvii. 8 : “They that dwell on the earth shall wonder [whose names were not written in the book of life,] not “the elect,]” “when they behold the beast,” &c. Papacy has shown, or pretended to show,

"great signs and wonders," so that some of the "elect" have been deceived by it, I have no doubt; for it must be true that there have been true Christians in that wicked church, though they would not have remained in it if they had not been deceived, any more than they would remain in any other church that lords it over God's heritage.

Verse 26: "Wherefore, if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert"—in places of seclusion from the world—"go not forth: Behold, he is in the secret chambers"—convents—nunneries—"believe it not."

The 27th verse teaches us that when Christ comes, it will be in such a manner we shall none of us have occasion to doubt on the subject, for his coming will be as the lightning—sudden, and visible to all.

Verse 28: "For wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together."—This verse may refer to the bloodthirsty character of the Papal power. See Job xxxix. 27—30: Papacy, like the eagle, "seeketh her prey, and her eyes behold afar off;" her devotees "suck up" the "blood" of the saints; and "where the slain are there is she," carrying on bloody persecutions.

If this interpretation does not satisfy, take another. The eagle is led to her prey by her appetite; so when Christ comes, as the lightning, men will be divided according as their affections are on things above or things on earth. If their hearts are on Christ they will fly up to meet him, as the prophet Isaiah saith, xl. 31: "They that wait upon the Lord shall mount up with wings as eagles," while the wicked shall remain to be burned up with the objects of their affections, i. e., earthly things.

To the interpretation I have given of the 15th to the 28th verse, the 21st of Luke, 20th—24th verses, may be urged as an objection. It will be seen that Mark uses nearly the same language as Matthew. Luke wrote after, and his gospel records points omitted by the other evangelists. Now, admitting that our Lord did speak of Jerusalem's destruction, as recorded by Luke xxi. 20, I conceive it does not affect my argument on Matthew; for it will be seen that the language differs from both Matthew and Mark; the latter having called attention to the "abomination of desolation," which is no other than the papal abomination. My own opinion is, that Luke records an expression of our Lord omitted by the other evangelists, which may refer to old Jerusalem or it may not; if it does, it is only by glancing over it to the main object, the desolations of his church under the abomination of desolation; for the testimony of TWO WITNESSES settles the point that it was THAT abomination, and not the "daily" abomination: nor yet are BOTH abominations included; for our Lord uses the singular, abomination, and designates which one he is speaking of, and enforces it with an emphatic "Whoso readeth let him understand." By Jerusalem, then, in Luke, I understand the same that Paul, in 2 Thess. ii. 4, calls "the temple of God," i. e., the church of God. By its being "compassed about with armies," [not army,] I understand the civil power, in the hands of Papacy, wielding the sword, hunting the church, the true children of God, to put them to death. As though our Lord had said, "The abomination of desolation will stand up in the church and possess power to command kings and their armies: and when you see him thus stand in the church, know that the desolation thereof is nigh—then flee—yea, depart out of it, for she has then become Babylon; then come out of her, my people, and let none enter into it."

The "wrath upon this people," I understand not the wrath of God, for the wrath was upon the fleeing people, and of course was the wrath of the persecuting power, or the abomination of desolation, Papacy; before this power they fell "by the sword, and" were "led away captive," &c. This exactly agrees with what we are told, Daniel xi. 33, should befall Christians under the papal abomination, i. e., "They shall fall by the sword, by flame, and by captivity, and by spoil many days." Thus we see Luke and Daniel agree perfectly. Again: Luke says, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the TIMES of the Gentiles be fulfilled." The Revelator says, Rev. xi. 2, "The holy city shall they "[the Gentiles] TREAD UNDER FOOT FORTY AND TWO MONTHS." Here we have the TIME of the treading under foot specified; and the language so exactly corresponds with Luke, that the one explains the other, and without this explanation the "TIMES of the Gentiles," in Luke, would seem to be an indefinite expression. Further, Christians were to "flee to the mountains," according to Luke. The church was to "fly into the wilderness," according to the Revelator. Again I ask, What Christians were to be benefited by the directions to flee, if old Jerusalem was the subject of discourse?—surely but a mere moiety of the whole church in the world at that time. We know not that any of the apostles were there, and but comparatively few Christians. But, says the objector, "All the Christians did flee out of Jerusalem before it was destroyed." And who is their authority for this assertion? Why, "Josephus." And how did Josephus know that "all the Christians fled" at that time? Strange, that Josephus had so much knowledge as to know every individual Christian in Jerusalem, and know they all fled!!—he must have been almost omniscient. I strongly suspect it was the "LITTLE HORN THAT HAD EYES," "spoken of by Daniel the prophet," that saw all the Christians "fleeing out of Jerusalem;" and that it saw THAT just as it has seen "Antiochus Epiphanes" as the LITTLE HORN; i. e., Papacy must find something to which to apply the "abomination of desolation" of which our Saviour spake, Matt. xxiv., and it conjured up old Jerusalem, and Christians fleeing out of it, to turn eyes off from itself; and Protestants have been deceived by it, just as they have about Antiochus, and with just as good evidence, in my judgment.*

* Since writing the above a friend has informed me that Pres. Wilbur Fisk stated, that, in his visit to Rome, which

Verse 26: “Immediately after the tribulation of those days,” &c. Mark says, “In those days, after that tribulation,” &c., “shall the sun be darkened,” &c. I understand this to be a literal event, or sign of Christ’s coming. How exactly does the history agree with the prophecy! “In those days,” i. e., the 1260 allotted to the “abomination of desolation,” and yet after the tribulation of the church, from that power, had passed, the sun was literally darkened. In 1780, May 19, the sun rose clear—at ten o’clock, the horizon began to be darkened, and at twelve people had to light candles to dine—laborers left the fields—the fowls retired to roost—and a feeling that the judgment day had come rested upon many minds.

“The moon shall not give her light.” The darkness not only continued through the day, but the night following till past midnight, though the moon was at the full. “Such was the darkness, that a sheet of white paper, held within a few inches of the eyes, was equally invisible as the blackest velvet.” An eye-witness says, that when the moon first became visible, it had precisely the appearance of “blood.” The prophet Joel, ii. 30, 31, says, “I will show wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come.” We have seen that this prophecy has been fulfilled so far as the sun and moon are concerned. If it be said, “This darkness can be accounted for upon natural principles,” I reply—it never has been done; but if it could be, it does not alter the fact. Our Saviour said it should take place, but did not say it could not be accounted for upon natural principles. It has taken place as he said: nor is there any evidence that such an event ever transpired before, since the crucifixion, till 1780.

was a short time before his death, he found, at the Vatican, the oldest copy of Josephus that is known; he also said that in that copy there is no mention made of the Christians fleeing out of Jerusalem at its destruction.

"Fire and pillars of smoke," says the prophet Joel. Has this sign been seen? It has. Luke calls it "fearful sights and great signs from heaven." The Aurora Borealis, or Northern Lights, are a perfect fulfilment of this prophecy. But it is said, "They are no sign of the end of the world, for they have always been." But where, I ask, is the proof that they have always been? Who can find a particle of ancient history in support of that idea? It is true, that some modern writers have asserted that there is; but have they been able to put their finger on such anciently written history? If so, where is it? Till they produce it, we shall deny that there is any such history in existence. It seems, from some of our modern historians, that in March, 1716, these lights were first seen with great brilliancy and astonishment in England, though never seen before by the oldest inhabitants. Since that period they have often been seen, and especially within the last thirty or forty years, exactly answering to the prophecy of "fire and pillars of smoke."

The following article is in illustration of this subject, and may be seen in the New York Commercial Advertiser of Oct. 22d, 1839. "The phenomenon described in this London article was seen by myself," says HENRY JONES, "and on the same Tuesday evening of Sept. 3d, especially of the Aurora, in the western part of New York, and is described by various papers of this city, as seen here and at Boston at the same time, with unprecedented splendor, brilliancy, and singularity of appearance, though far less astonishing than their described appearance in London, and with nothing special in regard to appearances in the stars." #### FROM LATE LONDON PAPERS.

"London, Sept. 5th.—Between the hours of ten on Tuesday night and three yesterday morning, in the heavens was observed one of the most magnificent specimens of those extraordinary phenomena—the falling stars and northern lights—witnessed for many years past. The first indication of this singular phenomenon was about ten minutes before ten, when a light crimson, apparently vapor, rose from the northern portion of the hemisphere, and gradually extended to the centre of the heavens, and by ten o'clock, or a quarter past, the whole, from east to west, was one vast sheet of light. It had a most alarming appearance, and was exactly like that occasioned by a TER-RIFIC FIRE. The light varied considerably; at one time it seemed to fall, and directly after rose with intense brightness. There were to be seen mingled with it VOLUMES OF SMOKE, which rolled over and over, and every beholder seemed convinced that it was ‘a tremendous conflagration.’ The consternation in the metropolis was very great; thousands of persons were running in the direction of the supposed awful catastrophe. The engines belonging to the fire brigade stations in Baker street, Farrington street, Watling street, Warterloo road, and likewise those belonging to the West of England station—in fact, every fire-engine in London—were horsed, and galloped after the supposed ‘scene of destruction,’ with more than ordinary energy, followed by carriages, horsemen, and vast mobs. Some of the engines proceeded as far as Highgate and Holloway, before the error was discovered. These appearances lasted for upwards of two hours, and towards morning the spectacle became one of more grandeur.

“At two o'clock in the morning, the phenomenon presented a most gorgeous scene, and one very difficult to describe. The whole of London was illuminated as light as noonday, and the atmosphere was remarkably clear. The southern hemisphere at the time mentioned, although unclouded, was very dark; but the stars, which were innumerable, shone beautifully. The opposite side of the heavens presented a singular, but magnificent contrast: it was clear to extreme, and the light was very vivid; there was a continual succession of meteors, which varied in splendor. They appeared formed in the centre of the heavens, and spread till they seemed to burst; the effect was electrical; myriads of small stars shot out over the horizon, and darted with that swiftness towards the earth that the eye scarcely could follow the track; they seemed to burst also, and to throw a dark crimson vapor over the entire hemisphere. The colors were most magnificent. At half past two o'clock, the spectacle changed to darkness, which, on dispersing, displayed a luminous rainbow in the zenith of the heavens, and round the ridge of darkness that overhung the southern portion of the country. Soon afterwards, columns of silvery light radiated from it;—they increased wonderfully, intermingled among crimson vapor which formed at the same time, and when at full height the spectacle was beyond all imagination. Stars were darting about in all directions, and continued until four o'clock, when all died away. During the time that they lasted, a great many persons assembled on the bridges across the river Thames, where they had a commanding view of the heavens, and watched the progress of the phenomenon attentively."

It is difficult to conceive how a more perfect fulfilment of the prophecy could take place. God never has, and we have no reason to believe he ever will, give signs that unbelieving men cannot cavil with. He gives men sufficient evidence to satisfy the childlike mind, but allows "strong delusions" to follow all his signs, that men who do not love the truth may believe a lie. They ask for lies, and God suffers them to have them, "that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." So when Moses cast down his rod and it became a serpent, the magicians did likewise. "It can be accounted for upon natural principles," cries Pharaoh, and all the anti-types, that, Pharaoh-like, contemn all the signs the great God is giving us of the coming of Christ and the end of the world. God will never give such men signs that they cannot scoff at, till the last sign, that of the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven ; but then it will be too late, and they are lost forever.

" The stars shall fall from heaven." This is another sign of the near approach of Christ and the end of the world. The Revelator says, chap. vi. 13, "The stars of heaven fell upon the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind." Has this sign been seen? It has. Nov. 13th, 1833, was seen precisely such an appearance as the Revelator describes. Though "shooting stars" have been seen at other times, so far as known, nothing of this kind was ever seen before 1789. The atmosphere was literally filled with falling stars, shooting in every direction, answering exactly to the description in Rev. vi. 13. If that was not a fulfilment of the prophecy, it will be difficult for any man to show how it ever can be fulfilled.

"Blood" is one of the signs given us by Joel, to precede the "terrible day of the Lord." Has this sign appeared? It has. In addition to the bloody appearance of the moon, already spoken of, in February, 1837, the whole face of the earth seemed as though covered with blood, the snow having exactly that appearance.

"Pestilences" were to "be in divers places," Luke tells us. Who has forgotten the terrible and desolating cholera, that has passed over almost the entire world within the past twenty years? If that is not a fulfilment of that prophecy, it is difficult to see how it could be fulfilled.

"Earthquakes in divers places" was to be another SIGN. Not to mention the many shocks which have more or less affected various places, look at the one felt at St. Domingo the past year, in which a whole city, of some ten or twelve thousand inhabitants, is swallowed up, and a mere handful of souls saved.

All the signs our Saviour spoke of as preceding his coming have appeared, and the next thing to be looked for is the "COMING" of the "Son of Man in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." This appearance, it is true, is to be preceded by its "sign," v. 30. But what is that sign? I pretend not to know with certainty, but perhaps we may get a clew to it from Numbers xxiv. 17: "There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a SCEPTRE shall arise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners [or, as the margin has it, 'through the princes'] of Moab, and destroy all the children of Sheth," or the wicked.

A "Star" was the SIGN to the wise men of the East at our Saviour's birth: may not the "Sceptre," or sign of Royalty, be the forerunner of his second coming? He comes to set up his everlasting kingdom, having been into "a far country to receive" it, and is now to "return," when his "enemies, who would not that" he "should reign over them," shall be SLAIN "before" him.

Verse 31: "He shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, [see 1 Cor. xv. 52,] and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." What a glorious meeting of the children of God!—they meet to part no more—meet to share the purchased inheritance with their ONCE SUFFERING but NOW GLORIFIED Lord and Saviour. O blessed state! O glorious hour! Reader, would you have a part in it? Hasten, then; make no delay to be reconciled to God—"kiss the Son," lest you "perish from the way" when his "wrath" shall be kindled by your obstinate slighting his mercy.

Verses 32, 33: "Now learn a parable of the fig-tree: When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, at the door."

Just as certain as we can know the approach of summer by the putting forth of leaves, just so certain we may know that the coming of Christ is now at the door.

Verse 34. This verse is supposed to form an objection to the foregoing application, and to fix the meaning of our Lord to events to transpire in that age, because he says, "This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled."

The term generation is applied not only to an age, but a class or race. First, to the righteous; see Ps. xiv. 5: "God is in the generation of the righteous." See also Ps. xxii. 30; xxiv. 6, and lxxiii. 15; also 1 Pet. ii. 9.

It is also applied to the wicked as a class. Matt. iii. 7: "O generation of vipers." See also Matt. xii. 24; and xxiii. 33; and Mark viii. 38; and Luke xvi. 8.

Our Lord was speaking to his children, and telling them they should be gathered unto him in the clouds of heaven when he should come, but tells them not to look for such an event till all the signs he had given them had first appeared; then, and not till then, the generation of saints should be "caught up together, to meet the Lord in the air," and thus "pass away" from earth, while the last indignation is poured out upon the wicked. See Isaiah xxvi. 19—21.

But after all, the difficulty in this text is not so much in the term generation as in the word "fulfilled." The word translated fulfilled occurs forty-eight times in the New Testament, and in only one other connexion is it translated fulfilled, but is a word which signifies "progression"—"accomplishing"—"not completed;" and here signifies that before that age or generation should pass away, the chain of events spoken of should commence their accomplishment.

Once more: the expression may signify, that the generation living when the last mentioned signs, viz., those connected with the sun, moon, stars, &c., should begin, should not pass away till the whole of the signs there spoken of were fulfilled and Christ should come. Those signs commenced in 1780, and are now all fulfilled. What are we to look for next? The Lord Jesus Christ "in the clouds of heaven."

Verse 36. This verse is supposed to form another objection: and we not unfrequently hear persons say, "Christ has said no man shall EVER know anything about his coming." And we are told that those of us who pretend to know anything about the time, "give Christ the lie."

We will see presently who it is "gives the lie" to inspiration, we or our opponents. Our Lord says, "Of that day and hour knoweth [in the present time; not 'never shall know'] no man," &c. Of what day and hour? Clearly the day and hour when the Son of Man will be revealed. Well, I know of no man that pretends to know the day or hour of Christ's appearing; I am sure I do not. "But, do you not believe the world will come to an end in 1843?" Certainly I do: but I believe also that our Lord will appear before the end of the world; for there must be some time after the Bridegroom comes for the wicked to cry for mercy and find none, before the final conflagration of the world. Hence Christ may appear now any hour—I know not how soon.

But again: let the objector be true to his principles; do not let him flinch when he is tried. He says, "Our Lord's words authorize him in saying that no man shall ever know anything about Christ's appearing till he actually comes as the lightning." Very well; now let him carry out his principles, and he proves that Christ himself will never know anything about it till he finds himself here!! For our Lord says, Mark xiii. 32, "Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels in heaven, NEITHER THE SON." If the objector is now afraid to follow out his principles, let him acknowledge he is mistaken in his interpretation of the words "no man knoweth;" for if it is true that no man ever shall know, it is equally true that the "Son" never shall know. Nor can he escape from the difficulty by saying, "Christ did not know it as man," for it is the "Son of Man" that is to appear "in the clouds of heaven;" and I ask again, if he is never to know anything about the time of his appearing, till he finds himself here? The fact is, the time was given of the end of the world in the book of Daniel, but Daniel was commanded, chap. xii. 4, "shut up the words, and seal the book, to the time of the end;" and at the 9th verse Daniel is told, "The words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end;" and then it is added, verse 10th, "Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly; and none of the wicked shall understand: but the wise shall understand"—when? In "the time of the end." That time has come. And besides, our Saviour says, "When ye see all these things, [viz., the signs he had given them,] KNOW that it is near, at the doors." Now, who gives "Christ the lie," we, who have seen all the signs, and hence believe our Lord's words, and "know it is at the door," or our opponents, who declare we can know nothing about it? Let the candid judge.

Verses 37—39. "But as the days of Noe were, so also shall the coming of the Son of Man be. For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so also shall the coming of the Son of Man be."

Who "knew not?" Not Noe; for he was "warned of God" 120 years before, and being "moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house," because he believed God. But why did not the wicked world know it? Not because they had not been warned, but because they did not believe. Noe had warned them, and done it practically too, by building the ark; but they doubtless counted him a fanatic, a fool, a madman—called his notions all "moonshine," and a "humbug;" and the philosophers, doubtless, reasoned wisely, at least in their own estimation, and made it clear as the sun that there was not water enough in the world to "cover the tops of the highest mountains;" and Noe was an "ignoramus," or he would not talk such "nonsense;" and then they would laugh at him when the time had passed by. Thus men were deluded—the flood came and took them all away—and they knew it not till it was upon them; so will it be when Christ is revealed. Alas! deluded mortals, you will be undone, and you will not know it till it is too late for help. Your teachers cannot save you in that day! No, they themselves will cry in vain, "Lord, Lord, open unto us;" but they, too, cry too late. All is lost—and their eyes are open only to see their ruin, and the ruin of their deluded hearers. That awful day will surely come—laugh and scoff as you may—it will overtake unbelievers as a thief.

Verses 40 and 41: "Then two shall be in the field; the one shall be taken and the other left. Two shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken and the other left."

Luke xvii. 34—36, it is said, "I tell you in that night there shall be two in one bed; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left."

Thus it appears it will be night in some parts of the earth, and day in others. 'There, a pious wife, who has endured the scoffs of a wicked husband, will be taken, and he will be left; or a pious husband will be taken and a persecuting wife will be left:—there, a pious brother is taken and a wicked sister left—or a pious sister is taken and a scoffing brother left:—there, a godly parent, whose prayers, counsels, and entreaties have all been disregarded, is taken, and the wicked child left—or pious children are taken and ungodly parents left:—there, the little babes,—for they will go up in that day,—are taken from their wicked parents' arms, and those parents are left!—LEFT!! LEFT!!! Left to what? Not to the next cars, for the last train, that will ever run for glory, has gone—GONE—GONE for ever!!! Left to what?—Left to the burning day: "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Yea, "The slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth: they shall not be lamented, neither gathered, nor buried; they shall be hung upon the ground." See Mal. iv. 1, and Jer. xxv. 33. "Left!" O ye who are sensible that you are not prepared for that burning day, why will you persist in a cold neglect of the call of God? "Prepare to meet thy God." If you persist in sin, remember the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it, Isa. xxxiii. 12: "The people shall be as the burnings of lime; AS THORNS CUT UP SHALL THEY BE BURNED IN THE FIRE."

Verses 42 to 44. These verses are an exhortation to duty—to "watch"—to "be ready." Some apply this to "Christ's coming at death." But the Scriptures nowhere speak of Christ's coming at death. They speak only of two comings of the Lord Jesus; once to seek and save that which was lost, by dying for us and rising again; and, "to them that look for him shall he appear THE SECOND TIME without sin [a sin offering] unto salvation." They teach us to look for no other coming of Christ than this. For this, we are exhorted to watch and be ready.

Verses 44 to 47. In these verses the happiness of the faithful servant is set forth. He is a "wise servant"—understands his Lord's words. [See Daniel xii. 10: "The wise shall understand." When? In "THE TIME OF THE END," verse 9.] He not only understands, but imparts knowledge; "gives meat in due season;" warns the people; "hears the word at" God's "mouth, and warns them from" him. "Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing." He will be gloriously rewarded: "Verily I say unto you, that he shall make him ruler over all his goods."

Verses 48 and 49. Here the evil servant is described. First: He "says in his heart [dare not at first speak it out,] "My Lord DELAYETH his coming"—"Where is the promise of his coming?"—"Can't come yet"—"Must be a gathering of the Jews first"—"Must be a temporal or spiritual millennium"—"Can't come these thousand years yet." At last he speaks out; he says: "No scholar in the world can believe that the world is coming to an end next April. It is utterly impossible! IF IT DOES, THE ALMIGHTY HAS TOLD THE GREATEST LIES THAT WERE EVER UTTERED!" [See Dr. Brownlee's sermon, as reported in the New York Herald, November.] What next? "Begin to smite fellow-servants;" call them "fools," "fanatics;" they are preaching "moonshine," "humbug," &c. Then what? "Eat and drink with the drunken." Perhaps not literally. They have too much respect for their characters to do that; but they furnish just such moral food as wicked, ungodly men love; and they feed on it themselves. The wicked crowd to hear such ministers, and come away extolling them. A multitude of examples might be given of this; one must suffice: A minister in Massachusetts, by the name of S. B. H——, who had once been a temperance lecturer, was invited to preach against Christ's coming and the end of the world at hand, by some Universalists. After he got through, they were so well pleased, one of them gave him a ten dollar bill; another, after praising the minister, said to him, "I have no money to give, but if you will go to the tavern with me, I will TREAT YOU JUST AS LONG AS YOU CAN DRINK." Thus these evil servants furnish food for wicked, rum-drinking men, and as truly eat and drink with the drunken as though they sipped the intoxicating bowl. You never heard of a sinner awakened by a sermon preached against the doctrine of Christ's coming and the end of the world in 1848. But many who had been aroused from their sinful slumbers by the "terror" of the Lord's coming, have been lulled to sleep again by these evil servants, and will most likely sleep on till the thunders of the last trump will awake them to see that they have "believed a lie that they might be damned," because they received "not the truth" that they might be saved, "but had pleasure in unrighteousness." See 2 Thess. ii. 10—12.

Verses 50 and 51. These verses contain the doom of those evil servants who furnish food for wicked men, and partake of it themselves. "The Lord of that servant shall come in a day WHEN HE LOOKETH NOT FOR HIM, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him HIS PORTION with the HYPOCRITES; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

Now, reader, this is perhaps the last address I shall ever give you. I feel that our Lord standeth at the door. Beyond a doubt, in my mind, the NEXT great prophetic event is the sounding of the LAST TRUMPET, the coming of Christ to raise his sleeping saints, change his living ones, "melt the elements with fervent heat, the earth also;" and BURN UP THE WORKS THEREIN. That will be "the DAY OF JUDGMENT AND PERDITION OF UNGODLY MEN!"

DISCOURSE.

—“I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him.”

Ezek. xxi. 27.

As Christ is the end of the Law, so is he the end of Prophecy. It all centres in him. This fact gives it its character, its interest, its importance, its glory. His work, as restorer of what was lost by sin, is the point to which the prophecy directs and holds the attention. But the features of this work are only gradually unfolded. We have, first, a general and indefinite promise, an obscure hint, and then occasional predictions having no apparent connection or order; and, subsequently, others, definite and connected, bringing out all the parts of the work, and giving order, system, and beauty to the whole. We have the rough outline, and then the filling up—the chaotic mass, and then the shaping of the whole into order, harmony, and beauty. Often, in the prophecy, great events, though different in character, and separate as to time, are grouped together, and presented to view as though really connected. But increased light, arising from additional revelations, shows their true order. Sometimes we have the events properly arranged, without any clues as to the times and seasons of their occurrence. These, also, at the proper time and place, are furnished.

But this method is only adopted in regard to the events of the distant future. All the light that is requisite at any one period, is abundantly furnished. The only light that could have been needed, in reference to the distant future, was enough to give form and direction to the faith, and to fix the hope of God's people. And this has steadily increased, as the periods towards which the prophecy directed the eye, have approached. The first great promise, made in Eden, contains, in the smallest limits, the whole truth and history of redemption. The whole of its mysteries, its successes, its reverses, its conflicts, its victories, its glories, are included in that single brief announcement. It comprises, in miniature form, the most stupendous truths, the grandest displays of moral power, the most brilliant conquests, and the highest state of bliss and glory. The Bible is merely an expansion and illustration of that great promise. It will require an eternity to give us the idea in its fulness, richness, glory. But the truth it presented, like the shapeless and unorganized elements of the earth at their creation, was in a chaotic state. It was needful to give it form, order, symmetry.

It was needful to bring out the means by which, and the times and seasons at which, it was to have its fulfilment. This is the work of the Bible. But it was a gradual work. Its revelations become more and more clear, definite, and systematic. Its light grows brighter and brighter to its completion. We have now the full plan, in all its parts. We have the events and their order, the truths and their classification. But these are not given on one page, or always in the same connection, and yet, in many instances, they are presented in such succinctness, such order, as to make all plain to the careful reader.

The text is a prophecy unfolding the order of the most important events connected with the great work of Christ. It is one of the prophecies relating to order. It stretches over a vast space of time, and fixes the mind upon two great crises or turning points that would occur during that period, and the state of things succeeding each. The first is, the entire subversion of the kingdom of Israel, succeeded by a long and gloomy period of desolation and dispersion; the last is, the coming of Christ to restore the kingdom, followed by the millennial state of bliss and glory. It involves, therefore, a fearful threatening, and a cheering promise. The first is to have its full execution before the other is fulfilled. For how long a period the threatening has been in process of execution! More than two thousand four hundred years have passed since it commenced ! But the work of vengeance is not yet done. The kingdom is yet in ruins. He, to whom it belongs, has not yet come. And, to look for anything but overturning, change, desolation, and depression until that time, is to disregard the Bible, and to cherish expectations most certainly to be disappointed. All this side of that point, will be, to God's people, a period of sorrow, darkness, affliction, and trial ; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. When he comes whose the kingdom is, their days of mourning will be ended, and the period of their joys and rejoicings will begin.

I propose on this occasion to discuss the following points.

I. THE PERSONAL REIGN OF CHRIST ON EARTH.

II. THE IDENTITY OF THE MILLENNIUM WITH THAT REIGN.

III. THE PREPARATORY EVENTS OF THAT REIGN.

IV. THE PRIVILEGES AND ENJOYMENTS OF THAT REIGN.

V. THE EVIDENCES THAT THAT REIGN IS ABOUT TO BEGIN.

I propose to pass over this wide field of investigation, for two reasons. First, to correct, if possible, the common impression that the only thing that distinguishes the believers in the personal coming of Christ near, is the time. This impression has not been made without effort. The opposers of our views seem disposed to narrow down the matters of difference to this one point. To this we strongly object. We feel determined that the real points at issue between us shall be kept fully, and in their true light, before the public mind. My second reason is, that I may set before the hearer the true grounds of our faith, and the real basis of our hope. Those who oppose us, either deny or disregard our premises. In most cases, it is the latter. Where this is so, we can look for nothing but opposition. We claim to have a faith that is founded on evidence. And we think we are not so irrational, not so far gone in fanaticism, as not to know that our conclusions are no sounder than our premises—that our faith is no better than the evidence on which it rests. If they fail, or are proved unsound, the system must fail. If they stand, it will survive unharmed the fiercest and most desperate opposition. We wish, therefore, the question to be met on its merits, and to have a decision in the face of all our evidences. But a synopsis of these is all that I can hope to give in the present discourse.

The point in order is—

I. THE PERSONAL REIGN OF CHRIST ON EARTH.

This point is vital to the system we advocate. In the system it holds a central position. On it must turn the whole question. For, though the question of time should be decided in our favor, there would then be ground for difference respecting the events to be expected. The character of the reign looked for, must decide the character of those events. If it be once admitted that Christ is to come to reign personally, we cannot see how our view of the character of accompanying events can be disputed. A personal reign implies a personal coming, and the events of such a coming all must admit to be such as we expect. But if Christ is only to commence a spiritual reign, our view of those events must be acknowledged to be wrong, and opposed to the Bible. To this point, then, attention is invited.

To give it its full force, a little explanation is needed. Four points of inquiry are involved in it. The first two of these cannot be doubtful; the last two will require some consideration. The points are: 1. What was intended by that which was to be overturned and destroyed? 2. Who was meant by he that should come, whose it was by right, and to whom it should be given? 3. What particular coming was referred to? 4. What was to be the character of the coming? If we find the first of these to be the kingdom of Israel; the second, Christ; the third, his second advent; the fourth, a personal coming; all will be plain and incontrovertible. As to the first two points of inquiry, as already remarked, there can be no doubt. That the two subjects of the prophecy are the kingdom of Israel and Christ, all the candid and judicious allow. Indeed, it is so clear as to command almost universal assent. The whole prophecy, including the context, pronounces the doom of Zedekiah, and the kingdom over which he unworthily and wickedly reigned. He was the last king that ever sat on the throne of Israel. His character and fate are thus faithfully set forth by the prophet: "And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end; thus saith the Lord God, Remove the diadem, and take off the crown; this shall not be the same; exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high." Then follows the prophecy constituting the text, showing the destiny of the kingdom. "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him."

The glory, dignity, and independence of the kingdom had before this passed away; and now its entire subversion is decreed. The stroke by which it lost its sovereignty fell in the days of Manasseh. From his time to the period of the delivery of this prophecy, it rapidly declined in strength and glory. Though of divine origin and of celestial model, it had wonderfully degenerated and fallen. From its subjects and rulers

God had received the greatest provocations. They became a nation of idolators. They despised the origin, the model, the rightful king of their kingdom. They desired a kingdom modeled after the governments of this world, and a king like the nations around them. This God permitted, in his wrath. But the supreme power of the kingdom, when secured, was, for the most part of the time of its subsequent existence, used for the wickedest and vilest purposes. So perverted had it become from its original purpose, that God determined on its overthrow. But he was slow in the execution of his purpose, that space might be given for amendment and reform. The Assyrians assailed and weakened it; the Egyptians annoyed and diminished it; and the Babylonians took away its independence. But, despite these judgments and other means of reform, the nation waxed worse and worse. Its day had now come. Its measure of guilt was full. The time of its overthrow and subversion had approached. The stroke fell in the eleventh year of the reign of Zedekiah, in the year 588 B. C. Nebuchadnezzar was made the instrument of this work. He commenced, and prosecuted with much zeal and skill, a siege against Jerusalem of eighteen months' continuance, and took it, pillaged the temple, carried out the vessels of the sanctuary, burned it with fire, destroyed the palace, overthrew the whole city, and carried Zedekiah, and the remnant that escaped the slaughter of the siege, to Babylon, where he met a terrible doom. Thus ended the dynasty of Israel. Never since that period has one set on the throne of David. Though the nation was restored, the crown has not been replaced. One, by the name of Hyrcanus, assumed regal authority, but he was slain, and succeeded by Herod. The Chronicles thus mournfully close this account: "Therefore he brought upon them the king of the Chaldeans, who slew their young men with the sword in the house of their sanctuary, and had no compassion upon young man or maiden, old man or him that stooped for age; he gave them all into his hand. And all the vessels of the house of God, great and small, and the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king and of his princes, all these he brought to Babylon. And they burnt the house of God, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem, and burnt all the palaces thereof with fire, and destroyed all the goodly vessels thereof. And them that escaped of the sword carried he away to Babylon, where they were servants to him and his sons, until the reign of the kingdom of Persia." Soon after the commencement of the Persian reign, they were restored, but without a king. God's decree was not to be revoked. It had gone out of his mouth, and could not return, that the kingdom should be OVERTURNED, OVERTURNED, OVERTURNED, AND BE

NO MORE, UNTIL HE SHOULD COME WHOSE RIGHT IT IS.

We now come to consider the only points that need elucidation and proof. These relate to the coming intended, and the character of it. As Christ is, beyond all dispute, the one who was to come, and to whom the kingdom was to be given, it is necessary, first, to inquire whether his first or a subsequent coming be meant. And this, it seems, will admit of a very easy answer. All allow that Christ, after his first coming, in some sense was to come again. The testimony of Scripture is so ample and explicit, touching this point, as to preclude all shadow of doubt. Whether the prophecy referred to his first or this subsequent coming, is now the matter of inquiry. A few considerations will make this plain to all.

1. It was not among the objects of his first coming, to reign. One fact will show this. There were two classes of prophecies, as well as two classes of types, unlike and opposite in their nature to each other, to be fulfilled by Christ. The first class set him forth as a man, of low and obscure origin, without personal attractions;—as a sufferer;—as one subject to temptations, sorrow, trial, and other ills incident to life;—as an object of hatred, scorn, reproach, and unceasing persecution;—as one delivered to his enemies, to have a mock-trial, to be taunted, spit upon, and in various ways insulted, and at last to be put to death, as the highest offender known to law;—and as one who was to experience the gloom of the grave, and be raised, and, in due time, to pass into the heavens, and appear as a priest in the presence of God. The other class present him as the Lord of glory, clothed with majesty, coming in vengeance to judge the world, and dashing his enemies to pieces as a potter's vessel, and swaying his sceptre over the whole earth;—as the one who should redeem his people from all their enemies, their sorrows, their afflictions, and introduce them into the renovated earth, and be their King forever and ever. The one class relate to his coming in humiliation;—the other to his coming in glory. The one class describe him as a spiritual Redeemer;—the other as a physical Redeemer. The one class refer to him as a Prophet, Priest, Sacrifice;—the other as a Judge, Rewarder, King. The first class point to his coming to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord;—the other to his coming to proclaim the day of God's vengeance. These prophecies and types, so entirely opposite in their character, could not be fulfilled at one time, or at one manifestation of himself. All can see that he could not appear in these opposite characters, assume these opposite forms, perform these opposite things, and receive such opposite treatment, at one and the same coming. But which class of prophecies and types did he fulfil at his first coming? All will say, the first. If so, his first coming was not to reign. His coming to restore the kingdom of Israel, must be looked for at a subsequent period.

2. Facts, known to all, clearly demonstrate, that the prophecy did not point to the first appearing of Messiah, as the period of its fulfilment. Nothing occurred at that time that approached towards a fulfilment of it. The kingdom of Israel was to be subject to overturnings, and cease to be, until Christ should come to receive it, to whom it belonged by right. But when he came he did not receive it; he refused the crown; he left it, as he found it, in ruins! And forty years after, the last vestige of it was by the Romans destroyed, and its seat and capital utterly laid waste. And need I tell what has been its fate since? The world know what it has been. The withering decree of the Almighty is yet upon it. "NO MORE" are the two words of the prophecy that contain its history. Another coming, then, must be intended, or the prediction has failed. None of my Christian hearers will allow the latter.

3. The Saviour, just prior to his ascension to heaven, in reply to a question of the disciples, relating to the time of the restoration of the kingdom, gave them most decidedly to understand that the period of such restoration was far future. They inquired,—"Lord, wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom again to Israel?" There can be no doubt, I think, that this question was put in view of the very prophecy I have taken for my text. All can see that it related to time. There could be no ground for mistake as to the event. Our Saviour, in his answer, confines himself to time. He gave them to understand that the event was certain. But it was not for them to know, then, the times and seasons which the Father had put in his own power. The event was far future, and there was no necessity of giving an immediate revelation concerning the time. But that they might be still farther assured as to the certainty of the predicted restoration, they were told by two heavenly messengers, that appeared as soon as the Lord had gone up beyond their sight, that the same Jesus who had gone up from them should so come in like manner as they had seen him go to heaven. All can see that this language expresses a personal coming in the strongest and most decisive manner. That is the coming intended by the prophecy, to restore the kingdom. The disciples wished to know if he would fulfil the prophecy, at that time, or at that coming, and he, in his answer, conveyed clearly the idea that the period was future that was assigned for its fulfilment, and not then to be known. But that they might not despair of its fulfilment, two angels are despatched, while the disciples are gazing towards heaven to catch another view of their ascending Lord, to assure them of his coming again in person. This must have dispelled all doubt. Then, their faith in the restoration of the kingdom, and the manner, had a firm and immovable basis. It is therefore plain that the question of the disciples, and the answer of the Lord, together with the declaration of the angels, afford the clearest evidence that the prophecy relating to the kingdom is not to have its fulfilment until his future personal coming. To say the least, it shows that his first coming was not to receive the kingdom.

4. An additional proof of this is found in the fact that his first appearance was at the commencement of the supremacy of the fourth kingdom of Daniel's vision. That kingdom was one of the powers to be used in overturning and subverting the kingdom of Israel. It did destroy the last remnant of it. And it was to have an existence of two thousand years' duration. All this long space of time would be necessary for it to pass through all its predicted changes. After its fall and ruin, Christ was to receive the kingdom. See Daniel vii. 9—14. That kingdom, in its last predicted form, yet continues. Israel's power is yet scattered and broken. Jerusalem is yet trodden down by the Gentiles, because the times of the Gentiles still continue. David's throne is not to be re-established until those times expire. When Christ first appeared, the Roman monarchy had but just begun its long, bloody, and terrible career.

It was but in its infancy. It was for many long ages to break and scatter the power of Israel. Christ's first coming, then, was not the one pointed to by the prophecy.

5. The New Testament, with great uniformity, represents Christ as waiting for, and not as reigning in, his kingdom. The Father thus addressed him,—“Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool.” Ps. cx. 1. Acts ii. 34, 35. And Paul testifies, that he, after offering himself for sin, “sat down on the right hand of God; from henceforth EXPECTING till his enemies be made his footstool.” Heb. x. 12, 13. And this same apostle assures us, that, when he comes again, he will come with his kingdom. 2 Tim. iv. 1. Hence it is evident that he has not the kingdom which is his by right, and which he is to receive at his coming. It is not yet ready. The subjects are not all fitted, the territory is not yet prepared, the foes are not subdued, the dominion is yet in the hands of enemies. And his term of office as priest is not quite expired; he yet intercedes in heaven; yet presents his own blood before the Father as a reason for the delay of justice. But he will soon relinquish that position, and take to himself his great power and reign. But, since he does not now reign in his kingdom, all must see that his first coming was not that referred to in the text.

These reasons, though but a few of those that might be offered, must satisfy all reasonable persons that the prophecy used for the text, did not have its fulfilment at Christ's first coming. We must then look for another coming as the period of its fulfilment.

And the next point of inquiry relates to the character of that coming. Was, a spiritual or personal coming intended? And it seems that little need be said on this point, after what has been advanced. The arguments just offered to prove the coming intended, must also prove that the coming would be personal. If there were two classes of prophecies relating to Messiah's coming, in different characters, for different purposes, and under different circumstances, as has been shown, and the first class of which were fulfilled by his personal advent; how can it be rational to maintain that the other class will have a fulfilment by any other than a personal coming? The events of the latter class can no more be accomplished without a personal manifestation, than those of the former. And to aver that the latter do not refer to a personal appearing, is to aver that the former do not. The prophecy teaches as plainly, and more frequently, that Christ is to come in majesty, to reign, as that he should come in the form of a servant, to suffer and die. And if a personal coming be not meant in the one case, it cannot, for the same reason, be so meant in the other. We must, to be consistent, deny that a coming in person was intended in both, or in neither, of the cases. Which, as lovers of the Bible, should we do?

And the considerations, that the power of Israel is yet broken and scattered,—that the promise that he should come in like manner as he went to heaven, was made, by the angels, in connection with an inquiry respecting the time of the restoration of the kingdom to Israel—that Christ is to come to set up his kingdom at the conclusion of the reign of the Roman monarchy, which still continues—and that the New Testament representation is, that he is waiting for, and not reigning in, his kingdom—must go very far towards proving that the prophecy pointed to a personal coming.

Further, the idea of a spiritual coming of Christ, when an absolute coming is intended, has no foundation. A spiritual coming evidently supposes a spiritual absence, which is contrary to fact. Spiritually, the Lord Jesus has been with his saints from the beginning. He promised to be with his ministers to the end of the world. See Matt. xxviii. 20. In a similar manner is he with all his saints. John xiv. And since, in this sense, he is and has been with his people, and since in the prophecy an absolute coming to take the kingdom, is predicted, it is in the highest degree absurd to talk of a spiritual coming. This all must see and admit.

Another consideration will place this matter in a still stronger light. The part of the prophecy that has received its fulfilment, has had an exact literal fulfilment. The crown was literally taken away, the kingdom literally overturned and subverted, and literally, for ages, it has not been. Why, then, let me inquire, should we expect the other part—by far the more important and interesting part—to have any other than a literal fulfilment? How, in reason, can we look for any other than a literal coming, for a literal personal reign? Can we believe that prophecy has such a mixed and confused character as this? Such a thought does violence to that portion of the Bible, violence to reason, and is fraught with scepticism.

Again—A passage in Peter's address, given in the temple, soon after Pentecost, must be deemed sufficient to settle this question. After turning their attention to the fearful nature of their guilt, he thus exhorts the Jews: "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." To encourage them, and to correct their ideas of the order of events, he immediately adds: "And he shall send Jesus Christ, who before was preached unto you; whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts. iii. 19—21. Three things, in the light of this passage, must be plain. 1. That if all things, spoken by God through the prophets, are to be restored, the kingdom of Israel is one of them. 2. That the restoration of this and the other things, is to be effected by sending Jesus Christ. 3. That, until the time of this restoration, the heaven is to receive him. If this language does not prove, beyond all dispute, a personal coming, for the restoration of the kingdom of Israel, it is not in the power of language to do it. And if it does not, with equal conclusiveness, prove that he did not come at the destruction of Jerusalem, or at any other period since, we should despair of seeing anything proved by the most direct testimony. The heaven was to receive him until the times of restitution, and no longer. Has he ceased to be a resident of heaven? There can be but one answer. And what has been restored of the "all things" spoken by the mouth of the prophets? Nothing. All is yet waste, and desolate, and in the hands of enemies. Christ, then, has not been sent; the heaven yet is his residence. But that same heaven that now entertains him, and is filled with his glory, is to yield him up, no more to receive him. For his tabernacle shall be with men, and he shall dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and he shall be with them and be their God and King.

We are, then, to expect that he will come personally, according to the import of the prophecy, to take the kingdom of Israel, for so long a period broken and prostrate, and reign as a literal king. If he is to come personally, as has been fully demonstrated, all will allow that he is to have a personal reign.

But one other thought, contained in the text, will strengthen the argument. It is the literal kingdom that he is to receive, that is his by right, and which is to be no more until he comes. This being so, it would be the height of unreasonableness to suppose, that there would be any other than a literal and personal reign.

But there are additional proofs of the personal reign of Christ on earth.

2. The concurrent testimony of Scripture is abundant and explicit, touching this point.

Only a few of the more direct and decisive passages can be cited in this discourse.

"There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab, and destroy all the children of Sheth. Out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion, and shall destroy him that remaineth of the city."

Numb. xxiv. 17, 19. "The adversaries of the Lord shall be broken to pieces; out of heaven shall he thunder upon them; the Lord shall judge the ends of the earth; and he shall give strength unto his King, and exalt the horn of his Anointed." 1 Sam. ii. 10.

Though the heathen and the other wicked, with their kings and rulers, combine to prevent his reign, it is said, in the second Psalm, "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion." "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." Ps. lxxii. 8. Zech. ix. 10. "Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established forever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven." Ps. lxxxix. 35—37. This is the same throne that was overthrown in the days of Zedekiah, and which was not to be re-established until Christ should come. "Then shall the moon be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv. 23. "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace, there shall be no end, UPON THE THRONE OF DAVID, AND UPON HIS KINGDOM, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice, from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Isa. ix. 6, 7. "And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest : AND THE LORD GOD SHALL GIVE UNTO HIM THE THRONE OF HIS FATHER DAVID : AND HE SHALL REIGN OVER THE HOUSE OF JACOB FOREVER ; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

Luke i. 31—33. "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him : his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

Dan. vii. 13, 14. "And the seventh angel sounded ; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ ; and he shall reign forever and ever."

Rev. xi. 15. "Therefore, being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, (David) that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, HE WOULD RAISE UP CHRIST TO SIT ON HIS THRONE." Acts ii. 30.

None can be so blind as not to see that four points, at least, are fully established by this testimony. 1. That Christ should reign. 2. That he should reign on the throne of David, in Mount Zion. 3. That his dominion should be over the whole earth. 4. That his kingdom shall be endless. These being settled, the notion of a spiritual reign must be regarded as a delusion. A personal reign only can fulfil the prophetic representations and averments relating to his reign. To speak of his reigning spiritually on the throne of David, in Mount Zion, and exercising dominion over the whole earth, and at the same time to be in heaven in person, is to speak too absurdly to be heeded. The Scripture does not so use language, to confuse and mislead. And it seems that it need not be inquired, whether such a reign as the plain letter of the prophecy leads us to expect, has commenced? Facts teach us too plainly the contrary, to allow such an inquiry. All must know that it is far otherwise. But if there were a doubt as to this matter, a resort to the Bible would soon remove it. The present position of the Saviour in the universe, the office he now fills, and the position he is to occupy, are there clearly defined. One passage will impart much light on these points. "To him that overcometh, will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. iii. 21. He then is on his Father's throne; his own is in prospect. And this, with great uniformity, is the testimony of the whole New Testament. Peter quotes from Psalms to prove that he is at the right hand of God, waiting till his enemies be made his footstool. Acts ii. 34, 35. He says, Acts iii. 20, 21, that he is in heaven, to remain until the times of restitution. Stephen saw him, just before his martyrdom, standing on the right hand of God. Acts vii. 55. Paul testifies, that, after God raised him from the dead, he "set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come, and hath put all things under his feet." Eph. i. 20—22. He says farther, Heb. x. 12, 13, that he is "on the right hand of God, from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool." And much of the argument, in the epistle to the Hebrews, goes to show that he is now officiating in the character of a priest. So it is most evident that he has not now his own kingdom; that he will not have it until the close of probation, as he is to officiate as priest until that time; and that he is now connected with his Father's kingdom. And, sustaining this connection with his Father's kingdom, it is plain to be seen what kingdom he is to give up, and what throne to abdicate, at his coming, according to 1 Cor. xv. 24. This passage has been a source of great perplexity to many minds, but this view makes it plain and intelligible. His own kingdom is not to be delivered up, because the prophecy declares that it shall be ETERNAL. God, in addressing the Son, thus declares the eternity of his throne: "Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever: a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom." Heb. i. 8. The only kingdom, therefore, he can deliver up, or throne he can abdicate, is that of his Father, with which he is now connected.

If, then, as this testimony fully proves, the Messiah is now on his Father's throne—that his own is in prospect—that that is the throne of David in this world—that when it is re-established, the saints will be permitted to sit with him in it,—who can believe in any other than a personal reign? It is difficult to see who can.

3. Analogy furnishes a strong and unanswerable argument in favor of a personal reign. All the prophecies, relating to the Messiah, may properly be divided into three classes. These classes apply to his three offices, of Prophet, Priest, and King. These offices pertain to this world. The nature of them required that they should be sustained successively. They could not be held at one and the same time. The prophecies relating to the first two, have been literally fulfilled. There has not been, as it respects the prophetic and priestly offices, the slightest departure from the letter of the prediction. Christ has appeared, in conformity with the letter of prophecy, and for its fulfilment, as a literal prophet and priest. And does not analogy demand, strongly demand, that he shall come, as the plain language of the prophecy shows he will, as a literal King? A man would be held a strange prophetical expositor, who should maintain a literal fulfilment in the first two cases, and a spiritual fulfilment in the last! This can find a parallel only in the popular view respecting the restoration of the Jews. It is held that the Jews are to be literally restored, and, at the same time, it is maintained that the kingdom of Israel is only to be spiritually restored! There is to be a literal restoration of the subjects, but only a spiritual restoration of the kingship! To such absurdities and inconsistencies do false rules of interpretation conduct us.

4. To commence a reign, presupposes that there was a time when it was not in being. The prophecies fix the period of Christ's reign, as has already appeared, at a point yet future. But he has all along reigned spiritually, as all admit: a spiritual reign, therefore, cannot be intended. All must see the force of this reasoning. If Christ has ever been reigning spiritually in the hearts of his people, and the prophecies all point to a future reign, as they evidently do, a different and more important reign must be expected; and what can that be but a personal reign?

5. His reign, in the Scriptures, is connected with events such as can take place only at his personal coming. These events are, the resurrection, judgment, destruction of the entire wicked, the conflagration of the world, and the new creation. All who believe in these events, believe they are to transpire.

when Christ shall come personally. If, therefore, it can be made to appear that the commencement of his reign is associated with these events, it will become evident that it will begin at his personal coming; and must, consequently, be a personal reign. As this subject will come up again, under another head, I shall not here present but a passage or two showing this connection. And, since most believe that the events are so bound together as to occur at the same general period, if it can be shown that the reign of Christ is connected with any one or two of them, it will answer every purpose in this part of the discourse. Paul connects it with the judgment and resurrection, in his 2d epistle to Timothy. "I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." 2 Tim. iv. 1. A connection is clearly shown in the Apocalypse. "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." And, at the same time, it is added by the elders in heaven,—"And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants, the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth." Rev. xi. 15, 18. In this passage, the connection is very plain between the reign of Christ and the resurrection, the judgment, and the destruction of the wicked. From both texts, and others that will hereafter be introduced, it must be evident that Christ's coming to judgment is his coming to reign : if so, a personal reign, and no other, is to be looked for. We have, therefore, as solid a basis for the belief of a personal reign, as for a personal coming, or the events of the resurrection and judgment. To deny the one, is really to deny the other. The events are connected, and they must occur, or fail, together. If they fail, the hopes of the saints are fated to be wrecked and disappointed forever!

If time allowed, we might still fortify our position by referring to the faith, and hopes, and ardent anticipations of the pious world, from the earliest periods. We might allude to the belief and expectations of Abraham, Job, Daniel; the united faith of the Jews; the harmonious testimony of the early church; the views of the Reformers; the sentiments of the highest ornaments of the English pulpit; the creeds of most of the sects; and the songs that are chanted in almost every sanctuary. We might present the views of some of the most learned and pious divines of our own country; and dwell upon the evidences that the notion of a spiritual reign is fast being abandoned in all branches of the church. We might show that the doctrine of a spiritual reign was a legitimate offspring of papacy; that the popes concluded to let Christ reign spiritually if they might but reign personally; that they devised a plan of having a millennium without putting the Lord to any trouble about it;—and that just so far as the church, in any age, has acquired a standing, and influence, and honor in the world, has she lost sight of the great and precious doctrine of the personal reign of Christ. But I have not time to dwell on these points. It is not necessary. The Bible evidence is overwhelming. Christ shall come personally to take the kingdom, for to him, by right, it belongs.

"Come then, and, added to thy many crowns,
Receive yet one, the crown of all the earth,
Thou who alone art worthy! it was thine
By ancient covenant, ere nature's birth,
And thou hast made it thine by purchase since,
And overpaid its value with thy blood.
Thy saints proclaim thee King; and in their hearts
Thy title is engraven with a pen
Dipt in the fountain of eternal love.
Thy saints proclaim thee King; and thy delay
Gives courage to their foes, who, could they see
The dawn of thy last advent, long desired,
Would creep into the bowels of the hills,
And flee for safety to the falling rocks."

II. THE IDENTITY OF THE MILLENNIUM WITH THAT REIGN.

The church has, in all time, been expecting, confidently expecting, a period of exalted bliss, purity, and joy. For this expectation, the best of grounds can be shown. It was announced in Eden; promised to patriarchs; sung by holy bards of old; foretold by all the prophets; taught by the Saviour; proclaimed by the apostles; believed by all the faithful. The promise and the prospect of that state have cheered, encouraged, and nerved to nobler deeds, the saints in all ages. It was the favorite theme of prophets. Their clear and far-reaching vision was filled with the bright glories of that day of holy joy and triumph. The dawns of that day, all have longed to see. Many a heart, in its fulness, has said,— “Haste, then, and wheel away a shattered world,

 Ye slow revolving seasons! We would see (A sight to which our eyes are strangers yet)
 A world that does not dread and hate his laws,
 And suffer for its crime; would learn how fair
 The creature is that God pronounces good;
 How pleasant in itself, what pleases him.”

But, though the expectation of this state has been universal, the same place has not been assigned for it by all in the field of prophecy, nor the same views taken of its character. The period is believed in, but it is differently arranged in the order of future events. This different arrangement gives rise to the different views as to the character of the period. A portion of the church put the period before, and another portion after, the personal coming of Christ. If it is to be before such coming, it must be in a mortal state, comprising more or less the evils of the curse; if after, it will be in the immortal state, entirely freed from those evils. The latter is our view. The former, all must allow, who have been at all familiar with the opinions of the church, to be quite a modern notion, especially among evangelical Christians. It cannot claim any respect on account of its antiquity. We will test it, and see what claims it has to regard and favor. The question, therefore, now is, whether the millennium is identified with the personal reign of Christ, or is to precede it?

And it does seem that the settlement of the question of a personal reign, must be deemed a settlement of this point. If Christ is to reign personally on earth, that, evidently, must be the millennium. Or is there to be a millennium, to be succeeded by a personal reign? This would be like having day before the appearing of the sun! like having the bloom and glory of spring amid the chills and frosts of winter! This is too absurd to be thought of. The whole question turns on the character of the anticipated reign. If that reign is to be personal, all must admit that there can be no millennium until its commencement. The Bible has so connected the two, in its plainest descriptions, as to leave no room for doubt. And as a personal reign has been proved, from the Scriptures, the point is, in fact, already established. But as other proofs may be furnished, proofs of a most decisive character, it may be proper to present them, that the question may be placed beyond the limits of rational dispute.

1. The text itself, in the light of the explanation given, affords the strongest proof that there will be no millennium before the personal reign of Christ. The kingdom, whose destiny it pronounces, is to lie in ruins, until he comes to receive it. Surely, there will be no millennium until its restoration !

2. The connection in prophecy between that reign and the millennial state, must prove the identity of the two, beyond dispute. I need present but a passage or two to show this connection, since it can hardly be questioned, so often is it presented on the pages of prophecy. "In his days shall the righteous flourish ; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth. He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." Ps. lxxii. 8. After the destruction of the fourth kingdom of Daniel, it is said,—“And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him.” Dan. vii. 27. Previous to this possession of the kingdom, it is said that the saints are to be subject to, and oppressed by, earthly powers. So there can be no millennium till the time of possessing the kingdom. Zechariah thus shows the connection : “And the Lord shall be king over all the earth; in that day there shall be one Lord, and his name one. All the land shall be turned as a plain. And men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction, but Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited." Chap. xiv. 9—11. These passages show the general character of the prophecy, pertaining to the connection between Christ's reign and the millennial state. All must see their identity.

3. There can be no millennium antecedent to the personal reign of Christ, because the whole space of time to this period is given to earthly kingdoms. The little horn, the last form of the last kingdom, is to "make war with the saints and prevail against them, until the Ancient of days comes, and the time comes for the saints to possess the kingdom." See Daniel vii. This all must allow to be the same power as Paul's Man of Sin, that is to be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming. 2 Thess. ii. 8. Surely that millennium would not be of much worth, in which this little horn would be universally pushing, and over which would preside the Man of Sin! I desire not such a state. But this power is to prevail and prosper, UNTIL the Ancient of days comes to destroy it. Prior to that, there can be no millennium.

4. The parable of the tares, as given by the Saviour, furnishes a strong argument in favor of our position. As we have the Lord's exposition of it, we can safely depend upon it. The design of the parable obviously is, to show the fact, and the reason of it, that the righteous and wicked are destined to dwell together until the close of probation. "Let both GROW TOGETHER until harvest; the harvest is the end of the world." At that time the separation will take place, and each class be conveyed to their respective places of reward. After that, the righteous are to shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. See Matt. xiii. 40—43. There is, then, no place for a millennium between the point of time at which the Lord uttered the parable, to the end of the world, or the time of harvest. During all that space, he has declared that the righteous and wicked shall flourish together in the same field.

5. The parable of the ten virgins furnishes evidence equally decisive in support of the view taken. This parable, without doubt, is intended to teach that the church, half of whom at least will possess no grace, will be in a state of spiritual sleep until the announcement is made, that the Bridegroom cometh. But who can believe that this will be the character of the inhabitants of the millennium! If Christ does not come until after the millennium, this must be their character! It will be a millennium, then, of spiritual sleepers, and graceless professors!

6. The duty to watch for his coming, so often enjoined, is inconsistent with the idea of a millennium before Christ's coming to reign.

For a thousand years, there could be no watching, either for the signs, or the event itself. There will be no ground to expect a sudden or unexpected manifestation of the Saviour, in that period.

7. A millennium to precede the personal reign of Christ, would be in a state of trial without the essentials of such a state. A state of trial is a state in which moral character is formed, and destiny is chosen. Among the essentials of such a state, are, freedom, temptation to wrong, inducement to right, or counter moral influences. Without these, it would be difficult to conceive of a state of trial. In the millennial state these can have no place, or at least some of them. There will there be no Satan to tempt, no world to overcome, no carnal nature to subdue, no wicked to annoy, no adverse influences to oppose, no sinful examples to influence, no trials to perplex, and no dangers to gather upon the path. All, all, in that state will be on the side of virtue, religion, and the highest enjoyment. Such a state cannot comprise the essentials of a state of probation. And yet it must be so, if it is before the coming of Christ. This must show the absurdity of such a view.

8. It is highly absurd to expect such a state as the Bible describes the millennium to be, in the earth, under the curse, with all incident to it. A quotation or two will show this. I will quote from the millennial chapter, the sixtieth of Isaiah. "Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shall call thy walls Salvation and thy gates Praise. The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory; thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself; for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended. Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land forever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified." This is almost precisely the same language that is employed in the twenty-first of Revelation, to describe what is conceded to be the immortal state. So similar is the language, that we cannot avoid the conclusion that it was borrowed from Isaiah. The same state must be referred to by both. It must be plain to all that Isaiah's language cannot be applied to the earth, in its present disordered and wretched state. If all violence, wasting, and destruction are to cease; if all mourning and sorrow are to have an end; if the sun and moon will no more be needed, on account of God's presence and glory; and if all are to be righteous and inherit the land forever; it cannot be in this world, under the curse, or even in a mortal state. We must rather look for it in the immortal state, under the reign of Christ.

9. The millennium is to be in the New Earth, and therefore will be identical with the reign of Christ. The Bible becomes more and more clear and definite in its instructions, as it advances towards its completion. The New Testament throws much light upon, and gives proper order to, the events predicted in the Old. Peter, in treating, in his last epistle, on the coming of Christ, and the events to succeed, has given us the order in which some of the more important prophetic events are to take place. After speaking of the conflagration of the present heavens and earth, he says,—“Nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.” 2 Peter iii. 13. There is but one promise of this kind in the whole Bible, and that is found in Isaiah. John, the Revelator, saw a new heaven and new earth; but this was after the epistle of Peter was written. The promise in Isaiah, then, must be the one intended by Peter. And if so, we have a strong argument against a millennium in a mortal state. The promise in Isaiah is connected with a glowing description of the millennium; but Peter makes the period of its fulfilment after the conflagration of the present heavens and earth: the millennium connected with it, or dependent upon it, must, therefore, be after. And this will fix it in the new earth. And Peter suggests the reason why we are not to expect such a state until the new creation, "wherein dwelleth righteousness." As if he had said, that cannot be expected in the present world. Why, then, not believe that he has given the prophetic events their true order? Why expect that here, which God has not promised; which cannot be?

10. A millennium before the resurrection, would exclude those from it who have the strongest claims to its enjoyment. Who should share in the bliss, and joy, and triumph of that state, if not Abraham, Moses, David, Daniel, Paul, the martyrs, those who have suffered and sacrificed the most for truth and Christ? How marvellous, that those should have an exclusive right to that season of rejoicing and holy triumph, who shall come on to the stage just at the dawn of that day, without having suffered anything, sacrificed anything, or done anything for Christianity? And, stranger still, that they should have a thousand years' jubilee over the graves of patriarchs, prophets, apostles, and martyrs! I cannot admit such a thought. It is inconsistent, irrational, absurd, and even revolting. Let the thought utterly perish! God's ways are not thus unequal. So far from this being true, it is expressly declared, that such shall have "part in the first resurrection, and reign with Christ a thousand years." Rev. xx. 4. This clearly identifies the reign of Christ with the millennium.

11. The voice of the Christian church is in favor of the identity of the millennium with the personal reign of Christ. To introduce any considerable part of the testimony that is at hand in proof of this, is not possible in this discourse. I can only present a few passages from the writings of different authors, which will exhibit the sentiments of the whole. Justyn Martyr, who flourished about thirty years after the death of the apostle John, thus testifies: "I, and as many as are orthodox Christians in all respects, do acknowledge, that there shall be a resurrection of the flesh, and a thousand years in Jerusalem, rebuilt, and adorned, and enlarged, as the prophets Ezekiel and Isaiah and others, attest!"—[Dialogue with Trypho, a Jew.]—The testimony of Irenæus is equally full and explicit with that of Justyn. He succeeded Pothinus as Bishop of Lyons, about A. D. 171, and was martyred in A. D. 202 or 208. He wrote, among other works, five books upon the Heresies of his times, which books are still extant. He speaks of St. John, the apostle, as having lived to the times of Trajan, of Polycarp, as a hearer of St. John, and of himself as a hearer of Polycarp. "For it is fitting that the just, rising at the appearing of God, should in the renewed state receive the promise of inheritance which God covenanted to the fathers, and should reign in it; and that then should come the final judgment. For in the same condition in which they have labored and been afflicted, and been tried by suffering in all sorts of ways, it is but just that in it they should receive the fruits of their suffering; so that where, for the love of God, they suffered death, there they should be brought to life again; and where they endured bondage, there also they should reign. For God is rich in all things, and all things are of him; and therefore I say it is becoming, that the creature being restored to its original beauty, should, without any impediment or drawback, be subject to the righteous. This the apostle makes manifest in the epistle to the Romans: 'For the expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God, &c. For the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.' The promise likewise of God which he made to Abraham decidedly confirms this; for he says, 'Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever.' Gen. xiii. 14, 15. And again, 'Arise, walk through the land in the length of it, and in the breadth of it, for I will give it unto thee.' Ver. 17. For Abraham received no inheritance in it,—not even a foot-breadth, but always was a stranger and a sojourner in it. And when Sarah, his wife, died, and the children of Heth offered to give him a piece of land for a burial place, he would not accept it, but purchased it, for four hundred pieces of silver, from Ephron, the son of Zohar the Hittite; staying himself on the promise of God, and being unwilling to seem to accept from man what God had promised to give him, saying to him, 'To thy seed will I give this land, from the great river of Egypt to the great river Euphrates.' Thus, therefore, as God promised to him the inheritance of the earth, and he received it not during the whole time he lived in it, it is necessary that he should receive it, together with his seed, that is, with such of them as fear God, and believe in him—in the resurrection of the just." Irenæus then goes on to show that Christ and the church are also of the true seed, and partakers of the promises, and concludes the chapter as follows: "Thus, therefore, those who are of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham; and the same are the children of Abraham. For God repeatedly promised the inheritance of the land to Abraham and his seed; and as neither Abraham nor his seed—that is, not those who are justified by faith—have enjoyed any inheritance in it, they will undoubtedly receive it at the resurrection of the just. For true and unchangeable is God: wherefore, also, he said, 'Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth.' " *

* Literalist, vol. IV., pp. 39—41.

The Nicene Council, convened in the year 325, composed of three hundred and eighteen Bishops, and representing the whole Christian church, put forth the following as an article of their faith: "The world was made inferior because of fore-knowledge: for God fore-knew that man would sin. Therefore, we expect New Heavens and a New Earth, according to the holy Scriptures; the Epiphany and kingdom of the Great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ, being then manifested to us. And as Daniel says, the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom. And the earth shall be pure and holy,—the land of the living and not of the dead."

As holding these views, we might give a list of such venerable names as Barnabas, Papias, Polycarp, St. Clement of Rome, Ignatius, Clement of Alexandria, St. Cyprian, St. Cyril, Tertullian, Methodius, Epiphanius, and many others in the early church; and, in the reformed church, such as Luther, Calvin, Tyndel, Mede, Bunyan, Dr. Gill, Sir Isaac Newton, Thomas Newton, Toplady, Wesley, Fletcher, Pirie, Cunninghame, Way, Hugh M'Neile, Croly, Burnet, and a host of others, that time would fail to mention. In fact, a careful examination of the views of the church since the apostles, must result in the conviction that the personal reign of Christ and the millennium were held to be identical, with great unanimity. Those views have not always been free from vagueness or grossness, but in the main they have accorded with the views here advanced. We may safely say, that the church, in her purest and best days, has cherished no other views, nor has she had any other expectation. The purer she has been, the freer from ambition for worldly distinction, honor, and applause, the less lustful for secular power and control; the more clear, strong, and decisive has been her testimony on this subject. And having the plainest and most direct declarations of Scripture, and the voice of the church with us, what additional testimony is needed? We shall seek for no other. We consider that the doctrine of the identity of the personal reign and the millenium is based on so immovable a basis as not to be shaken. It will stand when the modern dream of a spiritual millennial reign shall pass away and be forgotten.

—————"So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign,
Under her own weight groaning; till the day Appear of respiration to the just
And vengeance to the wicked; at return
Of him—thy Saviour and thy Lord;
Last in the clouds from heaven, to be revealed
In glory of the Father, to dissolve
Satan, with his perverted world; then raise
From the conflagrant mass, purged and refined,
New heavens, new earth, ages of endless date,
Founded in righteousness, and peace and love,
To bring forth fruits, joy and eternal bliss."

III. THE PREPARATORY EVENTS OF THAT REIGN.

These events have been more than hinted at in the previous remarks. They cannot well be mistaken in the light of the personal reign of Christ. If he is to reign personally, he is to come personally ; and, therefore, the events connected in Scripture with his coming, must be preparatory to his reign. And none can be mistaken as to these events. Those who believe in a personal coming, cannot be slow to believe that all the events associated in the Bible with that coming, will then take place. The Bible does not encourage us to expect but one more coming. It shows what will then take place. If, therefore, that last and final coming be to reign, all that will then occur will be preparatory to that reign. Having already proved, as we think satisfactorily, that the coming to be expected is to introduce a personal and endless reign, we need do little more than specify these events.

And one of these surely cannot be the restoration of the natural Jews. This is a favorite idea, a brilliant fancy, with many in these days. But the notion is too gross, too low, too repugnant to the Christian scheme, too contrary to the genius of the gospel, and too sensual in its tendency, to be regarded with favor by those whose vision of the true reign of the Messiah is clear and unclouded. The limits of this discourse will not admit of anything like an extended discussion of this subject. A passage or two, directly in point, must suffice. The prophecy constituting the text affords the most indisputable proof that there can be no restoration of the natural Jews before the coming of Christ. Their kingdom is to remain broken and prostrate until that time. There can, then, be no restoration in advance of that period. This is settled. And the apostle Peter, in addressing the Jews, a few days after Pentecost, presents to them the condition upon which they shall be entitled to share in the restoration when Christ comes. "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, who before was preached unto you: whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts iii. 19-21. Here we have the promise that Christ shall come to effect the restoration of the things spoken by the prophets, among which is the kingdom of Israel; and the condition upon which the Jews can share in it. The condition is repentance, not at, but before, the coming of Christ. When he comes he is to take "vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel." 2 Thess. i. 8. All unbelieving Jews, at his coming, will be of the latter class: they will not obey the gospel, the first precept of which requires faith in Christ. So it is plain, from the two scriptures, that the natural Jews are not to be restored before, or after, the coming of Christ. The kingdom to be restored, will be a holy kingdom, and none but holy persons will be subjects of it. All readers of the Bible should carefully distinguish between the conditional promises made to the natural, and the unconditional promises made to the spiritual Israel. For want of this distinction, many have erred, and persist in their error.

The destruction, and not the conversion of the wicked of the world, will be preparatory to that reign. This must follow as a certain consequence from a personal coming of Christ. That coming is everywhere represented, in the Scripture, as intended to close probation, and seal the fate of the world. It will be a judicial, and not a merciful coming—a coming as a Judge, and not as a Saviour—a coming in robes of vengeance, and not in those of salvation—a coming to destroy, and not to save the wicked. This is the uniform representation of Scripture. But we have express and multiplied declarations on the inspired pages, that, as preparatory to the reign of Christ, the wicked shall be destroyed. We can cite but few of these. “There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab, and destroy all the children of Sheth. Out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion, and shall destroy him that remaineth of the city.”

Soon after, it is added by the prophet,— “Alas, who shall live when God doeth this!”
 Numbers xxiv. 17, 19, 23. “Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion.” [This God says he will do, though the heathen and people, with their kings and rulers, conspire together to prevent it.] “Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession” [all that oppose his reign.]
*“Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron;
 thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter’s vessel.”* Ps. ii. 6, 8, 9. “And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth.
 And they shall be gathered together as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited. Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously.” Isaiah xxiv. 21—23. Christ says, when he returns with the kingdom, he will thus command respecting the opposers of his reign,—“But those mine enemies which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither and slay them before me.”
 Luke xix. 27. At the sounding of the seventh trumpet, when the reign of Christ is introduced, it is exclaimed by the elders in heaven,—“And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, * * * and that thou shouldest destroy them that destroy the earth." These texts, though a few of many touching this point, prove beyond all doubt that the overthrow and destruction of the enemies of God will be preparatory to the reign of Christ. I am aware that multitudes of good and benevolent Christians are hoping better things for the world; are hoping that the promised reign will be preceded by the conversion, and not the destruction of the world. This is a good hope in itself, but what is its foundation? What promise, what prophecy, what signs, what prospects justify it? Has God so spoken?—do the tendencies of things favor it?—do his providences indicate it? Look at the world at this advanced period—in this age of moral and religious enterprise—of high zeal and glowing hope of success—this age of light and truth, and great moral and religious tendencies—and what is there to encourage? What advances upon Satan's territory are made? What conquests achieved? Is it not a mournful fact, that, with all these advantages, the church does not keep pace, in her progress, with the increase of the world's population? No wonder that a minister of this city, in a recent missionary discourse, was constrained to say, "that, at this rate, it would take ages on ages to convert the world."* But what prospect of a better rate? God has not promised it, but predicted the reverse. The world will wax worse and worse till Christ come to reign. He will find it as it was in the days of Noah and Lot. Then those shall be destroyed that destroy the earth.

Another event will be, the resurrection of all who have died in faith, from the beginning of time. This event, also, as all must allow, is, in Scripture, connected with the personal coming. See 1 Cor. xv. 22, 23. 1 Thess. iv. 14—17. And in prophecy it is connected with Christ's reign. In Ezekiel xxxvii. 12, 13, it is said,—“Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves.” It is added, verses 24, 27, “And David my servant shall be king over them; and they shall have one Shepherd: they also shall walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes and do them. My tabernacle shall also be with them; yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people.” This cannot take place before Christ comes; for, 1. There is to be no restoration until that time. 2. By David, here, all understand Christ to be intended. 3. The tabernacle of God is not to be with men, until the new earth is created. See Rev. xxi. 3. The language, then, must denote a literal resurrection. When Michael (who is Christ) stands up to reign, according to Daniel xii. 1, 2, the resurrection is to occur. "And many that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Here, as in many cases in prophecy, two events, though to occur at different periods, are grouped together as though really connected. Subsequent revelations show their order as to time. Though this may be disputed, one thing must be clear, and that is all that is material in this case, that when Christ stands up to reign, the resurrection will take place. This the prophecy so declares. One other quotation must close the proof of this point. "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands, and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." Rev. xx. 4-6. No language could teach more plainly than this does, that the resurrection of the righteous dead will be preparatory to the reign of Christ. I am aware, that, to avoid our conclusion, this has been called a spiritual resurrection. To say nothing of the absurdity of such a view, let me inquire where the consistency is, in our opponents' explaining this language to mean a spiritual resurrection, and that used in the same chapter respecting the judgment, to mean a literal judgment? Why not both spiritual, if either? But we regard both as literal, and so, with great unanimity, have the whole church.

The last event to be considered, as preparatory to the expected reign, is the renewal of the earth and heavens. This clearly follows from previous positions. It is an event that is associated with the coming of Christ, and clearly implied in the resurrection. But positive proof is at hand. In connection with a description of the promised reign, and as preparatory to it, it is declared by Isaiah,—“The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly. The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it: and it shall fall and not rise again.” Isa. xxiv. 19, 20. “For, behold, I create new heavens, and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind.” Isa. lv.

17. The apostle Peter, as we have seen in another place, fixes the period of the fulfilment of this promise at the coming of Christ, and after the conflagration of the present heavens and earth. 2 Peter iii. 10—13. As his reign does not begin till his coming, it must be a preparatory event to it. And the Saviour has instructed us about the state and place of his reign, in Matt. xix. 28. "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, IN THE REGENERATION, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." His reign, then, is to be in the regeneration, or new earth. That promised earth is subjected to him. Heb. ii. 5. In it, with all the redeemed, will he reign forever and ever.

These are the more important events that are to precede, and prepare for, that reign. And are they not now upon us?

IV. THE PRIVILEGES AND ENJOYMENTS OF THAT REIGN.

As to these, who can adequately speak—who can properly conceive? It is much easier to tell what will not be there, than what will. So the Bible shows. Its descriptions of that state are mostly negative. When it touches positives, it has to be general. Little, then, can I say about its privileges and enjoyments. Only faint ideas can be had. And I wish first to observe, that, to have any idea of that state, approaching to correctness, the hearer should associate with it, in his mind, all that he has ever conceived that was beautiful, lovely, blissful, and glorious in the heavenly state. That will be the saints' heaven! All the beauty, glory, and joy, you ever thought of in connection with heaven, and much more, will centre there. The new earth will bloom with far more than its original freshness and loveliness. It will rise, purged and refined, from the conflagrant mass. It will be a world of immortality. The ills of a mortal sinful state shall be unknown there. All its inhabitants shall be like the angels, being children of the resurrection. "But they that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world (the new earth) and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Luke xx. 35, 36. Death shall have no place there—disease shall not riot there—pain shall not afflict there—separation shall not be known there—nor sorrow felt there. No tears shall fall there—no wants pinch there—no trials annoy there. In that world, there shall be no Satan to tempt—no wicked to molest—no fallen flesh to seduce. There, friends shall greet each other—there, the saints of all ages and climes, shall be brought into holy familiarity and perfect communion. There shall be the New Jerusalem, shining in its refulgent glory, and there the throne of God and the Lamb. And there shall be the river of life—the tree of life, with its monthly fruits, to heal the nations. There, in short, WILL BE HEAVEN!

“Behold the measure of the promise filled;
 See Salem built, the labor of a God!
 Bright as a sun the sacred city shines.
 All kingdoms, and all princes of the earth
 Flock to that light; the glory of all lands
 Flows into her; unbounded is her joy,
 And endless her increase—
 Praise is in all her gates. Upon her walls,
 And in her streets, and in her spacious courts,
 Is heard salvation. * * *
 * * * Her report has travelled forth
 Into all lands. From every clime they come
 To see thy beauty, and to share thy joy,
 Oh Zion! An assembly such as earth Saw never, such as heaven stoops down to see!”

V. THE EVIDENCES THAT THAT REIGN IS ABOUT TO BEGIN.

We now come to the feature of the system the most serious and difficult,—the feature the most opposed. It may justly be called the offensive point. For our views of time, though candidly and honestly cherished, and, in most cases, modestly put forth, we have suffered all kinds of reproach, and have been most unscrupulously traduced and misrepresented. All sorts of objections are made to them. Our attention is frequently turned, by our opposers, to the fearful results and tremendous evils of the system, if it shall, as they are confident it will, prove untrue. We are everywhere, and by almost all, assured, that the certain result will be a great increase of ungodliness, and a vast multiplication of sceptics. So common is the charge that we are making infidels, that it has come to be regarded as so evident as to need no proof. The charge comes from the pulpit, the press,—from the professor's chair, the clerical council, the church-member,—from the pious and profane. All have heard it,—all repeat it. It is the short argument, the all-powerful weapon against the system. It is deemed sufficient to set aside all reasoning, however clear, logical or cogent; to disprove all proofs, however direct or demonstrative; to annihilate all facts, however generally acknowledged or well attested; and to strip the most remarkable and ominous signs now developing, of all their significance and import. We may cite, in proof of our views, and in justification of our hopes, the prophets of the Old and New Testaments; the fathers of the church and of the Reformation; the Protestant expositors of the Old and New World; and the extraordinary signs that mark and identify the present period—but to no purpose. "It will make infidels," is the ready and sufficient answer. Assuming that the system is false, and that consequently it will fail; and assuming that its failure will greatly increase the number of errorists, they deem themselves justified in using all sorts of methods in opposing it. It would seem that the popish principle, that the end sanctifies the means, has come to be looked upon as a true principle of Christian action. Learning, wit, authority, traduction, misrepresentation, and ridicule, have done their utmost. From the theological professor and highest church dignitary, down to the obscurest country preacher, the system has had to suffer an exposure and overthrow. But it behooves all to look well to the grounds on which, and the means by which, the doctrine has been sought to be put down. The principles arrayed against the system, though hastily put forth and advocated to meet a specific form of alleged error, are not to be forgotten or cease to have an existence when the system shall have its catastrophe, as it is said it will shortly have. Those principles, on the supposition that we fail, will work an important revolution in the religious and theological views, hopes, encouragements and prospects of the church. Indeed, a new era has already commenced in prophetic exposition and biblical interpretation. Old and long-settled principles have been abandoned; the most undisputed and generally received views have been relinquished; and new views and principles hastily adopted, and urged with all the zeal and vehemence which a high determination to accomplish an end alone could supply. In fact, in many cases, positions of great and vital importance in sentiment, have been changed,—so that the opposers of this system find themselves in sweet and delightful fellowship and in the most cordial coöperation with those whom, heretofore, they have regarded as the most dangerous and hurtful errorists. And hence it behooves all to open their eyes, and see who are making the infidels. And more especially should they do it as they are confident that we shall fail, and time will continue, and that existing causes will continue to operate to make error as destructive of the souls of men as it has always been. If our system prove true, the errors opposed to it will soon cease to injure and ruin. All the evil they will do, will be confined to those who now cherish and practise them. If the Lord shall soon come, their evil influence can be but a little longer felt. He will cut it short abruptly. But not so, on the other hypothesis. The systems now advocated, the theories now advanced, will continue to mould the sentiments, and shape the practice, and decide the doom of millions, while time lasts. If the errors would cease when the hated system should receive by time its explosion, as such predict it will, less caution would be necessary. But so they will not.

I shall now present a brief statement of facts and evidences, to show that we are sustained in our views on this subject, by the plain teaching of the Scriptures, and the first and most judicious expositors of the church; and also to show that our leading opponents disregard that teaching, turn their backs on their expositors, and take positions favoring the three great errors—Infidelity, Romanism, and Universalism.

And I need only to allude to the views of but one of our opponents, as he has given character, shape and tone to the opposition. I refer to Professor Stuart, of Andover. The views thrown out in his "Hints," are, in different forms, the only ones opposed to us with any success. He, in the main, represents the whole host of the opposition. To present his views, therefore, will, in the main, be furnishing those of the whole class.

I have read the book of the Professor with much care and attention. I read it both before and since I embraced the doctrine of the Lord's speedy coming. The author's standing, the subject, a desire to furnish myself with something adequate to arrest the progress of the Second Advent heresy, prompted me to a first perusal. I have read it since, that I might be the more certain of the correctness of the impressions first produced. I had long desired Stuart to speak. I had seen, with mortification, the utter futility and puerility of the attempts of others to put down the views. Dowling had written speciously, yet unfairly, and therefore without great effect; Smith had written sneeringly; Cambell feebly; Bush paradoxically; the Universalists bitterly; all ineffectually. From Stuart, a different work was expected; a work characterized with such coolness and cogency of reasoning, with such biblical and historical research, such ability and learning in prophetic exposition, as to carry conviction to all who could be affected by rational means. I remember I felt a secret delight when the work was put into my hands, believing, as I did, that it constituted the antidote desired. But how different my view, after a partial examination! It was, indeed, learned, cool, dignified in its style, and excellent in some of its parts; but its leading positions were so startling, so irrational, and so fraught with sceptical consequences, and its inconsistencies were so marked and glaring, that I closed the book with shame, mortification and disgust. Verily, I thought the wise had become mad. I had not a credulity that would admit of such a straining as would be necessary, to adopt such positions. And the thought of their being generally adopted, was truly alarming. I was bound to believe, from a knowledge of the circumstances, that Stuart had done his best. He had surveyed the whole field of prophetic interpretation; had an accurate knowledge of all the theories which had been advanced and advocated on the subject of prophecy; was aware of all the efforts that had been made to explode the system of Mr.

Miller; and had in his possession all the means which the learned world could furnish, for the construction of an exegetical work. Under such circumstances, with such means, and addressing himself to such a work, what should we expect of the ripest scholar of the age? We should dishonor the Professor to say, that he only intended to make a common effort. The time, the subject, the means, the man, all uncommon; and should we expect a hasty, unmaturing, by-the-way sort of an effort? We should rather look for his ripest, best matured, and most fully-digested thoughts. Having the collected wisdom and knowledge of all that had written before him on the prophecies, and knowing the demands of the time, we should expect he would bring out the most able, plausible and tenable system of which he was capable. And that he has, every one may be assured. He has called to his aid all that could give him aid; and we have the results in his "Hints." And what are they? Truth, candor, and faithfulness demand that I say, a compound of Papacy, Neology, and Universalism. This will be shown, after we have given a synoptical view of the books of Daniel and John, the only calendars of the Christian.

The book of Daniel naturally divides itself into three parts,—historical, prophetic, and expository. Six of the chapters are properly history, three are prophecy, and three expository.

tory! And, it should be added, that there is more or less history and exposition in all the prophetic chapters. This arrangement is made to give the main features of the several chapters. The second, seventh, and eighth chapters are prophetic, the ninth, eleventh, and twelfth are expository. The tenth I have classed with the historical chapters, and yet it does not strictly belong with them; as it is but a preface to the last two expository chapters. All must admit that the same space of time and events are covered by the exposition, which are covered by the prophecy. We only need, then, to inquire, how extensive the field embraced in the prophecy? The prophecy claims to cover the whole field of the future. "The great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter: and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure." Dan. ii. 45. The method of making this known to the king is here stated. It was by a dream, in which he saw a metallic image, whose form was terrible,—the head of which was gold, his breast and arms of silver, his belly and thighs of brass, his legs of iron, and his feet part of iron and part of clay. He saw till a stone was cut out without hands, and smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and broke them to pieces; and then was the whole broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors, and the wind carried them away, and there was no place found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain and filled the whole earth. Daniel, in his interpretation, tells Nebuchadnezzar that this was to show him the number, character, changes, and destiny of the universal kingdoms that should bear sway over the earth; and these should be five in number, four of them earthly and oppressive, represented by the image, to be succeeded by God's everlasting kingdom, symbolized by the stone. This covers the whole space of the future. Those kingdoms rising successively, and the earthly kingdoms extending in duration to a certain point, and then followed by the everlasting kingdom of God, would, as all can see, fill the whole field of the future. And we are not left in ignorance as to what kingdoms were represented by the image. The king is told by Daniel that the first is his kingdom, the Babylonian; the fifth chapter teaches us that this was succeeded by the Medo-Persian; the eighth, that this should be followed by the Grecian; the ninth speaks of the people of the prince that should come, and destroy the city and sanctuary,—evidently meaning the Romans. And history shows that these were the kingdoms meant.

In the seventh chapter, we are told that Daniel had a vision, in which he saw these same kingdoms, under the symbols of four wild beasts. And the last kingdom was followed by the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven, the judgment, and everlasting kingdom of God. But the instruction of this vision is more in detail, that one fact might be explained; viz., the unusually long continuance of the fourth kingdom. This is accounted for by showing that it would exist in two distinct forms, and pass through several changes. The terrible beast representing this kingdom, seen in the vision, first appears to the view of Daniel having ten horns. Then is seen a little horn coming up among them, and three of the first falling before it. And this horn had a look more stout than his fellows, had eyes as the eyes of a man, and a mouth that spake great words against the Most High, and wore out the saints of the Most High, and thought to change times and laws; and the saints were given into his hands for a time, times, and the dividing of a time; and he made war against them and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of days came, and the time came for the saints to possess the kingdom. We have here the same space of time covered as in Nebuchadnezzar's vision, with more particularity of description and detail. We have the four kingdoms, the fourth in its two forms, the judgment, the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven, the giving of the body of the last beast to the burning flame, and the possession of the kingdom by the saints. And we have instruction as to the time of the dominion of the papal horn, as that is evidently the power intended in the time, times and dividing of time, or one thousand two hundred and sixty years. But as that dominion was not to extend quite to the end, the chain was not long enough to measure the whole time. Another vision therefore was necessary.

This was had, as we are told in the eighth chapter. In this vision, there is no symbol for the first kingdom, as that was about to be superseded. The three succeeding are represented by a ram, goat, and a horn, little at its beginning, but waxing exceeding great toward the south, east, and pleasant land; and waxed great even to the host of heaven, and cast down some of the host and stars to the ground and stamped upon them; and magnified itself to the prince of the host, took away the daily sacrifice, and cast down the place of his sanctuary; and cast the truth to the ground, and practised and prospered. We have the highest authority for believing that this horn represents the Roman kingdom in its pagan and papal forms. The symmetry of the vision requires this; the prophetic description shows it. The length of the vision was asked by one, and given by another,—two thousand three hundred days. That was to be the end of indignation, or the termination of the reign of earthly powers. Then the sanctuary was to be cleansed, or, which is the same thing, the kingdom possessed by the saints. But more instruction as to this time, especially its commencement, was necessary.

And it was given at the very time when it was needed. Daniel, about the time of the expiration of the seventy years of captivity, began to pray, overlooking the vision of the two thousand three hundred days, for the same thing promised at the end of those days. Gabriel is despatched immediately, and told to fly swiftly, to correct the error of Daniel, and give him farther instruction as to the time appointed, especially its commencement. He turns his attention to the matter of prayer, and the vision of two thousand three hundred days. He divides the long period, and gives some of the more important events of a religious character that would occur, or those that would more particularly concern Daniel. He instructs him that seventy weeks, or four hundred and ninety years, are cut off for his people and city, to finish the transgression and make an end of sins, to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and seal up the vision and prophecy, and anoint the Most Holy. He wishes him to be particular and understand when the period should begin, at the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem. From that point, he assures him, unto Messiah the Prince, there should be sixty-nine weeks—four hundred and eighty-three years. After that he should be cut off, having confirmed the covenant with many for one week. Gabriel then carries his mind down to the destruction of Jerusalem, and over a long period of desolation to the "consummation," when that which is determined shall be poured upon the desolator, or Roman power. So it is plain that the instruction of the ninth chapter covers the whole field of the prophecy. But it is confined to the religious events that were to transpire.

In the tenth chapter, he comes again, and announces his design, to make Daniel understand what shall befall his people in the latter days. Verse 14. He then begins with the power then reigning, and gives a detailed account of the successive reigns to the time the last power is broken without hand. Then, he says, Michael shall stand up to reign, and there shall be a time of trouble such as there never was since there was a nation to that time, but all shall be delivered who are found written in the book; the resurrection shall take place, and the wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and those who have turned many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever. Daniel is then instructed to shut up and seal the book, until the time of the end. At that time, he is assured, the wise shall understand. But before the close of the chapter, he has two other numbers given him, to enable him to determine the rise as well as duration of the papal dominion, and the period when he shall stand in his lot in the kingdom promised. This brings us again to the end. So we are carried over this same field three times in the prophecy, and twice in the exposition.

Taking this view of the prophecy, what a book does it become! Grasping a period so vast; stretching over limits so broad; fore-showing, with such accuracy and fulness of detail, the rise, order, character, and destiny of the mightiest kingdoms of earth; foretelling, with such exactness and precision, events so note-worthy and distinguishing as the first and second advent of the Messiah, and the periods and accompanying events of those advents, and then unfolding to view the immortal state—it becomes a book of the highest importance and interest. As a prophetic book, it is incomparable. It gives us an accurate account of the whole road and distance yet to be travelled, as well as those already passed over. It brings to view, and in their order, the great events of thousands of years! It stops not with the changes and events of time; it extends onward to eternity, and affords a view of the scenes of that world! This being the scope and field of the prophecy, its value and interest to the church cannot be estimated.

The Apocalypse, or Revelation, in its prophetic portion, embraces the period of the last or Roman kingdom, from the time John had his vision to the time of its destruction, and gives us, with more minuteness and detail than Daniel, the religious and political events to occur to the end; and it then furnishes us with a most glowing description of the happy and blissful state succeeding the downfall of the last kingdom, the destruction of the wicked, the confinement of Satan, and the renewal of the earth and heavens. That this is the field it covers, the book itself will show. "Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, AND THE THINGS WHICH SHALL BE HEREAFTER." Chap. i. 19. As the book has, then, properly three parts, the prophetic portion constitutes the third part, being confined to the things that should be thereafter. And, written as it was during the supremacy of the Roman kingdom, and under the first form of it, we should necessarily conclude that it would cover the whole time of its existence, and fill up the outlines furnished by the more comprehensive prophecy of Daniel, and give us more in detail respecting the manner of its destruction, and afford us a fuller and more definite view of the state and glory of the kingdom to follow. All of this it does. It takes us several times over the whole field, and gives us as many views of the different classes of events which were to take place during the period; presents the Roman kingdom in its two distinctive forms, with the proper numbers showing the limits of its duration; describes its rage, opposition, bloody persecution, and fearful destruction of the saints; and then shows the manner of its overthrow, succeeded by a description of the glory that will follow.

Now all are ready to admit, that if this is a correct view of the field of prophecy, and the points and lengths of the prophetic numbers, there can be no mistake as to the legitimacy and correctness of our conclusions. But in all that is essential in the above view, we have with us the highest and most respected authorities of the whole church. In fact, in almost every point raised by our opponents, we have been supported by the expositors. In the very few instances in which we have not their direct support, we have their general views and reasonings to sustain us, and the direct testimony of some of the first and most judicious of their number. This I will proceed to show.

Seven points of doubt or dissent have been raised, in reference to the above view, by our opponents. These points I will specify. 1. The fourth kingdom of Daniel. 2. The little horn of the seventh chapter. 3. The little horn of the eighth. 4. The length of the prophetic periods. 5. The commencement of the seventy weeks. 6. The connection between the seventy weeks and 2300 days. 7. The rise of the little horn of the seventh. These, so far as I know, are the only points of doubt or dissent involved in the system we advocate. If we are sustained in these by the best and highest authorities of the religious world, all must see that the system does not rest on slight or insufficient grounds. And, as it respects the first five points, it can hardly be questioned that we have nearly the whole Protestant world with us. An admission of Prof. Stuart implies as much as this. He admits that the custom of reckoning days as the representatives of years, among the interpreters of the Old and New world, is almost universal. (Hints, p. 74.) This concession is valuable for more than one purpose. It may involve more than appears at first view. If the interpreters of the Protestant world are with us, as to the method of computing prophetic time, they are as to the leading features of the prophecy. This will follow as a matter of necessity. The question of the length of the prophetic numbers must depend in a great measure on the extent of the prophetic field, or the character and importance of prophetic events. If, for instance, the little horn of the seventh of Daniel be intended to represent Papacy, and not Antiochus, the time, times, and the dividing of time, or 1260 days, the period during which the saints were to be in his hands, cannot mean so many literal days, but so many years. This all will admit. So of the little horn of the eighth. If Rome in its compound pagan and papal form, be meant, and not Antiochus, the 2300 days, all will admit, must mean so many years. So the question as to the length of the prophetic numbers, is one of fundamental importance in the system of interpretation. It has a vast bearing upon the character, and import, and importance of prophecy. The literal system of interpreting these numbers, or the system that teaches that a day in prophecy means but a day, changes the whole character of prophecy, and diminishes it in importance, value, dignity, and extent of scope, just as much as the difference between 2300 literal days and the same number of years! To shorten the prophetic numbers, the prophecy needs to be correspondingly cut down! The field is reduced, to answer to the chain that is to measure it! This is the alarming result of the new system of interpretation. The whole is a paring, frittering, reducing process. It strips the prophecy of its dignity, solemnity, importance, and glory. It leaves it valueless—as empty as a sound. These day expositors can see nothing beyond a day—the events they interpret are all of a day! The measure of the importance of prophecy is the measure of a man, that is, of Antiochus! The question, then, respecting the length of prophetic time, is one of great moment. Much hangs upon its decision. And yet a decision of this question must involve a decision as to the extent of the field covered by the prophecy. They are of necessity dependent on each other. And, of consequence, those who are with us as to the length of prophetic time, are with us as to the general field embraced in the prophecy. It is true, that, among such, there is a difference as to the application of some particular parts of the prophecy, but not as to the extent of field it covers. Some of the old writers applied the prophecy relating to the little horn of the seventh and eighth of Daniel, to Antiochus, but only in the sense of a type of the Antichrist to come. This, though a mistaken application, did not affect their views as to the field embraced in the prophecy, or the length of the prophetic numbers.

Now, as we have, according to the concession of Prof. Stuart, the Protestant church with us as to the method of computing prophetic time, they must be equally with us as it respects the meaning and general scope of the prophecy. And this is not left to an inference from an admission. The testimony of the highest authorities of the religious world, will show how fully we are sustained in the points specified.

1. The fourth kingdom of Daniel. This we claim to be the Roman. In this view we have the support of the ablest and most judicious expositors of every age. William Cunninghame, Esq., of England, an eminent expositor, in speaking of the four parts of the great image of the dream of Nebuchadnezzar, says, that they "are respectively applied by Daniel himself to four kingdoms, which have, by the unanimous voice of the Jewish and Christian churches, for more than eighteen centuries, been identified with the empires of Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome." Should this be questioned, the witnesses are abundant. In the Jewish Church, we have the Targum of Jonathan Ben Uzziel, Josephus, and the whole modern synagogue, including the names of Abarbanal, Kimchi, David Levi, and others. In the Christian Church, such as Barnabas, Irenaeus, Chrysostom, Cyril of Jerusalem in his catechism, Jerome, and according to him, all ecclesiastical writers, Hyppolitus and Lactantius, in the early ages; since the Reformation, Luther, Calvin, Mede, T. H. Horne,* Sir Isaac Newton, Bishop Newton, Dr. Hales, Scott, Clarke, Brown,† Watson,‡ Bishop Lloyd, Daubuz, Brightman, Faber, Noel, Dr. Hopkins, and we might add, almost every biblical expositor of any note in the Protestant church, if we except a few who have written in our own country within a year or two. And it is quite needless to add, that those who make this application of the four parts of the image, have no difficulty in making a like application of the four beasts of Daniel seventh. The remarkable similarity of the two visions requires this.

2. The little horn of the seventh. This we hold to be Papacy. This is no novel view of that symbol, being, as it is, the view of the whole Protestant world. See Dr. Clarke's Noel, Prospects of the Church of Christ, p. 100, William Cunninghame, Esq., Political Dest. of the Earth, p. 28, Mede, Newton, Scott, Daubuz, Hurd, Jurieu, Vitringa, Fleming, Lowman, and numerous others of our best standard expositors.

3. The little horn of the eighth chapter, that became EXCEEDING GREAT. This we believe to be Rome. Such was also the opinion of Horne,* Vol. 4, p. 191, Sir Isaac Newton, Bishop Newton, Dr. Hales, Martin Luther, Dr. Prideaux, Dr. Clarke, Dr. Hopkins, Wm. Cunninghame, and others. In addition to these, almost all the old writers, who applied it to Antiochus Epiphanes, did so only as the type of Rome, where they looked for the Antichrist. St. Cyril, Bishop of Jerusalem, in the fourth century, said, "This, the predicted Antichrist, will come when the times of the (Pagan) Roman empire shall be fulfilled, and the consummation of the world approach. Ten kings of the Romans shall rise together, in different places indeed, but they shall reign at the same time. Among these, the 11th is Antichrist, who, by magical and wicked artifices, shall seize the Roman power."

* We here give a remark of this standard author: "Sir Isaac Newton, Bishop Newton, and Dr. Hales, have clearly shown that the Roman power, and no other, is intended; for, although some of the particulars may agree very well with that king, (Antiochus,) yet others can by no means be reconciled to him; while all of them agree and correspond exactly with the Romans; and with no other power."

4. The length of the prophetic numbers. On this, little proof need be offered, as there is probably no point on which Protestant commentators have been so well agreed, as that the days in Daniel and John are representatives of so many years. Faber, Prideaux, Mede, Clarke, Scott, the two Newtons, Wesley, and almost every expositor of note, have considered this a settled question. Indeed, so universal has been this interpretation of these periods, that Professor Stuart says, in his Hints, p. 74, "IT IS A SINGULAR FACT THAT THE GREAT MASS OF INTERPRETERS in the English and American world, have, for many years, been wont to understand the days designated in Daniel and the Apocalypse, as the representatives or symbols of years. I have found it difficult to trace the origin of this GENERAL, I might say ALMOST UNIVERSAL CUSTOM."

5. The commencement of the seventy weeks. These we believe commenced with the decree of Artaxerxes Longimanus, to restore and build Jerusalem, according to Ezra seventh, B. C. 457. This has, also, long been considered by commentators to be a settled point; and it probably would not now be disputed, were it not for a desire to avoid the conclusion to which it brings us, on the supposition that it is the beginning of the 2300 days. On so settled a point as this, we need only mention such names as Horne, (see Int., vol. 1, p. 336, vol. 4, p. 191,) Prideaux, (see Connection, pp. 227—256,) Clarke, (see Notes on ninth Daniel,) Watson, (Théol. Dic., p. 96,) William Howel, LL. D., (Int. of Gen. His., vol. 1, p. 209,) Scott, and Cunninghame.

The two remaining points are those, which, among that class of our opponents who in the main agree with us in the preceding, are the most seriously questioned, and respecting which less light is afforded by biblical expositors. And yet in our views of these we are sustained by the general views and reasonings of many expositors, and by the direct testimony of the most able writers.

6. The connection between the 2300 days and the seventy weeks. This connection we think plain, and in proving it we are much aided by the learned world. This aid is furnished both directly and indirectly—a few plainly testifying to the fact of the connection—the many affording us one of the most decisive arguments proving it. The argument is based upon the literal meaning of the Hebrew word, which, in our version of Daniel ix. 24, is rendered “determined.” That the word means literally, cut off, or cut out, we have the highest authority. This fact, viewed in the light of the circumstances in which Gabriel appeared to Daniel, as stated in the ninth chapter, and the instruction given, must be decisive proof of the connection between the two periods. Daniel had had a vision before this time, reaching to the time of the cleansing of the sanctuary. This he was told would be at the end of 2300 days. At the time Gabriel appeared to him, he was earnestly praying for the restoration of his people, and the cleansing of the sanctuary, having previously ascertained from books that the seventy years of captivity had expired. The angel, having received orders to fly swiftly, appeared to Daniel, and stopped him in the midst of his prayer, and gave him further instruction. He directed him to "understand the matter, and CONSIDER THE VISION." A reference to that would teach him that the object of his prayer could not then be granted, the end of the 2300 days being far in the future. The angel then assured him that seventy weeks were cut off for his people and city, during which time Jerusalem should be rebuilt, with the walls, and at the end of which an atonement should be made for sin by the death of Messiah; and after that the city and sanctuary should be destroyed, and remain desolate until the consummation or completion of the time, and that which was determined should be poured upon the desolate. Now, as this was evidently an explanation of the vision of the 2300 days, and as the seventy weeks were cut off from, or out of, it; and as the instruction of Gabriel reached beyond the termination of those weeks, to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and onward, during a long period of desolation, to the consummation or completion; the inference seems irresistible that the seventy weeks are not only a part of the 2300 days, but the first part of them. This being so, the commencement of the two periods must be the same. But I will here allude to authorities for thus rendering the word. It will not be too much for me to say, that this is nearly or quite a settled point among the best scholars. In an old work, entitled, "A six-fold commentary on Daniel," published in London, A. D. 1608, I observe it is rendered cut out.

Dr. Gill, a distinguished divine and scholar, thus renders the word, and quotes many of the first critics, who agree with him.

Hengstenberg, who enters into a critical examination of the original text, says,—“But the very use of the word, which does not elsewhere occur, while others, much more frequently used, were at hand, if Daniel had wished to express the idea of determination, and of which he has elsewhere, and even in this portion, availed himself; seems to argue, that the word stands, from regard to its original meaning, and represents the seventy weeks in contrast with a determination of time (en platei) as a period cut off from subsequent duration, and accurately limited.”

Christology of the Old Test., vol. 2., p. 301. Washington, 1839.

Gesenius, in his Hebrew Lexicon, gives cut off as the definition of the word; and many others of the first standing, as to learning and research. And, besides, several versions have thus rendered the word.* And we might add, that this is admitted to be the true rendering of the word, by our best Hebrew contemporaries, such as Bush and Seixas, though opposed to our views.

We also have the direct testimony of *A Hebrew scholar, of high reputation, makes the following remarks upon the word which is translated "determined," in our version.—The verb chathak (in the Niphal form, passive, nechtak) is found only in Daniel ix. 24. Not another instance of its use can be traced in the entire Hebrew Testament. As Chaldaic and Rabbinical usage must give us the true sense of the word; if we are guided by these, it has the single signification of CUTTING, or CUTTING OFF. In the Chaldaeo-Rabbinic Dictionary of Stockius, the word "chathak" is thus defined:

"Scidit, absceidit, conscidit, inscidit, excidit"—To cut, to cut away, to cut in pieces, to cut or engrave, to cut off.

Mercerus, in his "Thesaurus," furnishes a specimen of Rabbinical usage in the phrase chāthikah shelbasar—"a piece of flesh," or "a cut of flesh." He translates the word as it occurs in Dan. ix. 24, by "præcisa est"—WAS CUT OFF.

In the literal version of Arias Montanus, it is translated "decisa est,"—WAS CUT OFF; in the marginal reading, which is grammatically correct, it is rendered by the plural, "decisæ sunt"—were cut off.

In the Latin version of Junius and Tremellius, nechtak is rendered "decisæ sunt"—were cut off.

Again, in Theodotion's Greek version of Daniel, (which is the version used in the Vatican copy of the Septuagint as being the most faithful,) it is rendered by συτεμήθησαν, "were cut off," and in the Venetian copy by τεμήθησαν, "have been cut." The idea of cutting off is pursued in the Vulgate; where the phrase is "abbreviatae sunt," have been shortened.

Thus Chaldaic and Rabbinical authority, and that of the earliest versions, the Septuagint and Vulgate, give the SINGLE SIGNIFICATION OF CUTTING OFF TO THIS VERB."

Prof. Bush, the learned Joseph Wolfe, and others of our day, that the seventy weeks are a part, and the first part, of the two thousand three hundred days. Dr. Wilson, of Cincinnati, who is the highest authority in the Presbyterian church, in a recent discourse "On cleansing the Sanctuary," says,—“I undertake to show—that Daniel’s ‘seventy weeks’ is the beginning, or first part of the ‘two thousand three hundred days,’ allotted for the cleansing of the sanctuary: that Daniel’s ‘time, times, and a half’ is the last or concluding part of the two thousand three hundred days.” This may be deemed sufficient on this point.

7. The rise of the little horn of Daniel seventh. We believe that Papacy, symbolized by the little horn, rose by virtue of the decree of Justinian, and not that of Phocas, or any other ruler, or power. This decree, though issued A. D. 533, did not, as we conceive, go into full effect until 538, when the enemies of the Catholics in Rome were subjugated by Belisarius, a general of Justinian. In this view, as to the rise of Papacy, we are sustained by Croly, (see his work on Apoc., pp. 113—117;) G. T. Noel, (see Prospects of Ch., p. 100;) Wm. Cunninghame, Esq. (Pol. Destiny of the Earth, p. 28;) Keith, Vol. 1, p. 93; Encyclopedia of Rel. Knowl., art. Antichrist; Edward King, Esq., and others.

It is thus we are sustained, in the views we cherish, by the plain teaching of the prophetic pages, and by the highest authorities of the religious world. In all the points that are disputed, we have the sure word of prophecy to guide us, and the best of human authority to sustain us. This fact will put to blush the accuser, who charges us with holding novel, fanatical, and heretical views. Let him thus charge the high authorities quoted above—men of the most distinguished talent and extensive learning, the brightest ornaments of the church, and the best standard expositors. With them, in the path of truth, we feel we shall not suffer.

In the light of what has been shown, to what conclusion are we necessarily brought? If we are right in the points considered, the conclusion is not to be resisted that the end is at hand. If we are not mistaken as to the extent of the prophetic field, the length of prophetic time, and the dates from which to reckon such time, all must concede that the present period is that which is to witness the grand termination of all earthly things. And the Christian world assure us, that, in the main points, we cannot be mistaken. As to particular dates, we have such high authority, such light from the prophetic pages, such confirmation from the events of Providence and the characteristics of the present times, as to give foundation and strength to our faith. We must, in all honesty, believe, in view of the accumulating evidences around us, and the prophetic declarations before us, that the reign of Christ, long looked for and desired, is near at hand. May it be hastened !

Now this prophecy has been fulfilled, or is to be, or it has failed. To say it has failed, is to be infidel ; to say it has been fulfilled in events and circumstances far inferior to those the language would warrant us to expect, is to be scarcely less so ; and to say that it is to be fulfilled, without being able to show, from the book itself, that there is yet ground to expect it after so long a delay, is hardly to rescue the prophecy from the hands of infidels. And it might with equal justice be added, that so to interpret the prophecy as to turn away its force from the prominent systems of error now prevalent, is to favor and countenance those systems. In the light of these facts, where does the learned Stuart stand ? A few references to his book will show. A review of that book, will not, in this discourse, be expected ; a mere glance at its general character, is all that time will allow. It is not his to do small things—his is the work of a Hercules ! It is not his to meddle with the flaws and foibles of systems, but to show how readily he can demolish the works of generations ! Intoxicated by German literature, driven on by mingled ambition and a desire to check the prevalence of a hated system, he dashes on through his book, regardless of the work of ruin and havoc he effects ! That we may of six years and a fourth! Its importance is to be measured by the acts of a single Syrian prince! The destruction of the little horn, the burning of the fourth beast, the coming of the Son of man with the clouds of heaven, the judgment, the time for the saints to possess the kingdom, the cleansing of the sanctuary, the end of indignation, the standing up of Michael to reign, the time of trouble, the deliverance of those written in the book, the resurrection, the standing of Daniel in his lot, and the shining of the wise as the brightness of the firmament, and those who turned many to righteousness as the stars, all took place at the death of that prince, in 164 B. C.!! This is the result to which the work conducts us. But how poor his success in making the stubborn prophecy conform to his principle! In applying the prominent symbols of Daniel to that prince, with the periods given, he PRESUMES the application is nearly just—statistical exactness not being expected. (See pp. 88, 89, 122.) But how plain it must be to all, that this method of interpreting, or rather misinterpreting, this book, so long the Christian's Calendar, makes it the sport of infidels, and gives it over to Romanism, and other kindred systems of error and iniquity.

And then he comes to the Apocalypse. And what havoc there! Consistency required that he should carry out his principle with respect to that book, though the task was more difficult. After diligent search, he finds a hero for the Apocalypse—it is Nero! He then has space sufficiently narrow to admit of the use of his measure. But he does not stop to inquire, or even to notice, the date of the book; which, of itself, would have been enough to have arrested him in his progress. The weight of authority, he well knows, is in favor of fixing the date of that book as it is in our large Bibles, viz., 96. The testimony of nearly all the early writers favors this date.* If this is the correct date, the hero of the Apocalypse had been dead nearly thirty years before it was written! It cannot be that this book foretold things that had passed! But this point is not noticed by the Professor. He assumes that it was written before Nero's time, and applies the larger portion of the book to him and his successors, who finally destroyed Jerusalem. All that has, by Protestants, been applied to papacy, he makes symbolical of Nero! The coming of Christ, so often mentioned in the book, he construes to be his coming for the destruction of Jerusalem!—And thus does he aid, most effectually, the three great errors specified: Infidelity, by adopting Neological principles of exposition, and, consequently, making very little of the prophecies: Papacy, by uniting with the Romish interpreters, and attempting to take from Protestants their most effectual weapon against that system: Universalism, by surrendering to its adherents those portions of the Scripture we have used the most effectually against them. And it should be observed, that the supporters and advocates of these systems of error, begin to be sensible of the efficient aid rendered them by the Professor. Already do they claim him as an accession to their number. This is more particularly true, with respect to the supporters of the last system named. They hesitate not, in their several papers, to speak of him as a convert to their views, and as a powerful ally of their cause.* And the adherents of the other systems are not unaware of his position, or insensible to the value of his services, though they have not made so public a manifestation of their gratification.

And now what have we left us, according to the views of our opponent, on which to rest our faith, and by which to be guided and cheered, as to the future? We are out upon the ocean of the world, in a moonless and starless night, without rudder, compass,

* A Universalist periodical, published in Connecticut, thus speaks of him :

"We have often had occasion to note the progress which is manifestly going on in the mind of this world-famous theologian. We are certainly not wrong in the opinion that, for several years, his views have been growing liberal, more enlarged.

*** He is casting off, with a giant's strength, the trammels of Calvinistic theology, and making his way into the liberty and light of a broader and better faith. We find evidences of it in every work which comes from his pen. We are not sure that Stuart is yet a Universalist in his views of the Divine government, but there are many passages in his writings which seem strongly to indicate that he is not far from the kingdom of God."

or chart ! And when we apply to our masters for information respecting our position, direction, and progress to the destined port, we are told there are no means of knowing ! that it is best and wisest we should know nothing about them ! The prophecy is applied to days long since passed away, and all in the future is dark and uncertain ! This is the condition in which we are left by such works as Stuart's, and others following in his steps.

And giving, as our opponents do, the 24th of Matthew and kindred portions of the New Testament to the Universalists, they yield so much as to make it difficult to prove a future personal coming of Christ at all. If such Scripture, so strong and expressive, so demonstrative of a personal coming, is to be regarded as figurative, or, at most, as only intended to teach a spiritual or providential visitation, it must be extremely difficult, and we believe impossible, to prove a personal coming. And especially is this so, after the Apocalypse is wrested from us, and applied to events closing with the destruction of Jerusalem, by some of the most learned writers of the age. To this fearful result do the reasonings of our opposers directly bring us !

So it is most evident, that to oppose our views with any degree of success, positions most novel, startling, and dangerous, are taken. Settled points are questioned and denied ; old and unquestioned principles of interpretation are abandoned ; the plainest biblical teachings are misconstrued, and the whole host of expositors set at naught. Daniel is given to a Syrian prince, the Apocalypse to a Roman emperor, and Matthew and the parallel books to the destruction of Jerusalem ! And all this to avoid the doctrine of the Lord's speedy coming ! How much like the course of the Jews, to avoid the conclusion that Christ has come the first time ! By the most sophistical and unfair means have they attempted to dispose of the seventy weeks, within the limits of which the Messiah was to make his first advent, to justify themselves in their unbelief ;—so, by similar means, do our opponents attempt to dispose of the 2300 days and other like periods, which limit the time of the second advent, to justify their unbelief respecting the time of that advent. In this they show a strong affinity to the Jews. And it is not a little remarkable that both classes are stumbled, perplexed, and pressed by the same general period ; the Jews by the first part of it, and our opponents by the concluding part ! But the Jews have not yet been able to dispose of the 70 weeks ; nor have our opponents been able to dispose of the remainder of the 2300 days. The event distinguishing each, is wholly independent of the belief of mortals. At the appointed time, the first occurred ; so will the second, whatever may be the scepticism respecting it.

But to close. It does appear that after a slight examination, all candid persons must see and admit, that, on the supposition that our theory be false, it is far less absurd and dangerous than those which have been ex-cogitated and offered as substitutes for it; that it is less infidel, less paradoxical, less adapted to ruin the souls of men. Such an examination will show that the methods of our opponents, in opposing our views, supposing them to be wrong, have been like an attempt to put down the Unitarian views of the Unity of God, by Polytheism; or the pretensions of Joe Smith, by an effort to prove that prophets in all ages have been impostors; or, in other words, that a lesser error has been sought to be put down by a greater! And it will be seen, by such examination, that if we err, we err with the wisest and best of men in all ages; that we err on the side of the accredited expositors of the Protestant church; that we err in the plain path of prophetic teaching; that we err, if at all, with comparative safety, because on the side of too great love for the Saviour's appearing! But if we err, our opposers have a fearful account to settle with the world and with God! The world and God will hold them responsible for the doctrines they now advance and oppose to our views. I fear for the result! Did I believe we should fail, I should prefer, by far, my position to that of the opposers. I should hesitate not at all as to the ground to be chosen, knowing the issue that has been made up. I choose not to share in the fearful account to be settled with Infidels, Catholics, Universalists and Transcendentalists, should time continue. The positions, the works of this controversy, are not to be forgotten. The eye of the eagle has been upon our opposers; every sentiment, and turn, and shift, and change, has been observed, marked, and treasured for future use. At another day, they must be apprized of them. Should they attempt, hereafter, to meet these errorists, they would so turn their own weapons against them, as to drive them quickly and in confusion from the field. Some begin to see the danger, and to give the alarm.*

Thus much, supposing we fail. But if we are right, how perilous the condition of opposers! What a position in which to meet the Judge of all the earth! We envy not such a meeting! Lord, forbid that such should be my lot! Let us, then, all wait patiently for Him who shall come to take the kingdom, and reign. Though he tarry beyond a given time, let us daily watch. We may be fully assured that the great principles on which our faith and hopes are based, are true, AND WILL ABIDE FOREVER. All things admonish us,—the events of the past, the occurrences of the present, and the fore-shadowings of the

TO THE PUBLIC.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS :—

God, in his providence, has permitted us at length to realize the accomplishment of this long-hindered work,—the erection of our Tabernacle. The object for which it is specially designed, the plan and character of the edifice, together with the unforeseen, and of course uncontrollable circumstances which have marked its history thus far, have combined to make it a subject of general public interest. We have no doubt, however, that more important purposes have been effected by its delay than could have been by its earlier completion. It has been the means of calling attention to the views intended to be promulgated in it, though mirth or malice may have employed the means, at the same time that the story of its varying fortune, as the representative of a most important cause, has served as a test upon the candor and Christian liberality of the public; and although a source of perplexity to its friends, we trust it has not been without some salutary influence upon them. Well, let God's work be done in his own way, whether our plans succeed or fail. In this case, however, the work was begun with a view to the glory of God, as well as our own convenience in his worship. He has directed the circumstances of its history, and we would say, as Solomon said of the more wonderful and imposing temple, at its dedication, "The palace is not for man, but for the Lord God."

Of our views as believers in the Second Advent doctrine, as declared to the world by Mr. Miller, all certainly must have heard. And although they have been widely promulgated, in accordance with the means God has given us, still, as we had reason to expect of a certain portion of the community, who are too indolent or self-conceited to read with candor that which has not the sanction of popular favor, or perhaps offended that the truth and reasonableness of what they have read gave them everything to fear, and determined to oppose the doctrine as they must, if at all, with sophistry and falsehood, our views are not unfrequently misrepresented. It may not be amiss, on the opening of the TABERNACLE, to give a brief exposition of our position.

With the Synopsis of Miller's Views, already published to the world, all Second Advent believers in the main agree. In the application of particular prophecies, there is often a variety of views, but which in no case affects the fundamental principles of our faith.

It has been generally supposed that the passing by of a mere point of time would test the truth or falsity of our views. This is by no means the case. Our views are based upon divine truths, which will be none the less true however great a lapse of time may intervene before their fulfilment. That much time will intervene, we do not believe; but till the fulfilment of the events for which we look, we shall ever hope and pray "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

We will not knowingly embrace any principles not plainly taught in the word of God; and if we cannot stand on the plain letter of that word, we choose to fall.

In believing that this earth, regenerated, is to be the eternal abode of the "children of the resurrection," and that the great and glorious promises of Isaiah and the other prophets which are applied to a millennial state, are to be then fulfilled, we are sustained by the belief of the church in its purest and best ages; and in proof of which we have the testimony of not a few divines and historians in every age.

In opposition to this view, there is no trace of any belief in the primitive church from the time of our Saviour prior to Origen, who flourished in the middle of the third century.

Bishop Newton says, "the doctrine of the millenium was generally believed in the first three and purest ages; and this belief, as the learned Dodwell has justly observed, was one principal cause of the fortitude of the primitive Christians; they even coveted martyrdom, in hopes of being partakers of the privileges and glories of the martyrs in the first resurrection."

In the first two centuries there was not an individual who believed in the resurrection of the dead, whose name or memory has come down to us, that opposed it; nor does there exist any fragment of the writings of any author that denied it. The testimony also is, that it was received from those who saw our Lord, and heard of him respecting those days.

Thomas Burnet, in his "Theory of the Earth," printed in London, A. D. 1697, states that it was the received opinion of the primitive church, from the days of the apostles to the council of Nice, that this earth would continue six thousand years from creation, when the resurrection of the just and conflagration of the earth would usher in the millennium and reign of Christ on earth.

As Popery arose, it became less prominent, but was revived at the reformation, and was not supplanted by the doctrine of a temporal millennium till the time of Daniel Whitby, who died 1728. It is also admitted by all that this was taught by Barnabas, Papias, Polycarp, bishop of Smyrna and disciple of John, Justin Martyr, Irenæus, Turtullian, bishop of Carthage, Cyprian, Lactantius, Methodeus, bishop of Olympus, Epiphanius, Paulinus, bishop of Antioch, &c., who were contemporaries and successors of the apostles. This belief was adopted A. D. 325 by the council of Nice, which consisted of 318 bishops, from all parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa. In the reformation, this was the belief of Tyndel, Luther, and Calvin. It was also the belief of the martyr Bradford, Goodwin, Gouge, Langley, Bunyan, Wesley, Burnet, the learned Joseph Mede, Fletcher, Horsley, Bishop Newton, Sir Isaac Newton, Milton, Sterry, Cotton Mather, and a host of others. In asserting this doctrine, we therefore only comply with the apostolic command, to earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints.

The accomplishment of this glorious promise must be the next great event in historical prophecy, when have been fulfilled all the events predicted, which were to precede the consummation; and be it remembered, that the only prophecies claimed by our opponents to be unfulfilled, are those which they claim belong to a temporal millennium and the restoration of the Jews.

These predictions we have shown, by thus far unanswered arguments, drawn from the word of God, to apply only to the eternal state of the righteous in the regenerated earth, and in the restoration of the true Israel of God to their everlasting state, according to the sure promise of God made to our father Abraham. As, therefore, no events of prophecy, now unfulfilled, precede the Second Advent, we shall not turn aside from the expectation of the immediate fulfilment of these glorious promises—even if there should be any seeming delay, until we can say, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will come and save us." We have no expectation of retiring from the contest till our King appear. We have enlisted for the war. Should time continue, the contest is well begun. Should the Saviour come to-day, we intend to be at our posts. With regard to the time of that event, we expect it in the "fulness of times;" in the fulfilment of all the prophetic periods, none of which have yet been shown to extend beyond A. D. 1843. We are therefore looking for it at this time. Six thousand years from creation was the time when the primitive church was expecting the advent. And Luther, Bengel, Burnet, Fletcher, Wesley, and others, all had their eye at about this period of time. But now the fulfilment of the prophecies, the end of the prophetic periods, and the signs of the times, admonish us that it is truly AT THE VERY DOORS.

The public have been deceived by the secular and religious press, with regard to particular days and months that it is said the Saviour was expected. There are too many difficulties in the way of fixing with certainty on any particular day, to render it safe to point to such with any degree of positiveness, although, to some minds, more probable circumstances may seem to point to some particular days, than others. When these days have been named by our brethren, they have been only their own individual opinions, and not the opinions of their friends. The cause is therefore not responsible for any such limited views and calculations.

We occupy the same ground that we have always occupied, in accordance with the title-page of all Mr. Miller's lectures, viz., that the second advent will be "ABOUT the year 1843." The 23d of April, to which all our opponents have looked, was never named by any of our friends, but only by our enemies. To maintain the belief of the coming of Christ now at the doors, to restore this earth to its Eden state, and restore to it the righteous, we claim the same right that any of our opponents have to present a contrary belief. And we mean to be put down neither by the spiritualizing of the word of God, and wresting its alphabetical and common-sense meaning, or by the sneers, scoffs, sarcasms, or falsehoods of those who oppose us—the only forms of opposition with which we have had to contend.

When it is shown, by sound argument, and the sure word of God, that no second personal coming of Christ, and restoration of this earth to its Eden state, is taught in the Scriptures, then we shall cease to look for the coming of the Lord; and not till then. We are ready and anxious to meet any and all candid arguments which may appear to any to militate against these truths; and we claim an equal privilege to present, in return, the strong arguments and the promises of God upon which alone we stand. In the discussion of this great question, the truth or falsity of which vitally affects every son and daughter of Adam, we ask for a candid hearing, and are willing to abide an impartial examination.

In support of our positions, we rest solely upon the testimony of the word of God, in its plain, obvious, and literal acceptation, and as understood by the apostles and their immediate successors. To the law and the testimony we appeal; for we expect none other things but what Moses and the prophets have said shall come. We place no reliance whatever upon any visions, or dreams, mere impressions, or private revelations. "We have a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day-star arise in your hearts." "Search the Scriptures," said our Saviour; and from them we profess to be able to give a reason for the hope that is in us, to every man that asketh us. Neither have we any confidence in the stability of those whose hopes are based upon impressions, and not upon the word of God; for when their impressions are gone, their hopes will disappear with them. But the word of God endureth forever, and those whose hopes are grounded upon it cannot be shaken, whatever may betide.

We have no sectarian designs; our sole object is to convince the churches and the world that the Bridegroom cometh, that all who will may prepare for his glorious appearing. We never have, nor do we now recommend that any leave their respective communions. We have no controversy with any of the religious sects of the day, or existing ecclesiastical organizations, as such. Our standard of Christian character and fellowship, is to love the Lord our God with all our heart, and strength, and mind, and our neighbor as ourself—walking soberly, godly, and righteously in this present evil world, doing good as we have opportunity.

Second Advent believers are found in all branches of the Christian Church; and when we come together we all meet on common ground. We therefore deem it highly improper that any professed Second Advent believer should make his peculiar individual or sectarian views prominent in his professed Second Advent labors. We claim no right to dictate to any one what shall be his individual belief, or in reference to his ecclesiastical relations. We have no ecclesiastical organization, and wish none. We permit all to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience; and expect the same privilege for ourselves. We have nothing to do with any of the contested doctrinal points that agitate the churches; nor have we approved the introduction of personal and private speculations, which may have led to unprofitable discussions.

It has been claimed by our opponents that the tendency of these views is to produce insanity. But it is questioned whether a single case can be produced where a believer has become insane on account of such belief. Those who cannot appreciate the truth may suppose them insane, as some of old were supposed to be full of new wine, and Paul was said to be mad ; or those whose views rest only on dreams and impressions may exhibit insanity in their excesses ; but these are not principles we advocate. It is also believed that fewer cases can be found of insanity, in connection with Second Advent views, in proportion to the believers, than can be produced in connection with ordinary religious teaching. The promises we present are so glorious and cheering, being none other than those the primitive church were told to "comfort each other" with, that, to the humble inquirer after truth, they would be much more likely to restore to sanity, than to render insane ; and such, it is believed, have been their practical tendency.

The above is a condensed statement of our views and expectations ; we will now give the object for which the Tabernacle is opened. This has been erected for the accommodation of those citizens of Boston and vicinity, who may wish to come and learn from the word of God the reason of the hope that is in us. It will be occupied principally for lectures, where it is intended the truth shall be presented in a clear, rational, and candid manner, so that it may commend itself to the reason and good sense of all impartial hearers, and, taking root in their hearts, lead them to repentance, that they may bring forth the peaceable fruits of righteousness. We intend to permit no extravagances here, but to have everything done decently and in order, so that those who assemble may not only have their hearts benefitted, but their minds enlightened. We repudiate all fanaticism. Our wishes are to reach the heart through the intellect, rather than the feelings. We, therefore, cordially invite all disposed to an impartial examination of the Bible, to come and hear for themselves. "Come now, and let us reason together," saith the Lord.

In the conclusion of this address we can but add a word in relation to—

DANGERS WHICH BELIEVERS IN THE DOCTRINE OF THE SECOND ADVENT SHOULD AVOID.—So long as we are in this world, we are continually exposed to temptations on every hand; for our adversary the devil goeth about like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. He also transforms himself into an angel of light. He is peculiarly anxious to secure in his wiles those who have escaped, or are endeavoring to escape, from his grasp; and if any point is unguarded, that is sure to be the point of attack. Some individuals are the more liable to fall into one class of errors, and some into another, owing to their peculiar temperament and the circumstances in which they are placed; and so it is with classes and communities. Some dangers are peculiar to certain views; and others are common to all. The dangers to which Second Advent believers are exposed, are by no means peculiar to them, but yet are not the less real.

1. We should avoid a censorious spirit towards those who cannot see all things in the same light that we do. We should remember that once we were in the dark, but were none the less honest in our opinions then, than now. If others are honest in their views, and are candid, they are entitled to the utmost charity. Censoriousness belongs only to those who oppose the coming of Christ.

2. Second Advent believers are from all religious denominations; and to act in unison, it is necessary to meet on common ground; to so meet, it is necessary to lay aside all sectarian views. All true brethren should, therefore, guard against making their own private views or sectarian belief too prominent, or as a necessary belief for those whose views are different.

3. We should avoid bringing in, in connection with the Second Advent and as a preparation therefor, any doctrines not necessarily connected therewith. They only serve to divert the mind from the true issue, and repel those who might otherwise embrace the doctrine of the Second Advent. Heb. xiii. 9: "Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines: for it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace; not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied therein."

4. We should avoid all extravagant notions, and everything which may tend to fanaticism. God is not the author of confusion. "Let everything be done decently and in order," says the Apostle. And "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." "But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy; and the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace." Anything which may cause an unbeliever to turn away in disgust, may prevent the salvation of that soul. All things that are lawful are not expedient. As our great aim should be the salvation of souls, we should strive to win all, so that if by any means we may save some of them.

5. We should avoid placing too much reliance upon impressions. "Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God." Impressions, visions, and dreams have thus far usually failed those who have put their trust in them; which proves they were not of God. We, therefore, should use the utmost caution ere we trust to that which may also in the end fail us, and prove not to be of God. We have for our guide the sure word of God; and those who will not believe Moses and the prophets, will not believe though one should rise from the dead. He that is of the faith of our father Abraham, will believe God upon his simple word; and will need no other confirmation: but those who refuse to take the word of God without some other testimony, are dishonoring that word, and giving the pre-eminence to that which may be doubtful or spurious testimony. Jer. xxiii. 28, 29: "The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord. Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?"

6. Judge no man. James iv. 11: "Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law: but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge."

7. We should avoid setting up one's own experience as the standard by which to test the experience of others. Men's experience will differ, as did those of the apostles. Had Paul required all to have the same experience that he had, the faith of many would have been staggered. The moment we set up our own attainments as a standard, we cease to point to Jesus, the only true pattern. We should look to him alone, and point others to him. 2 Cor. x. 12: "For we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves: but they, measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise."

8. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." We are commanded to live with an eye single to the glory of God. Without holiness no man can see the Lord. We are to abstain from even the appearance of evil, and to depart from all iniquity, that the God of peace may sanctify us wholly unto himself, and preserve us blameless unto the coming of Christ. We should, therefore, avoid feeling that we have reached a point from which we cannot fall; for our adversary is continually on the watch, that he may overcome us at our least guarded point. He likes to whisper in the ear of man that he has attained the victory, and become so holy, that, do what he will, it is not sin. Some have thus stumbled, supposing their warfare was accomplished; and have thus ceased to press forward towards the mark, so that Satan has led them captive at his will. It will never answer to leave our watch, or lay down the weapons of defence; for while we are probationers our course is a continual warfare, a race, a strife for the victory ; and that victory can only be obtained by being faithful unto the end. There is no danger of being too holy : the danger lies in being satisfied with present attainments.

9. We are commanded to occupy till Christ comes. We are to sow our seed, and gather our harvest, so long as God gives us seed-time and harvest. If we improve the coming seed-time, and have no harvest, we shall have done our duty ; and if a harvest should be granted us, we shall be prepared to reap. It is as much our duty now to be continually employed, either in providing for the wants of those dependent upon us, or in alleviating the distress of others, as it ever was. We are to do good as we have opportunity, and by no means spend our time in idleness. That would bring reproach on our Saviour. Let us see to it that our hearts are right in the sight of God, and then, whether we wake or sleep, are laboring to save souls, or are engaged in our daily avocations, we shall meet our Lord in peace. May the God of peace give all who profess to love his appearing that wisdom, that shall guide us aright, and lead us in the way of all truth, and redound the most to his honor and glory.

TO THE READER.

VERY DEAR FRIEND: The subjects contained in this small volume, concerning the coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, claim our prayerful attention. It is with a sincere desire, and prayer to God, that the investigation of these topics may strengthen your faith, love and hope, in the glorious appearing of Jesus Christ. No subject is better calculated to wean our affections from this world, to inspire our hearts in view of the glorious prospect at hand, and to excite a wakeful diligence in the service of God. At the longest we have but a short time to tarry on the earth. Man is but as the flower of the field, which flourisheth in the morning, but soon droops, withers and dies. Every beating of the pulse denotes the flight of time. Every pain of the body; every season of sickness; the tolling bell; the funeral procession; the grave yard, and the habiliments of mourning, signify the frailty of our natures—the shortness of time—the certainty of the end of this life, and the importance of a preparation to meet God. It is also just as certain, from the testimony of Jehovah's word, that every day brings us nearer to the eventful period when the sign of the Son of Man shall appear in the heavens, and the angel of God declares that "time shall be no longer." With such an event before us, even at the doors, so plainly revealed in the Scriptures, "what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for the glorious appearing, and the great God, our Savior Jesus Christ." To be in darkness respecting this event is the height of folly. God has seen fit to reveal to his servants, the prophets, the things which must shortly come to pass. And a prayerful investigation of the Word of God, on this subject, will be the means of leading you into the truth, of enlightening your mind respecting "those things" which relate to the Coming and Kingdom of Jesus. You may have been accustomed to contemplate the coming of our Lord as being far in the future—as not happening in your day. This is probably the opinion of thousands, at the present time. But Jesus says, "watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. Therefore, be ye also ready, for in such an hour, as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh. Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing." To watch not only implies that the Lord Jesus will come at the time appointed, but also to have our desires and thoughts towards the event; and to be in readiness at any time. To be found in the performance of those duties, and in that temper of mind, and state of heart, which will render the event a welcome theme, and in which we would hope to be found when he comes. It implies, also, a right discernment of the signs which Christ prophesied should be the harbingers of his approach. These signs are as discernable, and as indicative of his advent nigh, as the silent gathering of the lowering clouds portends the heavy shower of rain, or the temporary repose of the sleeping billows is a sure prelude to a gathering storm. Watch, therefore, — discern the signs which have appeared in answer to the prophecy, and by which, as well as by the prophetic numbers, we may know that the end of all things is at hand, just as we may know that summer is nigh by the budding of the tree, or that winter is approaching by the fading foilage and the falling leaf. Study the sure word of prophecy — take heed unto it “as unto a light that shineth in a dark place.” Learn that the great image of Nebuchadnezzar’s dream represents the four great universal monarchies which have succeeded each other, and which brings us down to the time when the stone shall smite the image, and dash to pieces the kingdoms of this world. Learn that the horn (Dan. vii. 21, 22) prevails until the Ancient of Days come, and the time that the saints possess the kingdom. Learn that Daniel was instructed by Gabriel, into the nature and length of the vision, and decide for yourselves when the kingdom of God shall appear. The wise shall understand. Let not that day come upon you as a thief. “Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. They that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut.” Do not be indifferent to a subject of such vast importance, and involving such momentous events to the church and the world. When the seventh trumpet shall begin to sound, the mystery of God will be finished. God has not said that it shall not be this year. And now, dear friend, I commend you to God and to the word of his grace, hoping that we may have part in the first resurrection, and dwell with Christ in his everlasting kingdom.

Yours, aff. N. H.

INTRODUCTION.

THE first and second coming of Christ are great and prominent themes of prophecy. The scriptures of the Old and New Testaments represent the justice of God which was exercised towards mankind, immediately after the fall of our first parents, as mingled with divine love. Previous to their exile from EDEN a ray of hope beamed around them in the promise of a Savior, who is to be the final Deliverer of Israel. To Abraham the promise was more fully explained, which was the Hope, and consolation of the people of God, long before it was fulfilled. The predictions recorded in the Old Testament concerning the Messiah, are clearly descriptive of his advent, and of things pertaining to his kingdom. In the prophecy of Daniel there is incontrovertible evidence that Jesus was born under the Roman government, and will come the second time while the Man of Sin is prevailing. See 2 Thess. ii. 3—8.

On a subject so interesting as the First and Second Advent of our Lord, it is important that we carefully examine those prophecies which testify of him, and see how completely they are fulfilled, in the person of one like unto the Son of God. The features of these prophecies may be traced, in their fulfillment, in reference to the time and place of his birth, the family from which he should arise, his spotless life and character, the miracles which he wrought, the purity, and power of his doctrine, the design and influence of his coming, and the nature and extent of his kingdom.

Those who see clearly the fulfillment of prophecy concerning the promised Messiah, the multiplicity of facts which are applicable to him alone, must also see the ultimate destiny of all earthly kingdoms, by the same light of prophecy, when the stone breaks in pieces the image and fills the whole earth. The principle of interpreting the prophecies is well expressed by Dodwell, "Never depart from the literal sense of Scripture without an absolute necessity for so doing." Such a principle is consistent ; and commends itself to our reason, and is far less liable to abuse than the spiritual mode of interpretation. The literal interpretation of Scripture is warranted by the patriarchs and apostles in their understanding of the prophecies. Noah so understood the flood. Abraham, Moses, Isaac, and Jacob, believed that God's word would be accomplished according to its grammatical meaning. All the prophecies respecting the Messiah, they expected and believed, would be literally fulfilled. The principle adopted is confirmed by the providence of God, in the literal accomplishment of events recorded in the Old Testament, as they have transpired in past ages. "Every one acquainted with his Bible, must know that the prophecies of Scripture are a vast chain, beginning and ending with the course of this present world :—one end of that chain lay in Paradise lost, commencing in the prediction that if man should eat the forbidden fruit, he should die ; nor shall we reach the other end, pursue it as we may through the histories of ages, and nations, and midst its thousand times ten thousand convolutions, till it brings us back again to Paradise restored—the glorious dominion of Jesus Christ over all the earth, in more than EDEN-LIKE blessedness."—Duffield.

Jesus has commanded us to search the Scriptures ; and that for a wise purpose. The word of God is an inexhaustible mine of rich truths. Peter, who spake under the inspirations of the Holy Ghost, says that we do well to "take heed" to the "more sure word of prophecy." The Bereans were commended as being "more noble than they of Thessalonica, in that they received the word of God with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily whether these things were so." Paul "reasoned with them out of the Scriptures, opening, and alleging, that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead, and that this Jesus whom I preach unto you is Christ." Acts, xvii. 2, 3. Therefore, to treat the prophecies with indifference, to regard them as a part of God's word, and yet to lightly esteem them, or discourage the study of them, is contrary to the command of Heaven, and wholly unbecoming a Christian name. It ill becomes any one who acknowledges the Bible to be our guide and light in the pathway of this dark and chequered world, to "despise prophesyings." It better becomes such to "prove all things" contained in the word of God.

The Bible is a history of Jehovah's dealings among the nations, and kingdoms of the world. Here we trace his hand in putting down one, and in setting up another. The sacred records of His moral administration have been faithfully preserved. They present to us, in the fulfillment of prophecies, the grand outlines of His government, and the positive evidence of their divine inspiration. Human wisdom, and vain philosophy must submit to the light which beams from the sacred page on the past, the present, and the future. Such men as Hume, Bentham, and La Place, must veil their faces in the academic halls, before such men as Moses, Joshua, Daniel, and the humble fishermen of Galilee. In searching the Scriptures, we find positive evidence in the fulfillment of prophecy that God's word is true—that he will accomplish all his purposes until the Messiah, once a babe in Bethlehem, shall come in all the glory of the Father and before his

Presenting all his saints ; not one is lost
Of all that he in covenant received ;
Time gone, the righteous saved, the wicked lost,
And God's eternal government approved.

From what is past, recorded by a divine hand, we learn with certainty what is to come. Not one jot or tittle of God's word will fail. It is a sure word of prophecy—the charter of our faith—the day-star of our hope, in the coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

In the following pages of this book, it is our purpose to show that the Messiah, who has fulfilled the prophecies relating to his First Advent, will come again personally, and reign with his people on the new earth ; and that the event is even at the doors.

PROPHECIES

OF CHRIST'S FIRST AND SECOND COMING.

We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts.— 2 Epistle Peter i. 19.

It is very evident from reading the writings of the Evangelists—the Acts of the apostles, and the Epistles in the New Testament—that frequent allusions are made to the prophecies concerning the Lord Jesus Christ. Peter, in view of his approaching death, first calls the attention of his fellow-christians to the importance of cultivating the christian graces. “For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ:” Math. xvii. 1, 5. John i. 14. He then refers to the power and coming of Christ, of whose majesty the apostles were eyewitnesses, (Math. xvii. 1, 5: John i. 14.) when he was transfigured before them, and a cloud over-shadowed them, and a voice saying, "This is my beloved son, in whom I am well pleased." "And this voice, which came from heaven, we heard when we were with him in the holy mount." Then follows the text: "We have a more sure word of prophecy," &c.

The sense of the passage is, we have a far more sure word of prophecy concerning the coming of Christ in power, (which seems to be the doctrine that Peter is endeavoring to prove) rather than the evidence inferred from what the apostles saw at the transfiguration. They had evidence of Christ's glory and power; but that he will come again with great power and glory, is contained in the prophecies, both in the Old and New Testaments. To these prophecies "we do well to take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts." For no prophecy is of any private interpretation, i. e. it is not its own interpreter, but understood by the events being fulfilled, which are predicted.

In examining the prophecies respecting Christ, we shall not only see the most conclusive evidence of the truth of Christianity, in their literal fulfilment, but we shall also find evidence for believing in the visible, and speedy approach of the Son of God to judge the world. The Savior says, "all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me:" Luke xxiv. 24. These may be classified under their respective heads, as they relate to the Messiah, in the several offices in which he is mentioned in the Scriptures, from his first to his second advent.

Simpson, in his plea for religion, has considered these prophecies to some extent, also showing how literally they are fulfilled; which must be a sufficient evidence that those which remained unfulfilled will also be literally accomplished at the appointed time. Taking these prophecies in the order of events to which they refer, will enable us to follow the blessed Redeemer from the manger to the cross — from the cross to the tomb — from the tomb to the mercy seat — from the mercy seat back to the earth, where he will reign in his kingdom forever and ever. And as we examine the Scriptures on these important points, concerning the Lord Jesus, may the investigation awaken a pure, and fervent affection for Him — a desire to be conformed to his image — to imitate his example—to have hope in his death—a place in his kingdom—a love for his glorious appearing.

1. PROPHECIES OF HIS INCARNATION.

Prophecy.	Fulfilled.
1 That the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head: Gen. iii. 15.	1 John iii. 8. Heb. ii. 14. Math. i. 18—25. Luke i. 18, 35. Gal. iv. 4. John i. 14. Heb. xii. 14—17. Phil. ii. 7—8.
2 Born of a virgin: Isa. vii. 14. Unto us a child is born, a son given. Isa. ix. 6.	18, 35. Gal. iv. 4. John i. 14. Heb. xii. 14—17. Phil. ii. 7—8.

CIRCUMSTANCES OF HIS BIRTH.

Prophecy.	Fulfilled.
1 Of the seed of Abraham: Gen. xxii. 18.	Gal. iii. 16, 17. Heb. ii. 16.
2 Of the tribe of Judah: Gen. xlix. 6.	Heb. vii. 14.
3 Of the family of David: 2Sam. vii. 10.	Luke i. 32, 69
4 Born at Bethlehem: Mic. v. 2.	Math. ii. 1, 5, 6.
5 That a star should indicate his Advent.	Math. ii. 2, 7, 9.
6 Called out of Egypt: Hosea xi. 1.	Math. ii. 13, 14.
7 His way prepared by another: Isa. xl. 3, 4. Mal. iii. 1, 4, 5.	Math. iii. 1, 4: xvii. 10, 14.
8 A general expectation of the Messiah: Hag. ii. 7, 9.	Math. ii. 1, 10.

This prophecy seems to point to the period of the Messiah's birth, when the second temple existed, which was erected after the Jews' return from captivity, and after the temple of Solomon was laid waste. "I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come, and I will fill this house with my glory, saith the Lord of Hosts. The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former, saith the Lord of Hosts; and in this place will I give peace, saith the Lord of Hosts." The glory of the first temple was superior to that of the latter: Ezra iii. 12. But it was afterwards embellished by Herod the Great; yet the visible glory of God, the Shechinah, did not fill the second temple. But Christ, who was greater than the temple itself, and the desire of all nations, made the latter temple more glorious than the former. This fixes the coming of Christ under the Roman Empire, while the temple was standing. Hence another prophecy was fulfilled, respecting the time of Christ's first advent. Gen. xlix. 10 — "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a law-giver from between his feet till Shiloh come." The sceptre, or Jewish tribunal, did not depart from Judah till the predicted era. Nor the lawgiver (expounder of law) a body of men, who continued as long as the Jewish polity, until SHILOH came, i. e. the Messiah. The prophecy was fulfilled to the letter; for Joseph and Mary, with others, went to be taxed by the authority of a heathen Emperor: Luke ii. 3.

The prophecy of Daniel fixes the same time during the period of Pagan Rome. See Dan. ix. 26.

15 Poured out his soul unto death: Mark xv. 37, 39.

Isa. liii. 12.

16 Cut off, not for himself, but for others: Dan. ix. 26. 1 Cor. v. 7.

These prophecies bring us down to the crucifixion of our Lord. Leaving the seventy weeks, noted in Daniel's prophecy, for explanation in the "visions harmonized and explained," we shall notice, briefly, the circumstances of the Savior's crucifixion.

He was "delivered to be crucified." This mode of putting persons to death was customary among the Romans, the result of combined cruelty. It was their intention to render the sufferings of Christ as painful as possible. The cross was set up in the ground, and the suffering Savior suspended on nails, or thongs, driven through his hands and feet, by which every motion of the body must have rendered the pain extremely exquisite. These sufferings of Jesus soon terminated; and his death answered to the type of the brazen serpent on the pole in the wilderness. Types, as well as prophecies, have their fulfillment. Let the reader trace out the fulfillment of these types, and he will see how perfectly God fulfills all his Word.

The Savior, who was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners, was cut off by the hands of wicked men, and therefore fulfilled the prophecy in Isa. liii. 8, and by his death sealed up the vision, and prophecy, and laid the foundation of all our hopes of acceptance with God.

The closing scenes of Christ's sufferings, as recorded by Matthew, (xxvii. 45—50) are prophesied by Isa. liii. 4, 5. He bore our griefs and carried our sorrows — he was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was laid upon him; by his stripes we are healed. The event accords with the first promise, viz, that the seed of the woman, i. e. Christ, should bruise his (the serpents) head. By the sufferings of Christ, and the power with which he was invested, he might, through death, destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil. This promise is fulfilled, inasmuch as Christ, by his death, destroys the power of death over all those who believe, and become heirs of that eternal life which was forfeited by sin, and which they will enjoy in a far more glorious paradise than that which was lost.

As a testimony to this event, there was darkness, from the sixth hour, over all the land, unto the ninth hour. It was not an eclipse of the sun, for the passover was celebrated at the time of the full moon, when the moon is opposite to the sun. The very elements of nature sympathised with the sufferings of Christ. The world was clad in the habiliment of mourning when he cried with a loud voice, and yielded up the ghost. The veil which separated the holy from the most holy place in the temple was rent in twain, and signified that the way of salvation was open to all. And the earth did quake—a violent convulsion of the ground was felt in Judea, and in countries around. The graves were opened, and many bodies of the saints, who slept, arose.

The next class of prophecies concerning Christ after the crucifixion, relate to his

BURIAL AND RESURECTION.

Prophecy.	Fulfilled.
1 He should make his grave with the rich: Isa. liii. 9.	Math. xxvii 57, 61.
2 That he should not see corruption: Ps. xvi. 10	Acts ii. 25, 32. Acts xiii. 34, 38.
3 That he should rise from the dead: Ps. ii. 7; xiv. 17.	Math. xxviii. 6. Acts ii. 30, 31.
4 That he should ascend into heaven: Ps. xvi. 11; lxviii. 18.	Math. xxviii. 19. Acts i. 9.

It was not an unusual thing for the Jews to prepare sepulchres for themselves. The tomb Joseph had prepared for himself, and which Luke says, wherein never man before was laid. The body of Christ was laid by itself in Joseph's new tomb, and the sepulchre made sure. The stone was sealed, and a watch, a band of soldiers, placed there to guard the sacred spot. Deception about his resurrection was impossible. The circumstances of his burial were all arranged by his enemies. He was in the tomb alone, and safely guarded ; and Pilate was satisfied that Jesus was actually dead. His enemies did all they could to prevent his resurrection. But the prophecy was fulfilled. "The angel of the Lord descended from heaven," in the midst of an earthquake, "and came and rolled away the stone from the door and sat upon it."

As the resurrection of Christ is one of the main pillars of Christianity, it is well to consider the infallible proofs of it.

1. He was in the grave three days ; sufficiently long to prove that he was really dead, and yet to fulfill the prophecy that he should not see corruption.

2. The angel descended from heaven and conversed with the Marys at the sepulchre. The angels did attend the Savior at his birth, but not at his death. Then the Father withdrew his countenance for a wise purpose. But at his resurrection, when he resumes the glory which he had with the Father, the angels worship Him—the Lord of life and glory.

3. The stone was rolled away from the door of the sepulchre by the angel. Angels are the ministering spirits of God, commissioned to do his will.

4. The soldiers trembled at the appearance of the angel, and became as dead men. The same description applied to the angel is recorded of Christ at his transfiguration. Math. xvii.

2. Angelic beings are represented in the Scriptures as clothed in white. Acts i. 10 ; Dan. vii. 9 ; Rev. iii. 4, 5 ; iv. 4.

The soldiers were undoubtedly astonished, to see all the plans which were carefully arranged to prevent the body of Jesus from being stolen away, so completely frustrated. They could not be deceived. They saw with their own eyes, and must have been convinced that this was the power of God.

5. The angel's testimony. He is not here : for he is risen. The Savior said that he would rise. Come, see the place where the Lord lay. Behold the prophecy fulfilled. He has burst asunder the cords of death, evinced his power over the grave, spread the news of his resurrection among the disciples. They hastened away to carry the tidings.

6. They were met by Jesus himself, saying, All hail. He spake to them and sent them into Galilee, where Christ commenced his ministry, and where he designed to meet them, and satisfy them by his own presence that he was risen from the dead.

The order of the grave clothes might also be adduced as another proof of the resurrection of Christ. But sufficient has been said to show the exact fulfillment of the prophecy—that he was delivered for our offences and raised again for our justification. If the body of Christ, says Saurin, were not raised from the dead, it must have been stolen away. But the theft is incredible.

It appears from Acts i. 3, that Christ was with the apostles, after his resurrection, forty days. Then, according to Luke, xxiv. 51, 52, “It came to pass while he blessed them, he was parted from them, and carried up into heaven. And they worshipped him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy.” This was after his passion, a word which usually denotes a certain state of the mind. In the original text it means to suffer, and therefore means here the sufferings of Christ. After his passion he gave the apostles infallible evidence that he was the same person who hung on the cross, expired, taken down, and laid away in Joseph’s new tomb. They could not be mistaken. The evidence was decisive. He eat and drank with them ; and talked with them as he was accustomed to do during his ministry—the same familiar friend. The most doubtful of the apostles was finally convinced that he was Christ. “Thomas said unto him, “My Lord and my God.” John xx. 28.

But when they were assembled at the mount of Olives, “They asked him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times, or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power. But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you.” Acts i. 6, 7, 8. The disciples unquestionably expected a kingdom that would be eternal in its duration. But they cherished erroneous views respecting the subjects of the kingdom.

The Savior had previous to this time informed his disciples of his departure from them, and also of his return. As he was about to leave them, he commissioned them to be witnesses for him, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth. Then he ascended in open day, and a cloud received him out of their sight. They gazed on him with astonishment. Their affections were at once drawn away from the scenes of time to their risen and ascending Redeemer. It was a solemn and sublime scene.

What mingled emotions of sorrow, and hope now agitated the bosoms of the disciples! a small band, unhonored and alone, exposed to the persecutions of a sinful world. But the time of his departure had arrived. He had finished the work which the Father gave him to do on earth; (John xvii, 4,) and he must return to the glory which he had with the Father, before the world was.

But as the disciples gazed on their departing Lord, two angelic beings, as is evident from the nature of their message, informed them that this same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.

This event (the ascension of Christ) leads us to consider the prophecies relative to HIS INTERCESSION. This office he was to fill after having made a sacrifice for sin.

PROPHECY.	FULFILLED.
1. He made intercession for transgressors, Isa. liii. 12.	Rom. viii. 34. Heb. ix. 24.

The Jewish High Priest not only made atonement, but also offered the blood of sacrifice before the mercy seat, as the Intercessor of the people. Lev. xvi. 11—14. Here is the prophecy fulfilled by the Great High Priest of our profession, who has passed into the heavens, Heb. ix. 7, 8, 11, 12. Hence we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, 1 John, ii. 1. Christ is on the mercy seat, and there pleads the cause and interests of his people, and through him we obtain peace, mercy and grace. He appears in the presence of God for us. Heb. ix. 24, and presents the merits of his death, Heb. x. 12, 14.) He is represented as offering up the prayers, and praises of his people, which are rendered acceptable to God through his blood. Rev. viii. 3; 1 Pet. ii. 5.

This office Christ holds by divine authority. He glorified not himself to be made a High Priest, but was called of God as was Aaron. Heb. v. 5, 6. He now pleads the absolute promise of the covenant of redemption. By making his soul an offering for sin, he will eventually see of the travail of his soul—when he cometh in the glory of his Father, Then will he be satisfied, and his prayer be fully realized. John xvii. 24. Father I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me; for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world.

The office which the Savior now holds, is that of intercession. He is not a King, and cannot be, in the Scriptural sense, until he shall resign the office of our High Priest. See Matth. xxv. 34. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. When Christ will act as the King, Judge, Ruler, is specified by Matthew, when the Son of man shall come in his glory.

We have already seen that about thirty prophecies have been literally fulfilled concerning Christ, (and more might be collected from the prophetic writings.) The variety of circumstances, time, place and character, all centre in him—and must show to every reasonable person, that what remains to be fulfilled, will as certainly be accomplished. The prophecy which remains to be accomplished, relates to his Second Advent, describes his everlasting kingdom in which he will reign forever and ever. The following passages have reference to that event; and set forth the Lord Jesus as a King, having universal and everlasting dominion.

Numb. xxiv. 17. For there shall come a star out of Jacob and a sceptre shall rise out of Israel.

Isa. lxxxix. 27. I will make him, my first born, higher than the kings of the earth.

Isa. xxxii. 1. Behold a king shall reign in righteousness.

Zech. ix. 9. Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion ; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem ; Behold thy King cometh unto thee ; he is just and having salvation. Isa. lxii. 11 ; Zech. xiv. 9.

Ps. ii. 6. Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill, Zion.

Ps. xlv. 6. The sceptre of thy kingdom is a sceptre that is right.

Isa. ix. 6. The Government shall be upon his shoulders. Isa. xi. 10.

Ps. lxxii. 2. He shall judge the people with righteousness.

Isa. ii. 4. He shall judge among the nations.

Jer. xxiii. 5, 6. I will raise unto David a righteous branch, and a king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell in safety.

Jer. xxxiii. 15. He shall execute judgment, and righteousness in the land.

Zech. vi. 12, 13. The man whose name is the branch ; he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord : he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne.

Matth. xii. 13. Blessed is the king that cometh in the name of the Lord.

Luke i. 32, 33. The Lord shall give unto him the throne of his Father David. He shall rule over the house of Israel forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

Dan. vii. 14. There was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom that all people, nations, and languages should serve him : his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, his kingdom shall not be destroyed.

Rev. xi. 15. And the seventh angel sounded ; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ ; and he shall reign forever and ever.

Here the mind is relieved from the scenes of the last great battle recorded in Revelations, and carried on amidst the glories of the Millennial day, when Christ shall, with all his saints, possess the kingdom forever. The last passage is often adduced, and applied to a temporal or spiritual millenium. But every one must see, from the connection in which it stands, that such an application of the passage is not in harmony with the scenes which will then occur:

The nations were angry and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and to them that fear thy name, small and great ; and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth.

g*

And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament, and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail.

The events connected with the sounding of the seventh angel, all show, conclusively, that when "the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord," Christ will come to judgment.

The passage is frequently quoted in prayer by many who suppose it relates to the spread of the gospel, or Christ's spiritual reign, as it is so understood. But if such a prayer were answered, what would take place? A scene of the most thrilling character, joyful to the righteous, but awful and solemn to the wicked. Let the connection of the passage decide. Nations angry, time of the dead that they should be judged—reward of the prophets, saints, and those who fear the name of God—small and great—destruction of those who destroy the earth—lightnings and voices—thunderings and earthquakes, and great hail.

When these events occur, there is reason to believe, from other portions of God's word, that a glorious millenium will be ushered in by the personal appearance of Jesus Christ. (See Dan ii. 44, 45; vii. 13, 14; Rev. x. 5, 6, 7.)

We are now prepared to consider,

THE EVENTS OF CHRIST'S SECOND COMING.

That Christ will come the second time to judge the world in righteousness, is a doctrine clearly taught in the scriptures : John. xiv. 3—Acts i. 11—1 Thess. iv. 16—Rev. i. 7. Math. xvi. 27. Mark viii. 38—xiii. 26—Math. xxiv. 30—Dan. vii. 13.

As it was in accordance with the purpose of the Father that Christ should finish his work on earth, and return back to his original glory, so will he come again in like manner as he went into heaven.

When he comes the second time, his special work as a Mediator will be accomplished. His people will be vindicated, and raised to glory. All the righteous dead, and the living saints, will be changed, and together enjoy the millennial state. This world is not their home. It is a state of trial, suffering, and sin. Christ has gone to prepare mansions for all his followers, and his coming will be the signal for their possessing the kingdom. Dan. vii. 14, 18, 22, 27. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. Matt. xxv. 34.

The bodies of the saints will be changed, and become immortal—Every man in his own order ; Christ the first fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. 1 Cor. xv. 20, 23, 49,—51, 53. Philip. iii. 20, 21.

The Church, all the redeemed, will be presented to God, blameless, holy, without spot, or wrinkle, as the fruits of Christ's sufferings. Col. i. 22. Eph. v. 27. That he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing ; but that it should be holy, and without blemish.

Zion will then be delivered from the power and dominion of satan—her warfare accomplished—the glory of the Lord shall be revealed—death swallowed up in victory—the last enemy destroyed—the holy and blessed, having part in the first resurrection, shall reign with Christ on the earth that shall be cleansed by fire.

It now remains for us to examine some points in reference to Christ's second advent, in connection with the DESTRUCTION OF JERUSALEM.

A careful attention to the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew must convince every reasonable mind that the second coming of Christ cannot be referred to the events recorded of Jerusalem.

The question, tell us when shall these things be ? is distinct from another, and still more important one, viz. and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world ? The first seems to have been suggested by previous remarks of the Saviour, concerning the desolation of the temple and city of Jerusalem. (See xxiii 37, 38, 39.) Ye shall not see me henceforth till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord ; i. e. having rejected the offers of mercy and salvation, your national doom is sealed. The judgements about to come upon you, are inflicted in consequence of your sins. Long, and severe as they will be, they must be borne until you will gladly hail a deliverer, and say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. That the Jews would at this moment gladly hail a deliverer, is a matter of fact. If the Jews give not their hearts to Christ, previous to his last advent, when he shall come to judge the world, they must be compelled to acknowledge him when he shall appear in the clouds of heaven, and that to their utter astonishment, at having so long despised the crucified Redeemer.

The questions of the disciples are fully answered, in the elaborate prediction contained in chapters xxiv and xxv, in which, is a connected chain of events, including those which relate to the desolation of Jerusalem, and reaching down to the end of the world. The predictions, immediately after his leaving them, began to be realised. Those included in this generation, the times in which we live, are being fulfilled before our eyes. When ye see all these things come to pass, know that the end is near. If the coming of Christ is referred to Jerusalem then there are some passages in the chapter which are inexplicable. He did not then come in the clouds of heaven, nor send his angels with the sound of a trumpet, nor gather all nations before him. This is a similar prediction of Daniel vii. 13, 14, and will be realized when the "sign of the Son of man shall appear, then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of Heaven, with power and great glory," which did not occur when Jerusalem was laid desolate. Isaiah has described the same event. "Behold the Lord will come with fire and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger in fury and his rebukes with flames of fire. It shall come that I will gather all nations, and tongues, and they shall come and see my glory. Isa. xvi.

This is the gathering described by Ezekiel, xxxviii. and John, Rev xvi. 14—16, which seems to occur in connection with the advent of Christ to judge the nations of the earth, verse 15. Behold I come as a thief. The sense of the passages in Revelation appears to be this :—the battle of the great day of the Lord among the nations is now commenced—my coming is therefore at the door, watch that ye may be found ready—the unclean spirits “shall go forth unto the Kings of the earth and of the whole world to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty.” The gathering of all nations does not refer to the resurrection, for it is a collection of nations in the flesh. When the Savior comes he will appear “with ten thousand of his saints," Jude xiv., and with all his holy angels, and they will possess the kingdom, and will go forth as his messengers, to do his will, summon his people, his elect, and, together with Christ, reign as kings, and priests of the Most High. "If children," saith the apostle, "then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." The Savior said to Nathaniel, hereafter ye shall see the heavens opened, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon or with the Son of man, John i. 51—These heavenly messengers announced the first advent of Christ, and frequently appeared to him during his incarnation in the wilderness, Mark i. 13, in the garden, Luke xxii. 43, at his resurrection and ascension; and they are to attend him at his second coming.

This is in accordance with the parable of the tares and the wheat. As therefore the tares are gathered, and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world—the harvest is the end of the world—the reapers are the angels—they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them (the wicked) into a furnace of fire, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun, in the kingdom of their Father. Math. xiii. 41—43.

Having considered the Lord Jesus Christ in the several relations he sustains to the government of God—especially his advents, first to redeem and then to reign, we close by a few remarks on the importance of the subject.

The advent of our Lord is a theme of deep interest among the angels of God; and should claim the attention of those who expect to reign with him, in his everlasting kingdom. It is recorded for our instruction, that “He was in the world—that he suffered on the cross, was buried, rose from the tomb, ascended to heaven to make intercession for us, and that he will come the second time to take his ransomed people home.

Do we realize the fact of his coming soon to “judge the world in righteousness”? Shall we slumber over the event which is “near, even at the doors”? To be prepared for the event demands a wakeful diligence in the service of God. “Occupy till I come,” is one of the last injunctions of the Savior to his disciples. He may come in an hour when we look not for him. Is it not a high attainment to be so conversant with things not seen, and eternal, as to have our lamps trimmed and burning, so that when he comes we shall be found ready to enter in to the marriage ? He that testifieth these things, saith, SURELY I COME QUICKLY. Is our faith resting on God's word, so as to be affected rightly amidst the visible and passing scenes of earth ? The more we are conformed to this world the less sympathy we shall have for heaven, the less conversant with future realities, the less disposed to welcome the advent of Christ. Has the church made herself ready ? Does the pulpit sound the alarm—His advent's nigh !

It is a subject of vast interest to the church, and to the world. It is the epoch for the final consummation of joy and blessedness to the righteous, of terror and dismay to the wicked. Jesus will come as a conqueror over sin, death and the grave, and rescue this earth from the power and dominion of sin. Once a babe in Bethlehem, at prayer in the solitudes of the wilderness, surrounded by midnight shades, agonizing in the garden, a man of sorrows, despised and rejected, bleeding at every pore, writhing in every limb, forsaken by his disciples, denied by Peter, led to the bar of Pilate, sold for thirty pieces of silver, falsely accused, and condemned, conducted to Calvary, hung on the cross, mocked and crucified ; but he comes the second time as the King in glory ; and those who are partakers in the first resurrection, shall reign with him forever and ever.

How unspeakably solemn is the thought that He will SOON APPEAR IN THE CLOUDS OF HEAVEN !

TWENTY THREE HUNDRED DAYS.

THE VISIONS OF DANIEL HARMONIZED AND EX- PLAINED.

A careful investigation of Daniel's visions must convince every candid mind that they contain a history of the most important events which have occurred in our world ; and which are intimately connected with the second coming, and kingdom of Christ. But when the mind is pre-occupied with the affairs of this world it is difficult to persuade such an one to feel any practical sympathy in the subject of these visions. They are to many, dry and uninteresting. And hence, as hundreds affirm, " we can take no interest in them."

Pause a moment, dear reader, and inquire if they do not compose a part of the revelations which God has made to us for our instruction, and to lead our minds onward, through successive events, in the history of this world, to the triumph and glory of Christ, in his everlasting kingdom. Shall we leave any portion of God's word unstudied, or shrink from a prayerful investigation of its momentous truths?

The map of the world in which we dwell is contained in the Sceiptures, and a faithful record of Jehovah's administration among the kingdoms of the earth, in putting down one, and setting up another, "until the Ancient of Days come," and the Son of Man appear in his glory. The study of the prophecies respecting the near approach of Christ, is a matter of duty and interest to thousands of the present day, who feel cheered in their anticipations. With the impression that the Savior will soon fulfil his promise, "I will come again," by his visible appearance, we ask your attention to the evidence which is contained in the visions of Daniel. Read the second, seventh, and eighth chapters in connection.

In the second chapter of Daniel we have the record of Nebuchadnezzar's dream. He saw a great image, composed of four metallic substances.

The head of gold.

The breast and arms of silver.

The belly and thighs of brass.

The legs of iron.

Feet and toes partly iron and partly of potter's clay.

This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before him, and the form thereof was terrible. The different metals of which this image is composed, represent the several kingdoms designated in the vision; and are symbolical of the great ruling empires of the world, down to the establishment of Christ's kingdom.

Nebuchadnezzar was troubled on account of his dream, the subject of which escaped his memory. He applied to his astrologers to reveal the impressions which he had lost of his dream, to his mind; but they were unable to do it. He then issued a decree for their destruction, including Daniel and his religious companions. Then went Daniel to his house and made the thing known to his companions, that they would desire mercies of the God of heaven concerning this secret. And it was revealed to him in a night vision. And Daniel blessed the God of heaven. Here we see the occasion by which the outlines of the kingdoms of this world were unfolded from that period down to the end of time. Daniel was now inquired of by the king if he were able to make known the dream, and the interpretation thereof. He replied, "the secret which the king hath demanded, cannot the wise men, the astrologers, the magicians, the soothsayers, show unto the king; but there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days." He now relates the dream, and gives the interpretation. See Dan. ii. 31.

The golden part of the image is symbolical of the Chaldean Kingdom. For Daniel said unto the king in the interpretation, "Thou art this head of gold."

The Chaldean or Babylonian Kingdom, derived its name from its first city, Babel, and may be considered as the first great monarchy of which history gives any record. It was founded a short time after the flood. Three important eras in its history are noticed. The first commenced with Nimrod, when Babylon was the seat of power. The second, with Ninus, when Nineveh became the metropolis of the empire, and the third, when the sovereigns of the east resided in the palaces of Babylon. When Nebuchadnezzar came to the throne, he occupied the first part of his reign in embellishing the capital; and it was at this time that the events occurred which are recorded in Dan. ii. Isaiah calls Babylon the "golden city." The city is said to have comprehended a regular square, forty-eight miles circuit, and to have been eight times larger than London. It excelled in riches, and "goodly garments," in a very early period of the world, 1450 years B. C.: Josh. vii. 21; 2 Sam. xiii. 8.

In the days of her worldly grandeur and prosperity she said, in the language of the prophet, (Isa. xlviii. 7.,) "I am the queen of the world." From the appearance of this famous city, the strength of its fortifications, it would seem to bid defiance to any predictions of its fall. The walls were considered among the wonders of the world, and appeared, says one, rather like the bulwarks of nature than the workmanship of man. The temple of Belus was a half a mile in circumference, and a furlong in height. The hanging gardens, in successive terraces, towered as high as the battlements. The embankments restrained the river Euphrates — the brazen gates, the artificial lake, displayed the pride, wealth and grandeur of the mighty city. But prophecy pronounced its doom, more than a hundred years before a single enemy had entered within its suburbs. It crumbled away like a mighty embankment from the repeated invasion of its enemies, till it became a scene of entire desolation, (See the prophetic description, as given by Isa. xiii. and xiv. chapters.) This kingdom was divided and given to the Medes and Persians. Go up, O Elam, (or Persia,) besiege, O Media. The Lord hath raised up the spirit of the kings of the Medes, for his device is against Babylon to destroy it. The kings of Media and Persia, prompted by a common interest, entered into a league against Babylon, and with one accord, entrusted the command of their united armies to Cyrus, who eventually became successor of them both. Cyrus subdued the Armenians, who had revolted against Media, spared their king; bound them over anew to their allegiance, by kindness, rather than by force, and incorporated their army with his own. Hence the fulfillment of the prophecy, “I will punish the land of the Chaldeans; cut off the sower from Babylon, and him that handleth the sickle in the time of harvest. The land shall tremble and sorrow, for every purpose of the Lord shall be performed against Babylon, to make the land of Babylon a desolation without an inhabitant.”

I have been particular, in order to introduce what Daniel says to the king, in reference to the extent of his kingdom: “Thou, O king, art a king of kings; for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power and strength, and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of heaven hath he given into thy hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all.

In the parallel vision of Daniel, the Chaldean kingdom is represented by a LION, having eagle's wings, which may denote the rapidity of conquests, and the protection which that kingdom afforded to conquered nations. "I beheld till the wings thereof were plucked, and it was lifted up from the earth, and made to stand upon the feet as a man, and a man's heart was given to it." Dan. vii. 4. An explanation of a man's heart being given to the lion, will be found in Dan. iv. 34—36, where Nebuchadnezzar's understanding was restored to him.

"The breast and arms of silver," denote the Medo-Persian Kingdom, founded by Cyrus. As silver is inferior to gold, so Daniel informed Nebuchadnezzar that this kingdom should be inferior to the Babylonian — although it was more destructive, still it was inferior in wealth and grandeur.

In Daniel's vision this kingdom is symbolized by a bear, which is inferior in dignity to the lion, but more rapacious. A bear standing erect, and raising one side, or one dominion higher than the other, — which denotes the rise of the Persian over the Median kingdom.

Sir Isaac Newton says that the Persian bear first conquered Babylon, Lybia, and Egypt, and ground them with oppression, and cruelty. This may answer to the three ribs between the teeth of the bear.

The belly and sides of brass denote the Grecian monarchy founded by Alexander, the son and successor of Philip, king of Macedon. As brass is inferior to silver, so was the Grecian inferior to the Persian kingdom.

In the visions of Daniel this kingdom is symbolized by a LEOPARD, inferior in some respects to the bear, but more fierce, and more rapid in its movements; having "upon its back four wings of a swiftly flying fowl," which may express the rapidity of Alexander's conquests. Dan. vii. 6. In Dan. viii. 4—7, he is represented by a one-horned he goat, running over the earth so swiftly as not to touch it, attacking the ram with two horns, and trampling him under foot, without any being able to rescue him. Alexander was chosen by the Greeks, General of their troops. He raised an army of 34,000 men, and led them into Asia against the Persians. In one campaign he subdued nearly all Asia Minor, and afterwards defeated, in the narrow passes which led from Syria to Cilicia, the army of Darius, which consisted of four hundred thousand foot, and one hundred thousand horse. In the short space of eight or nine years, this prince subdued a large part of Europe, and immense regions in Asia. He finally gave himself up to intemperance, became sick, and died in Babylon in the thirty-third year of his age, and the twelfth of his reign. His kingdom was divided among his four Generals, represented by the four heads of the leopard in Daniel's vision. Cassander reigned over Greece and Macedon—Lysimachus over Thrace and Bythinia, —Ptolemy over Egypt, and Selucus over Syria.

The legs of iron fitly represent the Roman Empire in its greatest power. And as iron, says Daniel in his interpretation of the dream, breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things, so this fourth (Roman) kingdom shall break in pieces, and subdue all these, the gold, the silver and the brass — i. e. it shall surpass in strength, cruelty and military prowess, all the other kingdoms.

In Daniel's vision of the four beasts, this last empire, in the fullness of its strength, is symbolized by a beast that is terrible, exceedingly strong, having great iron teeth, nails of brass. rending asunder, devouring and stamping the residue with his feet. This is a just description of the Roman empire in the time of its great strength, when it was a most formidable power. The broken remnants of the preceding kingdoms were trampled under its feet.

The feet and ten toes, partly of iron and partly of potters' clay, presents the same power, when divided into ten kingdoms by the irruptions of the northern barbarians.

In Daniel's vision the same power is typified by the ten horns, which are said by the prophet to be ten kingdoms that should arise. The number of horns in the beast corresponds to the ten toes in the great image, both of which represent the ten kingdoms which formed the divided Western Roman Empire, extending towards the west as far as Britain, which is included in it,—towards the south as far as the Mediterranean,—north as far as the Danube and the Rhine, and east to the limits of the Grecian Empire. According to the testimony of the Italian historian, Machival, this kingdom was divided into ten sovereignties.

These were the first ten kingdoms which were established within the bounds of the Roman Empire, and answer to the ten horns given by Daniel in the vision. Three of these were plucked up before the little horn arose, viz : The Heruli in Italy, A. D. 493. The Vandals in Africa, A. D. 534. The Ostrogoths in Italy, A. D. 538, when Belesarius took possession of the city of Rome.

The little horn which Daniel saw arising out of the beast, in place of the three which were plucked up, had eyes like the eyes of a man, a mouth speaking great things, a look more stout than his fellows, speaking great things against the Most High, wearing out the saints of the Most High, changing times, laws, and seasons, for a time, times and a half.

Rome. Eyes express sagacity, foresight, and constant watchfulness. "A mouth speaking great things." This is the power that shall "make war with the saints and prevail against them." It is well known that Popery arrogates to itself divine titles, exacts obedience to its decrees upon the penalty of death, darkens the truth of God's word, changes "times, laws, and seasons," grants indulgences and pardons for the worst of crimes, and persecutes those who maintain the religion of God. This state of things shall be, as Daniel declares, "for a plain how we know that the picture of a friend, which is generally acknowledged, and is by ourselves felt to be a most exact likeness, is his picture. The evidence by which we are assured that the LITTLE HORN of Daniel's fourth beast, and the Man of Sin of St. Paul, and the Lamb-like beast of St. John, all describe the Papal power, is precisely similar to that by which we know that Isaiah liii. relates to our Lord. The resemblance between the prophetic descriptions, and the living character, is in the one quite as exact as in the other, and it has been acknowledged by the nearly unanimous voice of the Protestant churches. Among the witnesses for so applying those prophecies, we enumerate Luther, Calvin, Cranmer, Ridley, Hooper, Jewel, Knox, Usher, and the whole body of Protestant writers of these kingdoms, since the era of the Reformation, with many foreign divines, including the names of Mede, Brightman, Cressener, Whiston, Sir Isaac Newton, W. Lowth, Dr. H. More, Jurui, Vitringa, Pyle, Dr. S. Clarke, Fleming." [Pref. to the 2d ed. of Political Destiny of the Earth. Published 1840, page 8.]

time, times and a half," which means three years and a half, reckoning a day for a year, according to the prophetical mode of calculation, and amounts to 1260 years.

This power, by which Christians were worn out, and persecuted to death, was given into the hands of the Roman Pontiff, by a formal act of Justinian, Emperor of Constantinople, when he declared the Bishop of Rome head of all the churches, in A. D. 534. The power was not established till 538. This power was to continue for a "time, times and a half,"—1260 years ; which, from the time of its establishment, brings us down to 1798. Then, as Dr. Clarke says, the French republican army under Gen. Berthier, took possession of Rome, and entirely superceded the whole Papal power, instituting in its place a republican form of government, and carried the Pope a captive to France, where in 1799, he died. This is what we must understand by "his dominion being taken away." But Papacy is still prevailing, and will continue to prevail, until the kingdom of God shall be set up at the coming of the Son of man, when the "body of the fourth beast shall be given to the burning flame," yet it is not in possession of the power which it had before the events of 1798.

In a chronological table, at the end of "General History, Ancient and Modern," by Alexander F. Tytler, we find the following items: —

1798. The Papal Government SUPPRESSED by the French. The Pope quits Rome Feb. 26.

1799. Death of Pope Pius VI.

1804. The Pope arrives at Fontainebleau, and has an interview with Bonaparte. November.

1808. The French troops enter Rome, and seize the Pope's dominions. February.

1810. A decree was issued, uniting Rome to France. Feb. 17.

1813. A decree of the Spanish Cortes, for abolishing the inquisition in Spain, was carried into effect. April.

Rev. George Croly, of England, a learned and accurate writer, in his work on the Apocalypse, published in 1827, says :

"On the 10th of February, 1798, the French army under Berthier, entered Rome ; took possession of the city, and made the Pope and the cardinal prisoners. Within a week Pius VI. was deposed ; Rome was declared a Republic:

the tree of liberty was planted ; and the city and the states were delivered up to a long series of the deepest insults, requisitions, military murders, and the general injury and degradation of the feelings and property of all classes of the people. Pius VI. died in captivity. Pius VII. was dragged across the Alps to crown Napoleon and held in duress, and was finally restored only on the fall of the French Empire. The papal independence was abolished by France, and the son of Napoleon was declared King of Rome." See also Thiers' French Revolution, Vol. 4. p. 246.

Now Daniel tells us that he saw till that a stone was cut out without hands which smote the image upon his feet, that were of iron and clay, and break them to pieces. The explanation of this part of the vision is recorded in the interpretation of the dream. Dan. ii. 44, 45 : " And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed : and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever. Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold ; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter : and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure."

Here it is evident that the last kingdom typified by the stone (cut out of the mountain) which falls upon the toes of the image, (upon all other kingdoms) is the kingdom yet to come. The stone denotes Christ, and the mountain his glorious, everlasting kingdom, for it is to stand for ever and ever, even for ever.

In the first vision of Daniel the stone, which is Christ, is represented as possessing the kingdom ; in the second vision the kingdom is represented as possessed by the saints, as ultimately gaining the victory, after being "worn down" and persecuted by the destroying power of Papacy.

THE KINGDOM.

Let us now look at the nature of this kingdom. Is it a spiritual or a personal reign of Christ ? It is evident that the four great monarchies were visible dominions, and the rules of fair criticism, says Mr. Noel, demand the conclusion that the stone and the kingdom of the saints be likewise visible and terrestrial, and thus we are led to anticipate the hour, when persecutions, and despotism shall have run out their disastrous course, and the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ.

By recurring to Daniel ii. 44, we find that "in the days of these kings" (represented by the ten toes in the image) "shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed," and that the stone cut out of the mountain does not smite the image upon the legs, but upon the toes. During the undivided state of the Roman Empire, the gospel had made great progress, but the stone had not yet smitten the image, nor did the saints possess the kingdom. Papal power had the sway, and Christians were persecuted by it for the 1260 years. The kingdom is yet future, for it shall not be left to other people, and must have an external form, as well as a spiritual character. The interpretation cannot otherwise answer to the emblem, and be in perfect harmony with so many passages of scripture, in which Christ is described as appearing in his personal glory.

We will notice some passages of scripture in support of the visible kingdom of our Lord upon the earth.

In John xviii. 36, we have the answer of Christ to Pilate. "Jesus answered, my kingdom is not of this world ; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, but now is my kingdom not from hence." At that time the Savior was despised and rejected of men, and the world was under the influence of sin, but when Satan is cast out, the prince of this world destroyed, it will be by the stone smiting the image upon the toes. Then Christ will have the government of the world, and not Satan, as he will have till the time come that "the saints possess the kingdom."

Zech. xiv. 4, "And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives." Ver. 5, latter clause, "And the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee."

Math. xxv. 34, "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Luke xii. 32, "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Luke xxii. 29, "And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me, that ye may eat and drink at my table, in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." 2 Tim. iv. 1. "I charge thee, therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead, at his appearing and his kingdom."

There is other evidence that the kingdom of God did not commence at the ascension of Christ, but is yet to come, when he shall appear in his glory. At the very time of his ascension, Christ was asked if he would at that time restore the kingdom to Isreal ; his reply leads us to conclude that it was not to be at that time.

Paul exhorts the Thessalonians "to walk worthy of God, who had called them to his kingdom and glory," and to walk so as that they might be accounted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which they had suffered. James speaks of Christians as being heirs of the kingdom which God hath promised to them that love him ; all these passages imply that the kingdom was yet future.

Believing, therefore, that the kingdom of Christ is not a spiritual reign which he exercises in the hearts of his people, but a kingdom to be set up at his personal manifestation, we cherish the hope of its being at hand, when "he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father, when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power," and his kingdom shine forth in everlasting splendor, without end. Some adduce the following passage of our Savior, as an objection to this view of the kingdom, viz. "There be some standing here who shall not taste of death until they see the kingdom of God come with power." By examining the context and comparing it with the passage which relates to his transfiguration on the mount, when he appeared unto Peter, James, and John, together with Moses and Elijah, it will be seen that this interview was a specimen of "his coming and kingdom," a glorious manifestation of the nature of his kingdom. Peter calls this the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. The declaration of the Savior was fulfilled.

Another passage, which is quoted as an objection to this view of the kingdom, is in Luke xvii. 20, 21 : It is the answer given by the Savior when the Pharisees inquired when the kingdom of God should come. "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation ; neither shall they say, lo here ! or lo there ! for behold, the kingdom of God is within you." The usual explanation of the passage is, that the kingdom of God within you, signifies the grace of God in the heart. If this be the interpretation of the text, then the Pharisees possessed it, while Joseph of Arimathea was waiting for it. See Mark xv. 43. Joseph could not have been waiting for the kingdom if he already possessed it ; i. e. he could not have been waiting to be a Christian if he was one already ; nor could he be waiting for it to come in a spiritual sense, if it was among the Pharisees. Christ was among them, and his gospel was believed by many, but the kingdom of glory was not manifested. Its approach was to be known by certain signs, and therefore " cometh not with observation." Some thought that the kingdom of God would immediately appear, but the Savior corrected their mistake by a parable in Luke, chap. xix.

Let us consider the angel's prophecy to Mary, respecting Christ. Luke i. 32, 33. " He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever ; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." To apply this passage to the reign of Christ in this world, would be forcing a construction on the words of the text which they were never designed to convey. The authority of David as king of Israel, was delegated to him by Jehovah, in whose name he reigned in Jerusalem. The same power is promised to Christ by the Father ; see Chron. xvii. 12, 14 ; Isa. ix. 6, 7 ; Jer. xxiii. 5 ; xxxiii. 12—26 ; Amos ix. 11 ; Acts ii. 30. In Acts the promise is made in proof of the resurrection. David, as a prophet, saw the necessity of a resurrection of the body in order that the promise of the Messiah's sitting upon his throne might be fulfilled. David's kingdom ceased ; but of Christ's kingdom there shall be no end." His sceptre will be an everlasting sceptre.

At the institution of the Lord's supper, the Savior said to his disciples that he would eat no more of the passover "until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God." And that he would no more drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God should come. Then having described the traitor, Judas, and repressed the ambition of his apostles for earthly greatness, he addressed them as follows : "Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations, (trials.) And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me." I understand the kingdom here to be the same as that which Christ and the saints will possess at his coming, and when "they shall inherit all things," by virtue of their union with Christ, who is the heir of all things, Heb. i. 2. Since Christ left the world, and ascended to the Father, he has not drunk of the fruit of the vine with his disciples, but he will drink it new with them when they possess the kingdom.

In Math. xix. 27, 28, 29, the Savior made a promise to his disciples by the way of consolation and encouragement, as he was about leaving them. It is a reply to Peter's question. "Then answered Peter, and said unto him, behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee ; what shall we have therefore ? And Jesus said unto them, Verily, I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive a hundred fold, and shall inherit everlasting life."

The regeneration must refer to the time of the restitution—when all things shall be made new, Rev. xxi. 5, and when Christ shall sit on the throne of his glory—Therefore, ye which have followed me, (shall,) in the regeneration of the earth, together with all those who are made conformable to Christ's death, (with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob,) sit down at the marriage supper of the Lamb. Now we have no evidence in the scriptures of more than one period, (and that is at Christ's coming in glory) when the "thrones shall be set," the crown of eternal life awarded, and the saints possess the kingdom under the whole heaven. This makes plain the passage in Rom. viii. 15—21, where the sufferings of this present life are said to be nothing compared with the glory to be revealed to those who are "joint heirs with Christ." Hence Christians are said to be "sealed with that holy spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession. This possession is not heaven ; for heaven is not redeemed. The meaning is plainly taught in Rom. viii. when creation, i. e. the earth, shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, and the righteous be redeemed from the grave. "They are raised up together, and made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus."

THE KINGDOM DELIVERED UP.

This is an important point respecting THE KINGDOM. The passage is recorded in 1 Cor. xv. 24, in connection with the resurrection.—The whole chapter contains a sound argument relative to the resurrection of Christ, and those who are to be raised at his coming. Among some of the Greeks, the doctrine of the resurrection was considered erroneous. This error was imbibed by the church at Corinth. To correct this error is the design of the apostle in the chapter. Having given the order of the resurrection, he then says, verse 24, "Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father, when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power." The end here must mean the consummation of all things, as well as the end of Christ's mediatorial reign, for he must reign (in the capacity of a mediator) till he hath put all enemies under his feet. This will fulfill the prophecy in Ps. cx. 1, "The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool."

At the end of the mediatorial reign, he will deliver up the kingdom to God the Father; but not till after the resurrection, as the 23d verse shows. "Every man in his own order, Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." CHRIST AS THE FIRST FRUITS is the great antitype of the Paschal wave sheaf, Lev. xxiii. 10—14, by which the harvest of barley was sanctified. The end is when the harvest is gathered in ; when the wheat will be separated from the tares, which our Savior in the parable designated as the end of the world, and when the kingdom will be delivered up to the Father. It will be necessary, therefore, for the dead in Christ to rise first, in order to harmonize with the order of the resurrection ; and also to complete the work of Christ as a Redeemer of both soul and body. The gospel has made provision for both, and when the last trumpet sounds, the dust of the saints will be gathered up, not a fragment will be lost. The grave is not a land of forgetfulness. It is vital now—a region of soft and pleasant slumbers to those who die in the Lord. But they will come forth—

Shall these vile bodies shine ;
And every shape and every face
Look heavenly and divine.”

Then, (after the resurrection,) will Christ deliver up the kingdom to the Father. As a mediator he received from the Father an important trust,—he acts in this office until the times of the restitution, (anapsuxis) reanimation of all things, when his intercession ceases, and he no longer acts as mediator. Thus Dan. says, vii. 13, 14, "I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, (i. e. the Father,) and they brought him near before him. "And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him : his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom, that which shall not be destroyed." And this will be when he shall have put down, or abolished all that opposed God, and trampled on his truth. This must include the kingdoms of this world, the powers of darkness, Satan, death, and the grave. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. Then will he cease from his mediation and be King in Zion.

This view of the kingdom appears to harmonize with express declarations in the scriptures concerning Christ's kingly office. Then he will be known, and acknowledged, as Israel's king—with the crown of glory—and the universal sceptre ; and as the angel's roll along his triumphant chariot, they will shout, "Behold your King !"*

* Dr. Cressener, a distinguished theologian of the 17th century, thus writes : "The kingdom of the Son of man in the 7th of Daniel, is the second coming of Christ in glory. One would be easily persuaded of

We have now seen that the visions of Daniel include four earthly monarchies. The Chaldean, Medo-Persian, Grecian, and the Roman, which are succeeded by the visible and everlasting kingdom of God. The Roman power is to continue in its weakened and divided state, until one like unto the Son of man shall come in the clouds of heaven. See Dan. vii. 9. "I beheld till the thrones were set, and the Ancient of days did sit," i. e. Jehovah, in whose infinite duration the past, present, and the future are alike. "His raiment was white as snow,"—the emblem of his perfect holiness, "the hair of his head like the pure wool ; his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him,"—denoting the consuming splendors of his glory, and the terrors of his avenging justice—"thousands of thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him ; the judgment was set, and the books were opened."

this at the first sight of its glorious properties, and especially upon the account of its universal command, and the eternal duration of it ; for what else is his coming in glory for, but to take possession of the whole world, and to reign with the Father and his saints to all eternity ? And though he delivers up his kingdom to his Father at the last end, yet he has so much share in it, as to have it here called his everlasting kingdom."

The total annihilation of all earthly kingdoms is expressed in Daniel, by the strongest images that nature or language can furnish. In one vision the ten horns, or parts of the Roman government, are broken in pieces by the stone, and ground to powder, and carried away, so that no place is found for them. In the other vision Daniel says, "they are consumed by fire," so that not a remnant of them is left. The history of these kingdoms so completely harmonizes with the revelation concerning them, made to Daniel, that our faith is confirmed as to the word of God, and in the near approach of our Lord to establish his glorious kingdom. "The kingdom (says David) is the Lord's, and he is Governor among the nations. He holdeth the times and seasons in his power, he changeth the times and seasons, he setteth up kings, he putteth down kings, and none can stay his hand, or say what doest thou?" These earthly monarchies have all existed, and were foretold long before. They are a kind of harbingers to prepare the way for the last advent of Christ. The Roman Empire, covering a million and a half of square miles, extending over the richest and most fertile portions of the earth, existing first in its Pagan, and then in its Papal form, has nearly reached the utmost limits of its age. Its destiny is sealed by the plain declarations of prophecy, and its power will be destroyed by the brightness of a Savior's coming,

The vision of Daniel in the eighth chapter begins with the Medo-Persian Kingdom, because the Chaldean kingdom had passed away. Babylon had fallen. Dan. viii. 7, 8, is a brief history of Alexander's life, conquests, and division of his kingdom into four parts, which are already explained. The little horn of the Macedonian goat represents Pagan and Papal Rome, for it continues until the end, when it is broken without hand, the same time that the stone strikes the feet of the image, to grind it to powder.

PAPAL ROME.—This little horn waxed exceeding great, toward the south, toward the east, and toward the pleasant land. And it waxed great even toward the host of heaven ; and it cast down some of the host, and of the stars, to the ground, and stamped upon them : Yea, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host ; and by him the daily (or continual) sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down ; and an host was given him against the daily, by reason of transgression, and it cast down the truth to the ground, and it practised and prospered. Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily [sacrifice,] and the transgression of desolation to give the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me unto two thousand three hundred days.*

Now it is evident, from reading the visions of Daniel, that they refer to the same events in the kingdoms, and that the little horn is the same in both visions, and refers to the Papal power. The little horn cannot mean Antiochus Epiphanes, because he died (overwhelmed with pain and grief) in the town of Tabes, among the mountains of Paratacene, 164 years before Christ. The little horn did not arise till after Christ—not till after the three horns of the Roman kingdom was plucked up.

That Antiochus trod under foot the sanctuary and the host, for 2300 literal days, no one has ever yet proved. No one can tell exactly how long he oppressed the Jews. "The Pope, (says Duffield,) as the little horn which subdued the three others before it, wears to this day his appropriate triple crown, and answers, in every aspect, to the description which is given of him in Daniel.—page 283.

The vision of Daniel is one connected chain of events, concerning four earthly monarchies, which are succeeded by the kingdom of God. The vision of the Roman power, which is the fourth beast, does not terminate until it is destroyed by the brightness of the Savior's last advent. The chain of Kingdoms is as follows, viz :

1. The Chaldean Kingdom.
2. The Medo-Persian Kingdom.
3. The Grecian Kingdom.
4. The Roman Kingdom with its division into Pagan and Papal Rome.
5. The Kingdom of God.

Now, Daniel wished to understand the vision, Dan. viii. 15. He sought for the meaning. Gabriel came to make him understand the vision, v. 16. For this very purpose a man's voice called and said, Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision. It is evident, also, from verse 17th, that Gabriel would have Daniel understand that the vision would be opened at the time of the end. In verse 19th, the end is explained as the last end of the indignation. Daniel was also told to shut up the vision, as it would be for many days.

Now, as the time appointed for the vision is designated by the 2300 days, then, if we can ascertain when the vision commenced, we can tell when it will end, whatever becomes of the world. The events in the vision evidently prove that the 2300 days are not literal days, but must be taken for prophetic time — a day for a year.

THE INSTRUCTION WHICH DANIEL RECEIVED CONCERNING THE VISION.

While Daniel was engaged in prayer, Gabriel, whom he had seen in the vision, at the beginning, touched him, about the time of the evening oblation, and informed him and talked with him, and said, “O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth, and I am come to shew thee, for thou art greatly beloved, therefore, understand the matter and consider the vision. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy. Know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks; the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times. And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself; and the people of the Prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week; and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations, he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined, shall be poured upon the desolator."

When was this decree made? In the seventh year of Artaxerxes' reign, when the walls of Jerusalem were built in troublous times. See Ezra vii. 11, 13: Neh. iv. 17, 23. The chronology of the Bible, as given by Rollin and Josephus, tells us that Ezra started to go up to Jerusalem on the 12th day of the first month, (Ezra viii. 31) just 457 years B. C. 33 years of Christ's life added to this number makes 490—just seventy weeks of years.

The seventy weeks is divided into three parts:—

I. Seven weeks the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times. This work was accomplished under the administrations of Ezra and Nehemiah, who reigned over Jerusalem, as governors, forty-nine years. This fulfils the seven weeks of years.

II. Sixty-two weeks unto the Messiah the Prince, or 434 years. Seven weeks in building the city.

III. The confirmation of the covenant for one week, or seven years. The covenant was confirmed by the preaching of the gospel.

Computation by weeks of years was common among the Jews. Every seventh was the sabbatical year; hence, according to their computation, seventy weeks amounted to four hundred and ninety years. We are furnished with internal evidence that the 2300 days of chapter viii. 14, and the 70 weeks of chapter ix. 24, have a common commencement. The events of those weeks are sufficient proof; and the angel told Daniel when to commence them, viz: with the command to restore and to build Jerusalem. These events received their fulfilment before the "overspreading of abominations" commenced. The 70 weeks must be a part of the vision which extended to the cutting off of the Messiah, by which the vision was sealed, or made sure. Seventy weeks of the vision are determined, &c. The word determined originally signifies to cut off, or separate. The question might be asked, cut off from what? The answer must be, from the vision; — for there is no other subject in Daniel from which seventy weeks are separated.

The seventy weeks, which we believe to be a part of the whole vision, commenced with the decree delivered by Artaxerxes Longimanus. It is the opinion of some, that this event immediately followed the decree of Cyrus. But Prideaux says, "that the state of Judah and Jerusalem "only" began to be restored. And that it was not until the time of Ezra and Nehemiah, under the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, that the church and state of the Jews, by virtue of several decrees, were thoroughly restored. With this fact agrees Ezra vii. 14, which plainly shows that the command, in Daniel, to "restore and build Jerusalem," though repeated, successively, under the reigns of three different kings, did not go into force only by the authority of Artaxerxes Longimanus.

The next event, in the order of time, is in Daniel ix. 26. — "The people of the Prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary." This leads us to notice the history of Pagan Rome, which commenced its power with the Jews 158 years before Christ, and, according to its age, (Rev. xiii. 8.) lasted till 508, A. D., when the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the abomination which makes desolate was set up. The thirty years intervening from this period, to the time when the Bishop of Rome was made head over all the churches, brings us down to 538, which is the period for commencing the time, times and a half, or the 1260 years. We say years, because this interpretation is strengthened by reference to the same events, under similar expressions of time, in Rev. xi. 2. The holy city is given to be trodden under foot, forty and two months — thirty days to a month —  $42 \times 30 = 1260$ . The witnesses were to prophecy in sackcloth a thousand two hundred and three score days — 1260 years: Rev. xii. 14. The persecuted woman fled into the wilderness, that she should be "nourished for a time, times and a half time." Here is evidence that these events and periods of time are identical, in which the true church should be oppressed, and the religion of Christ "despised and rejected of men."

The 1260 years from the time of its commencement, 538, brings us down to 1798, What happened then? The French monarchy was shaken to its foundation, and fulfills, by decisive evidence in the history of that era, that the judgment to consume and destroy the dominion of Papacy began to sit, and, consequently, 1260 years have elapsed — the period during which the saints, times, and laws of the church were in the hands of the Papal power, is past — and must have closed at this time.

In a volume entitled "An Introduction to Christianity," dated 1808, published in this country, by J. Soule, [now bishop] and T. Mason, for the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, second American, from the improved English edition, is the following passage:

Page 151 — "The two thousand three hundred days; that is, years, of Daniel, for the God of heaven to set up an everlasting kingdom, and cleanse the sanctuary, are expired, or nearly so: Dan. viii. 13, 14. Likewise the fall of the tenth part of the city by a great earthquake, and the slaughter of the seven thousand men, seems to have been STRIKINGLY ACCOMPLISHED by the French revolution. Their bidding defiance to the powers of the Pontificate was sudden and unexpected, as an earthquake, and attended with the slaughter of more than a million of men. The aggrandizement of this empire, and the titles assumed by Bonaparte, Emperor of France, and King of Italy, are declarations to the world that THE TEMPORAL POWERS OF THE POPE EXIST NO MORE!"

"The Directory [who were Napoleon's tools at Paris] feeling or affecting to feel a high degree of indignation at the insult offered to their ambassador, and at the loss of their General, transmitted instructions to General Berthier to march to the Roman capital. On the 10th of February, 1798, the French army arrived at that place, and the castle of St. Angelo, containing the Pope, and the greater part of his cardinals, surrendered on the first summons. The inhabitants, freed from restraint by the captivity of their rulers, and encouraged by the presence of the French army, assembled in the campo Vaccino, the ancient Roman Forum, and, at the instigation of two of the nobles, and an advocate of some reputation, planted the tree of liberty in front of the capitol, proclaimed their independence, and instituted the Roman Republic. All the splendor and magnificence, of which the Catholic worship is susceptible, were employed to celebrate this memorable victory over the head of its faith. Every church in Rome resounded with thanks to the Supreme Disposer of events, for the glorious REVOLUTION that had taken place; and while the dome of St. Peter's was illuminated without, fourteen cardinals, dressed in the gorgeous apparel appertaining to functions which they were fated soon after to abdicate, presided at a solemn Te Deum, within the walls of that superb basilic. The DEPOSED PONTIFF, exiled from his country, was conveyed, by order of the Directory, first to Braincon, and afterwards to Valence, in France, where the infirmities of age, and the pressure of misfortune, terminated his existence, on the 29th of August, 1799, in the 82d year of his age, and 24th of his Pontificate." — The History of the wars of the French revolution. By Edward Baines, of England. Book II. Chap. 4. pp. 222, 223.

The Hon Gerard Noel says, "Can the overthrow of the monastic orders, plunder of the church property, the destruction of religion by legislative enactment, and the massacre of a hundred thousand of her clergy, be consistent with any reasonable estimate of domination and power? Under such a terrific judgment upon the persecutor, can we refuse to admit that the period of the twelve hundred and sixty years has terminated its course. And should the blow already given to the Papal power be correctly deemed incompatible with its long established domination, then is the probability even great, that within the limit of another generation, "the sign of the Son of Man may appear in the heavens, and the redemption of his church be revealed." — Lit. No. 3, 1840

The three following numbers of Daniel, time times, and a half, or 1260 years — 1290 years, and 1335, are of importance in the prophecy. They all include the destructive power of the Papal Beast, as described in chap. vii. 24, 25; and in chap. viii. 10 — 12, 24, 25; and in Rev. xiii. The description in each of the chapters bears a strong resemblance, and sets forth the persecutions which took place under the little horn, when the faith and integrity of the people of God was put to the test.

Now it is evident, from the prophecy of Daniel, that the Roman Empire was to be destroyed. The daily was taken away, when that Empire was divided into several small kingdoms, which occurred between the fifth and sixth centuries. A little horn was to arise. The Bishop of Rome did arise to great temporal power, and conquered three of the ten kingdoms, into which the empire had been divided. Then he assumed the triple crown, and retained it until his temporal dominion was taken in A. D. 1798. From this period back to 538, when he assumed this power, gives us the period of 1260 years. This is the same Beast which is described in Revelation, that was, and is not, and yet is. It was in full dominion during the time, times and a half, or 1260 years, and is not in possession of the same power, as the event of 1798 testifies, when the Pope was taken prisoner, and yet is prevailing throughout the world. A prominent leader of the order said, “Let the whole system go to ruin; I will engage to restore it in a short time, and that to a more perfect state than before.” This power is spoken of as existing in some shape or other, till the last great battle, when he goes into perdition, and is destroyed by the brightness of Christ’s coming.

But "the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of Days came, and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom."

On this subject the Protestant church has been recently aroused, and alarmed. Plans are in operation to check the progress of Papacy in our land — the Church feels that vigorous efforts must be made. The Address of the American Protestant Association, recently formed in Philadelphia, testifies on the prevailing influence of Papacy. The following is an extract from that address: —

"But while misapprehension, apathy, and false sympathy prevail, to so great an extent, among Protestants, we are free to confess that, we look with deep solicitude upon the extraordinary efforts now making by the Papal Hierarchy to obtain a firm footing in this country. Addressing, as we are, a Protestant population, who have free access to the Bible, and who reverence its authority, we may be permitted to remind you, that the ground on which the glorious reformation was undertaken and achieved, was, that Popery was the great Anti-Christ, so minutely delineated in the prophecies of Daniel, in the epistles, and in the Book of Revelation. We may further remind you that, according to the "sure word of prophecy," this anti-christian power, after suffering a temporary depression, (as Romanism has done since the 16th century) is, in "the last days," to gather up its waning strength, and allying itself, perhaps, with civil despotism, to make a final onset upon Christianity, — an onset surpassing in fury, and malignity, all its previous assaults, and to be attended with signal, though short lived, success. With these prophecies before you, we would ask whether there is nothing ominous of evil in the recent movements of the Church of Rome.'

In Dan. xii. we have two additional numbers — 30 and 45. The number 30 is added to the 1260, and the whole expressed by "a thousand two hundred and ninety days. The additional number of 45 is expressed in verse 12th, "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days."

But for how long a time shall he have this dominion? Let the angel answer: "Until a time, times, and the dividing of time."

What does this mean? Compare the descriptions.

John, Rev. xiii. 2. The beast which I saw was like unto a LEOPARD, and his feet were as the feet of a BEAR, and his mouth as the mouth of a LION.	Daniel vii. 7. Let us compare the information we have thus gained :—

1260 days=42 months

Daniel vii. 26. They [the saints, and times and laws] shall be given into his hand.

Daniel vii. 21. The same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them.

Daniel vii. 8, 20, 25. A mouth speaking great things.—A mouth that spake very great things.—He shall speak great words against the Most High.

Daniel vii. 25. They shall be given into his hand until a TIME, and TIMES, and the DIVIDING OF TIME.

Daniel vii. 26. They shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end.

Rev. xii. 6. And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days. [1260 days.]

1260 days=3 1-2 times

These cannot be literal days, for the dominion of the horn (Papacy,) was not taken away in that length of time.

The Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge says, "It is a remarkable fact, that the DOMINION of the Papacy, in that very kingdom which had been its chief stay for ages, was DESTROYED and disannulled by an act of the French Assembly in the year 1793, just 1260 years from its establishment."

Here then we have four marks fixed, thus:

533	1260 years	-	1793
<hr/>
	1260 years
538			1798

Can we ask for any more proof that this application of the prophecy is the right one? In the 10th, 11th and 12th chapters of Daniel, we have a continued discourse from the angel Gabriel, conducting Daniel's view to the glorious period, when "they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever."

Two questions come up here: 1. What was taken away to make room for popery? Ans. Paganism. 2. When was it taken away? Ans. In 508, when the last of the ten kings (whose kingdoms were the ten horns of the fourth beast) was converted to Christ.

Daniel enquires, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders? And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and swear by him that liveth forever, that it shall be for a time, times and an half, and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished."

And I heard, but I understood not: then said I, O, my Lord, what shall be the end of these things? And he said, Go thy way, Daniel; for the words are closed up, and sealed till the time of the end. Many shall be purified and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand. But the wise shall understand. And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate be set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days. But go thou thy way till the end be, for thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot, at the end of the days, i. e. the 1335 days, which commenced when the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the abomination which maketh desolate was set up.

Here two abominations are mentioned — the DAILY, and the TRANSGRESSION OF DESOLATION: Dan. viii. 13. Both of these were desolating powers, although the latter is called, in Dan. xi. 31, and xii. 11, “the abomination that maketh desolate.” The daily refers to Pagan Rome, — the transgression of desolation to Papal. The influence of Paganism, or the daily, began to decline under the agency of the preaching of the gospel, till at length, it entirely ceased, and Christianity became the religion of the Roman Empire; and Constantine gave his influence in its favor, in the fourth century. The altar of Paganism was not entirely removed from Rome, for it was not taken away till about A. D. 508, when, according to Gibbon’s testimony, Vitalian, with an army of Huns and Bulgarians, mostly idolators, declared themselves the champions of the Catholic faith. Hence the taking away of the daily, or the end of Paganism. Then appears the abomination that maketh desolate, or the transgression of desolation. This abomination the Savior refers to in Math xxiv. 15; and speaks of its standing in the holy place, and, as Paul saith, sitteth in the temple of God. See 2 Thess. ii. 4. The holy place signifies the church, the people of God, who are called, in the Scriptures, the "holy people." It is evident that the Savior, in Matthew, alludes to the "transgression of desolation," the Papal power, and not to the "daily," or Paganism. The Papal power commenced, as we have seen, 538, when the time of trouble, more especially, began, to the people of God. There has been great tribulation to the church during the 1260 years. "The severity of this tribulation," says a recent writer on this subject, "began to be broken before the 1260 years expired; that the church was to remain in the wilderness. [See Rev. xii. 6.] The kings began to make war on that desolating power, [See Rev. xvii. 12 — 16,] before the whole period allotted to it had expired; and the Reformation commenced about the same time, and thus the days in the violence of persecution were shortened, for the sake of 'the elect,' the church."

THE TIME OF THE END.

The objection which is so strenuously urged against fixing on the time of the end, is without foundation in the Scriptures. God has measured out time to his people, by days months, and years, as every student of the Bible must acknowledge.

The prophecy of Noah is the first chronological prophecy on the record of God's word, and one of interest to us who are living at the closing period of the time of the Gentiles. Our Lord refers to it as descriptive of the world previous to his second advent. Gen. vi. 3. "And the Lord said, My spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh, yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years." This passage is explained by a parallel mode of speech, in Neh. ix. 30. "Yet many years didst thou forbear them, and testified against them by thy spirit in thy prophets." It is very evident that the passage in Genesis implies that God had long borne with the antedelvians, but all to no purpose. The end of his forbearance is now determined by the 120 days. "My Spirit shall not always strive with man;" i. e. shall not keep up the process of judgment, rebuke and mercy. At the time appointed it shall cease.

Here is a prophetic date fixed for a merciful purpose, for a warning to those on whom the judgment should come, if they repented not. The time is here specified, — a hundred and twenty days.

Other dates are determined by the wisdom of God, for equally important purposes as this.

Mr. Habershon, in his Guide to the study of chronological prophecy, has divided the chronological portion of it into eight parts, as follows:

PERIOD I.	PROPHECY.
From the call of Abraham, and from the mockery of Isaac to Israel's deliverance out of Egypt, 430 years, from 1921 to 1491, B. C. And 400 years from 1891 to 1491, B. C.	Gen.xv.12—14 See also Acts vii. 6, 7. Ex. xii. 40, 42. See Gal. iii. 1.
PERIOD II.
From the first year of Ahaz, to the final overthrow of the kingdom of Israel, 65 years, from 742 to 677 B. C.	Isa. vii. 1, 9.
PERIOD III.
From the commencement of Judah's captivity in Babylon, to the decree of Cyrus, 70 years; from 606 to 536, B. C. And from the destruction of Jerusalem to the decree of Darius Hystaspes, 70 years from 588 to 518 B. C.	Jer.xxv.8—12. xxix. 10.
PERIOD IV.
From the edict given to Ezra; in the seventh year of Artaxerxes, to the death of Christ, 490 years from 457—6, B. C. to A. D. 33, or 34.	Dan. ix. 1, 4, 20, 27.

PERIOD V.

This admits of a double application.

PROPHECY.

First, to the kingdom of Israel. 28.31—33, 40, 41, 42, 44, 45. From the final destruction of the kingdom of Israel to its restoration, 2520 years, from B. C. 727, to A. D. 1793 ; and from B. C. 677, to A. D. 1843—4.

Lev.xxvii.14—
25, 32.
Dan. iv.16,23,

Second application, (Judah,) from the dethronement of the house of David, and the destruction of the kingdom of Judah, to the millenium, 2520 years ; from B. C. 677 to A. D. 1843—4.

PERIOD VI.

From the edict given to Ezra in the 7th year of Artaxerxes, to the cleansing of the sanctuary, 2300 years, from B. C. 457 to A. D. 1843—4.

Dan. viii.

PERIOD VII.

From the giving of the saints into the hands of the Papal power to its fall; and from the formation of the ten Papal kingdoms to their destruction, 1260 years, from A. D. 533, to 1793; and from A. D. 583 or 4, to 1843 or 4.

Dan. vii. Rev.
xi.1, 2: xiii.10, 11.

PERIOD VIII.

From the overthrow of the Eastern Roman Empire to the drying up of the kingdom of Turkey, 391 years, from A. D. 1453 to 1843 or 4.

The above periods of prophecy are introduced here to show that God has measured these events by time. They have a beginning and ending—and may be considered as the several great outlines of Jehovah's administration in the world.

The sixth Period including the 2300 years, is of the most importance to our subject. By examining the following class of prophetic numbers in Daniel, it will be seen that God has revealed time clearly in the vision.

1. Seven Times—Daniel iv. 16.	In Revelations we have the following notes of time.
2. Time, times, and the dividing of times.—Daniel vii. 25; xii. 7.	1. An hour, a day, a month, and a year. —Rev. ix. 15.
3. Two thousand and three hundred days.—Dan. viii. 14—26.	2. A thousand two hundred and three score days. —Rev. xii. 6.
4. Seventy weeks.—Dan. ix. 24.	3. Forty and two months. —Rev. xi. 2: xiii. 5.
5. A thousand two hundred and ninety days.—Dan. xii. 11.	4. Six hundred and sixty-six. —Rev. xiii. 8.
6. A thousand three hundred and five and thirty days. —Dan. v. 12.	5. In Ezekiel, Three hundred and ninety days and forty days. —Ezek. iv. 5—6.

Here is time which God has revealed in his word, most of which essentially relates to the question of Daniel—How long shall be the vision? And to the answer, “Unto 2300 days.” The events included in this vision is sufficient evidence to every one acquainted with the history of these events, that they could not be ac-completed in so many days. There is almost a universal agreement in the Christian world that in the 70 weeks a day stands for a year. And if this is a part of the vision, then the remainder must be interpreted on the same principle; that the seventy weeks compose a part of the vision is evident from the fact that the instructions of the angel Gabriel to Daniel did not terminate here; for he was afterwards informed that the city and sanctuary should be destroyed. "The end of the war should be with a flood," and unto the end of the wars, desolations were determined. And that for the overspreading of abominations he should make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolator. This must relate to the remainder of the vision, the 2300 days. The events in the vision, so descriptive of the Little Horn, evidently extend down to the cleansing of the sanctuary, (including the 1260 years) with which the indignation is to end. Jerusalem is still trodden down, and the Jewish nation remains a scattered people, looking for the return of their Messiah. The indignation has not yet come to an end, and consequently the vision is not yet closed.

The several points in the vision may be arranged as follows:—

I.—The 70 weeks divided into three parts:—

1. Seven weeks, or	49 years.
2. Sixty-two weeks,	434 “
3. One week or	7 “

Making in all 70 weeks, or	490 “
Subtract the age of Christ,	33 “

Leaves B. C. 457 - - - -457

II.—From the birth of Christ to the taking away of the daily (sacrifice) and the setting up the abomination which maketh desolate, - - - - 508

III.—From 508 to the time when the saints of the Most High were given into the hands of Papacy by an act of Justinian, the Greek Emperor, gives us the time of - - - - 30

IV.—From 538, when the Papal dominion was established by the edict referred to down to the period of its overthrow in 1798, is noted as the time, times and a half in Dan. xii. 7. - 1260

If the above prophetic calculations can be demonstrated by the word of God, then “ a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne," will soon be heard, saying, "IT IS DONE!" Prophecy does reveal things that shall be HEREAFTER. Rev. i. 19, — even to the consummation of Jehovah's government and providence in the kingdoms of the world. See Isa. xxviii. 21, 22.

Whatever degree of confidence may be placed in the above calculations, one thing is certain, viz:—

There is evidence from the plain declarations of Scripture — from the prophecies — that we are living in the time of the end. Several of the most distinguished students of prophecies, after a careful and critical examination, have come to the same conclusion.

The following is an extract from Professor Bush, testifying his own belief that the prophetical periods have nearly expired:

"If we take the ground of right reason, we must believe that the present age is one expressly foretold in prophecy — that it is just opening upon the crowning consummation of all prophetic declarations.

"The first inquiry is, what are we taught to expect? It is evidently something stupendous — something final — the last act in the great drama of the world. We cannot agree with those who believe that the physical destruction of our earth is predicted and close at hand; though, if their premises once be granted, we cannot see how their chronology is to be disputed. We firmly believe that we are now upon the borders of the momentous changes predicted.

“We have clear intimation from prophecy that the last times shall be distinguished for a laxity of morals and manners, for the prevalence of a spirit of lawlessness and license, for party legislation, for general public profligacy and corruption, and for all the evils by which we are now surrounded. These are facts to which we cannot shut our eyes, and over which it is not easy to go to excess in lamentation.”

Dr. Duffield, who has recently published a work on the prophecies, relative to the Second Coming of Christ, says, “Among other signs, that ‘the time of the end,’ that is, the season during which the great periods of chronological prophecy run out, and the great things so long predicted will transpire, is described by very strong and marked signs, and particularly by signs in the heavens. The sun shall be darkened—the moon shall not give her light—the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. It is supposed, by some, and we think with some plausibility, that while these physical events are to be regarded as symbolical of the revolutions and commotions of empires, they nevertheless will, to some extent, literally occur. Striking atmospheric and celestial phenomena shall be observed, which, being beyond the reach of man's philosophy, may be regarded as the visible symbols which God himself hangs out in the heavens to predict the consummation coming. It is remarkable, especially for the last fifty or sixty years, that atmospheric and celestial phenomena have been more marked, frequent, and varied, than in any previous age of the world. It is said that not less than fifteen hundred stars have faded from the vault of heaven ; and some of them were observed in a state of conflagration.

“Ever since the French revolution, the peculiar signs, both moral and political, which are predicted to mark the time of the end, have been developing. The preparation is making for a great and fearful crisis ; the kings and rulers of the earth are leaguings and conspiring together, and becoming more and more involved in their ambitious schemes, and the Lord is sealing his people, pouring out his Spirit, and gathering in his elect. Verily, we must be blind if we cannot discern the signs of the times."

Cunninghame's Dis. on Prophecy—"If we, who have watched every sign in the spiritual horizon for a long series of years, were now asked, 'Is any sign of His [Christ] coming yet accomplished?' We should be constrained to answer, 'To our view, not one sign remains unaccomplished.' If we were further asked, 'Shall He come this year?' Our answer would be, 'We know not; but this much we know and believe, that he is at hand, even at the door.'"

Rev. John Cox, speaking on the Second Advent of Christ, makes the following remark: "This, I conceive, is the next great event that we are now to look for. So far as I can discern, no further signs are to be expected, as it seems to me we have entered into that last period of awful expectation, during which the church is likened unto virgins."

By comparing the signs of the times with the numerical prophecies, we may know, with certainty, when the awful and glorious day of the Lord is rapidly advancing upon us. The great and broad outlines of prophecy are obvious to every man who is a student of the prophetic writings, long before the predicted events are fulfilled. The prophecies of Daniel were closed up and sealed till the time of the end ; and when the book was to be opened, the seals were to be removed—the mysterious dates were to be developed—many were to run to and fro, and prophetic knowledge was to be increased. The period here foretold is that in which we are now living ; for never, since the time of the reformation, has there been such deep and intense interest paid to the sacred prophecies as within the last thirty or forty years. The seals are now being removed—the signs of the times shed a light on the prophetic dates, and the prophetic dates shed light upon the signs of the times.

“ All these signs of the times, shedding their light upon the mysterious dates, and deriving light from them in return, i. e. the present convulsions of the nations ; the simultaneous shaking of the Ottoman and Papal empires ; the reign and dominancy of infidelity ; the extensive propagation of the gospel beyond the limits of the western Roman empire ; the state of feeling and excitement in the Jewish nation ; the infidel indifference of the world ; the death-like slumber of the church ; and the midnight cry that has been recently raised, and that is now ringing in the ears of the infidel world and a sleeping church, all indicate that the 1260 years have run out their course. And when ye see these things know that the kingdom of heaven is at hand."—Lit. vol. II. Dest. of British Empire, Thorpe.

Dr. Cotton Mather, in a work printed for Samuel Gerrish, 1729, and who died Feb. 13, 1727—8, says, "By all just and fair computations, the twelve hundred and sixty years allowed for the Papal empire must be near, if not quite expired. By consequence, the 1335 years, which bring the time of the end when Daniel, with other good men, is to rise and stand in his lot, are not likely to extend beyond the present century."

The above extracts, from writers on prophecy, are introduced here to show that the doctrine of our Savior's last advent to the world, as near at hand, is a doctrine of interest—of investigation and belief, to many of the present day.

In closing this subject we will notice a few objections which are made to the doctrine of Christ's near approach.

I. The passage in Math. xxiv. 36.—"But of that day and hour knoweth no man." It will be remembered that in every instance, where passages of this nature occur, that the signs of the advent of the Lord are particularly pointed out.

The day and the hour we profess not to know. But does not the chapter, from which the above passage is selected, contain evidence that it was not for the disciples, then living, to know the times and the seasons, but for those who should be on the earth about the time of his coming. It was not the purpose of Christ to leave his people in darkness on a subject of such momentous interest as his last advent to the world. In the days of Noah and Lot, the people were faithfully warned, previous to the approaching judgments of heaven. Hence the parable of the fig tree, “when his branch is yet tender and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh ; so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors.” The signs which should precede his second advent are recorded in the chapter for our instruction, that we may not be in darkness, that that day come upon us unawares. Query.—Is it consistent with the character of God, and in harmony with express declarations in Scripture, on this great event, to believe that it will take place without our knowing any thing about the time ? “Who, then, is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season ? Blessed is that servant whom his lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing." Doing what? Watching, having the lamp trimmed and burning, and being ready, lest the Bridegroom come and find us sleeping. But to say, "my lord delayeth his coming," is taking the position of the evil servant, and incurring the penalty contained in the close of the chapter. To such the Lord will come in an hour when they look not for him. 1 Thess. v. 2.—"For yourselves know perfectly, that the day of the Lord so cometh, as a thief in the night. For when they shall say peace, and safety, sudden destruction cometh upon them. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief; ye are all the children of the day: we are not of the night nor of darkness." John xv. 15.—"Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth; but I have called you friends, for all things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you." Rev. i. 3.—"Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep (observe) those things which are written therein."

2. A millennium of peace and happiness.—When Christ was asked by the disciples what would be the sign of his coming, and of the end of the world, he did not tell them there would be a thousand years of peace and happiness, or that the whole world would be converted. Such a notable sign as this he would not have omitted, if it was to occur. “But as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.” As much as to say, As when the flood came in the days of Noah, and the burning in the time of Lot, so will it be when the Savior comes the second time. The people will be giving their special attention to the affairs of this world, to buying and selling, building and planting, marrying, and giving in marriage, and as unbelieving as to Christ’s coming, as the generation of Noah were concerning the flood.

But will not the knowledge of the Lord cover, or fill the whole earth? Yes; when the saints inherit the earth, and not at the coming of Christ; for this event is expressly noted by the signs, “as in the days of Noah.” The suddenness of Christ’s coming shows that it will be to the wicked as a thief in the night, as a snare upon the nations—as in the time of Pharaoh, when the destroying angel went out at midnight, and a cry of distress was heard throughout the land.—Ex. xii. 29. To the very period of the Savior’s advent, there will be impiety, unbelief, luxury, commotions, wars and rumors of wars, and constant inquiry, "Where is the promise of his coming?"

The parable of the tares and wheat shows that the people of God never will be the praise of the whole earth, until the harvest, which is the end of the world. Until that time, the wheat and tares will grow together, when Christ will send forth his angels and gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them that do iniquity. Then shall the righteous shine as the sun in the kingdom of their Father.

3. Prophecies were not intended to be understood until accomplished. What is the great object of prophecy, in the Word of God, but to confirm our faith in the events therein foretold. Now, if we are not to understand the prophecies, or to investigate them with special reference to the events predicted, then a great portion of the Bible was a sealed book to the early Christians. Now, we believe the Word of God is a true light, which shines on our present path, and penetrates into the future. The first advent of our Savior was prophesied, and, no doubt, those who waited for the "consolation of Israel" had their hopes excited, and their faith strengthened by the prophecy of the 70 weeks in Daniel.

The expectation of a Messiah was also prevalent among the Jews, and was confirmed by the mission of John the Baptist. And did not Daniel learn from books (prophecy) that the long captivity of the Jews, in Babylon, was about terminating? "I Daniel, understood, by books, the number of the years, whereof the Word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish 70 years in the desolations of Jerusalem." He understood the prophecy, and set himself to prayer and supplication, when the angel was sent "to tell him what should befall his people in the latter days, and that he should stand in his lot at the end of the days." Daniel did understand the prophecy before it was fulfilled.

Noah was commissioned to prophecy the destruction of the old world by a flood; and for the very purpose that the wicked might not be overtaken without warning. They were without excuse in not believing the prophecy.

The design of prophecy is not merely to confirm our faith in the Scriptures, but to give us a knowledge of the events to which the prophecy relates. Take the example of the destruction of Jerusalem. If the disciples had regarded the Savior's prophecy of that event only of use after it was accomplished, they would doubtless have perished in the siege. But they availed themselves of the warning which Christ made to them, previous to his departure, and escaped the desolations which came upon the Jews. Christ prophecied certain signs, by which they might know as to the time of the event. They saw these signs, believed, and fled to the mountains in Pella.

Now Christ has given in the same chapter, a prophecy respecting his 2d coming ; notable signs, by which we may know, for a certainty, as to the event at hand. The warning voice is discernable in those signs, and whatever indifference or unbelief, may exist in the church and the world on this subject, it will be heard, so that when he comes he will find some faith on the earth.

NEW HEAVENS AND NEW EARTH.

“Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat? Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.” 2 Peter iii. 12, 13,

In the chapter from which the text is selected, the apostle mentions the design of his writing, viz. to refresh the minds of his brethren with the “words which were spoken before, by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Savior.” He foretells that there would be scoffers in the last days, who would manifest the same unbelief concerning the second coming of Christ, and the final consummation of all things, as was exhibited in the days of Noah, respecting the flood. He then gives a graphic description of the sudden and general conflagration of the world, to be succeeded by the new heavens, and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

Our object will be to show from the Scriptures that God has assigned to this earth which we inhabit, both in relation to its moral and physical constitution, a period of existence—and when that period comes, he will change or purify it from the curse under which it has fallen, and make it the abode of the righteous.

This proposition may appear to the reader inconsistent with the general laws of nature, and with the perfect order and harmony which has characterized the handy work of the creator ever since the morning stars sang together, and the sons of God shouted for joy. The sun, say you, continues to shine in its usual splendor—the moon reflects her light, the stars twinkle in the canopy of heaven, seed-time and harvest, summer and winter fail not, and all things remain as they were from the foundation of the world. But we ask you to suspend judgment till we have consulted the records of God's holy word. To the law, and the testimony we appeal for the evidence of our position—viz. that the present mundane system must pass away, or be renewed, and a new heavens and new earth appear.

In discussing this subject we shall follow the order of the text. That expressly declares,

I That there will be a great change in the present material system.

In proof of this, the apostle refers to the flood which swept over the earth and destroyed its inhabitants, with the exception of Noah and his family. That the earth underwent some physical change, is generally admitted by geologists. The discoveries which have recently been made by them, have led them to this opinion. The apostle asserts the ignorance of scoffers in the last days, on this subject. "For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water, and in the water: whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished. But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word, are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men. 2 Pet. iii. 5, 6, 7. It was the opinion of Moses (Gen. i. 1, 2.) that the earth was originally in a fluid state, and it has been shown by some discoveries near the poles that the earth is not round, but of a spheroidal form, resembling an orange, a shape which it would naturally assume from whirling round upon its axis; and is a just conclusion, if, according to ancient opinions, the earth was formed from a watery substance. Be this as it may, the apos-

He declares that the heavens "shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burnt up." In the following verses, eleventh and twelfth, the same thought is expressed by a dissolution of the material universe.—Not its annihilation, for this would conflict with long established principles in philosophy, that no particle of matter is annihilated, whatever process of change it may pass through—but that the present system of things will be changed, or regenerated; and in this sense, pass away into a new and perfect state "wherein dwelleth righteousness."

There is nothing in all the convolutions of nature to compare with this last drama in the world's history. We may form some conception of the rolling thunder, peal after peal,—of the darting lightning, flash after flash,—of the sweeping deluge and the sweeping cataract bearing down the sturdy oak, and rolling the rock from its settled position—of the belching and burning volcano pouring out its lava, and destroying whole cities, of the rumbling earthquake in both land and sea. But the final conflagration is purely a matter of revelation, and best described by the language of the inspired writers. Heb.i.10,11,12, "Thou Lord in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the works of thy hands: they shall perish, but thou remainest; and they all shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed: but thou art the same and thy years shall not fail." [See Ps. cii. 23, 28.] "As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up, so man lieth down and riseth not till the heavens be no more."

The subject under consideration is also recorded in prophecy. Speaking as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, the prophets not only predicted the birth of the Redeemer with all the characteristics in which he appeared when clothed in his humiliation, and all the scenes of his crucifixion on the cross; but they also look forward to the approaching consummation, when he shall come to make up his jewels, Isa. li. 6, "Lift up your eyes to the heavens, and look upon the earth beneath, for the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment, and they that dwell therein shall die in like manner." Whatever may be the order, firmness, solidity, and regular motion of the heavenly bodies, or the beauty of the earth, yet they shall be folded up, or changed for the residence of Christ and his saints. Jer. x. 10, "At his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation ”

There can be no doubt that the events predicted in Joel, 3d chapter, are identical with those in Rev. xiv., and foretell the end of the world — the final conflagration, and the heavenly Jerusalem. ‘The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake, but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel.’”

The second chapter of this prophecy presents the same great event. The language has been supposed to refer to the destruction of Jerusalem, but will it not have a literal accomplishment at the end of the world? The events of that period correspond to the description in other portions of the Scriptures. “The earth shall quake before them—the heavens shall tremble—the sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining: And the Lord shall utter his voice before his army; for his camp is very great; for he is strong that executeth his word; for the day of the Lord is terrible, and who can abide it?" These, with other similar passages in the Word of God, confirm our faith in the purpose and power of Jehovah to renovate the earth — to purify it by fire, and to restore it to its primeval glory and perfection. It is an inspiring thought to the devout mind. It elevates the soul, and fills it with the grandeur and omnipotent power of the Almighty. It is included in His eternal purposes. It is a part of His vast plan in the great work of redemption, to purify the earth from the curse — from all that is injurious, mortal, and fading; and make it what it originally was, Eden-like.

Here will be the manifestation of God's power. He "who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meted out the heavens with a span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure, and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance," is, by the same power, able to transform the elements of nature, and render the earth as pure, and beautiful, as when she came from the hands of the creator.

How sublime is the description, by the prophet Habakkuk, of the mighty power of God! "God came from Teman, and the Holy One from mount Paran. Selah. His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise. And his brightness was as the light: he had horns coming out of his hand, and there was the hiding of his power. Before him went the pestilence, and burning coals went forth at his feet. He stood and measured the earth; he beheld and drove asunder the nations; and the everlasting mountains were scattered; the perpetual hills did bow: his ways are everlasting. The mountains saw thee, and they trembled; the overflowing of the water passed by; the deep uttered his voice, and lifted up his hands on high. The sun and the moon stood still in their habitation; at the light of thine arrows they went, and at the shining of thy glittering spear." Hab. iii. 3, 10, 11.

Jehovah has abundantly evinced his mighty power, in the present existing universe. It now only requires his putting forth that same power, and the earth shall be changed, — renewed and bloom with all the glory and perfection of the Deity himself. He once gathered the waters of the sea together as an heap. "He layeth up the deep as in store houses." In the heavens hath he "set a tabernacle for the sun. He hath appointed the moon for seasons," and "maketh Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, and the chambers of the south. He covereth the heavens with clouds. He made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning and the thunder; and causeth the vapors to ascend from the ends of the earth." By his word "the waters were commanded to bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life." He hath made all things after the council of his own mind. This is our God, who hath founded the earth upon the seas, and established it upon the floods. He "hangeth the earth upon nothing," and as the Creator, Preserver, and Upholder, of all things, rideth in his excellency on the sky.

It was a remark of Tertullion, that every mechanic among christians knew God, and should make him known to others. He makes this remark in consequence of a question put by Cræsus, the king, to Thales, the philosopher. What is God? Thales asked for one day to answer the question. The day expired without an answer. The question was proposed again, and he wished for two days—then for four—then for eight then for sixteen. Impatient for an answer, the king inquired the reason of his delay? "O!" said the philosopher, "it is a question in which my insufficient reason is lost. The oftener I ask myself, What is God? the more incapable I find myself of answering. New difficulties arise every moment, and my knowledge diminisheth as my inquiries increase." From this circumstance he took occasion to reason in favor of christianity over the wisdom and philosophy of man; and said to Cræsus, "Thales cannot inform the king what God is! and the humblest christian knows more than this."

The Bible alone, in harmony with the voice of nature, teaches us what God is, — and utters forth his WISDOM, GOODNESS, and POWER.

This view of the present material system, which displays the omnipotence and grandeur of the Deity, is calculated to inspire us with hope, in the prospect of a new and better state of existence, when God shall purify and make all things new. Mortality is impressed on every thing around us, and yet how few believe that this earth is destined to be changed, in the sense of the text. Even the final dissolution of human bodies presents a scene at which human wisdom shrinks to contemplate. When we enter the congregation of the dead we are disposed to inquire, "can these dry bones live!" And many doubts spring up in the mind, when we look away from the inspired page, as we survey the works of creation, in reference to the change which this globe will soon experience. But God can cause "beauty to spring out of the ashes, and life out of the dust." He is possessed of unlimited power, and superintends, by his infinite knowledge, all the works of his hands. The poet has well observed, what is taught in Revelation, that

"He summons into being, with like ease,
A whole Creation, and a single grain."

Nothing but sin has marred the beauty of the visible Creation, or diverts our thoughts from a right contemplation of the ten thousand objects which speak in silent, but emphatic language, of the glory of God. The dark veil now hides from our view the brightest manifestations of the Deity, which must have lighted up the Garden of Eden, where our first parents walked and communed with God. The "glory of the Lord," which is now manifested in all his works, and which led the Psalmist, from a pious contemplation of them, to exclaim, "in wisdom hast thou made them all," is not so clearly seen, as when the morning stars first sang together. How can it be, when the physical aspect of its constitution has become deformed, in consequence of the wickedness of man? That the physical economy of the earth has been deranged, corresponding to the moral state of its fallen inhabitants, all the investigations of science most truly affirm. Everything which Jehovah created, he pronounced very good, and there is reason, from the Scriptures, to believe, that before sin entered into the world, all things reflected the perfections of the Deity. “No chilling winds, nor poisonous breath,” — no storms disturbed the tranquility of nature, — no concussions of the earth excited alarm in the breasts of its inhabitants, — no pestilences or sickness annoyed the human frame. We may reasonably conclude from the description of Moses, that the natural elements originally contributed to the happiness of man; and from the same Scriptures there is evidence that the desolating flood swept from the earth many of its primeval beauties, by which it was adorned in boundless variety. But when the dispensation of Providece shall close with this fallen world, the earth and the ærial heavens changed, then “we, according to his promise,” may expect to behold the “new heavens and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.” The heavens, therefore, must receive Jesus Christ until the times of the restitution of all things.

"Eternal HOPE! when yonder spheres sublime, Peal'd their first notes, to sound the march of time,
Thy joyous youth began — but not to fade
When all the sister planets have decayed;
When, wrapt in fire, the realms of ether glow,
And heaven's last thunder shakes the world below;
Thou, undismay'd, shalt o'er the ruins smile,
And light thy torch at Nature's funeral pile!"

Having considered the first proposition of the text, that the present material system will pass away, or be changed, by the same power which created and formed it, we shall proceed to examine the proof, from the Scriptures, in support of the

II. Proposition, viz:—That there will be a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

The objection which is frequently made against this view of the subject — that there will be an entire change of the material universe, is not so well founded as many suppose. Many startle at the idea of this great revolution in the material world. From education, and from the popular custom of spiritualizing those passages which relate to this transformation, many are disposed to believe that all things will remain as they now are. And those who cherish the views here expressed, are, by many, classed among the new lights which, say they, have “glimmered in every age.”

This doctrine, however, is not a new one. It was advocated in the earliest periods of Christianity. It was the universal sentiment of the Council of Nice, embracing something like three hundred pious and learned clergymen, who were assembled by Constantine the Great, soon after the establishment of the christian religion in the Roman empire, in about the year A. D. 325. The same views were cherished by the Reformers during the reign of Edward VI. and embodied in the Catechism of the Church of England. The following extract is from Burnett’s theory of the earth. Vol. II. page 246.

“The end of the world, Holy Scripture calleth the fulfilling, and performance of the kingdom, and mystery of Christ ; and the renewing of all things; for, saith the apostle Peter, (2 epistle, iii.) we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. And it seemeth reason that corruption, unsteadfast change, and sin, whereunto the whole world is subject, should at length have an end, according to the witness of the apostle : The heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat ; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up, as though he had said — As gold is wont to be refined, so shall the whole world be purified with fire, and be brought to its full perfection. The lesser world, which is man, following the same, shall be delivered from corruption, and change ; and so for man, this greater world, which for his sake was first created, shall at length be removed, and be clad with another hue, much more pleasant and beautiful.”

Dr. Clarke makes the following comment upon the passage in Peter iii.

“ All these things shall be dissolved. They will all be separated, all decomposed ; but none of them destroyed. As they are the original matter out of which God formed the terraqueous globe, consequently, they may enter again into the composition of the new system. We look for a new heavens and a new earth, the other being decomposed, a new system is to be formed out of their materials.

It does appear from these promises, what the apostle says here, and what is said in Rev. xxi. 27: xxii. 14, 15 : That the present earth, though destined to be burnt up, will not be destroyed, but be renewed and refined ; purged from all natural and moral imperfections, and made the endless abode of blessed spirits. That such an event may take place is very possible, and from the terms used by Peter, is very probable. And, indeed, it is more reasonable and philosophical to conclude that the earth shall be refined, and restored, than finally destroyed.”

It is worthy of notice here, that Peter refers to all the epistles, in which the doctrines of the end of all earthly things, the coming of the Son of Man, and the final judgment, are mentioned. A careful attention to the epistles will convince the reader of the importance attached by the apostle to this subject. For example, the coming of Christ to judge the world. 1 Thess. iii. 13: iv. 14, 18. 2 Thess. i. 7, 10. Titus ii. 13. The resurrection: 1 Cor. xv. 22. Phil. iii. 20, 21. The burning of the earth: 2 Thess. i. 8. The heavenly country: 1 Thess. iv. 17. Heb. iv. 9: xii. 14, 18, 24. The final judgment of all mankind by the Lord Jesus: Rom. xiv. 10.

That the Scriptures set forth the entire regeneration of the earth, by fire, is as evident as the language of inspiration presents any other doctrine. Who can read the description of the apostle Peter (iii. chap.) on this subject, and not perceive that he designed to make this doctrine intelligible to a scoffing world? That there will be a new heavens and new earth, is confirmed by a promise, to which Peter refers.

The prophets, guided by the unerring influence of the Holy Spirit, have described the new earth in language so plain, that a little child may understand its import. The thirty-fifth chapter in Isaiah give us a view of what we may expect to see, and enjoy in the EDEN of the Lord. We here present the whole chapter in one column, with passages corresponding, from other portions of the prophecies.

Isa. xxxv. 1, 2. The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice, even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it; the excellency of Carmel and Sharon: they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God.

Isa. lv. 12, 13. For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace, the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the briar shall come up the myrtle tree, and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off.

Isa. li. 3. For the Lord shall comfort Zion: he will comfort all her waste places; and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody.

Isa. xxxv. 5—7. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame

And the parched increase, and they shall be ground shall become a safe in their land, and pool, and the thirsty land shall know that I am the springs of water: in the Lord, when I have broken the habitation of dragons, the bands of their yoke, and where each lay, shall be delivered them out of the grass with reeds and rush- hand of those that served es. themselves of them.

Isa. xxxv. 8. And a highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called, The way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those; the way-faring men, though fools, shall not err therein.

Isa. xxxv. 9. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there.

Isa. xxxv. 10. And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain Zech. ii. 10. Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion, for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord.

Ezk. xxiv. 25. And I will make with them a covenant of peace, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land; and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods.

Isa. li. 11. Therefore the redeemed of the Lord shall return, and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their head: they joy and gladness. and sorrow and sighing shall flee away | shall obtain gladness and joy; and sorrow and mourning shall flee away.

Several other passages may be quoted from the prophetic writings, showing that the regenerated earth will be the residence of the redeemed. It is evident that the prophets, who wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, felt that the loss sustained by the disobedience of our first parents would be repaired — that the curse which fell upon the earth, when nature “gave signs of woe, that all was lost,” would be removed, and God again rejoice in all his works.

Isa. lxxv. 17. For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. | 2. Peter iii. 13. Nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

Isa. lxxv. 18. But be ye glad, and rejoice, forever in that which I create, for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. | Rev. xxi. 2, 3. And I, John, saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God.

Isa. lxxv. 19. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people; and the voice of weeping shall be | Rev. xxi. 4. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying.	neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away.

---	--

In the sense of the above passages, we see in what light God will renew the face of the earth, and in what respect the glory of the Lord shall endure forever; and the Lord shall rejoice in all his works. Jerusalem is called THE HOLY CITY, THE CITY OF THE LIVING GOD. THE PLACE WHICH HE HATH CHOSEN, THE JOY OF THE WHOLE EARTH. Not so with ancient Jerusalem — “Behold,” said Jesus, “your house is left unto you desolate.” Nor is it thus with the Jerusalem that now is, which the apostle says, (Gal. iv. 25.) is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all.

The future Jerusalem is evidently distinguished for its glory and excellence. Then saith the prophet shall the moon be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously, (Isa. xxiv. 23.) And the name of the city from that day shall be, THE LORD IS THERE. (Ezek, xlviii. 35.) “At that time they shall call Jerusalem THE THRONE OF THE LORD, and all the nations shall be gathered unto it." (Jer. iii 17.) And the Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion, henceforth even for ever. (Mich. iv. 7.) He shall be great, and shall be called the son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David. (Luke i. 32, 33.) These passages definitely point out the place where Christ will establish his throne. Jerusalem will be the seat of his temple, the glory of which will fill the whole earth.

It is not unusual to hear from the pulpit, a glowing description of heaven, by those passages from the Scriptures which set forth the state of the New Jerusalem, and the new earth, and which show that this new scene will resemble Paradise.

1. It shall be enlightened by the glory of God. Rev. xxi. 23.

The above texts are proof sufficient, that the renovated earth will be the abode of the righteous. The place where angels will greet the whole family of Christ, when he shall come to judge the world in righteousness. The renovation of the earth will be contemporary with the Second Advent of our Lord and his kingdom. The Savior says to his apostles, (Math. xix. 28,) Verily I say unto you that ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit upon the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And Peter has expressly asserted the times of the restitution of all things, at the coming of Christ. John, in Rev. xx. 4, describes the saints as sitting on thrones with Christ, in the act of judging; which is the same thing as reigning; and then declares that they lived, and reigned with Christ a thousand years. The redeemed are heard by John saying, we shall reign on the earth. These passages are perfectly intelligible, when we view Christ's personal reign on the new earth, with all his saints, when they (Christ and his people) conjointly possess the kingdom. It also makes plain the prayer which our Savior taught his disciples, viz. Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. This prayer is not yet answered. And there is no prospect of its being realized in this life. For the will of God to be done on earth as it is done in heaven, implies an entire renovation of the present state of things. Heaven is a sinless, perfect state, and all the angels of God, with all happy spirits, move according to His will. God's will cannot be done on this earth as it is done in heaven, until the kingdom is brought completely under the administration of Christ, which will be in the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. The Savior had promised the kingdom to his disciples, he then taught them to pray for it. The promise will be fulfilled, and the prayer answered, when the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him. Then Christ will see the glory that shall follow his sufferings, the travail of his soul, the reward of his merciful embassy to this lost world, his incessant toils, his agony in the garden, his sufferings on the cross.

Let us now consider the inheritance of the earth as the promised reward of the righteous.

God did promise to Abraham, and to his seed after him, the land of Canaan, flowing with milk and honey; and that his mind might be enlarged and filled with the extent of this promise, he was commanded to lift up his eyes to the four quarters of the earth, north, south, east and west, as if the promise was not confined to a single spot of earth in Palestine, but comprehending the whole earth. "I will give unto thee and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession. But Abraham died without possessing any part of the land, except a burying field, purchased with his own money. His faith looked forward to a heavenly country, "to a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." He had reference to the New Earth—the Holy City—the New Jerusalem.

Some of the ancient servants of God were in doubt about the interpretation of the promise made to Abraham and his seed, respecting the land of Canaan; but God constantly reminded them of their promised inheritance, by assuring them that the righteous should inherit the earth, Psalm xxxvii.—"For evil doers shall be cut off; but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth." For yet a little while and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place and it shall not be. But the meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace. For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth. The seed of the wicked shall be cut off. The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever. Wait on the Lord and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the earth; when the wicked are cut off thou shalt see it."

The prophecy of Isaiah, lxxv. 17, leads us to the same conclusion. "For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth, and the former shall not be remembered or come into mind." Isa. lxxvi. 22, "For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain." We have seen that there is a complete harmony between the prophecies of Isaiah and the Revelation of John on this subject. The promise which was made to Abraham, and to his seed, will be fulfilled when all the chosen people of God shall take possession of the New Earth, for an everlasting inheritance. The Lord "will comfort all the waste places of Zion, he will make her wilderness like EDEN, and her desert like the garden of the Lord<sup>4</sup>; joy and gladness, thanksgiving and the voice of melody are found therein." This is the land of our inheritance, honored by the visible presence of the Lamb, who will be the light of his people, and the joy of the whole earth."

According to Rev. xx. 4, the saints will live and reign with Christ a thousand years; reign with him on the New Earth. The redeemed in glory are heard, saying, "WE SHALL REIGN ON THE EARTH." This reign will commence when the first heaven and the first earth are passed away. Heb. i. 10, 11, 12—"Thou Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the works of thine hands: they shall perish, but thou remainest, and they all shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed; but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail." The sense of this passage is, that Creation, which now speaks forth the power, wisdom, and glory of God, will not be destroyed, or consigned to oblivion, but changed or purified from the curse. The Scriptures, says Mr. Fuller, give us reason to expect that the earth itself shall, at some future period, be purified, and re-united to the holy empire of God. The earth is set forth by the apostle in Rom. vii. as groaning to be delivered from the manacles of sin, and brought into the same liberty with the children of God, at the redemption of their bodies. Therefore, the heavens must receive Jesus Christ until the times of the restitution of all things. Here is the hope of the saints at the first resurrection—the hope of inheriting the NEW EARTH.

Now the promise of the ancient covenant, must evidently refer to a future reward. This promise is often made, and confirmed by an oath. There is reason to believe that something more is intended by this covenant, than that the posterity of Abraham should possess the land of Canaan. So solemn a covenant, must refer to a greater, and more extensive blessing than the temporal enjoyments of Canaan. The promise is made to Abraham and to his seed after him. Who are the seed of Abraham? Evidently the people of God—the true Israel, who are compared in number to the sands on the sea-shore. They are to inherit the whole earth.

Again, Abraham is represented in the Scriptures as a stranger, a sojourner, and a pilgrim, travelling from one place to another, without any settled home. [Heb. xi. 8, 9,] By faith, Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should afterward receive for an inheritance, obeyed, and he went out, not knowing whither he went. The commission to Abram is recorded in Gen. xii. i—4. He was obedient to the command, and yet he had no tittle, or right in the land of Canaan, any more than his son Isaac. He had no ground for building, or cultivation. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country, he occupied the same tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, who were heirs to the same promise. He sojourned there by faith; and regarded that land only, as a type of the final inheritance of the saints, to which the promise must have reference. For he looked for a city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God. He lost sight of earth as a permanent residence, in anticipation of the heavenly country, which he could realize only by faith in the promise.

To this land the apostle alludes in the 13th verse. These all died in faith, believing that God would fulfil the promised rest to his people—not having received the promises. These were not fulfilled in their day; but having seen them afar off, they were persuaded of them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. It was not their intention to reside in Canaan. For they declare plainly that they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly. Although Canaan was so particularly specified in the promise, yet they possessed only a small portion of it, and that not as the gift of God, but by purchase. (Gen. xxiii. Acts vii. 5.)

Again, the right which the Jews as a nation claim to the promised land, does not answer to the importance and solemnity which is attached to the covenant. They never had a full and peaceable possession of even that portion of the land which they once occupied. And as the covenant can refer only to temporal blessings, even if understood as they interpret it, it does not apply to them. They are a people scattered and peeled on account of their transgression in rejecting the Messiah. The covenant implies promised permanent rest and enjoyment. The Jews are far from having experienced this blessing. They have become a proverb and a by-word among the nations, a discontented, and unhappy people. If the covenant have reference to their future possession of the land, then the Gentiles have no part nor lot in the covenant, and are expecting to inherit the earth by promises made exclusively to the Jews. In this sense, I say, Christians are consoling themselves with bright and cheering prospects for the future, without any foundation.

But the Scriptures set forth this subject in a better light. God is the dispenser of grace, mercy and peace to all mankind, leaving every son and daughter of Adam, Jew and Gentile, bond and free, high and low, rich and poor, to avail themselves of the offers of salvation through Jesus Christ, and finally, to inherit the earth when God shall make his tabernacle with men, and Christ shall be admired by his saints.

This view of the promised land shows us what will ultimately be the inheritance of the people of God. Peter i. 3, 4, 5, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. To an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time." This inheritance is without any principle of dissolution or decay,—that fadeth not away. The metaphor is taken from the amaranth, a flower always lively and blooming, and preserves its hue and fragrance, even amidst the cold frosts and chilling winds. The earth, which the righteous are to inhabit, will, without doubt, bloom continually.—It is the Paradise of God, prepared for those who love him—It is the recompence of reward. Paul, in his epistle to the Ephesians, first chapter, gives a most animating description of what God has reserved for his people; and assigns the sealing of the Holy Spirit, as the pledge of their inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, when soul, body, and earth, shall be glorified together. If we are the children of God, “then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ.” When the saints enter upon their possession, their reward is complete. Now, saith the apostle, are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. It was the prayer of the Savior, Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory. The scene of his glory I believe to be on the New Earth. Then the knowledge of God will cover the whole earth. Then the watchmen of the Lord will indeed see eye to eye, and there be one fold, and one Shepherd.

REV. xix. 9. "And he saith unto me, write blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb."

THE chapter from which the text is selected, is a description of the great day of the Lord, and the millennial state of the righteous, which is noted as the arrival of the Marriage Supper of the Lamb, for which the church is arrayed in her fine linen of sanctification—having "made herself ready." John says: "After these things (referring to events described in the preceding chapter) I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying: Alleluia: Salvation and glory, and honor, and power unto the Lord our God. For true, and righteous are His judgments."—Those judgments which befall papal Anti-Christ in the last great battle when Christ shall appear as the King of Zion. The seventh verse presents us with the glowing sentiment of the church—"Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to Him, for the Marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready." This is the espousal day of the church, when all the redeemed of the Lord will meet in the capacity described by John—"Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain ; for the former things are passed away."

The union which now exists between the Savior and his disciples, is figuratively set forth by the vine and the branches. This union is formed by giving the heart to Christ—believing his Word, and trusting in the merits of his righteousness for full salvation. Those who are thus united to Christ are blessed indeed. "Now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure."—1 John iv. 2, 3. Here is the union of all saints with Christ, at the marriage supper, when he will take the bride to himself, in presence of all the angels of God. The subject contained in the text is one of great interest to the children of God, and ought to awaken the inquiry in every heart, shall I be called to the marriage supper of the Lamb?

In order to have a clear view of the subject, we propose to consider the several points in the text—viz :

I. What shall we understand by the Marriage Supper of the Lamb?

II. The blessings of the Marriage Supper to those who are called.

I. What are we to understand by the Marriage Supper of the Lamb?

The 21st chapter will shed some light upon it: Here is presented to John a figurative view of the blessed state of the righteous. “And I saw a new heaven, and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea. And I John saw the Holy City, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. The New Jerusalem which John saw in vision denotes the celestial society of the redeemed. Jerusalem was originally the centre of the true worship of God, Ps. cxxii. 4, and the place where God did in a special manner dwell first in the tabernacle, and afterwards in the temple. 2 Sam. vi. 7, 12 ; 1 Kings vi. 13. The apostle employs the same figure to express the state of the righteous in glory. Heb. xii. 22, 23. "But ye are come unto Mount Zion and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels. To the general assembly, and church of the first born, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect." Saints, while on the earth, are usually spoken of as having their names written or enrolled in the Lamb's Book of Life. The apostle has doubtless an allusion in the above passage to a custom among the Greeks of enrolling a person's name in a book as a citizen, by which he is entitled, as a free man, to all the privileges of citizenship. The Christian's name being written in the Lamb's Book of Life, gives him a title to all the blessings of the Marriage Supper.

The passage in the address to the angel of the church in Philadelphia conveys the same idea. Rev. iii. 12. "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God ; and he shall go no more out, and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God, and I will write upon him my new name." On this passage, a recent writer makes the following remarks. "Relative to Christ's new name we know not ; it may allude to the new character under which Christ will appear to eternity in heaven, after he shall have divested himself of his present mediatorial kingdom at the end of the world. 'Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God even the Father.' Christ will then appear to his followers in some new point of light, and thus account for his new name to be inscribed on the redeemed pillars of heaven. Now, at the marriage supper Christ will be present with all the glories of the Father. John had a full view of this scene, as described in Rev. xxi. 9, 10. "And there came unto me one of the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife; and he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem (saints and angels) descending out of heaven from God."

Christ is elsewhere called the Bridegroom—the bride means his church. It is here called the Lamb's wife. When the Bridegroom comes the church will be the prepared bride "adorned for her husband." In the parable of Christ, where a king is represented as preparing a feast for the marriage of his son, we learn that it was expected of all the guests to appear in a suitable dress, as a token of respect to the married couple ; and that after the procession in the evening from the bride's house was concluded, the guests were all examined before they were permitted to enter the apartment of entertainment. If any person was found not having on a garment suitable to the occasion, he was expelled from the house. At the great marriage supper of the Lamb, the company of the redeemed will be prepared for the occasion, not one will be found there who has not on the "wedding garment." This garment must be secured before the appointed time arrives—then it will be too late. "At a marriage, the procession of which I saw some years ago, says Mr. Ward, (View of Hist. of Hindoos, vol. 3, p. 171,) the bridegroom came from a distance, and the bride lived at Serampore, to which place the bridegroom was to come by water. After waiting two or three hours, at length, near midnight, it was announced, as if in the very words of Scripture—"Behold ! the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." All the persons employed now lighted their lamps and ran with them in their hands to fill up their stations in the procession ; some of them had lost their lights, and were unprepared, but it was then too late to seek them, and the cavalcade moved forward to the house of the bride, at which place the company entered a large and splendidly illuminated area, before the house, covered with an awning, where a great multitude of friends, dressed in their best apparel, were seated on mats. The bridegroom was carried in the arms of a friend, and placed in a superb seat in the midst of the company, where he sat for a short time, and then went into the house, the door of which was immediately close and guarded by Lepoys, I and others expostulated with the door-keepers, but in vain. Never was I so struck with our Lord's beautiful parable, as at this moment—and the door was shut !"

There is consolation in the thought that the door of mercy is not yet shut. There is a short space of time left in which we may all prepare for the coming and kingdom of our Lord. But when the "Marriage Supper of the Lamb is come, and the bride hath made herself ready" for the occasion, it will be too late for repentance—too late to secure the wedding garment.

“ They that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut ! The door of salvation will be closed,—

“ Time gone, the righteous saved, the wicked damned,
And God’s eternal government approved.”

That the Marriage Supper of the Lamb will soon be announced, is evident from the circumstances in which the text stands. The previous chapter describes the fall of the papal beast, and accords with the same event in chap. x, which is an inspired comment on Daniel’s prediction of the rise and fall of the papal power in the last days—and its destruction by the stone cut out of the mountain without hands.

“ The angel came down from heaven having great power ; and the earth was lightened with his glory. And he cried mightily with a loud voice, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen.” Rev. xviii. 1, 2. A similar text is found in Isa. xxi. 9. “ Babylon is fallen, is fallen, and all the graven images of her gods he hath broken unto the ground.” The second angel gives the same event in Rev. xiv. 8. And then followed another angel (next after the missionary angel now flying,) saying, “ Babylon is fallen, is fallen." In the same chapter the event is given under the figure of the harvest and vintage. v. 14. "And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle." v. 15. "And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap, for the time is come for thee to reap, for the harvest of the earth is ripe." See v. 16 to 19. All this indicates that Christ will be near in the time of trouble previous to the marriage supper, to defend Jerusalem—"In that day sing unto her, A vineyard of red wine. I the Lord do keep it, I will water it every moment. Lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day." Christ here appears in the cloud with the golden crown upon his head—emblem of his exaltation and kingly power—and in his hand a sharp sickle, (the implement for gathering in the harvest and vintage) to defend his chosen and sealed ones. This text corresponds to the prophecy of Isa. lxiii. 1—6, respecting the "treading of the wine press" and the harvest and vintage of the same event in Joel iii. In answer to the prayers of his people, the Son of man destroys the anti-christian powers as with a rod of iron, in the great day of battle. "Shall not God avenge his own elect, who cry unto him day and night, though he bear long with them?" "When the Lord shall build up Zion he will appear in his glory, he will regard the prayer of the destitute and not despise their prayer."

This same event corresponds with that under the seventh trumpet—with the destruction of the beast and the false prophet—with the kings of the earth being cast into the lake of fire—Rev. xix. 20. Here, then, we have the great and notable day of the Lord—the harvest and vintage, towards which the world is tending, and the nations fast ripening.

That this beast has marks of some of the most notable scenes in the history of the French revolution, no one will question, who has a knowledge of that history. The abominations of the papal power have been exhibited to the world, in crimson colors, ever since it was established. But when infidelity raised its head, in, and after the French revolution, the horrors of the Papal See made the hearts of men fail them for fear. Well may the voice from heaven be heard, saying, Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues: For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.—Rev. xviii. 4, 5. The lamentations of Papal kings are noticed in the close of the chapter, — when the body of the beast shall be given to the “burning flame,” and the smoke of her ruins loom up as the signal of her death. “In her expiring struggle in Europe,” says one writer, “she has attempted to stretch across the Atlantic her withered arm, and, if possible, gain her lost dominions in America.” But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume, and to destroy it unto the end. She may prevail, and continue to prevail, for an appointed time, “until the Ancient of Days” shall come, and judgment is given to the saints of the Most high, and the time that the saints shall possess the kingdom.

In Daniel we find the reign of the beast is limited to a “time, times and the dividing of times,” which is a notable period in the prophecies—meaning 1260 days—a day for a year, making so many years for the reign of the Papal power, which closed in 1798, when the Pope was deposed, and a republican form of government was set up in Italy. But his body is not to be given to the ‘burning flame’ till he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people. Then “all these things shall be finished, and the marriage supper of the Lamb come."

This notable period of time is mentioned in Daniel xii. 7 — "time, times and dividing of times," Rev. xi. 2 — "forty and two months;" in verse 3 — "a thousand two hundred and three score days." In Rev. xii. 6, 14 — "a time, times and a half time." By time is meant a year, times two years, and a half a time half a year. These make the forty-two months, and all the different expressions of the period, according to the ancients, reckoning 360 days to a year, 30 days to a month. God said to Moses—Numb. xiv. 34—"After the number of days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year, ye shall bear your iniquity, even forty years." Ezek. iv. 6—The prophet was ordered to lie on his side forty days as a sign to the people. God says, "I have appointed thee each day for a year." Dan. ix. 24 — The seventy weeks of the prophecy from the going forth of the decree to build the walls of Jerusalem to the crucifixion of Christ, gives us 490 years.

The present inhabitants of the civilized world, (says Mr. Smith) who have lived to see half a century, have lived to witness the notable event which is designated by the descent of the angel of the covenant, in the 10th chapter of Revelation, and it has afforded them a season of great instruction. That event is noted as being at the close of the 1260 years, when one of the greatest revolutions occurred in the religious and political world that its history affords.

The destruction of the great secular Roman beast is prophecied by Daniel as introducing the Millenial morning. Dan. vii. 9—11—"I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of Days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like pure wool ; his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him ; thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him ; the judgment was set, and the books were opened. I beheld, then, because of the voice of the great words which the horn (Popery) spake. I beheld till the beast was slain and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." This is the beast which the apostle says will be destroyed by the brightness of the Savior's coming. This will be the finishing stroke to all earthly monarchies—will close up the affairs of time, and introduce the children of God to the marriage supper of the Lamb. "Thus saith the Lord, Ah ! I will ease me of mine adversaries, and avenge me of mine enemies. The destruction of the transgressors shall be together. The strong shall be as tow, and the maker of it as a spark, and they shall both burn together, and none shall quench them." Then shall the moon be confounded, and the sun ashamed when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, before his ancients gloriously.

That the marriage supper of the Lamb is near, all the events of prophecy most clearly indicate. Edward Beecher, in a sermon published in 1835, remarks as follows : "In the progress of the cause of God on earth, there are certain great crises, or turning points of destiny, full of deep interest to him and to the intelligent universe. Such was the coming of Christ, an event around which were concentrated the interests of the whole human race, and of the moral government of God in all ages. The advent of such eras is announced beforehand, and preceded by signs. The event stands predicted on the prophetic page, throwing its light unto the dark regions of futurity ; and God himself, as the long expected day draws near, so orders his providence that signs of his advent may be seen on every side. He holds up a standard to his people, and calls on them to behold it from afar. When he does this, it is their duty to notice such signs, and to be fully aware of their import ; and to do this rightly is to discern the signs of the times. Beneath the inspiring influence of the Almighty, the universal church is aroused, excited, and agitated by the persuasion that a glorious advent of the kingdom of God is at hand." By this Mr. B. understands the conversion of the world. But where is the Scripture to warrant such license with the Word of God, as to make the Kingdom of God at hand to mean the "conversion of the world ?"—When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven, he will find the world not in a converted state, but as in the days of Noah, which days correspond to the age in which we are living. That the Savior is about to make his appearance and call his followers to the marriage supper—to give them the kingdom, and the greatness of the kingdom, is evident from the signs of the times—the fulfilment of prophecy—and from the vision of Daniel. The world seems "To toll the death-bell of its own decease,

And by the voice of all its clemente

To preach the general doom. When were the winds
Let slip with such a warrant to destroy ?
When did the waves so haughtily o'er-leap
Their ancient barriers ?
Fires from beneath, and meteors from above,
Portentous, unexampled, unexplained,
Have kindled beacons in the skies ; and the old
And crazy earth has had her shaking fits
More frequent, and foregone her usual rests.
The pillars of our planet seem to fail,
And nature, with a dim and sickly eye,
To wait the close of all "

Having considered the Marriage Supper of the Lamb, as to its meaning and time, we shall now consider—

II. Its blessings, which those who are finally called will enjoy. Blessed are they which are called unto the Marriage supper of the Lamb.

Our salvation from sin is represented in the Scriptures as originating with God, and as attributed to his compassion for the guilty. The doctrine is best expressed by the plain declarations of scripture. Eph. i. 4, 5 — "According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we might be holy, and without blame before him in love, having predestinated us to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ unto himself, according to the good pleasure of his will." 2 Tim. i 9 — 2 —

“Who hath saved us and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began. The Lord knoweth them that are his.” God, however, is not represented by these passages as partial in his grace toward mankind. Peter said, in the house of Cornelius, “of a truth, I perceive that God is no respecter of persons.” He, in common with most of his nation, thought that the favor of God was confined to the house of Israel; but now he sees that, in every nation, “he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted of him.” The free invitations of the gospel are sufficient to encourage every sinner to accept the mercy of God at the foot of the Cross. Those who are called by the spirit, and become reconciled to God through his Son, are sealed unto the day of redemption. Such may hope to be called at the Marriage Supper of the Lamb. They may have the full assurance of hope, that when He, who is our life, shall appear, they will also appear with him in glory.

The call spoken of in our text will be indicated by the seventh trumpet. Rev. x. 5, 6, 7—“And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth, lifted up his hand to heaven, and swear by him that liveth forever and ever, and the things that therein are, and the earth and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things which are therein, that there should be time no longer. But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God shall be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets." The sounding of the seventh trumpet is a notable sign in the course of the prophecy, that "time shall be no longer"—the mystery of God shall be finished—and when the "time of trouble," alluded to in Dan. xii. just previous to the resurrection of those who sleep in Jesus will begin. And may the people of God be prepared for this trial of their faith and patience. "Many shall be tried and purified, and made white before the millennial morning shall dawn, and the marriage supper of the Lamb come. They must put on the whole armor of God, that they may be able to stand in the evil day. This time of trial is rolling on and coming nearer; but the saints may rejoice in the testimony of God. They shall be "caught up to meet the Lord in the air."

Christians will then be called to the marriage supper, by the last trumpet, "at the resurrection of the just." 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52—"Behold, I show you a mystery ; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump ; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." Then will be "heard, as it were the voice of a great multitude, saying, Alleluia, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready."

Now, as it is the purpose of the Father to give his people the kingdom, so Christ exhorts them to be ready. See Luke xii. 33, 38—"Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning, and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord, when he will return from the wedding, that when he cometh and knocketh they may open unto him immediately." To gird up the loins means to be prepared—to be found active and diligent in the service of the Lord. "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing."

The blessings which the marriage supper of the Lamb implies are clearly pointed out in the Scriptures. To these blessings the righteous will be called at the resurrection. They are as follows :

1. A glorified nature. That God can form a spiritual and glorified body, no more liable to decay, disease and death, the apostle positively affirms. 1 Cor. xv. 44. — It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." It is one of the most cheering prospects that can be presented, in view of the ideas we form of death and the grave ; especially when we think of the " dark and narrow tomb," the receptacle of the offensive mass of clay. It is said of a friend to Spencer, that, as he leaned over his lifeless form, he exclaimed. " I thank God that the body will be redeemed at the resurrection." Then when the righteous are raised from the grave, and the redeemed living changed, they will be clothed upon with an immortal glorified nature ; and,

2. They will be perfectly holy. Sin is death to all our spiritual emotions. "In heaven no sin is found." The intellectual and moral nature of the righteous shall be clothed upon with the Redeemer's holiness ; mortality shall be swallowed up of life ; their souls, expanding in the ever increasing glory of the new abode, will be adapted to the entire enjoyment of the marriage supper. Rev. vii. 13, 14—" And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, what are these which are arrayed in white robes ? and whence came they ? And I said unto him, sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, these are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.” Some writers on the book of Revelation have referred the above passage exclusively to the martyrs who have, in the fullest extent of the term, passed through great tribulation,—sealed their testimony to the religion of God with their blood. May it not refer to all the redeemed, whose garment, suitable for the marriage supper of the Lamb, is the righteousness of Christ ? The white robe is an emblem of purity. Without holiness no man can see God.

Tribulations have a tendency to purify the righteous. Peter, after speaking of the inheritance of the saints, ready to be revealed in the last time, says “Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations, (trials.) That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honour, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ.—1 Peter i. 6, 3. Daniel says, “Many shall be tried and purified, and made white.” Holiness is the appropriate garment in which to appear at the marriage supper of the Lamb. We have a perfect description in the 7th chapter of Revelation, of the character and condition of the spirits of the just made perfect, represented as standing "before the throne and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands ;" emblem of their victory over sin—their triumph over all their enemies.

Let christians, when cast down by afflictions, trials and persecutions, read the 7th chapter, and rejoice in all their tribulations. We may not be able to see the design of them so clearly in this life, as we shall in heaven. God permits his people, for a wise purpose, to endure trials for a season. But these cheerless, starless nights will soon be over, and in the new earth their sun will no more go down, there will be no night there : and they will see how every trial conduced to whiten their robes, and brighten their crown.

3. They will be perfectly happy. At the marriage supper of the Lamb there will be no sin, no night, no sickness, no death, no sorrow, no pain. "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." Their services in the heavenly world have no interruption—their joy no bounds—they shall be filled with all the fullness of God, and make the temple of unfading glory resound with the anthem of never ceasing praises to the Lamb.

John saw, in vision, the "Holy Jerusalem descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God." He called it the bride, the Lamb's wife, with all her heavenly glories. The city is described by an inspired mind. It is a "building indeed, not made with hands." "Glorious things are spoken of thee, O city of God." The wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. The wall of Jasper and the city was of pure gold, like unto clear glass. The foundations of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones ; and the twelve gates were twelve pearls. The street of the city was fine gold ; and the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it."

"And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it, for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it ; and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day, for there shall be no night there."

The tree of life, bearing twelve manner of fruits, and yielding her fruit every month, is a complete emblem of the immortal state of the righteous. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

The river of life, spoken of in connection with the tree of life, may denote the undying love of Christians in the New Jerusalem state. "There is a river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of our God." Here religion in the soul is as a well of water springing up into everlasting life. There it will become a river, clear as chrystal, ever flowing among the saints. With the tree of life, ever bearing fruit, the healing leaves ever shedding around a healthful influence, and the river of life ever rolling through the city, the inhabitants will "hunger no more, neither thirst any more."

The arrangements of the marriage supper will all be made ; and every one present clothed in robes of light. The espoused of the Lord shall enter into his joy, and shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Lord, we shall be perfectly satisfied, perfectly happy, and perfectly holy when called at the resurrection morning, to the MARRIAGE SUPPER OF THE LAMB.

The prospect is most cheering to the tried people of God. Their toils end—their trials cease—their joys begin. Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh. There will be no one present who has not on the wedding garment.

THE SECOND ADVENT OF CHRIST AND THE RESURRECTION,

THE PRINCIPAL FEATURES OF APOSTOLICAL PREACHING.

The importance of making Christ's second advent a prominent theme of pulpit discussion, is disparaged by some writers, on the ground of Paul's determination to know nothing among men save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. But are we to infer from the apostle that the sufferings, and the crucifixion of the Savior are all he determined to make known to the world, as a preacher of the gospel? By no means. It is true that the apostle had a special commission to the Corinthians, relative to the cross of Christ, and it was his determination, while among them, to preach faithfully the doctrine of a crucified Savior. It was his purpose not to occupy his time in discussing the laws, customs, and traditions of the Jews; nor to preach to them "with enticing words of man's wisdom," but in demonstration of the spirit, and of power.

In the first chapter of the same Epistle, (v. 7, ) the apostle commends the Corinthians, because they "come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ;" as though their constant expectations of his coming to judge the world was one evidence of true piety, and a means for keeping them in the love of God, that they may be found blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ.

In chapter vi. 1, 2, the apostle reproves them for not remembering "that the saints shall judge the world,"—and the xv. chapter is devoted to an exposition of the order and nature of the resurrection. It is evident, from the whole epistle, that the apostle did not confine his preaching to the cross of Christ, any more than to the resurrection, and the coming and kingdom of our Lord.

Attention to the writings of the apostles will show that they preached the advent of Christ near, for the consolation and edification of christians; also on account of its practical tendency.

1. By the way of consolation. The apostle assures christians, at Thessalonica, that they will again see their departed friends, who have fallen asleep in Jesus ; and adduces the resurrection of Christ as a pledge of theirs, when the Lord Jesus shall descend from heaven. See 1 Thess. iv. 13—18. — “ But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the Word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God ; and the dead in Christ shall rise first ; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air ; and so shall we ever be with the Lord.

Wherefore, comfort one another with these words.” 1 Thess. v. 9, 10.—“ For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us, that, whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him.” 2 Thess. i. 7—10—“ And to you, who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ : who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power ; when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day."

Paul himself, in view of the hour of his departure, is consoled in the hope of a crown of righteousness, which he, with all the redeemed, will receive, at that day.—1 Tim. iv. 6—8. Peter, when reminded of the brevity of his own life, writes an Epistle to his people, the object of which is to confirm their faith in the coming of the Lord, and in the expectation of living in the new heavens, and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. 1 Peter v. 4.—“When the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.” James, in his epistle, does not encourage those to whom he writes with the hope of their final reward, until Christ comes the second time. In view of their tribulations, he exhorts them to be patient until the coming of the Lord,—the period when they shall see, in the most striking light, that the sufferings of the present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall then be revealed. Why does he earnestly exhort them to bear patiently their trials? The answer is found in the first chapter, 7th verse; that the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ. Paul, in his Epistle to the Hebrews, after discussing the doctrine of Christ's mediation, closes the subject by saying, "And unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation. For what purpose shall he appear but to give his people their reward—their incorruptible inheritance."

It is evident, therefore, that the apostles, instead of dwelling on death as the period when Christians will enter upon their full enjoyment, and their complete reward, rather urged them to look forward to the coming of Christ, when the hopes of the pious will be consummated by the revelation of Jesus Christ.

2. The doctrine of Christ's second coming, near, was evidently preached by the apostles on account of its practical influence.

1. As a motive to Christian love.—"And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love, one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you, to the end, that he may establish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.”—1 Thess. iii. 13.

2. As a motive to Christian forbearance.—“We, ourselves, glory in you in the churches of God, for your patience and faith in all your persecutions, and tribulations, that ye endure, which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer; seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you, and to you who are troubled rest with us when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven.”—2 Thess. i. 4—7. Heb. x. 36, 37. James v. 7, 8. 1 Peter i. 6, 7.

3. As a motive to the performance of Christian duties.—“For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, and then he shall reward every man according to his works.”—Math. xvi. 27. It is the duty of the Christian to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, relieve the oppressed, and to do good unto all men. A cup of cold water given in the name of a disciple, does not escape the notice of the all-seeing Judge. Jesus said, “I was an hungered and ye gave me meat, I was thirsty and ye gave me drink, I was a stranger and ye took me in; naked and ye clothed me; sick and ye visited me; I was in prison and ye came unto me."

4. As a reason for watchfulness.—"But ye brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief; ye are all the children of light and of the day; we are not of night nor of darkness. Therefore, let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober."—1 Thess. v. 4, 6,

If the reward, for a faithful discharge of duty in the vineyard of the Lord, is deferred till the chief Shepherd shall appear, then will the belief of his advent night stimulate his servants to warn the guilty, day and night, with tears. "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing."

And now permit me to invite your attention to the study of the Bible. It is a light—a guide—a comforter. It throws light on the past, the present, and the future. It is a clear exhibition of God's character—his attributes—the way of salvation by his Son Jesus Christ. Here is the Cross; and on that Cross is presented the suffering Lamb. He invites, entreats, persuades you to look unto him and live. Believe in him, love him with all your heart, and then when he comes to be admired in his saints, you will be ready to welcome his approach—to receive the unfading crown of glory, and to enter into the joy of our Lord. Rev. iii. 21.—“To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne.” Rev. ii. 11.—“He that overcometh, shall not be hurt of the second death.” Rev. ii. 7.—“To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God.”

NARRATIVE.

It is often sneeringly said, respecting many of those who have been led to believe in the pre-millennial advent of Christ in 1843, that they have "prayed themselves into this belief," without the proper exercise of their reason; while others are confident that if the doctrine were true, our educated ministers and theological professors would certainly have ascertained it. I have, therefore, thought it might be of service to those who are particularly interested in the subject, to give a brief statement of facts pertaining to my own conversion to this belief, accompanied with some suggestions and references which may aid serious inquirers in their search after the truth.

In Nov., 1840, I was brought, through the abounding grace of God, into the state of mind designated by the apostle Paul in the following language:—"There is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus, FOR the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death; for what the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us." "Being made free from sin, ye have your fruit unto holiness." "Thanks be unto God, who always causeth us to triumph in Christ." "How shall we who are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" On account of my possessing and professing such a state of mind, I was, as a matter of course, regarded with suspicion and treated with neglect, and my name was cast out as evil, by many who had before spoken of me and treated me as a worthy brother in the Lord. But I was made to realize in my own experience what the apostle meant, when he said, "I am filled with comfort, I am exceedingly joyful in all our tribulations." "None of these things move me;"—and what the Savior meant when he said, "Blessed are ye when men shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake. Rejoice ye in that day and leap for joy."

In the month of Jan., 1841, I was for the first time led to read Miller's Lectures, and several other publications on the second coming of Christ. Such was then my state of mind, that I could feel no opposition to these nor to any other religious opinions which were entertained by devoted Christians; nor have I, at any time since, had it in my heart to speak of those who embraced these views, in such a way as to grieve or offend one of "Christ's little ones," for I felt that it were better that a millstone were hanged about my neck and that I were drowned in the depth of the sea. But still, I could see no reason or consistency in such views of the Bible as Miller and others entertained, in relation to this subject; and as I had been led practically to adopt the anti-Protestant sentiment advocated by Prof. Stuart, under whose instruction I studied for the ministry, that the books of Daniel and Revelation cannot be accurately interpreted by those who are unacquainted with the original languages,* I thought it not strange, that such men as Miller should entertain such irrational and inconsistent views of the prophetic scriptures.

During the two past years, since that time, I have attended much to the study of the prophecies, in the way in which, I have reason to believe, they have generally been studied by ministers and others: i. e., I have read Newton, and Faber, and Smith, and Campbell, and Edwards; and in connection with them, I have read the Bible, always feeling, however, that it would be presumption in me to suppose that I could understand the prophecies, without the aid of some one of these distinguished expositors, and that it would be next to sacrilege to question the correctness of their views respecting a temporal millennium. My mind, however, was often perplexed with the disagreement of these writers among themselves, and with the impossibility of explaining many passages of scripture in accordance with the views of either of them.

When Prof. Cowles began to write on the prophecies in the Oberlin Evangelist, advocating a temporal millennium, I was cheered with the hope and expectation of having all my difficulties and perplexities removed. Accordingly, I read all his communications carefully, and with deep interest. Although his views appeared more consistent, in some respects, than those of other writers, except Pres. Edwards, with whom he appeared very nearly to agree, still many important prophecies remained uninterpreted, nor could I see any rational and consistent method of explaining them in accordance with his views. I was still, however, very confident that they might, and must be explained consistently with the idea of a temporal millennium; and that I should be able so to explain them when I should have the requisite time and "helps" for the purpose.

During the last summer I have listened to several lectures, and read various publications from those who believe in the second coming of Christ in A. D. 1843. But their views appeared to me more and more inconsistent and irrational, so much so, that when at the second advent camp-meeting in Taunton, in September, I felt constrained to join with brother Hawley, of New Bedford, in attempting to expose what appeared to me to be their absurdities, but which I now see were absurdities to me, for the same reason that to go in a certain direction in a large city or in a strange country, in order to reach a particular place of destination, appears absurd to one who has unconsciously lost the points of compass. The whole difficulty was in myself, in my long established belief, the correctness of which I had never thought of questioning, that the future heaven of the saints was to be somewhere in the regions of space above us, and that there would be a temporal millennium before this state of our probation should close.

From the Taunton camp-meeting, brother Hawley went with me to the place in which I was then laboring, to aid in a protracted meeting. There, our labors in the meeting occupying only the afternoon and evening of each day, we proposed to devote each forenoon to the study of the Scriptures, without note or comment, with a view to ascertain more satisfactorily their import in relation to the subjects discussed by the Millerites; for although their views appeared to us both to be very inconsistent and absurd, yet we were unprepared to show, as we felt we might and ought to do, what the Scriptures did teach on these subjects. I never so fully realized, and so deeply felt, as I did at that time, that with the Holy Spirit promised to guide us into all truth, I might understand the Scriptures for myself, without any reference to the opinions of commentators or expositors. And having no other book 'but the Bible then within our reach, after expressing to each other our feelings respecting the promise of the Spirit to guide us into all truth, we bowed together before God, and as to myself, with a confidence of being guided into the truth which I had never before felt. I must also say, that this was the first time I ever attempted to search the Scriptures for myself, without note or comment, and without any reference to what others had thought or written, to ascertain their true import in relation to this subject. After spending a season in fervent prayer, we commenced our examination, comparing scripture with scripture, first, with reference to the location of the future residence of the saints, and then with reference to the pre or post-millennial advent of Christ, both expecting to be more convinced that the Millerites were deluded in relation to these points, yet willing to admit and to defend whatever we should find to be truth. We had not spent more than six hours in our examination, before we were led to see, beyond our ability as honest Christians to doubt, that the saints are to reign with Christ forever ON THE EARTH—that this earth, when the works of the devil in it and upon it are burned up, will become the "new earth" which we, according to his promise, are to look for, as the everlasting habitation of the righteous—and that the second coming of Christ will be before any such millennium can occur as we had been taught to expect. In coming to these conclusions, I was peculiarly startled to find that I was being led so far into Millerism; and I was strongly tempted by that consideration, and by others associated with it, to shrink back, and to question the soundness of these conclusions. But on reviewing again and again the ground which we had passed over, I could not resist the conviction that, in respect to the points already examined, the views of the "Millerites" were in accordance with the word of God; and in yielding my heart to these convictions of my understanding, I was filled with inexpressible peace and joy, the same in kind, though superior in degree, that I had experienced in yielding my heart to the doctrines of regeneration and sanctification.

I now found myself in an entirely new point of observation respecting the prophecies—a point from which I saw such harmony, and beauty, and glory in all the Bible, and especially in the prophecies, as I never saw before. It was like surveying a large city from the top of some commanding eminence, after having travelled over it for some months, in vain, with a view of becoming acquainted with the true direction and relative position of its numerous streets, wharves, and public buildings.

The conviction is irresistible, and immediate, that, from that position, you can in due time, gain a correct idea of the situation of each, in reference to every other point, and every other object.

We now pursued our examination of the Scriptures with unspeakable satisfaction and delight, with reference to the nature of Christ's kingdom, the land of promise, and the restoration of the true Israel to this, their own promised inheritance, together with all the departed saints, who are "heirs with us of the same promise."

In this examination we did not attend particularly to the visions of Daniel, supposing that we could better understand these, after we should have ascertained the import of other parts of the Bible in relation to this subject. On this account, our time being limited, we did not then become satisfied respecting the time of Christ's coming. In other words, we were not yet convinced that this world's probationary state would be closed up by the coming of Christ in A. D. 1843. But after having such an experience of the faithfulness of God, in so far guiding me by his Spirit to a knowledge of the truth, I felt assured that I should be made to understand the historical prophecies of Daniel and John, including the times and seasons therein specified, whenever I should investigate them, as

I had done other parts of the Bible, with reference to those points which had now become so delightfully plain and intelligible to my apprehension. Respecting the prophetic periods of time, I was not so readily satisfied, on account of the dust that had been thrown into my eyes by what Professor Cowles had written, for the purpose of showing that a day in prophecy is never to be reckoned as a year. But after a careful and prayerful investigation of the subject, with particular attention to the various historical events which might be supposed to be a fulfilment of these prophecies, as it respects the periods specified, my mind was set perfectly and delightfully at rest. Admitting that Professor Cowles' opinion of the passages to which he referred in Numbers and Isaiah, and other literal historical narrations, is correct, I could see no reason why they should be made a rule for interpreting the prophetic periods found among the symbolical predictions of Daniel and John; while it became perfectly plain, after a proper examination of the Scriptures in connection with historical events, that a day in these prophecies was intended to be understood as representing a year—a week, seven years, a month, thirty years, and a year, three hundred and sixty years; and that they had thus, in every case, been exactly fulfilled, except the ending of those periods, which bring us down to the coming of the Lord.

When I had become satisfied of this, I could not, of course, avoid the conclusion, that in the year 1843 Christ would come in the clouds of heaven, to raise the righteous dead, to change the righteous living, and to destroy all the wicked, with all the works of the devil, and to set up here his everlasting, glorified kingdom; and in yielding my heart to this truth, that peace of God which passeth all understanding, and which had, for some time been flowing like a river through my soul, swelled to almost an ecstasy of joy. It was the same "joy in the Holy Ghost" which I had often before experienced at intervals, only now it became more permanent, and gave me a liberty and an energy in doing good to others, which I never had before. I seemed to understand the full import of the Saviour's declaration, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free;" and since then, I have understood, as I never did before, the value and importance of this doctrine, in connection with the doctrine of holiness, for preparing us for the coming of the Lord. I had before been very confident that all religious experience and religious action which should result from the belief of this doctrine, must be selfish in its character, and therefore spurious. But now I know that such an opinion on this subject, let who will entertain it, is both unscriptural and false.

Here I must also testify, that I have never come to the knowledge of any truth, the evidence of which has continued to accumulate and to brighten from every quarter, filling the soul with unspeakable and perpetual joy, as it does in relation to this subject; and nothing has contributed more to cause this constantly accumulating evidence to glow with soul-captivating radiance, than the productions of those that have written and spoken against it. In this respect, I have been peculiarly benefitted in reading Professor Stuart's "Hints on Prophecy," and in hearing President Mahan express his objections and views; while I have been led most earnestly to desire and pray, that these teachers in Israel may be delivered from those habits and influences, by which they are so astonishingly blinded to the truth on this subject; and may cease to join with the slumbering virgins, and with the wicked of every description, in saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming."

In closing this narrative, I feel it my duty to advert to a remark which is sometimes made, and which is adapted, if not designed, to perpetuate the ignorance of such as choose not to search the Scriptures for themselves on this subject. It is said that "the most, if not all of the educated ministers who are believing in the coming of the Lord this year, are those who had previously been proscribed, or treated with jealousy and suspicion by their brethren, as heretical in some of their opinions." Now so far as there is any truth in this remark, it amounts to this, that these ministers had previously been willing to submit to the reproach, or persecution, which every minister of the so-called "standing order" must unavoidably endure, however holy and useful he may be, who dares to entertain and express any opinions respecting the truths of the Bible, not by their brethren deemed orthodox. And here let it be remembered, that in enlightening and guiding men, the Spirit of God acts in accordance with the established laws of their minds, while none have the promise of being guided into the truth, except such as do the will of the Lord at all hazards. Such ministers as are here referred to, then, are the only ones who can reasonably be expected to be guided into the truth.

Here, probably, will be found one of the principal reasons why so few liberally educated ministers have yet been led to apprehend and preach the truth on this subject. They know that if they should avow their belief in the pre-millennial advent of Christ in 1843, they would, at once, be proscribed by their brethren as heretical in their views, or sneered at as foolish, fanatical "Miller-ites;" and that the probable result would be, to deprive them and their families of their present means of a comfortable subsistence. And while men are influenced at all by such considerations, it is both unreasonable and unscriptural to expect that they will be guided to a knowledge of the truth.

In view of what I have now stated respecting my conversion to the truth pertaining to this subject, the reader must be prepared to credit my sincerity, and my sanity also, if he knows anything of Christian experience, when I affirm, that I can no more reasonably or safely doubt that Christ will come to close up the scene of this world's probation, during the present year, than I can doubt that the doctrine of regeneration is a doctrine of revelation.

And here I must say further, that if that experience by which evangelical Christians are assured that their views of the doctrine of regeneration are correct, is not all a delusion, then my testimony in regard to the truth of this doctrine, may safely be relied on. I find it as clearly taught in the Bible, and have had, and do have continually, the same in kind the very same, sealing witness of its truth on my own heart; while the preaching of it, in almost every place, is attended with the same converting and sanctifying power.

And now does any one inquire, "What shall you think and what will you do, if after all, Christ does not come this year?" My reply is, I cannot now determine precisely what I should think, or what I should do in such a case. But I am sure of this, that since God has led me to believe that he will come this year, as his word abundantly teaches, and has brought me by his Spirit through this truth to rejoice and confide in him, as I never did before, he will not then leave me, but will teach me what to think and what to do, if he does not come; and especially am I sure that he will so teach me, that I shall then be saved from treating the Bible, and Christian experience, as they are now treated, by those who are trying to persuade themselves and others that the thousands of devoted Christians who are proclaiming and looking for the coming of the Lord this year, are following cunningly devised fables.

JOHN STARKWEATHER.

SUGGESTIONS AND REFERENCES.

Does the reader now inquire, "How can I ascertain, so as to be perfectly satisfied, that these views of this subject are in accordance with the word of God?"

In answering this inquiry, let me submit to your serious consideration and careful examination, the following suggestions and references:

1. If the end of all things is so near at hand, it is unspeakably desirable and important that you should know it.

Whatever may be said on this subject, every individual knows that if the Lord is coming this year, it would be his duty, and if he were a true believer in the doctrine he would feel disposed to conduct very differently, if not respecting his own spiritual interests, certainly in respect to the spiritual interests of his friends and neighbors, from what he would ever do without this belief. Every one feels that he has a work to do with reference to his fellow-men, when the time has come for the midnight cry to be sounded, which could not have devolved upon him before. And does not the fact that God has made us susceptible of such convictions and feelings, afford a good and sufficient reason for supposing that he would furnish us, in some way, with information so desirable and important respecting the time of Christ's coming to judgment? In accordance with this reasonable expectation, did he not give information of the destruction of the old world 120 years before it came? Did he not also, seven days before, expressly make known the very day when this destruction would commence? Gen. vi. 3; vii. 4. Yes, if the end of the world is to come this year, you feel that you want to know it now.

2. Do not suppose that these views cannot be in accordance with the word of God, because they are, in some respects, different from those which were entertained by intelligent and pious men in former times.

You will find that the great majority of the intelligent and pious of former times, until the days of Dr. Whitby, who died in A. D. 1727, believed in the pre-millennial advent of Christ. Yet the time of his appearing, and many of the circumstances and events connected with the setting up of his kingdom, were not understood by them as they are now being apprehended; and for the obvious reason, that these are among the things referred to in Dan. xii. 4, 9, where it is said, "The words are closed up, and sealed to the time of the end." "Shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end."

3. Believe with unwavering confidence, that

"at the time of the end," i. e. just before the Lord comes, the truth in regard to the time of his coming, together with the circumstances and events connected with the setting up of his kingdom, MAY BE UNDERSTOOD.

It is indeed said, "Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." But we are nowhere told that no man ever shall know the year during which Christ will come. If this passage is to be so understood, it makes it equally true that the Son of God himself will not know when he is to come to judge the world, till he gets here! But the passage merely affirms that the day and hour was, at that time, known only to the Father. But the same divine Teacher has said, in Matt. xxiv. 33: "When ye shall see all these things," (that is, the signs which he had just specified,) "know that it is near, even at the doors:" and in Dan. xii. 10, that at the time of the end "the wise shall understand." Besides, what a reflection upon the character of God must it be, to suppose that in a professed revelation of future events, the definite and specified periods contained in it, which evidently relate to the time of Christ's coming, are never to be understood!

It is also said in Acts i. 7, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power." But in the next verse it is said, "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto me"—witnesses of what the Holy Spirit is promised to do. And what is he promised to do? Why, "he shall guide you into all truth, and teach you all things, and show you things to come." John xiv. 26, and xvi. 13. Of course at the "time of the end," the visions of Daniel may be understood, including those prophetic numbers and periods which close with the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead.

You will find also, that, before the seventh and last trumpet sounds, all who will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, will so believe that he is near, even at the door, that they will, with prepared hearts, be looking and waiting for his appearing. For God has declared that, "at the time of the end," "none of the wicked shall understand, but the wise shall understand." Dan. xii. 10. This declaration evidently excludes all the wicked, and includes all the righteous, and affirms, of course, that all the righteous will understand,—not with the intellect merely, for this is true of many wicked, but with the heart, through the enlightening and sealing operations of the Holy Spirit,—what is said in the 'book of Daniel, respecting the time of Christ's coming. "Then, shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God, and him that serveth him not."

4. Carefully notice the predicted signs which show that the "time of the end" has now come, when the time and circumstances of Christ's coming may and will be understood, by all the truly righteous.

See how strikingly Dan. xii. 4, and 10, last clause, are now being fulfilled. Read also Matt. xxiv. 29—31, and then, if possible, obtain an interview with some individual who witnessed the darkening of the sun on May 19th, 1780, and the thick, fearful darkness of the succeeding night, notwithstanding the moon was then full-orbed in the midst of the heavens. Gain an interview also, if possible, with some one who witnessed the shower of stars that fell to the earth on the night of Nov. 13, 1833; and remember that just such a phenomenon is described as having occurred on the night of Nov. 12, 1779, and visible from South America to Germany and Greenland. Ask yourself what phenomena can be expected to fulfil these predictions, if these have not done it. Notice also the striking fulfilment of Luke xxi. 25, 26, 28; 2 Tim. iii. 1—8; and 2 Pet. iii. 3—7. Then read Nahum ii. 3, 4, and as you think of our rail-road cars, "seeming like torches, and running like the lightning," remember it is "the day of God's preparation" "utterly to cut off the wicked." Read from chap. i. 15. Read also Isa. ii. 1—5, together with Micah iv. 1—5, which tell us what "many people" will say in the "last days," when Christianity is extolled by the nations; and then notice in the verses immediately following, in Micah iv. 6; what God says he will do in that day, when these ideas of a temporal millennium are so prevalent among the people. See also what follows in Isa. ii. 6—22.

5. Do not admit that any views which you have ever heard expressed on this subject are correct, without an independent examination of the Scriptures for yourself, to see whether these things are so.

You will not, of course, believe, nor do we wish you to believe, that our expositions of the Bible are correct, until you have diligently, prayerfully, and satisfactorily examined for yourself. And to induce and guide to such an examination, is the sole object of these pages. That you cannot safely adopt the views of other expositors, will become evident, when you consider that scarcely any two of them can be found to agree in their views, of even the most important points pertaining to this subject. One of the most learned and consistent among them, Prof. Bush of the N. Y. University, so interprets the prophecies as to affirm that the temporal millennium which many are now looking for, is already past. Prof. Stuart, of Andover, and many others, adopt and undertake to defend that view of the prophecies contained in the books of Daniel and Revelation, which was entertained by Josephus, an interested, carnal Jew, and Rollin, a bigoted Roman Catholic, who lived before the "time of the end," when the words were "closed up and sealed." In thus pretending that the periods of time specified in these prophecies have been literally fulfilled, they are obliged, virtually, to surrender the Bible into the hands of Infidels and Universalists; for it never has been and never can be shown that they have been thus fulfilled. It should be observed, however, and this is expressly admitted by Prof. Stuart, that the "great mass of interpreters," since the time of the end commenced, both in England and America, have been agreed, as we are, in understanding the days, designated in the books of Daniel and Revelation, as the representatives or symbols of years; and yet, to avoid admitting the doctrine of Christ's coming in 1843, this opinion of the great mass of interpreters is abandoned for that of Josephus and Rollin! It is particularly noticeable also, that almost every individual who undertakes to oppose this doctrine, is ready to admit, as Prof. Stuart himself has affirmed, that they "do not know that Christ will not come this year." It is evidently unsafe, then, to confide in the opinion of any religious teacher on this subject, however learned or pious he may have appeared to be. Besides, you should remember that you are required to search and understand the Scriptures for yourself, and that you must give an account to God for yourself, in respect to the views you entertain of their import.

6. Believe that YOU MAY, and expect that you

WILL, by pursuing the right course, very soon ascertain what the Holy Spirit designed to communicate, in relation to every important point connected with this subject.

You may be told that it is presumption in you to think of understanding the prophecies, unless you are able to read the Scriptures in the original languages, and have studied books which treat of the proper principles of interpretation. But be not deceived by such anti-Protestant and anti-Scriptural sentiments. Remember that the Bible was originally written for the common people, to be understood by the common people, by just that method of studying it, which it is possible and natural for them to pursue. When it can be proved, in opposition to the united testimony of all the most competent judges who have lived during the two past centuries, that our present translation of the Bible is not in all essential particulars correct; then, and not till then, may you admit that none but learned men and theological professors can gain a correct understanding of the Scriptures. And do not suppose that you cannot, in a very little time, ascertain the truth pertaining to this subject. By observing the directions here given, with the references appended to them, or with a good concordance, twenty-four hours' time, will be amply sufficient to become perfectly satisfied respecting the main points of inquiry.

7. But that you may be sure of being guided by the Spirit in searching for truth, you must be in a state of entire consecration to God.

Let all your powers be completely submitted to the guidance of the Holy Ghost, in promoting Jehovah's interests, having no will and no interests of your own, of any sort, to consult or to think of in admitting and avowing the truth. The simple, honest, cheerful language of your heart must be, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to believe and do?" while you are so satisfied with the service and the favor of God, that you will count it all joy should you be made a partaker of Christ's sufferings, in having your name cast out as evil and deluded, by all the wise, and learned, and reputedly pious, in the church and out of it. Without this state of mind, you have no promise of being guided by the Spirit to the knowledge of any truth contained in the Bible; and without it you will be very unlikely to apprehend the truth in relation to this subject, which summons you directly, as it were, before the tribunal, and into the immediate presence of that God, who says, "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." You may expect to find it emphatically true here, that "If thine eye be evil thy whole body shall be full of darkness," as it evidently is with the vast majority of professors and ministers of religion, at the present time; for they know, and are constantly affirming, that they always come short of perfect obedience, and this is the same as to say that they are all the time sinning against God, while those only who "do the will of the Lord," have the promise that they shall "know of the doctrine whether it be of God."

Come, then, immediately to Jesus, with the spirit of entire consecration, confiding implicitly in him, as your "wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification and redemption;" expecting that, as your "Horn of Salvation," he will "perform this mercy promised, that you, being delivered from your enemies, may serve him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him all the days of your life." And be not stumbled should you find some individuals professing to be in a state of entire consecration, who do not believe in the pre-millennial advent of Christ in 1843. It is, doubtless, yet to be determined in the case of many such persons, whether they are so baptized with the Holy Ghost, as to be wholly uninfluenced by any worldly and selfish considerations. It is evident, also, from my own experience, as already related, that persons who have the witness in themselves that they are altogether right in the sight of God, may long be deterred from gaining a correct knowledge of the truth on this subject, by certain early imbibed, and long cherished, though erroneous opinions, and methods of interpreting Scripture. Many such persons, especially ministers, and theological professors, will undoubtedly be left, under some such influences, to remain in ignorance respecting the time of Christ's coming, till very near the day of his appearing; that the wisdom of God may be more conspicuously manifested, as it was at his first appearing, and as it is now being manifested in every part of the land, in causing the "foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and things that are not, to bring to nought things that are."

8. Having consecrated yourself entirely to God, begin immediately to search the Scriptures without note or comment; comparing spiritual things with spiritual, relying with expecting confidence on the teachings of the Holy Ghost, and determined to continue your search, till you are satisfied that you have gained the precise views of this whole subject which God intended we should entertain.

Let all the passages pertaining to each point of inquiry be brought together and compared, remembering that only that view is correct, with which all these passages, or the greater number of them, can most easily and naturally be made to harmonize.

1. In respect to the future everlasting abode of the saints with Christ in his kingdom. Examine and compare all the passages here referred to, noticing particularly the nature and duration of the promise made to Abraham AND his seed. Has the promise ever yet been fulfilled? Can an “everlasting inheritance” be taken possession of in this mortal state? Gen. xii. 6, 7; xiii. 14, 15; xv. 7, 18; xvii. 8; xxvi. 3, 4; xxviii. 13; xlviii. 4; Heb. xi. 8, 9, 13, 39, 40; Acts vii. 5.

Who are Abraham’s seed and heirs with him to this promised inheritance? Rom. ii. 28, 29; iv. 13—16; x. 12, 13; Gal. iii. 7, 8, 9. Compare John viii. 39, 40; Rom. ix. 6, 7, 8; Gal. vi. 15; Rev. ii. 9.

How do the heirs become such? Gal. iii. 14—29.

Is Christ now on his own proper throne where he is to reign forever with his saints? Matt. xi. 27; xxviii. 18; John iii. 35; Eph. i. 20, 21, 22; Ps. cx. 1; Heb. i. 3, 13. Compare 1 Cor. xv. 24—28; Rev. iii. 21; Ps. cxxxii. 11, 13, 14; Luke i. 32, 33; Isa. ix. 6, 7; xxiv. 23; Ps. ii. 6. Now, with reference, still further, to the future abode of the saints, compare Ps. xxxvii. 11, 29; Matt. v. 5; Dan. vii. 13, 14, 17, 18, 27; Rev. v. 10; xi. 15.

Is it anywhere intimated in the Bible, that Christ will ever leave the earth again, after he comes to it personally the second time? You may here be reminded of what is recorded in John xiv. 2, 3. But where is “his Father’s house?” Compare the passages last referred to above, with Matt. xiii. 43, and Gal. iv. 26 with Rev. xxi. 2, 3.

What is Christ now doing to prepare a place for his disciples? Rom. viii. 34; Heb.

ix. 24—28; 1 Cor. xv. 24, last clause 25; compare Heb. xi. 39, 40.

2. Is "the Kingdom of God," "the Kingdom of Heaven," or "the Kingdom of Christ," so often spoken of by the sacred writers, already set up, or is it yet to be established? Consider what is generally understood by a kingdom among the "common people," for whom the Bible was written. Can they conceive of two kingdoms existing on the same territory at the same time? Then notice that John the Baptist, Christ, and his Apostles, all speak of "THE kingdom of God" as something which their hearers, the Jews, had often heard of. But how could they have known anything about it, unless "the kingdom" thus spoken of were the same as that spoken of by Daniel, and alluded to by the rest of the prophets, where they refer to the future throne and reign of the Messiah? Now what ideas of the nature of this kingdom, and of the time of its commencement, would be gained, by an unprejudiced mind, from reading the visions in the 2d and 7th chapters of Daniel?

Let them be examined in the following manner. (1.) Read chap. ii. 1—31, 36, with chap. vii. 1, 2, 3, 15, 16, 17. (2.) Chap. ii. 32, 37, 38, 39, with chap. vii. 4, 5, 6. (3.) Chap. ii. 33, 40, with chap. vii. 7, omitting the last clause; read also verse 19. (4.) Chap. ii. 41, with chap. vii. 7, last clause; verse 20, first clause, and verse 24, first clause. (5.) Chap. ii. 42, 43, with chap. vii. 8, 20, after the first clause, verse 24, after the first clause, and verse 25. (6.) Chap. ii. 34, 35, 44, with chap. vii. 11 and 14, first clause, and verse 27, first clause. (7.) Chap. ii. 45, with chap. vii. 9, 10, 13, and 14, last clause, 21, 22, 26, and 27, last clause.

Could you believe, without any other evidence than is presented in these chapters, that the kingdom of God would be established or commenced while any earthly kingdoms were in existence? And yet all commentators and expositors of the Bible refer us, as indeed they ought, to these chapters, for the true idea of the phrase "kingdom of God," as used in the New Testament.

Do the sacred writers of the New Testament represent this kingdom as set up before Christ's ascension to heaven? See Matt. iii. 2; iv. 17; x. 7; Mark xiv. 25; Luke xiii. 28; xxii. 29; xix. 11—27; xxiii. 42; Acts i. 6.

Do they represent it as still future in the days of the Apostles? If so, how far future? With Luke xix. 11—27, compare Matt. xxv. 34; Luke xxi. 31; 2 Thess. i. 5; James ii. 5; Heb. xii. 28; 2 Pet. i. 11; 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10; Gal. v. 21; Eph. v. 55; Matt. xiii. 24—30, 36—43; Rev. xi. 15—18; 1 Cor. xv. 50; 2 Tim. iv. 1. See also and understand 2 Pet. i. 16—18, compared with Matt. xvi. 28 to xvii. 9; and then Rev. xx. 4—6, and xxi. 2—4.

The kingdom of God is said, by our Savior, to be "like," or "is likened to," a great variety of things. But in all such cases the phrase is used (by metonymy) for some circumstance or transaction pertaining, or having reference to this kingdom, as yet future; for surely the kingdom itself cannot be, literally, like all the things.

But how shall we understand those passages which seem to teach that the kingdom of God is the reign of grace in the heart? Compare them with those already referred to: especially compare Luke xvii. 21, and Rom. xiv. 17, with Luke xiii. 29; John iii. 3, 5, and Coll. i. 13; and ask yourself how we can enter INTO, be translated INTO, and sit down IN, that which is within us. In respect to Luke xvii. 21, see the correct translation given in the margin.

For an illustration of what is represented in the Bible as now going on with reference to the kingdom of God, see 1 Kings vi. 7.

3. Are the Jews, as a distinct people, to be returned to the land of their fathers, before the coming of Christ to raise the dead? And are they now entitled to any peculiar privileges or blessings as a people?

Here notice, particularly, the period during which they were to be rejected and punished, as a nation, as threatened in Deut. xxviii. 15—68; (notice particularly verses 20, 21, 22, 24, 29, 33, 45, 46, 48, 51, 61,) and in 1 Kings ix. 6, 7. Then read 2 Kings xvii.

1—23, and notice at the top of the page, B. C. 742. So much for the tribes of Israel.

Respecting the tribe of Judah, see Isa. vi. 8—12; Jer. ix. 16; Jer. xxv. 8—23, noticing particularly verses 9, 12, 18, 27; 2 Chron. xxxiii. 9—11, noticing, at the top of the page, B. C. 677, just 65 years from the beginning of the reign of Ahaz, as predicted in Isa. vii. 8. Since that period the Jews have never been an independent people, (see Neh. ix. 32—37,) although kings of the house of David, continued to reign on David's throne in Jerusalem, as tributaries to Assyria and Babylon, until the captivity of Zedekiah, king of Judah, as predicted in Ezek. xxi. 25—27, and recorded, as history, in 2 Kings xxiv. 18—20; xxv. 1—10.

Compare Luke xxi. 24, and Rom. xi. 25, with Dan. ix. 26, 27, last clause, and viii. 14.

But how shall such predictions and promises be understood as are found in Isa. xi. 11, 12; Ezek. xxxvi. 24, 28; xxxvii. 21, 22; Rom. xi. 26? See who are the true Israel on p. 22. Then compare Isa. lxv. 17—19, with Rev. xxi. 1—4, and 2 Pet. xi. 13. See also Dan. vii. 18, 27, and Ezek. xxxvii.

4. Is there to be a millennium, i. e., a thousand years of universal holiness, on earth, before Christ comes to close up the scene of this world's probation? Is there a single passage in the New Testament which clearly teaches it? If so, find it. Do you refer to the 20th chapter of Revelation? And what does that say about it? Does it say that the spirit, the faith, or the piety, of the martyrs “lived and reigned” in the saints for a thousand years? See Rev. xx. 4, last clause. Does it say that the “souls” of the martyrs only, lived and reigned with Christ? Compare the passage carefully with Rev. xiii. 8; compare also verse 5, with 1 Cor. xv. 21—23; Luke xiv. 14; 1 Thess. iv. 16. Is it not clearly implied in verse 6, that all those persons who do not have part in the first resurrection, that they may be priests of God, and of Christ, and may reign with him, will suffer the second death?

Is it anywhere said in this, or in any other chapter in the Bible, that after a millennium of universal holiness, there will be a great apostacy, so great that, as Pres. Edwards has said, “much the greater part of the world will become visibly wicked, and open enemies of Christ?” Where is there any prediction of such an apostacy, and of the means and agencies by which it is to be brought about, or of events which are to transpire while it is going on, as there is in respect to the apostacy referred to in 2 Thess. ii. 3—12? Is it not manifest, (see verses 7 and 8,) that Satan will be shut up in his prison till all the wicked, Gog and Magog, are found in the four quarters of the earth, perfectly prepared for the battle to which he will attempt to gather them? And if Satan had nothing to do with it, how could they have come to such a pitch of wickedness, on the supposition of a great apostacy?

Do you inquire how such a multitude of wicked persons came to be in the four quarters of the earth, after Christ's reign of a thousand years on the new earth? See verse 5.

In reading the 8th verse, you will notice it does not say that Satan shall go out to deceive the nations, and to gather them together to battle; but, "he shall go out to deceive them, to gather them," &c., i. e., deceive them in that way.

Respecting a thousand years of prevailing peace and righteousness on earth, before the final coming of Christ, see Dan. vii. 21, 22, 11, 13, 14, 23—26; 2 Thess. ii. 8; Matt. xiii. 24—30, 36—42, 49; xxv. 1—12; 2 Tim. iii. 12, and ii. 12; Rom. viii. 17—23; 2 Cor. v. 2—4; Rev. x. 7 and xi. 14—18; Ps. ii. 8, 9; Luke xxi. 24—28.

If there is no proof of a great apostacy, on the supposition of a temporal millennium, the following passages will be seen to have an important bearing on this subject: Jer. xxv. 15—38; Dan. xii. 1; Joel iii. 1—17.

Respecting Isaiah ii. 1—5 and Micah iv. 1—5, see on page 17.

In reading other prophecies which have so often been quoted, as predicting a period of prevailing righteousness, before Christ's coming to judgment, notice very particularly the precise language in which they are expressed throughout, to see whether they can have their fulfilment in this old earth, before the works of the devil pertaining to it, and to the bodies of the righteous, are destroyed; keeping in mind whatever you may have already learned of the nature and location of Christ's future kingdom, and of the time and circumstances of its establishment. Compare again Isa. lxv. 17—25 with Rev. xxi. 1—4, and 2 Pet. iii. 11—13, and see if you can find a "promise" of new heavens and a new earth anywhere except in Isa. lxv. 17; and then, remembering that the object of Christ as the "second Adam" is to restore the ruins of the first, (Acts iii. 21,) compare all the prophecies which have been represented as describing figuratively the state of things during a spiritual reign of Christ for a thousand years, with what is recorded in Isa. lxv. 20—25, as pertaining to the new earth.

Notice also the duration of Christ's reign on the earth, when it is once commenced, as specified in Dan. ii. 44; vii. 14, 27; Micah iv. 7; Isa. ix. 6, 7; Luke i. 33; Rev. xi. 15. If any of the language of these prophecies cannot consistently be interpreted literally, it may, with as much propriety, be applied figuratively to the new earth, after the works of the devil in it are burned up, as to the old, before.

As to Rom. xi. 12, 15, 25, 26, which though they do not expressly teach, are often regarded as implying, a future temporal millennium, and the gathering in of the Jews, as a nation, notice the question or objection in v. 11, which it is the object of the Apostle, in the succeeding verses to answer. Then you will see that in order to have what follows a consistent reply, the word "rather," in v. 11, which was supplied by the translators, should be omitted; and in v. 15 the words, "shall be," which were supplied by the translators, should have been "would be;" and the last clause of v. 12 should be so read as to express the same idea. Compare v. 22, 23.

Does the word "fulness," in v. 25, denote literally and strictly all the Gentiles, or only all who are to be converted? Does "all Israel," in v. 26, denote literally all the carnal Jews, or all the true Israel, according to Rom. ix. 8, and Gal. iv. 28? See the passage quoted in the last clause of the verse, as it reads in Isa. lix. 20.

5. The time of Christ's coming to establish his everlasting kingdom. Dan. viii. 13, 14. Notice in this 14th verse, that the words "concerning" and "sacrifice" are printed in italics, to denote that they are not in the original, but supplied by the translators; and any one can see that the scope of the passage requires that the word "including" should be substituted for "concerning," and that "desolation," or "desolator," should be substituted for "sacrifice."

The same error, in respect to the word "sacrifice" being supplied by the translators of the Bible, when the sense and the truth evidently require the word desolator, must be noticed in v. 11, 12. Also in chap. xi. 31, and xii. 11.

To ascertain the meaning of "the daily," with, or without the word desolator supplied, compare these passages with 2 Thess. ii. 6, 7.

To know what is meant by the "transgression of desolation," in Dan. viii. 13, compare vs. 9, 10, 11, 12 and 23, with Deut. xxviii. 49—27, then read vs. 24, 25. Then, if you are at all acquainted with Roman history, read chap. xi. 14—35, which is Gabriel's explanation of "the vision," (see chap. x. 14,) beginning in chap. xi. 2, where the vision commenced. (See chap. viii. 3, 20.)

To gain a correct idea of this vision read the following passages in the order here specified. (1.) Chap. viii. 3, 4, 20, with chap. xi. 2. (2.) Chap. viii. 5—7, 21, with chap. xi. 3. (3.) Chap. viii. 8, 22, with chap. xi. 4, to the middle of v. 14. (4.) Chap. viii. 9—12, 23—25, with xi. from the middle of v. 14 to v. 36, noticing particularly vs. 14, 20; and comparing particularly v. 14 with Rev. xvii. 17, and v. 20 with Luke ii. 1—3, and v. 23 with 1 Maccabees 8th chap. and v. 31, with chap. viii. 11, 12.

But what is the meaning of "sanctuary," which is here represented as trodden under foot by these desolators? See Ex. xv. 17. Ps. lxxviii. 54; cxxxii. 13, 14. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15, 17. Compare Rom. iv. 13. Now see Dan. viii. 19. And to know what shall take place in the last end of the indignation, and how the sanctuary is to be cleansed, or delivered from being any longer trodden under foot by these desolators, (Luke xxi. 24,) see Dan. xii. 1—3, 11—13; compare chap. vii. 11, 21, 22, 25—27, 13, 14; Isa. i. 27, 28, 31; Rev. xi. 15, 18; Jer. xxv. 12—33; 2 Thess. ii. 8; Dan. ix. 26, 27.

But when shall all this take place? “How LONG SHALL BE THE VISION?” “Unto 2300 days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed.” Now what period of time is here designated, and when does it commence? To arrive at a correct answer to this question, you must notice that Gabriel’s commission (see verse 16,) was not all fulfilled at this time, (see verse 27.) Notice also, that, although he had explained everything else, he had, as yet, said nothing by which Daniel could determine when to commence his reckoning of the 2300 days, nor what period of time a day was designed to represent; while this was to him the most interesting and important part of the vision. Then notice that Daniel’s anxiety for the cleansing of the sanctuary had led him to suppose that it would take place at the close of the captivity in Babylon, (see chap. ix. 2, 16—18.) But he had mistaken, or overlooked that part of the prophecy, which predicts the "perpetual desolation" of it "till the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled." See Jer. xxv. 9, 18, 27, 29—33; also Luke xxi. 24. Now compare Dan. ix. 21, 22, 23, with chap. viii. 16, and you will see that Gabriel's object in chap. ix. is to finish his commission, by giving Daniel the information which he needed respecting the 2300 days, and thus to correct his mistake in regard to the time for cleansing the sanctuary. Now, what does he say?

Verse 24; "seventy weeks are determined," or, as it is in the original, and as it should be in the translation, "seventy sevens are cut off." Seventy sevens of what? and cut off from what? Why, he is explaining the vision of the 2300 days. Compare Matt. xxiii. 32; Luke xix. 41, 42; Heb. x. 14; ix. 12, 26; x. 19, 20. Here, then, you see, is the death of Christ, at the end of 490 of the days of the vision; for 70 sevens is 490. Now the vision begins at the meridian height of the Medo-Persian empire, (see chap. viii. 3, 20,) and, of course, as history shows, in the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus. These 490 days, then, cannot be so many literal days.

Now read verse 25, chap. ix., and compare Ezra vii. 7—26, noticing at the top of the page of your octavo Polyglott Bible, "B. C. 457," which is the year before our reckoning of the birth of Christ when the commandment went forth to restore and build Jerusalem, when the Medo-Persian empire was in the meridian of its power and glory, and when of course the 2300 days commence. Then add the 33 years from the birth to the death of Christ, and you have the sum 490 years, showing that 490 of the 2300 days are just so many years. The death of Christ, then, seals the vision, i. e., it shows that 2300 days are intended to represent so many years, and that these years commence B. C. 457. Now take 457 from and the remainder is 1843, the year after the birth of Christ when he will appear in the clouds of heaven, to raise the righteous dead, and to cleanse the sanctuary, by pouring on the desolator that which is determined. See Dan. viii. 27; Jer. xxv. 29—33; Dan. xii. 1, and Rev. xi. 19. That a day is to be reckoned as a year in this symbolical prophecy, was to have been expected from what we read in Num. xiv. 34, and Ezek. iv. 6.

There is still another method of determining when Christ will come to raise the dead and close up the scenes of this world's probation.

Observe, in the first place, here, that a year is, and ever has been, the world over, the period of one complete revolution of the earth around the sun. This period has been divided into different portions, by different nations, and called by different names. But by comparing Rev. chap. xiii. with Dan. chap. vii. you will see how God has divided it, and how he intended that we should understand prophetic periods. Let these chapters be compared in the following order, viz.,—

Rev. xiii. 2, with Dan. vii. 7.

“ “ 5 “ “ “ 8, 20, 25.

Thus you see that the “little horn” in Daniel, and the “beast” in Revelation, represent the same power, viz., the Man of Sin spoken of in 2 Thess. ii. 3—12, and, of course, that the “42 months” in Rev. xiii. 5, designate the same period as the “time, times, and the dividing of time,” in Dan. vii. 25. Now compare Rev. xii. 6 and 14, and you will see that “time, times, and half a time,” or “the dividing of time,” in Dan. vii. 25, (which we have seen is the same as 42 months in Rev. xiii. 5,) is the same period as 1260 days. See also Rev. xi. 3.

By comparing Rev. xii. 3, 4, with Matt. ii. 13, 16, you will see that the “dragon” here designates the Roman government.

Now no fact in history is clearer or better authenticated than this,* viz., that the Roman government gave to the Man of Sin his power and his seat and great authority, (Rev. xiii. 2,) thus giving the saints with times and laws into his hand (Dan. vii. 26,) in A. D. 538, and that he was taken captive by the French government, and his "dominion taken away," (as predicted in Rev. xiii. 10, and in Dan. vii. 26,) in A. D. 1798, exactly fulfilling the 1260 days, a day for a year. Thus we learn that a month, in these prophecies, denotes a period of 30 days; a day for a year: for 1260 divided by 42)1260( brings a quotient of 30, the average number of days in a month.

Now since 42 months or moons designate, the world over,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  years; who can doubt that "time, times, and half a time," or "the dividing of time," designates the same period, viz.,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  years, or  $3\frac{1}{2}$  revolutions of the earth around the sun? Of course, then, a time or year in these prophecies designates 360 days, a day for a year; for 1260 divided by  $3\frac{1}{2}$ )1260( brings a quotient of 360, the average number of days in a "time," or year.

But again. If you will read the 8th, 9th, 10th, and 11th chapters of Revelation, you will see that the period during which the seven trumpets were to sound, closes with the resurrection of the dead, the rewarding of the righteous, and the destruction of the wicked from the earth. Notice particularly Rev. x. 7, and xi. 15—18, and if you have access to "Gibbon's History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," you can see why expositors of prophecy are nearly all agreed in the opinion, that chap. ix. 5, 10, was fulfilled by the Turks making incursions into the Grecian territories from A. D. 1299 to A. D. 1449, i. e., in precisely 150 years, the number of years in five months, reckoning a day for a year, and 30 days for a month:  $30 \times 5 = 150$ .

By consulting the same history, you will also find, that when these 150 years ended, the four Sultanies of the Turks, composing the Ottoman Empire, who had hitherto been "bound," i. e., restricted to the work of "tormenting," were now "loosed," i. e., received their commission "to slay the third part of men." On that very year the downfall of the Greek empire commenced; their independence ceased by a virtual acknowledgment, on their part, that their national existence was dependent on the consent of the Turkish Sultan. (See Hawkins' Ottoman Empire, p. 113.) Thus commenced the fulfilment of Rev. ix. 15.

Now, by consulting the Missionary Herald for April, 1841, p. 160, and the London Morning Chronicle of Sept. 18, 1840, you will find that on the very day of the closing up of the two periods of time specified in Rev. ix. 5 and 15, the independence of the Ottoman Empire was surrendered into the hands of the following Christian nations of Europe, viz., England, Russia, Austria, and Prussia.

Now, reckoning a day for a year,—

An hour (Rev. ix. 15) would be	15 days
A day	" " 1 year
A month	" " 30 years
A year	" " 360 years
Then add	(vs. 5) 150 years,

and the whole period, 541 15 days, from July 27, 1299, when the Ottomans made their first onset upon the Greeks to "torment them," would end in Aug., 1840, the very time (Aug. 11, 1840) when the independence of the Ottoman Empire was surrendered, as stated above.

Now, says the Revelator, (Rev. xi. 14,) "the second wo is past, and behold the third wo cometh quickly." And what is this wo which is to come "quickly" after Aug 11, 1840? See verses 15—18, and chap. x. 7.

But further; history informs us that before A. D. 490, ten kings had arisen on the ruins of the western Roman Empire, and had formed ten separate kingdoms, France being the principal. (See Dan. vii. 7, 24.) These kingdoms were all governed by Pagan kings, and, during their reign, human sacrifices were offered in Rome. (See Dan. xi. 31, first clause.)

By the year 508 all these kings were converted to Christianity. From A. D. 508 to A. D. 538, the Roman Empire under their reign was nominally Christian, and not politically Papal. Thus was fulfilled Dan. viii. 11; xi. 31, middle clause; xii. 11, first clause, and 2 Thess. ii. 8. In A. D. 534, the Greek Emperor constituted the bishop of Rome head of all the churches in the following language: "We hasten to SUBJECT and unite to your holiness all the priests of the whole east." In another document of the Emperor's, dated March 25, of the same year, he refers to the previous one as having already been sent to the Pope, whom he calls "head of all bishops, and the true and effective corrector of heretics." In A. D. 538, Justinian conquered Rome, and gave the Pope "his seat." See Rev. xiii. 2; Dan. vii. 25, last clause; xi. 31, last clause.

Now read Dan. xii. 11—13, noticing the marginal reading as the correct translation of the Hebrew. 1290 added to 508 the year when "the daily"

— was taken away, amounts to 1798 the very year when the dominion of the Man of Sin was taken away.

"Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the 1335 days;" for Daniel, after resting in the grave, (see Rev. xiv. 13, last clause,) shall "stand in his lot," with all the righteous dead, "at the end of the days"—not the 1290 days, for they were ended in A. D. 1798, and Daniel was not then raised from the dead,—but at the end of the 1335 days after A. D. 508.

Another method of determining the year when the end will come.

By consulting Lev. xxvi. 14—18, 33; Ps. xlv. 11; Dan. xii. 7, you will see that the scattering of the Israelites as a nation, among the heathen, for their sins, was to continue “seven times.” Now we have ascertained (page 42) that “three times and a half” in prophecy are to be reckoned as three and a half prophetic years, or 1260 years. Of course, then, “seven times” would be just twice that number, i. e. 2520 years.

Now when did this punishment begin? See Isa. vii. 8; 2 Chron. xxxix. 9—11, noticing at the top of the page “B. C. 677,” just 65 years from the beginning of the reign of Ahaz.

Now from 2520 years take                    677 the year before Christ when — the punishment began, and thereremains 1843 the year after Christ when the specified period closes.

But what will take place then? Will the kingdom, or the land of promise, be then restored to the Israelites as a nation? They are not, and never were, the rightful heirs of the promise. See on page 29; also on pages 31 and 32.

The time then when the true Israelites, the true seed of Abraham, will take the kingdom, to possess it forever, even forever and ever, (Dan. vii. 18, 27,) is A. D. 1843.

6. Respecting the day and process of final judgment. A day of judgment must include a time of trial, or of decision, according to law and evidence, resulting in a separation of the righteous from the wicked; and also a time of executing the sentence of the law upon those who are proved guilty. The time of trial must always precede the time of execution. And in human tribunals some space of time ordinarily elapses between the trial and the execution of criminals.

Now is the process of the final trial of man, according to law and evidence, anywhere particularly described in the Bible? If so, where is it?

The fact of such a trial is spoken of in Ps. ix. 19; Eccl. xii. 14; Matt. xii. 41, 42; John xii. 31, 48; xvi. 11; Acts xvii. 31; Rom. ii. 16; xiv. 10—12; 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3. Compare Dan. vii. 22; 2 Tim. iv. 1; James ii. 12; 1 Peter iv. 5, 6; Rev. xx. 12, 13.

The fact of such a trial, together with the separation and the destruction of wicked men from the earth, is spoken of in Rev. xi. 18; Dan. xii. 1.

The fact of such a trial, together with the execution, is spoken of in Matt. xxv. 14—30; Luke xix. 22—26; Rev. xx. 11—15.

The separation which will result from the trial, together with the final doom of Satan, is spoken of in Rev. xx. 1—10.

The separation, together with the execution of the sentence upon the wicked, is spoken of in Matt. xxv. 31—46 ; John v. 28, 29 ; Rev. xi. 18.

7. Will the righteous and the wicked be raised from the dead at the same time ? Luke xiv. 14 ; 1 Cor. xv. 21—23 ; 1 Thess. iv. 16 ; Rev. xx. 4—6 ; Dan. xii. 1, 2.

8. Will the wicked be destroyed from the earth IMMEDIATELY after the righteous are caught up to meet the Lord in the air ? Rev. xvi. 1—21 ; Ezek. xxxviii. 14—22 ; Jer. xxv. 15—33 ; Joel iii. 1—17 ; Zeph. iii. 8.

9. What then may we conclude respecting the period that will intervene between the time of separation of the wicked from the righteous, and the time of executing upon them the penalty of the law ? Compare 2 Peter iii. 7—12, with the passages last referred to above.

WORLD—MEANING OF THE TERM.

IN the Greek there are four expressions which have been translated world, namely, ge, he oikoumene, kosmos, and aion. The appropriate meanings of these several words are earth, inhabited earth, mankind, and age. This world is to have an end in all of these senses.

I. The name ge, or earth, is applied not only to the original matter itself which composes the earth,* but to the organization of that matter; as we learn from Gen. ii. 1, where it says, "thus [as described in the first chapter] the heavens and the earth were finished." Now we read of two such organizations. "I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away."† The word heaven here may mean the firmament, or atmosphere, which surrounds the earth, and which, of course, will pass away with it;‡ or it may mean the planetary system of which the earth forms a part, and which possibly may be destroyed and renewed along with the earth.

II. We also read of two worlds of mankind (kosmoi.) Of these, one is born of corruptible seed—the family of the first Adam, with blood for the life thereof—the perishing world, into which sin and death entered by the offence of one man, and which "God so loved as to give his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life"—in a word, the whole human race, from the time of Adam until there shall be no more marrying or giving in marriage,—whose place of abode is this present earth.§

It is true that Peter, in his second epistle, speaks of

† Is. lxxv. 17; 2 Pet. iii. 13; Rev. xx. 11; xxi. 1.

‡ Gen. i. 8; Matt. xxiv. 35; Mark xiii. 31; Eph. iv. 10.

§ Gen. ix. 4, 5; John i. 29; iii. 16; Rom. v. 12; Heb. xi. 4—7; 1 Pet. i. 20, 23; 1 John iv. 14..

"the old world," and "the world that then was," which, "being overflowed with water, perished," (ch. ii. 5, iii. 6.) He evidently meant, however, not the whole world, but so much of it as then was—all the people living at that time—excepting Noah's family, which both inherited and propagated the corruption of Adam, connecting the inhabitants of earth after the flood with those before it, as being all parts of the world into which sin and death were introduced by Adam, and which God so loved as to give his only begotten Son, that Abel, Enoch, Noah, and all other believers, should not perish.

Christ said, "My kingdom is not of this world." Of course, there is to be another world, of which he can say, "My kingdom is of this." It will be a perfect contrast to the one of which we have been speaking—the family of the second Adam—the nation that shall be born at once on the day of the resurrection,—"a great multitude which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues,"—all having bodies like unto Christ's glorious body, quickened by the same Spirit, and free from pain and death. These shall dwell upon the new earth, and "shall neither marry nor be given in marriage, but be as the angels of God in heaven."*

III. We also read of two ages (aiones)—the present, which Christ tells us will end,† and the age to come. If asked to describe these fully, I should say they were the age for sowing, and the age for reaping;—the age of probation, and the age of reward;—the age during which God manifests his long suffering, and the age to follow the declaration, "there shall be no longer delay"—when "the wine of the wrath of God shall be poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation;"—the age during which the earth is corrupted, and the age when the meek alone shall inherit it;—

the age during which tares are permitted to grow with the wheat, and the age that shall commence after all things that offend have been gathered out of the kingdom ;—the age during which the earth under the curse groans to be delivered, and the age when Christ shall “ make all things new ; ”—the age for sealing subjects for the kingdom of glory, and the age for that kingdom itself. All these different forms of expression are descriptive, as I think, of the same two ages.

I grant that we also read of ages past and ages to come (plural.) But whoever will examine those passages,* will find ages past to be the Greek expression for from eternity, and ages to come for to eternity,—the context requiring them to be so rendered. Or they express time past, or future, indefinitely ; ages past, meaning simply time past. But, whenever the expressions, “ the age to come,” “ this age,” and the like, are used, they point definitely, as I think, to the two ages above described. In the age to come (singular) Christians have eternal life. Therefore, that age must be synonymous with the ages to come.

THE EARTH MELTED BY FIRE.

It would seem as though God himself regarded the revelation of this event as of especial importance ; for nearly all the inspired penmen were directed to write more or less concerning it. According to Isaiah, “ Fear, and the pit, and the snare are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth. And it shall come to pass, that he who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit ; and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare ; for the windows from on high are open, and the foundations of the earth do shake. The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly, The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage ; and the transgression shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall, and not rise again." (Ch. xxiv. 17 to 20.)

Micah said, "Behold, the Lord cometh forth out of his place, and will come down, and tread upon the high places of the earth. And the mountains shall be molten under him, and the valleys shall be cleft, as wax before the fire, and as the waters that are poured down a steep place." (Ch. i. 3, 4.)

Peter also testified in language as explicit as could be used: "But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." "The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also; and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing, then, that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness; looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat?" 2 Pet. iii. 7, 10—12.

It is unnecessary to quote other passages; for such as are not convinced by these, would not be convinced were we to give a whole book of quotations.*

* Those who wish to consult the Bible further on the subject, can examine Deut. xxxii. 22, 24; Ps. xxxvii. 20; xlv. 6; l. 3; xcvi. 3—5; Is. i. 28—31; ii. 10—21; xxxiii. 12; xxxiv. 4, 9, 10; lxiv. 1—3; lxvi. 15, 16; Ez. xx. 47, 48; Dan. vii. 9, 10; Joel ii. 1—11; iii. 15, 16; Amos i. 2; ix. 5; Obad. 18; Nahum i. 5, 10; Zeph. i.; iii. 8; Mal. iv. 1; Matt. iii. 12; xiii.; 1 Cor. iii. 13; 2 Thes. i. 7—9; Heb. vi. 7, 8; Rev. xiv. 18; xix. 12.

The following passages also refer to the event, though the agency of fire is not mentioned. Job xxi. 30; Ps. xxiv. 16; l. 22; lxxv. 8; cii. 25, 26; Prov. ii. 22; Is. xiii. 9; li. 6; lxxv. 17; Jer. x. 10; xxv. 30—33; Dan. viii. 17, 19; xi. 27; Hos. iv. 3; Hab. ii. 3; iii. 3—19; Hag. ii. 6, 7, 21, 22; Zech. xiv. 12; Matt. xxiv. 35; Mark xiii. 31; Heb. i. 10—12; Rev. vi. 14; xiv. 15; xx. 11; xxi. 1.

OBJECTION I. IT IS IMPOSSIBLE.

ANSWER. Chemistry tells us that any thing can be melted, if we have only heat enough; the rocks and hills may all be melted like wax. And if it be asked whence shall come a fire sufficient to do this, I answer,

1. He who, by a word, created the earth with all its internal fires, and latent heat, to say nothing of ten thousand suns, can certainly create with equal facility a fire sufficient for this purpose.*

2. But it is unnecessary to suppose any fire created for the purpose. I recollect that, years ago, Dr. John Torrey, Professor of Chemistry and Botany in the New York Medical College, took occasion, in one of his lectures, to show how very easily the earth might be burned up. I do not now recollect his course of reasoning; but it was based upon chemistry and geology. Science teaches us that if the atmosphere were slightly changed at various points in respect to its density, the sun's rays might be concentrated at those points, and produce heat sufficient to melt, almost in an instant, the hardest substances.

3. Or if the air were separated into its constituent gases, or the waters, which might be done in an instant, the oxygen gas would feed the fires both on and in the earth so plentifully that the work of destruction as foretold by the prophets, would be literally accomplished. There are few probably who have not attended lectures on chemistry, and seen a piece of naked iron burn up completely in oxygen gas, just as if it were a piece of wood or paper.

4. Or the work might be accomplished by the inflammable gases, which might be separated in an instant from their present combinations, which have kept them inactive hitherto.

5. Or by condensation, or otherwise, the latent caloric, which is in everything, might be rendered active, and thus destroy the very substances that contain it. We all know that two pieces of wood, being rubbed together, can be made to develop their latent caloric, and at last they will be set on fire and burn up. And why may not the latent caloric in the atmosphere and earth be rendered active also, if God wills it? Thus our bodies, the trees, plants, water, and even ice, the earth and air, might each contribute a share of heat as well as fuel.

6. Beside the latent heat in the earth, there are also internal active fires, whether caused by condensation of matter, or how, we know not. Their existence is evidenced by the hot springs and volcanoes scattered all over the earth; also by earthquakes and the gas emitted from the openings made during the violence of the shock. By removing the pressure of the atmosphere, or in other ways, these internal fires might be brought to act upon the crust of the earth.

7. Or, according to the theory of latent and active electricity, this agent might be employed.

8. What has been, may be. "During the last two or three centuries, thirteen fixed stars have disappeared. One of them situated in the northern hemisphere, presented a peculiar brilliancy, and was so bright as to be seen by the naked eye at mid-day. It seemed to be on fire, appearing at first of a dazzling white, then of a reddish yellow, and lastly of an ashy pale color. La Place supposes it was burning up, as it has never been seen since. The conflagration was visible about sixteen months. And is it impossible that such may soon be the fate of this terraqueous globe? Nay, it is not only possible, but we are assured by the word of the Immutable, that it is reserved unto fire, to be burned."

OBJECTION II. THE EARTH IS TOO BEAUTIFUL.

God will never melt up this beautiful earth, his own handiwork. I answer,

1. One declaration from God's word to the contrary is sufficient to sweep away forever this and all other vain statements of Philosophy, so called; and we have given an abundance of such declarations.

2. But if the objection is valid, it is equally valid against matters of fact. The vale of Siddim, once well watered as the garden of the Lord, could never have been converted into an arid waste; and the plain where the doomed cities stood would be yielding golden fruit instead of the apples of Sodom.* The good man, bringing glad tidings, whose feet are "beautiful upon the mountains," could never die; the garden of Eden has remained to this day; the earth was never cursed; the fountains of the great deep were never broken up; islands have never been sunk by earthquakes; no stars have faded from the vault of heaven; no beautiful thing has ever ceased to be. The objection takes for granted that the existence of this earth, and the things therein, is necessary for illustrating the wisdom and goodness of God, or for rendering his happiness complete. Was he not the same before the creation of this speck as now? And may he not change the vesture, and remain the same God still?

3. We are expressly told that the present material earth was cursed for man's sake: "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground."† The event has shown that this curse was not to cease at Adam's death, but to last as long as those begotten in the likeness of sinful Adam might inhabit the earth. Thorns, briars, thistles, tares, poisonous herbs, and the like, are emblems of a CURSE, and if they had been in the earth at its formation, we can hardly think it would have been recorded, that "God said, Behold I have given you every herb bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in the which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat. And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is life, I have given every green herb for meat; and it was so. And God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was VERY GOOD."* Who can believe that when the six days' work came fresh from the hand of the Great Creator, pronounced by himself in all respects VERY good, and gazed upon with admiration by the morning stars, who celebrated the event with a united song of joy and praise—who can believe that then three-fourths of the entire surface of the globe were covered with the briny sea; that, of the land, even the better part yielded in abundance, thorns, briars, thistles, poisonous herbs, and tares, and exhaled the most deadly miasmata; while the rest consisted of deserts of burning sand, and barren regions covered with perpetual snow and ice; that two hundred volcanoes then began to burn and desolate the regions at their base; that earth quaked and trembled, as if in convulsion; the sirocco, the simoom, the whirlwind, and the tornado immediately received their commission; the lion and the tiger, the leopard, the jaguar, the wolf, and hyena, roamed about with their present ravenous natures, seeking for living prey; the tree of life existed only in imagination, while the tree of death—the bohon upas—was an emblem of the Destroyer, then as now; the flower was told to bloom for a day only; the trees, that spread out their arms to heaven in praise, began to decay as soon as they had reached a state of glory, and mortality was written upon the brow of man, and upon every lineament of the face of nature! For one, I cannot. "No chilling winds, nor poisonous breath," nor storm, nor earthquake, nor volcano, nor raging beast, nor pestilence, nor sickness of any kind disturbed the tranquillity of earth, or excited alarm in the breasts of its innocent inhabitants, or gave them any pain. There was nothing to convey to their minds even the idea of evanescence, and give them any fear of themselves finally passing away, except as the penalty of disobedience,

and that was known only by the threatening. But when the tempter gained admission, not only into the garden, but into the hearts of those placed there to enjoy its beauties and luxuries, then earth and heaven were cursed for their sakes, and forbidden any longer to minister unmingled pleasure :

“ And obedient Nature, from her seat,
Sighing through all her works, gave signs of wo,
That all was lost.”

But shall it thus continue for ever? What, then, mean all those texts which have been quoted, representing the earth and elements as melting with fervent heat? And what becomes of the promise of “a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness?”* And what is meant by “the times of restitution of all things,”† when Jesus Christ will leave heaven, and come to earth a second time, glorious in his apparel, and all his holy angels with him? And why is the earth described by the apostle‡ as groaning to be delivered from the manacles of sin, and brought into the same liberty with the children of God, at the redemption of their bodies? As the second Adam, Christ will make good all that was lost by the first. The whole curse of the fall will be removed. Now recollect that the ground was cursed for man’s sake. “Behold, I make all things new!”§

To me it seems so plain, that I wonder how any can think otherwise, that this present organization of matter (that is, the earth under the curse,) is to have an end, the particles of matter to be separated by fire into an unorganized mass, as at first;|| and from this mass a new organization to take place, pure from the curse—a new earth in which there shall be nothing to hurt or to destroy. "The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock; and dust shall be the serpent's meat." God will make "a covenant of peace" with his people, "and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land; and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods." "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice, even with joy and singing. The glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it; the excellency of Carmel and Sharon." "In the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land, springs of water. In the habitation of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass with reeds and rushes." "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the briar shall come up the myrtle tree, and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off." "And there was no more sea."*

THE SPIRITUAL VIEW.

The only answer I have ever heard to the view above given, regards all the passages quoted as having a spiritual import. The new earth, according to the spiritualizers, will consist in the triumph of truth over error, superstition, prejudice, oppression, infidelity, and every thing upon which the truth can act. But first, if such explicit statements can be so completely spiritualized away, why may not all other parts of the Bible, none of which are more explicit? There was, then, only a spiritual creation, and a spiritual flood, and a spiritual destruction of Sodom, and a spiritual crucifixion of the Lord Jesus.* No man can prove from the Bible that these events literally took place, if he adopts principles of interpretation that will allow him to spiritualize away the clear and oft-repeated testimony respecting the destruction of the literal earth by literal fire, and the creation literally of a new heaven and a new earth. The Bible is thus made to mean anything or everything; and becomes a fog instead of a "light shining in a dark place."

But, secondly, why is that day called "that great and terrible day," and repeatedly spoken of as terrible, not to the empire of Satan, but to the men who shall be working iniquity when it overtakes them?† If the truth is to gain a triumph over their errors, infidelity, and lusts, the day, instead of being terrible to them, will be one of mercy—of glorious deliverance from a most galling bondage.

But thirdly, the doctrine that this present organization of matter called earth is to continue forever, and that man with his present physical nature is to continue to inhabit it, and that truth is to triumph over every species of error so completely, that our globe will become the theatre of scenes so different as to render appropriate the expressions new earth, and restitution of all things—I say this doctrine unavoidably leads either to blasphemy or absurdity.

Truth is to triumph over error—morality over im-

* A minister of the New Jerusalem church, told me, not long since, that these accounts, excepting that of the death of Christ, are allegorical. Such events never actually took place. They are only represented as having taken place, in order to convey spiritual instruction; or they describe in figurative language things which occurred in the spiritual world, and which could not be described except by illustrations. In other words, the Bible is a collection of fables, each conveying an excellent moral, and that is all! I shall not attempt to refute this; the conversation having been mentioned simply to show how far the spiritualizing principles of interpretation legitimately lead. My friend might have spiritualized the death of Christ on the same principles.

† Mal. iv. 5; Joel ii. 11, 31; Ps. ii. 9; Is. i. 28; ii. 19—21; Matt. xxiv. 48—51; 2 Pet. iii. 7; Rev. xi. 18.

morality ! Then errors in dress, in the mode of living generally, and in the physical education of children ; want of cleanliness in person ; licentiousness, polygamy, concubinage, luxury, intemperance in eating and drinking, slavery, undue labor of body or mind, and indulgence of angry and other destructive passions—all these will have ceased, and men will learn war no more. Moreover, reckless administration of medicine and tampering with God's stringed instrument, will also have ceased ; and we may very properly suppose that in such a state of society there will be a great advance in the sciences, and that the healing art will not only be practised by none but the conscientious, but also more skilfully by these. The result of such an abridgment of destructive influences would necessarily be a great decrease of mortality, and an increase in the vigor of the human constitution ; and man would again attain to a good old age,—at least double the length of his present age,—and fulfil as never before, the command to “ multiply and replenish the earth.”*

Now follow me through a short calculation. The increase by emigration in the population of the United States for the last fifty years has been a mere trifle, compared with the whole population, as the records show ; very much less than the admitted decrease by war and prevailing crimes. Therefore we may safely take this country for our guide.

“ From official documents, it appears that the United States have increased regularly since the adoption of the constitution, or from 1790 till 1840, at the rate of about thirty-four per cent. every ten years, or so as to double every twenty-four years. This is a curious fact, that it should hold its increase so regularly under the various phases through which we have passed.” Now, commencing with only eight hundred millions as the population of the earth, although it is commonly estimated at nine hundred millions, we should have in twenty-four years, 1,600,000,000 ; in forty-eight years,

3,200,000,000 ; in seventy-two years, 6,400,000,000 ; in ninety-six years, 12,800,000,000 ; in one hundred and twenty years, 25,600,000,000 ; in one hundred and forty-four years, 51,200,000,000 ; in one hundred and sixty-eight years, 102,400,000,000 ; in one hundred and ninety-two years, 204,800,000,000 ; in two hundred and sixteen years, 409,600,000,000 ; in two hundred and forty years, 819,200,000,000 ; in two hundred and sixty-four years, 1,638,400,000,000 ; in two hundred and eighty-eight years, 3,276,800,000,000 ; in three hundred and twelve years, 6,553,600,000,000 ; in three hundred and thirty-six years, 13,107,200,000,000 ; in three hundred and sixty years, 26,214,400,000,000 ; in three hundred and eighty-four years, 52,428,800,000,000 ; in four hundred and eight years, 104,857,600,000,000. When this last generation arrives at the age of twenty years, let us add to their number that of the preceding generation who would still be living, which would make

 \end{array}$$

Or, one hundred and fifty-seven trillions, two hundred and eighty-six billions, and four hundred millions for the total population of the earth at that time. But there are only fifty millions of square miles on the surface of the earth, not covered by the sea,—or one hundred and fifty-four trillions, and eight hundred and eighty billions of square yards. Therefore, supposing all of this to be good habitable, arable land, there would still be less than one square yard to each individual ! And this in four hundred and twenty-eight years ! ! “ What, then, would it be at the end of a thousand years ? But the thing is impossible, and I have only followed out this train of thought, to show how utterly irreconcilable it is with the present organization of man,” to suppose that the earth, as it now is, was ever intended for his abode during a state of millennial virtue and prosperity, or world without end.*

The argument is not a little strengthened by the fact that, instead of the fifty millions of square miles being good habitable,* arable land, about one fifth of the whole consists of deserts, swamps, ragged or snow-covered mountains, pine or oak barrens, rivers, lakes, and polar regions as desolate as if they were covered by the ocean.

Such is the absurdity to which spiritualizing the Bible leads. The only way to avoid this absurdity, is to run into blasphemy, and maintain that in proportion as man avoids the causes of death over which he has control, God will increase those causes over which he has no control, just so as to destroy him; that when man ceases to bring disease upon himself and posterity by vice, God will increase the number of miasmatic diseases, earthquakes, tornadoes, &c., just so as to prevent any increase in the population; or that, with "the restitution of all things," "the earth shall not yield her increase" as promised,† and in the age of sobriety, industry, and morality—in the "new earth"—men are to be more straitened for the means of subsistence than they have ever been in the ages of intemperance, debauchery, oppression and heathenism,—straitened to such a degree as to check the growth of population!!! The idea is so perfectly revolting, that no one can entertain it for a moment.

OPINIONS OF THE CHURCH.

The purification of the earth by fire has been the doctrine of the church from the very days of the apostles down to these last times, when men have learned to spiritualize away "ancient landmarks," and "the faith once delivered to the saints."

Thomas Burnet, in his "Theory of the Earth," printed in London, A. D. 1697, states that it was the received opinion of the primitive church from the days of the apostles to the Council of Nice, A. D. 325. This Council consisted of three hundred and eighteen bishops from all parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa, and adopted, unanimously, I believe, the same sentiment. It was also the doctrine of Luther, and the other Reformers,—of Fuller, Thomas Burnet, Thomas Vincent, Wesley,—in a word, of the church so universally, that it is embodied in the poetry of the world as an admitted truth.

“ When, rapt in fire, the realms of ether glow,
And heaven’s last thunder shakes the world below,
Hope, undismayed, shall o’er the ruins smile,
And light her torch at Nature’s funeral pile ! ”

Dr. Clarke makes the following comment upon the passage in 2 Pet. iii. 11 :

“ All these things shall be dissolved. They will all be separated, all decomposed ; but none of them destroyed. As they are the original matter out of which God formed the terraqueous globe, consequently they may enter again into the composition of the new system. We look for a new heaven and a new earth ; the other being decomposed, a new system is to be formed out of their materials.

“ It does appear from these promises, what the apostle says here, and what is said in Rev. xxi. 27 ; xxii. 14, 15, that the present earth, though destined to be burnt up, will not be destroyed, but be renewed and refined ; purged from all natural and moral imperfections, and made the endless abode of blessed spirits. That such an event may take place is very possible, and, from the terms used by Peter, is very probable. And, indeed, it is more reasonable and philosophical to conclude that the earth shall be refined and restored, than finally destroyed.”

THE EARTH AND THE WORLD END AT THE SAME TIME.

That the world will not be destroyed before the earth, is evident from Gen. viii. 21, 22; ix. 11—16. That it will be destroyed then, is evident from the organization of our present bodies, which could not endure the flames that shall melt the earth. See, also, 2 Pet. iii. 7.

THEY END WITH THIS AGE.

I premise a few things, as

1. Christ's second advent will be as King, and at the end of this age. Matt. xiii. 38, 43; xxiv. 3, 30; Acts iii. 21; Titus ii. 12, 13.

2. All the righteous, dead and living, shall then "be changed," and receive their "reward"—"have eternal life"—"shine forth as the sun." Matt. xiii. 43; Mark x. 30; Luke xviii. 30; 1 Cor. xv. 50—53; 1 Thess. iv. 14—17; Heb. vi. 5; Rev. xi. 18.

3. As respects the wicked, their age of probation ends with this age.

First proof. 1 Cor. viii. 13: "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the age standeth [or lasts,] lest I make my brother to offend." From this, it is evident that the age, of which Paul's lifetime constituted a part, is the period of time during which a brother can be made to offend,—is on probation.

Second proof. This age is the time for preaching the gospel,—for teaching and baptizing all nations,—implying that mercy will not be offered in the age to come. Matt. xxiv. 14; xxviii. 19, 20. The righteous, be it remembered, are all to be changed at Christ's coming. Therefore, if the gospel is preached afterward, the preachers will have spiritual bodies. But this idea is contradicted by Matt. xxv. 11; Luke xvi. 31; 1 Cor. i. 27; 2 Cor. iv. 7. Moreover, it is inconsistent with the idea of Christ's reigning himself, or of the righteous reigning with him, to suppose them travelling about as the "servants" of the wicked, exposed to their scoffs and contempt, trying to persuade them to repent. Now we are told it is by preaching that men are saved. 1 Cor. i. 21. Moreover, if the salt is all withdrawn from the earth into a kingdom by itself, how can we expect the earth to be salted? Matt. v. 13, 16; Luke xv. 2, 4; xiv. 21, 23. That Christ's kingdom will not be coercive, in the sense of forcing men into it, see Matt. xi. 12; John v. 40; Luke xiii. 3; Acts iii. 23. ¶ Compare Rev. xi. 14, 15, with x. 7.

Third proof. In 2 Pet. iii. 4, 9, 13, we are informed that the reason why the promise of his coming has not been fulfilled already, is, that God is long suffering, "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." Does not this clearly imply that at and after his coming, mercy will not be offered, none will come to repentance—probation will be over.

Fourth proof. At the end of this age the harvest takes place. Matt. xiii. 39. When harvest comes, the time for sowing either good or bad seed—by the Son of man or by the devil—is past. Of course, there can be no more conversions—probation is in reality over.

Fifth proof. The age to come will be the time for review and punishment of actions done by the wicked in this age, implying that probation will be over, and the judgment set. Matt. xii. 32.

4. At the second coming of Christ, this heaven and earth shall be destroyed, and the new be created.

First proof. Acts iii. 21: "Jesus Christ—whom the heaven must receive [retain] until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the age began." What age? Evidently the one from the loss to the restitution,—an age that began before the first prophecy respecting a restitution, uttered immediately after the fall. Gen. iii. 15; Luke i. 70; John ix. 32; Titus ii. 12, 13; Rev. xxi. 1, 4, 5.

Second proof. In 2 Pet. iii. 10, 12, we are told Christians should "haste unto," or earnestly desire, the day of the Lord. And, in another place, the believer exclaims, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." But he will awake in Christ's likeness on the day of Christ's second advent. Of course, he cannot earnestly desire another day. See, also, Titus ii. 13. From this it is evident that the day spoken of here is the day of the second advent, and then "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements melt with fervent heat—the earth also: and the works that are therein shall be burned up."

Now we are prepared to prove that this world (kosmos) will end with this age (aion.)

I. The god of this kosmos is the same as the god of this aion. "In whom the god of this age (aion) hath blinded the minds of them which believe not," &c. "For the prince of this world (kosmos) cometh, and hath nothing in me."*

Again: the prevailing disposition of each is the same. "That he might deliver us from this present EVIL age (aion.)" "Know ye not that the friendship of the world (kosmos) is ENMITY with God?"† Also, we are told that in this world (kosmos) Christians "shall have tribulation." This clearly implies that, so long as the present world continues, there is to be no dispensation of righteousness—Christ will not reign here personally or spiritually—the prevailing spirit will be that which causes tribulation to the children of God. But they must be of good cheer; for Christ assures them the world is overcome in prospect that shall certainly be realized. It shall be destroyed at his glorious appearing, and his disciples then will be left without a foe forever. See, also, Eph. ii. 2, where walking "according to the age of this world," is spoken of as synonymous with walking "according to the prince of the power of the air," &c.

* For references containing aion, see 2 Cor. iv. 4; Matt. xiii. 39; Eph. ii. 2; and for kosmos, see John xiv. 30; xii. 31; xvi. 11; Matt. iv. 8, 9.

† For aion, see Gal. i. 4; 1 Cor. ii. 6; and for kosmos, see James iv. 4; i. 27; John viii. 23; xv. 19; xvi. 33; 2 Cor. vii. 10; Gal. vi. 14; 1 John ii. 15–17.

II. The two words are used one for the other. Thus, (2 Cor. v. 19,) "God was in Christ reconciling the age (aion) to himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them." "For I came not to judge the world, but to save the world* (kosmos.)"

Again, (1 Cor. i. 20 :) "Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this age (aion?) Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world (kosmos?)" In chap. ii. 6: "wisdom of this age (aion.)" In chap. iii. 18, 19: "If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this age (aion,) let him become a fool, that he may be wise. For the wisdom of this world (kosmos) is foolishness with God."

Again, Tit. ii. 12: "Denying ungodliness and worldly (kosmikos) lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present age (aion.)" If there is to be another age of this world, does the apostle mean to imply that then we need not live soberly, righteously, and godly, and deny worldly lusts? Or does he not rather mean that this age is the only one in which men shall have lusts of the world to deny—in other words, that probation ends with this age?

III. At the end of this age Christ will come as King. But his "kingdom is not of this world (kosmos.)" He will not reign in it personally or spiritually. If the whole world does not end with this age, then there will either be some living on the earth over whom Christ will not exercise jurisdiction, or else his kingdom will be in part of this world. Moreover, as this world is subject to death, instead of his being King of kings, and his kingdom independent, he would see it continually and successively invaded by the King of Terrors. John xviii. 36, 37.

IV. Eph. ii. 2: "Wherein in time past ye walked according to the age (aion) of this world (kosmos)—according to the prince of the power of the air," &c. It does not say, "according to this age of the world."

* For kosmos, see John xii. 47; i. 29; iii. 16, 17; vi. 33, 51; Rom. xi. 15; 1 Tim. i. 15.

Therefore, the age which is "according to the prince of the power of the air,"—in other words, "this present evil age,"—is the age of this world, and there will be no other until the world ends.

V. In Luke xx. 34, 35, the children of this age are contrasted with those of the age to come, and in that we are told they "neither marry nor are given in marriage." But all admit that, so long as this world continues, marriage will be honorable. Therefore, with the next age there will be a new world.

VI. At the end of this age ALL the wicked shall be destroyed; because, in addition to what has already been said,

First. Probation will be over; and we can hardly believe God will permit the continuance of the human family, much less an increase, after the age of probation is past.

Secondly. The harvest then takes place. When harvest comes, sowing time is over. Not only are the tares already sown to be gathered, but the devil is to sow no more. Thus, we see, there can be no further addition to the depraved family of Adam; in a word, no more births—no more marrying or given in marriage—that is, the end of the world will have come. Matt. xiii. 39.

Thirdly. We are explicitly told that "the field [to be harvested] is THE WORLD (kosmos,)" Matt. xiii. 38.

Fourthly. It also says explicitly, "all things that offend, and they which do iniquity"—all the tares which the wicked one hath sown—all that destroy, or corrupt the earth—shall be gathered out of the kingdom, not by conversion, but to be cast into the fire. Matt. xiii. 41; xxiv. 30, 31; Rev. xi. 18.

Fifthly. Then, also, the earth itself is to be destroyed, as we have already proved; and, as the righteous alone shall be caught up to meet the Lord, all the wicked must perish.

¶ All the righteous changed and caught up, and all the wicked destroyed, the world, of course, would be at an end; and all this is to be at the end of this æon, or age.

THE EXACT TIME FOR THE END IS APPOINTED.

“Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father.” (Mark xiii. 32.)* So it seems the Father had then appointed not only the period, but the day and the hour. Indeed, I cannot conceive how it could be otherwise, inasmuch as God is omniscient, and inhabiteth eternity. Therefore, when a certain fixed hour in the age of the world arrives, the end will inevitably come, whether men are scoffing, or waiting in humility for the event. “At the time appointed the end shall be.”

PROPHECIES OF THE TIME FOR THE END CAN BE UNDERSTOOD BEFORE THE END.

I do not now say there is any such prophecy; but merely that, if there is, it was intended to be understood before its fulfilment. A Presbyterian clergyman lately told me that “such prophecies may have been intended for the edification of the saints in glory, and not to be understood in this world.” This is certainly a new view of the Bible; but it was the only refuge to which he could resort. There is nothing useless in the Bible. Therefore, every such prophecy was intended to be of use either in this world or in the world to come. If of any use here, it must be understood, and understood beforehand; for “what is the value of a chart that would not tell a seaman where to find his port until after he has arrived?” One man says he reads the prophecies for devotion, and not for instruction. Now, a knowledge of the time for the end would undoubtedly be favorable to the devotion of Christians living just before the event; but there is no food for devotion, so far as I can see, in a mere declaration, in unintelligible language, that the end shall be at a certain time. But was a part of the Bible intended for the saints in glory? I answer,

* For other references, see Ps. cii. 13, 16, 18; Is. xl. 2 (margin); Dan. viii. 19; x. 1; xi. 35; Hab. ii. 3; Luke xxi. 24; Acts i. 7; xvii. 26, in connection with Gal. iv.

I. If one person may conclude that certain prophecies were intended for the saints, simply because he does not understand them, every person may, with equal propriety, conclude that every doctrine and every other portion of Scripture, not understood by himself, was designed for the saints. Now who shall tell us how much of the Bible is for this world, and how much for the saints? Come, draw the line, and make the separation. I wish to know just how much I must believe; for I tremble equally at the thought of rejecting any of the revelation made to me, and of prying into any of the revelation made to the saints. We could almost wish their portion had been put in an appendix.

II. Will the Bible be saved when the earth is destroyed, and be carried into the New Jerusalem, there to be read by the saints? If you say no—that Christ himself will be their Teacher; then, I ask, why should anything be put in our Bible for the especial use of the saints? Will they call to mind in another world what they have read unintelligibly in this? I fear that many—yes, the vast majority—read these prophecies so seldom, and with such a want of relish, that in another world they would know nothing about them without another reading, which would be impossible if the Bible is not carried into that world.

III. But of what especial use can the one class of prophecies, respecting the time for the end, be to the saints? The fulfilment will have taken place; and, so far as I can see, such a prophecy will then be only a parallel with all other prophecies, the fulfilment of any one of which will prove, to the saints, the wisdom, and power and goodness of God, just as much as the fulfilment of this one. I repeat it, of what especial use can a prophecy respecting the time for the end, more than any or all others, be to the saints?

IV. Christ and the apostles frequently speak of the prophecies as if they were intended to be of use in this world for instruction. Thus Peter says that the prophets who searched what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, were informed "that not unto themselves but unto us, they did minister." If they were ministering to glorified saints, they were ministering in part to themselves, since they are to be glorified as well as we. ¶ It does not say, "that not unto men, but unto glorified saints, they did minister." 1 Pet. iii. 11, 12.

Again, he says, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy [more sure than the evidence in verses 16 and 17 ;] whereunto ye [not the saints] do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the daystar arise in your hearts." ¶ If of use to the saints, it is after the day dawns; and if not to be understood beforehand, prophecy is not a light shining in a dark place (the future.) History would be the only light, and it shines after the events. 2 Pet. i. 19. It is the "word of prophecy," and not the events fulfilling it, which Peter calls a light.

Again, he says, verse 20, "that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation." ¶ He was writing about Christ's second coming, and he does not except those prophecies which refer to the time of the advent, if there are any such. See, also, Luke xvi. 29—31; xxiv. 25; Rom. xvi. 25, 26; Rev. i. 3—10; x. 5—7; Jude 14—18.

V. In Deut. xxix. 29, we are told that "things which are revealed belong unto us, and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of the law." Will any one say there is any prophecy which is not a revelation? But if a revelation, it belongs to us and to our children, and not to the saints. For if it belongs to the latter, then some of the words of the law are to be done by them, and not by us. John xvii. 17.

VI. Paul says, (2 Tim. iii. 15—17,) "ALL SCRIPTURE [including prophecies respecting the time for the end, if there are any such] is given by inspiration of God, and is PROFITABLE for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, [he does not add, for the edification of glorified saints ;] that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." See, also, Rom. xv. 4. Then such parts of the Bible, if any, as refer to the time for the end, as well as all others, are in some age of the church, profitable, and necessary towards thoroughly furnishing the man of God unto all good works. John xvii. 17.

OBJECTION I. We are told in Dan. xii. 4, that prophecies are sealed. I answer, things which are sealed in the sense of being hidden from the church during all the periods of its existence, are not written, as we learn from Rev. x. 4. The Bible was intended for the church to the end of time, and contains things appropriate to each period of the church. The prophets ministered not unto themselves, but unto the church at these different periods. (1 Pet. iii. 11, 12.) Now the things written for one period may be sealed from all living before that time, as not belonging to them—in two ways: 1. The Spirit may not direct the attention of Christians to the prophecy in its proper connexion with other passages which explain it—or does not otherwise open their minds to understand it. 2. The understanding of it may depend upon the occurrence of certain foretold events. Thus it might be foretold that after six different events, strongly marked and well defined, the end shall occur very soon. We are not informed how far distant from each other these events shall be; only they are so clearly defined that, when they occur, we shall recognise them. At the utterance of the prophecy no one could conjecture even about the time for the end. It is "sealed till the time of the end." But in due time the Providence of God unseals it, and men behold the terrible day as just ready to dawn. Now, I am willing to grant that some prophecies have been, in a greater or less degree, thus sealed, until the several periods in the church have arrived, when the understanding of each several prophecy was necessary towards thoroughly furnishing the man of God living at that time, who is thus enabled to find "things new and old" in the Bible.* The prophecy that Daniel was commanded to seal, was concerning the time for the end. It could be of no use to understand it until the end draws near. Then, however, it is to be unsealed, as necessary towards thoroughly furnishing the men of God unto the good works of proclaiming that "the hour of his judgment is come," and encouraging those whose redemption draweth nigh to lift up their heads and rejoice. Also, the knowledge of the event being at hand certainly conduces to sanctification. John xvii. 17; 2 Pet. iii. 11.

OBJECTION II. God has promised to answer the prayer of the humble and believing. If, therefore, there is any prophecy showing the time for the end, it might have been understood by praying for the spirit of understanding, and Christ could not have said, "Of that day and hour knoweth no man, neither the angels, nor the Son," &c. I answer, that Daniel, who was greatly beloved, prayed for this very spirit of understanding, and it was denied him; "to whom it was revealed that not unto himself, but unto us, he did minister." Christ, also, and Paul besought three successive times for things which were not granted.* They desired these things, however, only if it was the will of the Father to grant them. So any sincere and humble believer will pray; and he has no more right to expect an unsealing of the prophecy before God wills to unseal it, than Christ had to claim that the cup might pass away because of his desiring it. God always answers our prayers, although he does not always answer them literally. If we ask for improper things, he withholds them of course, and gives us something else in their stead. He has never promised to answer improper prayers literally. If he had, what wretched beings even sincere and humble Christians would be!! for, owing to ignorance, how many improper prayers they make. See 1 John v. 14.

OBJECTION III. There are doctrines in the Bible not understood in this world, which will be plain to the saints ;—"we now see through a glass darkly," &c I answer, this may be true, and yet all the Bible was undoubtedly intended for the people in this world only ;—some parts of it for one class of minds, and some for another ; some to be understood at one time, and some at another ; and some to be received without being fully comprehended. Some doctrines may be profitable without being comprehended ; but a prophecy respecting the TIME for the END could not. Even the mysterious doctrines—such as the eternity of God—are put in the Bible to affect us in this world,—to give humility, reverence, and other becoming feelings. We believe, though we do not fully comprehend them. In another world we may know more about them ; because, however, faith will be changed to sight, and the great Teacher will be with us ;—in a word, because we shall have new and more glorious revelations ; and not from reading the Bible over again there, or reflecting upon passages hitherto unintelligible, mysteriously written upon the mind then for the first time, as the result of one or two careless readings here many years before, without any effort to understand them. The revelation we have now is all of it intended for this world—to affect our hearts here, and prepare us to enter the gates of the New Jerusalem. It is the twilight, so to speak, preparing our vision for the dazzling light of the sun in glory.

OBJECTION IV. Our greatest theologians say that the prophecies cannot be understood. I answer, 1. It is no new thing to find the high priest in infidel company. 2. "The wisest of uninspired men have erred on other subjects. May it not be possible that they have been in error on this subject also? 3. Those very persons who contend that 'we can know nothing about the time,' and that 'prophecies are not to be understood until after their accomplishment,' are perpetually, in their prayers, and sermons, and missionary publications, interpreting the prophecies! They predict, or say that the prophecies predict, a time of universal peace and prosperity in the church and in the world. How do they know this if the prophecies are not to be understood until after their fulfilment? They say, moreover, that this universal peace and prosperity will continue for one thousand years, and that then there will be a declension by the influence of Satan, who will be 'loosed out of his prison, and go out to deceive the nations,' (see Rev. xx. 7, 8,) and then will the end come. They say, with perfect confidence, that 'the end is not yet.' Now, do not those who entertain these views not only interpret the prophecies, but also declare that the time will be known? If this is to be the order of events, it will not be difficult to know the time."

4. But it is not true that the greatest theologians have entertained this opinion. We might mention the names of Martin Luther, Dr. Gill, John Wesley, Cotton Mather, in fact, of the stars in the church, almost without an exception.

5. God has furnished us with the reason why so many do not understand the visions of all. Is. xxix. 10—12. "For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes;—the prophets and your rulers,—the seers hath he covered. And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee; and he saith, I cannot, for it is sealed. And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee; and he saith, I cannot, for I am not learned."

BOOK OF REVELATION.

As this book is a part of the Bible, all that has been said above is as applicable to it as to any other portion. In addition to this, 1. The meaning of the word revelation is an uncovering of what was hidden—it is something laid open. A sealed revelation is a contradiction in terms. In chap. x. 4, the things sealed were not to be written.

2. The first verse says, God gave it "to SHOW unto his servants [not saints] things which must shortly come to pass."

3. The third verse says, "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear, the words of this prophecy;" [it does not say, "of some parts of this prophecy."] How can a person be said to be blessed in reading who does not understand what he reads?

4. In ch. i. 4, 11, we are told this revelation was "to the seven churches," which were types of the seven states of the church to the end of time,—and not to the glorified saints.

5. In the tenth verse of the last chapter, John is commanded, "Seal NOT the sayings of the prophecy of this book." This may either mean that no parts of the prophecy were at any time, in any sense, or in any degree, sealed; or it may mean that no parts were to be permanently sealed, each of the several parts being unsealed at the proper time; or it may mean that this prophecy was not to be hidden with John himself,—he was to write it for the church, while things sealed were not to be written. I incline to the last opinion, and think that, although in this sense the prophecy was not sealed,—that is, so far as John was concerned,—yet, in another sense, it was sealed, until the Providence of God at various times has unsealed one portion after another, according to the condition and wants of the church at those different times.

HISTORY AND CHRONOLOGY REFERRED TO IN PROPHECIES.

If God has given any prophecies showing the time for the end, (to be understood, as we have seen, BEFORE the event,) he has undoubtedly taken care that history should record all the intervening events foretold, and which must be known in order to understand when the time draws near. Indeed, the events fulfilling all the prophecies of the Bible up to this time have undoubtedly been recorded, either in the Bible itself, or in profane history; for only on such conditions could the prophecy be of any use ; and to suppose the contrary is to suppose that God would suffer his purpose in giving the prophecy to fail,—and is an impeachment of either his wisdom, goodness, or power.

For the same reason there is nothing really uncertain about chronology from that period where we must begin to have certain knowledge in order to understand the prophecies ; or, in fact, about any of the chronology referred to or contained in the Bible. Those who maintain the contrary, must either maintain that such portions of the Bible have become obsolete, and might be left out ; or that we have an uncertain light, instead of a “sure word of prophecy.” “We will say nothing of the reflection which such a view casts upon God, who has directed us to the prophecies to guide us ; for what is it but tantalizing us, to give such a direction, if the prophecies cannot answer their design ?” He, who dictated the Bible, has taken care that no errors should creep into it, which would make it impossible for those to interpret prophecies for whom the prophecies were especially intended. We can now see the wisdom of having here a little and there a little, and sometimes repetition. One part acts a check upon any mistake in the other. The only point in dispute, respecting chronology, as bearing upon the time for the end, is settled by Paul, in Acts xiii. 20, 21.

GOD HAS REVEALED THE TIME, SO THAT CHRISTIANS LIVING IN THE LAST DAYS MAY KNOW WHEN THE EVENT SHALL OCCUR.

I do not say that, previous to the last days, the time could be known ; but simply that, when what are called emphatically “the last days” have come, the church living at that time, if it search diligently, shall be able to know with certainty that it is in the last days, and to discern about the time for the end. We infer this from the following considerations, in addition to positive proofs which shall afterwards be given.

CONSIDERATION I. It has been generally supposed, in every age of the church, that the prophecies of Daniel point out the time for the end; "and, although there may have been a difference of opinion upon the time for commencing the prophetic periods of his visions, every age, we believe, has spoken with the strongest confidence that they would be understood before the end should actually come." This uniformity of belief among all the most worthy sons of the church, in all its different states, and in every age; certainly affords presumptive proof of our being correct, in the absence of any positive proof to the contrary.

CONSIDERATION II. The opposers of the Second Advent doctrine, as well as its advocates, believe that a time is foretold, when "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord," and Satan shall be bound "a thousand years." They also agree in believing that the Bible gives a clue to about the time when this happy state of things shall commence. Mr. Dowling thinks it will commence in about one hundred and fifty-seven years. Dr. Brownlee fixes upon another year, A. D. 1866, I believe. Now, there are only two prevalent opinions respecting the end of the world as connected with that epoch. One is, that the end will occur at the binding of Satan; and the other, that it will occur very soon after the thousand years shall have expired. Those who hold to each opinion, maintain that the Bible has furnished us with the means of knowing which is correct, if we only study it aright. Therefore, let either be correct, we have the means of knowing about the time for the end.

CONSIDERATION III.* We infer that God has revealed the time for this event from the analogy to be found in other great events under his government.

First event. Previous to the flood, God at first revealed only the time† of destruction. Afterwards, * Nearly all that is said under Consideration III. is extracted from the able review of Daggett's sermon, by S. Bliss.

† It does not matter much, as respects the argument from analogy, what interpretation is given to Gen. vi. 3; although I think it is plainly a prediction of the time to the flood. There is no doubt about Gen. vii. 4.

the manner is given, with a more full revelation of the event. Minute directions are also given to Noah for building an ark, so as to save himself and family. As the time draws nigh, and there are but seven days to the flood, the very day of the event is given. Every individual soul, that is saved, is looking for the event at the very time; otherwise they would not have gone into the ark, and have been saved. Many who perished had an opportunity to know that God purposed to drown the world. Noah was a preacher of righteousness; (2 Pet. ii. 5;) but even if he "did not reveal the time, the ark itself must have warned them. It is in vain to suppose they were ignorant of Noah's expectations. Therefore every plank that was added to the ark was an admonition that the time of its completion was drawing nigh; and when it was ready for the reception of its inmates, they might then know that no longer delay was necessary for the accomplishment of God's purpose."

"We should, therefore, expect in the second destruction of the world, that God would reveal the time; that, however, he would not reveal at any one time the whole of his purpose, but a little here, and a little there—in one place the time, and in another the manner—in language so plain, that the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein; and yet, not in language so direct and explicit, but that those disposed might have an abundance of plausible reasons on which to predicate their doubts. Even the time itself, we should expect from the analogy, would be given in such a manner that it might be contended with some show of reason that it does not denote the duration of time, but only the defilement of the temple by Antiochus; as the prediction of the time to the flood is also applied to the reduced age of mankind. We should also expect that, as the time of the event drew nigh, all who would be saved would have a more clear conception of the great event; and when the time had about expired, would all be in the attitude of expectation. On the other hand, we should also expect that those who perish, would, many of them, have an opportunity to acquaint themselves with the time and manner of the end, but none of them would believe in its reality."

Second event. At the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, "we find that all who were saved were apprized of the event a sufficient time previous to enable them to escape, and also to warn some of those who perished, unto whom Lot seemed as one that mocked. The analogy would therefore teach us that before Christ comes, all the truly righteous will be apprized of the fact, and know that it is so near, that they must be 'up,' 'for the Lord will destroy this city,' and yet they may not know the very 'hour,' until God takes them by the hand to save them. We also learn by this that some of the finally impenitent will be faithfully warned, but that they will look upon those who warn them as misguided fanatics, and men 'that mock.'"

Third. The seven years of famine, Gen. xli. 28 to 54.

Fourth. "It was predicted that the seed of Abraham should 'be a stranger in a land not theirs,' four hundred years; and afterward they should come out with great substance. This, with Abraham's own sojourn, made four hundred and thirty years.* The children of Israel, therefore, could, at any time during their captivity in Egypt, have calculated the time of its termination, by adding four hundred years to the time when the seed of Abraham began to be afflicted in a strange land. We also find that 'at the end of four hundred and thirty years, even the self-same day, it came to pass that all the hosts of the Lord went out from the land of Egypt.'"

"Notwithstanding it is so clear that the time was revealed before their captivity in Egypt commenced, it is also evident that the predicted period had nearly elapsed before the children of Israel were aware of its near completion; but before its end they did understand, and made all necessary arrangements for securing the 'great substance' that it was predicted they should carry out."

"There was also a fine opportunity for any one who felt disposed, to doubt respecting the time; as they might, with much show of reason, have contended that the four hundred years were to be dated from the time that Jacob and all his children removed to Egypt; or it would have been plausible to have supposed it was to be dated from the time that 'another king arose that knew not Joseph,' and who evil entreated them,—the same as many now contend, that the rise of Popery should not be dated from the commencement of its power, but only from the time it became quite formidable, or from the zenith of its power."

"The 'analogy' in this case would therefore lead us to expect that the period which is to elapse before the end of the world would be a definite prophetic period, but that it would not be fully understood until about the time of its termination; that there might be a question from what particular epoch it was to be dated; but that, as the period drew near its termination, the time of the end would be more clearly understood, and at its termination those who are delivered would be all expecting immediate deliverance; nor would those not delivered be all ignorant that such was an expected event."

Fifth. The children of Israel had not been more than about two years in the wilderness, according to Mr. Daggett, when they were told that the whole time of their wanderings should be forty years. Numbers xiv. 34.

Sixth. The final overthrow of Israel within sixty-five years. 2 Kings xvi.; Is. vii. 1—9.

Seventh. There were to be seventy years accomplished in the desolations of Jerusalem, and Daniel knew by books when they would expire. Dan. ix. 2; Jer. xxv. 8—12.

Eighth. The streets of Jerusalem were to be built in troublous times, and finished in seven weeks of years, or forty-nine years, which was exactly fulfilled. Dan. ix. 25.

Ninth. For five hundred and eighteen years before the coming of Christ, the very year for the commencement of his ministry was a matter of prophecy. Dan. ix. 25. Our Saviour alluded to this when he said "the time* is fulfilled." Moreover, the people "understood from books" that it was about the time for the Messiah to come; for there was a general expectation of his appearance then.† Not only this, a special messenger was sent to confirm their expectations, and "prepare the way of the Lord."

In Matt. xvi. 3, our Saviour strongly rebukes the Pharisees and Sadducees, because they did not "discern the signs of the times"—because they did not see by those signs, of which there were about twenty, that he was the Messiah, without having "a sign from heaven."

The analogy of this event would lead us to infer that not only the time for the second coming of Christ has been revealed, but that just before the event, men, perhaps as rude exteriorly as John the Baptist, will be raised up to preach with all the faithfulness of John, and cry, in the wilderness of sin, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh," "prepare ye the way of the Lord."

Tenth. Christ was to confirm the covenant with many for one week of years, or seven years, which period of time we find did actually constitute his ministry. Dan. ix. 27; Rom. v. 6.

Eleventh. Hezekiah was told to set his house in order, for he should die; and afterwards, when he prayed, he was told that fifteen years were added to his life, and a sure sign given him whereby he might know it was so. Is. xxxviii.

Twelfth. A handwriting on the wall foretold to Belshazzar, "God hath numbered thy kingdom and finished it." "In that night was Belshazzar slain." Dan. v.

* Mark i. 15; Gal. iv. 4. † Matt. ii. 1—10, and Luke ii. 25.

Thirteenth. "And Jonah began to enter into the city a day's journey; and he cried, and said, yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown." Jonah iii.

Fourteenth. The destruction of Jerusalem was foretold, in Matt. xxiii. and in Luke xxi.; and it was added, "Verily I say unto you, all these things shall come upon this generation." Our opponents are very fond of referring to the destruction of Jerusalem, and descanting upon the flight of the Christians as soon as they saw certain signs foretold by Christ. Perhaps their fondness for this subject will be somewhat diminished, when they see what its analogy leads us to expect before the final destruction, not of Jerusalem merely, but of the world.

Fifteenth. Another analogy is to be found in Matt. xxiv. 15, 16, &c. "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth let him understand;) then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountain," &c. If the event referred to here, is the same as the preceding, viz., the destruction of Jerusalem, the argument from analogy remains the same. If, however, as some think, Papacy is referred to, then we have an additional argument.

Sixteenth. The woman was to be fed in the wilderness twelve hundred and sixty years. Rev. xii. 6, 14.

Seventeenth. Power was given unto the Beast to continue forty and two months. Rev. xiii. 5.

Eighteenth. The holy city was to be trodden under foot forty and two months. Rev. xi. 2.

Nineteenth. The two witnesses were to prophesy in sackcloth twelve hundred and sixty days. Rev. xi. 3.

Twentieth. The saints were to be given into the hand of the power designated by the "little horn," for twelve hundred and sixty years. Dan. vii. 25, and xii. 7. I do not say that these are all different periods. They may be the same period, described in different ways. If so, we have but one argument. If they are different periods, we have so many different arguments.

Twenty-first. The symbolical locusts, which came upon the earth at the sounding of the fifth trumpet, were to have power to hurt men five months. Rev. ix. 10.

Twenty-second. The four angels in the river Euphrates were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year. Rev. ix. 15.

Twenty-third. At the end of twenty-three hundred days the sanctuary was to be cleansed. Dan. viii. 14. If, as many suppose, the sanctuary here means the earth, and its cleansing means its purification by fire at the last day, this text affords more than an argument from analogy; it is direct proof. Any other interpretation will give an argument from analogy.

Twenty-fourth. "From the time that the daily shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days." Dan. xii. 11.

Twenty-fifth. "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." Dan. xii. 12. If this does not refer to the restitution of all things, it at least strengthens the argument from analogy.

Twenty-sixth. "Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain; let all the inhabitants of the land tremble; for the day of the Lord cometh,—for it is nigh at hand." Joel ii. 1.

Twenty-seventh. Satan is to be bound a thousand years. Rev. xx. 2.

Twenty-eighth. 'The event of death. Perhaps Death sometimes overtakes his victims without warning;*

*No one can prove that this is ever the case. When a person dies in apparent health, or is killed by accident, we often hear the friends and relatives tell of an impression the deceased had that death was near. I am not sure that some direct or indirect warning is not always given, except where the person unwarrantably exposes his life, as in a battle, or the like. If the deceased had been a true Christian, I believe it will be found that for some time before death, he or she had been growing brighter in faith and more meet for glory. Be this, however, as it may, all admit that death usually admonishes of his approach; and that makes the analogy in our favor.

but all must admit that he USUALLY admonishes of his approach.

“During our whole existence, unless we are of those who will be changed at Christ’s coming, death stands before us as a certain event, while we know not how far it may be from us. As we approach the verge of life, pains and disease admonish us that probably death is very near. As our disease gains the mastery, we know that the time has come when we must shortly die; and soon we are informed that we have not a day or hour to live, and then we close our eyes, and all earthly scenes fade forever from our mortal sight.”

“The ‘analogy’ therefore to be found in the event of death would teach us, that while the end of time is far in the future, we should only be enabled to know that it is a certain event which will one day, we know not how soon, overtake the world; but, as the event draws nigh, evidence would be exhibited which would convince us of the probability of its being near; then would be seen the signs by which we might know that it was nigh even at the doors; and then we might realize that time had nearly reached its farthest limit.”

“Thus ‘from the analogy to be found in other great events under the government of God, and especially the event of death,’ we argue that the righteous will not be ‘in darkness that that day should overtake them as a thief.’ We also argue, that all who are thus overtaken, will be like those who would not heed the warning of Noah and Lot—who despised, and wondered, and perished.”

CONSIDERATION IV. Not only does the mere fact that the time for other events was known beforehand, furnish an argument from analogy; but there is also a declared analogy in the events of the flood, and the destruction of Sodom. Matt. xxiv. 37—39; Luke xvii. 26—30. If analogous in surprising the wicked,

At the end of the world, not a few, but a vast number, will die; and it is probable that, before their death, they will be warned, as the vast majority have been up to that time.

and nothing is said about the righteous, we may certainly infer that the analogy holds good in respect to them. Moreover, although the wicked "knew not until the flood came and took them away," they might have known; for Noah had for a long time been preaching the event, but they would not believe. Our Saviour's words, therefore, lead us to infer that, before he comes, the doctrine will be preached, but it will not be believed. The wicked will not know, for the same reason that they did not in the days of the flood. But if the doctrine is preached, those who preach must have some way of knowing it to be true.

CONSIDERATION V. That the church in the last day can know about the time for the end, seems probable also because it appears desirable. I do not say it would be desirable for those to know it who shall stubbornly continue in sin, and at last perish. But, let the revelation be ever so clear, such persons will not believe it, and so any objection growing out of a consideration of their case fails. Moreover it would be an equal objection against preaching to them the terrors of the Lord at any other time.

Let it be recollected that the time is appointed, and our wishes cannot delay or hasten it. We are not arguing whether it is more desirable that the end should come at one time than at another; only that it is desirable that Christians should have an intimation of it before it comes, both on their own account and on account of sinners.

I. ON THEIR OWN ACCOUNT. Ps. xxxiv. 10; lxxxiv. 11; Luke xxi. 28.

The happiness of such as are ready will be greatly increased. For, from the time they ascertain that the end is near, they will "lift up their heads and rejoice, because their redemption draweth nigh." It affords them pleasure, also, to think that probably they shall not die, but be changed; knowing that, even should there be violence in that change, it is to take place in a moment—in the twinkling of an eye,—and, as soon as they are aware of any, their sufferings will be forever past. Again, as they love Christ, it must give them peculiar pleasure to think, not only that they are soon to see and be with him; but that he who became poor for our sakes is soon to “see of the travail of his soul,” and have “the joy that was set before him:” that the Bridegroom is soon to receive his bride; and the kingdom to be given to him whose right it is; that he is “to be glorified in his saints, and admired in all them that believe.” And, perchance, they have friends sleeping in Jesus, whose dust shall be collected, and vivified, and clothed upon with immortal glory at the sounding of the mighty trump. Is not this a thought that must fill them with pleasure?

But many Christians are unprepared—having “left their first love.” It does such good to know the Bridegroom is coming, before the command comes to go forth and meet him. They become “watchful and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die.” David prayed, “Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is; that I may know how frail I am.” Ps. xxxix. 4. And again, in Ps. xc., “So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.” It was also profitable to Hezekiah to be told that he should die. Is. xxxviii. Indeed, how few Christians are really ready, when their last sickness overtakes them! And have we any more reason to believe that they will be better prepared at the end of the world without a warning?

OBJECTION.—But it is asked, “if, so far as Christians are concerned, the prospect were all pleasure, would it overcome all their regard for others, whom it threatens with imminent destruction?”

I answer, First. “They ought to regard the glory of Christ as of more consequence than the happiness of the entire human race, who can be miserable only because they refuse the offers of mercy of this same Saviour.” Otherwise they could not “haste unto the day of the Lord,” and pray, “thy kingdom come,” knowing, as they do, that at its coming all Christ's enemies will be destroyed. If it is the prayer, which means desire, of their hearts that his kingdom may come, then it will give them joy to know that their desire is soon to be answered. 2 Pet. iii. 12.

Secondly. If it is unpleasant to think the generation of evil-doers then living are to be destroyed, it is correspondingly pleasant to think there will be no future generations, to treasure up wrath against the day of wrath. Could the friends of temperance be assured that all who do not reform this year should die at its close, but there should never be another drunkard world without end, would not the contemplation of the second promise balance, ay, more than balance, the horror of the first! One thought more. Nearly all the impenitent in this generation will die in sin; and, as regards their future destiny, it will be no worse should they be all cut off to-morrow; on the contrary, they would have fewer sins to answer for. There is, therefore, no reason for wishing the world to stand one moment after the subjects of the kingdom have all been sealed. If we knew it would end to-morrow, the thought on the whole, should be rather pleasing, even as it respects the impenitent. Those now living would be beaten with no more stripes than they will be if the world stands, perhaps a less number; and THERE WILL NEVER BE ANY OTHERS seduced into a similar rebellion, and destroyed by the great adversary.

Thirdly. "Our knowledge or ignorance of the event cannot hasten or delay it, and, therefore, such knowledge cannot add to the misery of those to be destroyed." Neither can our ignorance of their danger make that danger any the less; on the contrary, it makes it much greater. This brings me to a consideration of my second main position, that an intimation to Christians, when the end draws near, is desirable,

II. ON ACCOUNT OF SINNERS. James v. 20; Ps. l. 13; Matt. v. 13—16.

If we knew nothing of their danger we should not make such efforts to rescue them as we should if we saw their true condition ;—and their salvation depends mainly on the efforts of Christians to save them. But if “ we knew that probation would end in one year, many would go from house to house, and from street to street, to pull sinners out of the fire, who now supinely fold their arms, because they know not that the time is so short. Were a relative or friend condemned to be executed, or had he a threatening disease, should we not make greater exertions for his salvation, than if there was the usual chance of his living out the life of a man? We certainly should ;—this is human nature. A knowledge of the event then seems to be desirable for their sakes. It is moreover desirable on the Christian’s account, for this additional reason, that in consequence of the peculiar exertions he will make to save souls, he will probably be the means of more conversions, and thus have more souls as crowns of his rejoicing in the great day of the Lord.”

OBJECTION. It is objected that little reliance is to be placed in conversions which take place in the prospect of impending death, and that such prospect unfits men for making the necessary preparation. If, however, this objection is valid, “ the Ninevites would never have repented at the preaching of Jonah, the thief would not have repented on the cross, nor would the judgments of God be so prominently presented in his word as an inducement to repentance. But would men be any more likely to repent and prepare for an impending event, if it is taken for granted that such event is at a distance? Or would such woes be pronounced upon watchmen who neglect to give warning when they see the sword coming, if such warning would unfit men for such preparation? With such views, Noah would not have warned the inhabitants of the old world, nor would Lot those of the cities of the plain, nor Daniel, Nebuchadnezzar. We are commanded to repent lest we ‘ likewise perish.’ ” Also, in Joel ii. 1, we read, “ Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain ; let all the inhabitants of the land tremble; for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand." Ezek. xxxiii.; Dan. iv. 27; Luke xiii. 3.

CONSIDERATION VI. We also infer it from such texts as the following: "The meek will be guide in judgment, and the meek will be teach his way. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, and his covenant to make them know it." Ps. xxv. 9, 14, margin. "Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them [who had the same Bible] it is not given," [because they did not apply to the right source for wisdom to understand it.] Matt. xiii. 10 to 12, 34, 35. If they have not a teachable spirit, their very light becomes darkness. What they seem to have of revelation is taken away—is sealed. See also Mark iv. 11, 13. They "know all parables" by having "Christ made unto them wisdom," as he was on this occasion.*

"That in every thing ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge.—Who of God is made unto us wisdom," &c. 1 Cor. i. 5, 30. Wisdom in what respect? Why, in every respect in which we need wisdom—in understanding the Providence of God, as well as his Word—in discerning the signs of the times, as well as the plan of redemption.

"And the Lord said, Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do?" Gen. xviii. 17. Abraham was not in Sodom; neither had he time to send to Lot. The reasons why this thing was not hidden from him are given, to wit: his integrity, and his being the father of a mighty nation—of believers. All his true children are thus given to expect that God will not hide from them judgments that are to come upon the earth. "His secret is with the righteous." See also Rom. xiii. 11–14; from which we learn that Paul knew in what period of the world he was living, and why should not other Christians?

* See also Ps. lxxviii. 2 to 8; cvii. 40, 43; Prov. i. 5; ii. 1 to 9; iii. 32; xxviii. 5; Hos. ix. 7, 8; Matt. xi. 25; Luke viii. 10, 18; x. 21; John vii. 17; xv. 15; 1 Cor. ii. 9 to 16; 2 Pet. iii. 17; Rom. xi. 7.

CONSIDERATION VII. We also infer it from the fact that ignorance of former "times of visitation" is spoken of as sin; and this "is recorded for our admonition upon whom the ends of the world have come."

God has designedly spoken of "the times of visitation" in parables, or "dark sayings;" so that those only who have an humble and teachable spirit—a spirit that leads them to him, saying, Lord, explain to us this parable—may understand them.* They must have this spirit, or the knowledge would do them no good. Now read such texts as the following: "Yea, the stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times; and the turtle, and the crane, and swallow observe the time of their coming; but my people know not the judgment of the Lord." Jer. viii. 7. If there is any force in this rebuke, it is by implication that the time appointed for judgment may be known, if we are only as attentive to the signs of the stork, the crane, the swallow, and the turtle. We may certainly suppose then that this will be true when the greatest of all judgments is about to come.

"O, ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" Matt. xvi. 3. This is equally applicable to all periods of time that are indicated by signs. And no one will deny that Christ has given us signs to precede his second coming.

Read also Matt. xiii. 10 to 15; Luke xix. 44; Is. xxix. 10 to 14; Rom. xi. 7 to 20; Prov. xxviii. 5.

That these things were recorded for our admonition, is evident from the fact of their having been preserved in the Bible; as also from the tenor of the arguments used, and from Rom. xv. 4; 1 Cor. x. 11; Ps. lxxviii. 2 to 8.

* Matt. xi. 25; Luke viii. 10, 18; x. 21; John xiv. 17; 1 Cor. ii. 14.

CONSIDERATION VIII. We infer that the time may be known from the careful record of chronology found in the fifth chapter of Genesis.

Dr. Weeks says we have no means of getting a true chronology—that Providence has wisely hidden it from us. But does Gen. v. favor such an idea? Now, I ask, why has this record, so carefully exact, of a period anterior to any of the prophetic periods, been given? Not merely to satisfy vain curiosity; for that is not the object of the Bible. Of what use, then, can it be to mankind, to know just how long it was from the creation of man to the flood,—a use so great as to lead God to make a special revelation of the matter? Let our opponents answer. For my own part, I can see no use whatever, except the single important use of assisting the humble believer in determining about when the end shall come by knowing the age of the world. Herein we see it can be of great use; and if we cannot discover that it answers any other end, we conclude that it was intended for this.

In connexion with this, let us consider the fact, that the belief of the churches founded by the apostles, and of the church generally to the present time, has been that the present order of things will be changed at the end of six thousand years. This Mr. Dowling admits. In addition to his testimony we give the following:

“Thomas Burnet, in his ‘theory of the earth,’ printed in London, A. D. 1697, states that it was the received opinion of the primitive church, from the days of the apostles to the Council of Nice, that this earth would continue six thousand years from creation, when the resurrection of the just and conflagration of the earth would usher in the millennium and reign of Christ on earth. He also states that many of the Fathers believed that the world was then near its end: but that such belief was founded upon the chronology of the Septuagint, according to which the world was then near the end of the six thousand years. See book 3, page 24.”—S. Bliss.

Barnabas, supposed by some to be the companion of Paul, though by others to be another individual of the same name in the primitive church, writes thus:

"And God made in six days, the works of his hands, and he finished them on the seventh day, and he rested on the seventh day, and sanctified it.' Consider, my children, what that signifies:—'He finished them in six days.' The meaning is this: that in six thousand years, the Lord will bring all things to an end. For with him one day is a thousand years, as Himself testifieth, saying, 'Behold this day shall be a thousand years.' Therefore, children, in six days (i. e. six thousand years) shall all things be accomplished. And what is that he saith,—'He rested the seventh day?' He meaneth that when his Son shall come, and abolish the Wicked One, and judge the ungodly, and change the sun and moon and stars, then he shall gloriously rest in the seventh day."—Sec. xiv. xv. Epistle of Barnabas.

Gibbon, in his Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, speaking of the faith and character of the primitive Christians, says :

"The ancient and popular doctrine of the Millennium was intimately connected with the second coming of Christ.—As the works of the creation had been finished in six days, their duration in their present state, according to a tradition which was attributed to the prophet Elijah, was fixed at six thousand years. By the same analogy, it was inferred that this long period of labor and contention, which was now almost elapsed, [the early Christians suppose the world was about six thousand years old in their day,] would be succeeded by a joyful Sabbath of a thousand years,—and that Christ, with the triumphant band of saints, and the elect who had escaped death, or who had been miraculously revived, would reign upon the earth till the time appeared for the last resurrection."

Now the fact that this was the belief of the churches to which the apostles preached, gives it no little weight. It is also in accordance with the harmony, order, and analogy which we find prevailing in the things of God, and is supported by several scriptures. Thus,

2 Pet. iii. 8. "But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." The apostle was here telling when we might expect the coming of Christ, and how long God will wait for men to come to repentance—to hear his voice. See verses 4, 9, and Heb. iv. 7. See also Ps. xc. 4. "For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night."

Heb. iv. 9. "There remaineth therefore a rest [Greek, Sabbatismos, a sabbatical rest] to the people of God." Read also verses 4, 8 and 10, and compare with Rev. xx. 2 to 4, where we are informed that this sabbatical rest will be a thousand years. We therefore infer that the other days of this week also consist of a thousand years each.

In Ex. xxxi. 17, the fact of God's spending six days in making the heavens and earth, and resting the seventh day, is given as a reason why the children of Israel should observe the Sabbath, which was intended to be a sign to them. A sign of what? Of the great Sabbath, the seventh millennial day of the great week, in reference to which it was typically said, "Six days shall men labor, and do ALL their work." That is, Six thousand years shall man's salvation be wrought out, in which he shall do all his work of repentance and preparation for heaven; the seventh day (or thousand,) is the Sabbath, in which there shall be no work done; for the work of the Redeemer, the work of the Holy Spirit, the work of grace is ended, and the Sabbath of the Lord is come. Blessed are they who enter into that rest. Read carefully Heb. iv. 3 to 11.

Hosea vi. 1 to 3. "After two days will he revive us; in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight." Luke xiii. 32. "Behold, I cast out devils, and I do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected." The two days of Hosea are to be dated from the time when the people of God were torn and smitten; see verse 1. This was one hundred and fifty-eight years before Christ, according to 1 Maccabees, ch. 8th and 9th. The two days were not literal days, neither have they been fulfilled as yet, as facts show. We have reason to believe, therefore, they are millennial days; and that the third day, in which the people of God shall be raised up and live in his sight, corresponds with the third day in which Christ shall be perfected, and the period of a thousand years, during which the saints shall live and reign with Christ. Rev. xx. 4.

CONSIDERATION IX. We infer that the time has been revealed, from 2 Pet. i. 19. "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light shining in a dark place."

More sure than what? Than being "eye-witnesses of his majesty." Verses 16, 18, and Matt. xvii. 1, 9. Let those who despise the prophecies, or say they cannot be understood before fulfilment, ponder this passage. This sure word of prophecy is a light shining in what was a dark place even to those who had been eye-witnesses of Christ's majesty. Now what was it that remained in the dark to them? I answer, the time. "No man, when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a vessel, or putteth it under a bed; but setteth it on a candlestick, that they which enter in may see the light." (Luke viii. 16.) And yet some would have us believe that God has lighted a candle, and then so completely hidden it in obscurity, that none of those entering in may see the light.

That the foregoing considerations make it probable, in the absence of any proof to the contrary, that the time has been revealed, I think no candid person will deny. But the following proofs establish the position, beyond a doubt, in my own mind.

PROOF I. The question in Is. xxi. 11, "Watchman, what of the night?" and his answer, imply that those who watch may know what time of the night it is, or, at least, when the morning is about to dawn. That this text refers to the bondage of the church, seems evident from both the answer and the context. What will be morning to the church will be night and gloom and horror to the world. If, however, it be applied only to the captivity of the ancient Jews, analogy makes it almost certain that the watchman in the church, of which Jerusalem was but a type, will be equally able to discern the dawn of the day of a more glorious emancipation.

PROOF II. "Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her that her appointed time [see margin] is accomplished," &c. Is. xl. 2; Ps. cii. 13, 16, 18; Lev. xxvi.

But how can the ministers of God obey this command, if it is impossible for them to know when that appointed time is about to expire.

PROOF III. In Dan. viii. 17, and xii. 4, 9, we are told that the vision belongs to the time of the end,* and is sealed till then. The implication is, that it will be unsealed then; and, when it is unsealed, we may thereby know that we are living in the time of the end.

PROOF IV. In Dan. xii. 4, we read, "But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end; many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Here we are informed explicitly that, at the time of the end, knowledge respecting the vision shall be increased by a careful study and comparison of its different parts with each other and with facts. Now read carefully the vision from chapter viii. to the end of the book, and you will see that the main point, respecting which knowledge was wanting, and "shall be increased," was the time. "How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" To show that this interpretation is correct, the following comments of the most approved commentators are subjoined:

"Many shall run to and fro. Many shall endeavor to search out the sense; and knowledge shall be increased by these means. This seems to be the meaning of this verse, though another has been put upon it, viz., 'Many shall run to and fro preaching the gospel of Christ, and therefore religious knowledge and true wisdom shall be increased.' This is true in itself; but it is not the meaning of the prophet's words."

The most eminent modern Hebrew scholars all agree with Clarke, in giving this sense. Scott's opinion seems to coincide with Clarke's, though he gives both meanings in his notes ; but manifestly gives the preference to the one which expresses the idea of searching out the meaning of the prophecy.

* That "the time of the end" is a period, and not the time for the one event of the end alone, see Dan. xi. 40, and the events which follow previous to the resurrection.

Matthew Henry comments freely on the passage, and among other things says :

"They shall read it over and over, shall meditate upon it ; they shall discourse of it, talk it over, sift out the meaning of it, and thus knowledge shall be increased."

The French translation, published by the American Bible Society, renders the passage following "the time of the end" thus :

"When many shall run all over it, [or through it] and to them knowledge shall be increased."

The old English Bible, printed by Barker in 1580, has this marginal note :

"Many shall run to and fro to search the knowledge of these mysteries."

Dr. Gill says :

"Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased ; that is, towards the end of the time appointed, many shall be stirred up to inquire into these things delivered in this book, and will spare no pains or cost to get a knowledge of them ; will read and study the scriptures, and meditate on them ; compare one passage with another, spiritual things with spiritual, in order to obtain the mind of Christ ; will carefully peruse the writings of such, who have gone before them, who have attempted any thing of this kind ; and will go far and near to converse with persons that have any understanding of such things ; and by such means, with the blessing of God upon them, the knowledge of this book of prophecy will be increased, and things will appear plainer and clearer, the nearer the accomplishment of them is ; and especially when prophecy and facts can be compared : and not only this kind of knowledge, but knowledge of all spiritual things, of all evangelical truths, and doctrines, will be abundantly enlarged at this time."

"The word translated, run to and fro, is metaphorically used to denote investigation, close, diligent, accurate observation—just as the eyes of the Lord are said to run to and fro. The reference is not to missionary exertions in particular, but to the study of the Scriptures, especially, the sealed book of prophecy."—Duffield on Prophecies, p. 373.

בְּכָל־הָאָרֶץ מִשּׁוֹר טָטִיס in universa terra discurrentes. 2 Chron. xvi. 9. Metaph. percurrere librum, i. e. perscrutari. Dan. xii. 4.—Gesenius.

PROOF V. Dan. xii. 8—10. "Then said I, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things? And he said, Go thy way Daniel; for the words are closed up, and sealed till the time of the end. Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried, but the wicked shall do wickedly; and none of the wicked shall understand, but the wise shall understand." Understand what? Evidently that which Daniel sought after, viz., "the end of these things."

The declaration that "none of the wicked shall understand," must not be construed to mean a mere theoretical understanding, but a realizing of the awful nature of the scenes that are to burst upon the world. I fear some are deceiving themselves here. See 1 Cor. xiii. 2.

PROOF VI. Dan. xii. 11, 12. "And from the time that the daily shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that [anxiously, and with earnest desire] waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." According to Professor Seixas, of New York, one of the best of Hebrew scholars, the original text implies waiting with earnest desire, and I have given his translation.

In the above we have explicit statements of definite time, whether to be interpreted symbolically or literally matters not. Now why this definiteness, unless the fulfilment is to correspond with the prophecy in respect to time as well as other particulars? Moreover, why was any revelation of these definite times made to man, unless either that he should believe them before fulfilment, and thus be prepared for the events they date, and such as are immediately to follow ; or that he should, on the fulfilment, be enabled by the time, as well as other points in the prophecy, to see exactly in what age of the world he is living, what peculiar duties the times place upon him, and to prepare for the next events foretold by the seer ? Again, the very definiteness of the time mentioned, and the explicitness of the statements, prove conclusively that, at the proper time for understanding these prophecies, there will be nothing necessarily uncertain about the true time from which to date the commencement of the periods. Thus Christians will be able to know when the 1290 and 1335 days begin, and when they expire. To believe otherwise is to charge God with pretending to make explicit in revelation, what by his Providence he has left necessarily inexplicit—with tantalizing us, by making us think we have what we have not, and directing us repeatedly to the prophecies as being sure guides to which we should take heed, when, according to this view, they are no guides at all. Recollect, we have before proved that all prophecies may be understood before the end.

There are only two views respecting the event to occur at the end of the 1335 days. One makes it a millennium of triumph on the part of the church previous to the end. This view is contradicted by the next verse, and by the second chap. of Isaiah, which says the land will be full of idols and lofty looks when the day of God shall come ; also by Jer. xxxi. ; Rev. ix. 20, 21 ; xi. 18 ; Ps. ii. 9, and many other texts ;—in fact, by the whole gospel, which is adapted to a church militant, and not a church triumphant,—to believers suffering tribulation, and not enjoying millennial repose. But I have not room here to enter into a discussion of this question. Suffice it to say, that until Dan. vii. 21, 22, and 2 Thess. ii. 8, can be harmonized with the idea of such a millennium, I must believe this doctrine to be a device of Satan to keep men from preparing for the end.

However, even if this interpretation be correct,

Christians would be able to discern about the time for the end. For, according to this view, after the millennium Satan is to be loosed for only a little season.

The other view makes the blessed event to be "the redemption of the purchased possession," and giving "reward to thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great." This view harmonizes with the 13th verse, which speaks of Daniel's death and resurrection, and with the whole context; and, if it be correct, we shall certainly be able to know beforehand the time for the end. So, let either interpretation be correct, our argument remains.

PROOF VII. Amos iii. 7. "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." See also Is. xlv. 7, 8. No reason has been given why the word "nothing" should not be taken in an unlimited sense, as respects judgments or deliverances of God's people. If, however, any wish to regard it as limited, they must admit the implication to be that in many cases—in all the leading events in the history of the church—the secret has been revealed to the prophets, (plural, implying different revelations to different individuals.) Consequently we cannot but believe that in respect to the event of events his secret has been in like manner revealed.

PROOF VIII. Rom. xiii. 11, 12. "Knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep; for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand." This text, as also 1 Pet. iv. 7, in connexion with the prophecies of the several events to occur between the days of the apostles and the end of the world, enables us to discern about the time for the end. All admit that we have in the prophecies a summary of the leading events in the history of the church down to the judgment. These foretold events are landmarks all along the way of time to its very end. Now, why these landmarks, unless to tell us whereabouts on the road we are, and when we are approaching the end? Even if this was not their original design, they answer this purpose also. For, when we have come to the last landmark, we must know that the end is near. The whole period of time, from the days of the apostles till the day of judgment, was short, compared with the age of the world at that time. The day of Judgment was comparatively at hand. Now, of the events to occur since then, 1260 years were to be occupied by those connected with the Man of Sin, who was not revealed until about five hundred years after the apostles wrote. Of course there can be but little time remaining for the events to follow his captivity; and, when the last has occurred, we may infer that the Judgment is very near.

Will our opponents give a satisfactory reason why the exact duration of the Man of Sin is revealed? I cannot believe that it was to increase the evidence of the authenticity of the Bible and divinity of the Christian religion; for that is unnecessary. It remains, then, to choose between these two reasons: 1. To prepare the church for the event itself; or, 2, to give the church an intimation of the time to the end. If the first be assumed as the reason, analogy leads us to infer that if times are revealed to prepare the church for lesser events, they are also revealed to prepare her for the greatest of all events.

PROOF IX. Eph. i. 10. "That in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one, all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth." Notice here. 1. What is to be done, viz., the gathering in one of all the saints, both quick and dead. 2. When this is to be done, viz., when the fulness of times (plural) has come. Now, the fulness of times evidently means, when all the periods of time prophesied of have been filled up. But we shall be able to interpret all the prophecies before the end comes, and this text leads us to infer it will come as soon as the prophetic periods have all expired. See Luke xxi. 24.

PROOF X. In 1 Thess. ch. iv. Paul had been speaking of the end of the world, and how Christians, then living, would be changed and caught up to meet the Lord in the air. He then goes on, in the 5th chapter, to say that there is no need to write "of the times and seasons;" because the brethren know very well that to those who say peace and safety, this day of the Lord, of which he had been speaking, will come as a thief in the night. "But, [he adds] ye brethren are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." He afterwards says, "I charge you by the Lord, that this epistle be read unto all the holy brethren." It seems to have been pre-eminently a general epistle to all Christians till the end of the world; and this passage seems to me to teach clearly that all true Christians have a sure word of prophecy, to which, if they take heed as to a light shining in a dark place, they need not be in darkness respecting the time for the end.

PROOF XI. In Heb. ix. 28, we are told, of Christ, that "unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation." A little farther on the apostle gives this earnest exhortation, "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith, without wavering . . . not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together; as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another, and so much the more AS YE SEE THE DAY APPROACHING."

As no prophecy of the Scripture is of private interpretation, so, we believe, the New Testament is to be understood in a sense at least as broad as the language seems to imply, and is not to be narrowed down to agree with man's little theories. Some apply this to the destruction of Jerusalem; but, when the Christians saw that day approaching, they were to forsake their accustomed assemblies, and flee to the mountains. We shall therefore apply it to the "day of Christ," when "he shall descend from heaven with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first"—on which topic Paul speaks so freely to the Thessalonians Read Heb. x. 25 to 37.

Now, we enquire, how can a day be seen approaching, unless its time may in some way be judged of beforehand, either by prediction, or by signs of its coming?*

PROOF XII. 1 Pet. i. 10—13, implies that the time for the sufferings of Christ and the time for the glory were both revealed to the prophets, as well as what would constitute the sufferings and the glory. And “unto us they did minister.”

That Daniel is particularly referred to by the apostle here, is evident from three considerations. First. He is the only one of the prophets who has given us the time in connexion with “the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow.” Dan. chapters ix. xii. Secondly. To him “it was revealed that not unto himself he did minister,” in the things named by the apostle. Dan. viii. 26, 27; xii. 4, 8, 9. Thirdly. “The angels” are brought to view as having taken a particular interest in these “things” when communicated to Daniel. Dan. vii. 16; viii. 13, 14, 16; ix. 21; x. 10—21; xii. 5—7.

Now to Daniel, with the other prophets, we are specially directed to guide us on this subject. (2 Peter iii. 1, 2.) To their “word” we do well that we take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn. 2 Peter i. 19. And by the plain terms of the prophecy of Daniel itself, the vision is to be understood “at the time of the end,”—that is, a short period before the end shall actually come.

PROOF XIII. That Christians have an intimation of the time for the end, I also argue from 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4. “Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, where is the promise of his coming?” If the reader will commence at the 16th verse of the first chapter, and read through the epistle, he will see that the coming here referred to, is Christ’s second coming in the clouds of heaven with majesty, to receive his kingdom. He will also see that the expression “last days" in the text, means the last days emphatically, and not the latter dispensation. The 15th verse of the first chapter shows that this epistle was intended for Christians after the apostle's day. Moreover, in the earlier ages of the Christian church there were no scoffers of the kind spoken of. They all believed in Christ's second coming at the appointed time. Now, in our text, we not only have a sign of the last days, but also an implication that the last days might be known to be such by other indications. For it is when Christ's coming is preached as being close at hand, that the scoffers will be excited, and ask where is any promise of such an event? Until then, there would be no reason for such scoffing. Consequently, we infer that shortly before the end, it will be proclaimed that Christ is soon to come in the clouds of heaven, and then the scoffers will arise, and thus add another sign to those which had already enabled the watchmen to announce the dawn of day.

PROOF XIV. In Rev. x. 5—7, we are given to understand that when there shall be no longer time [or delay] the mystery of God shall be finished; that this will be in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound; and that the fact of the mystery being finished then, had been declared to the prophets before the time of John. But none of those prophets speak of the seven angels. Therefore John's language may be construed thus: "God hath declared to his prophets when his mystery shall be finished. He has also revealed it unto me by the sounding of the seven angels,—which time agrees with that declared to the other prophets." If John found the time revealed in the prophecies, so may we.

PROOF XV. As the end is to be "in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound," and as the length of time is given, to be occupied by the events that follow the sounding of the fifth and sixth angels, and as these prophecies may all be understood before the end, it follows clearly that we may know just about when the end shall be. Can any one see the design to be answered by revealing the time to be occupied under the fifth and sixth trumpets, except to let us know when the last trumpet is about to sound?

PROOF XVI. In the eleventh chapter of Revelation we are informed that the two witnesses "shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and three score days, clothed in sackcloth. And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and kill them. And after three days and a half the spirit of life from God entered into them. And they heard a voice from heaven, saying unto them, Come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them. And the same hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell. The second wo is past; and, behold, the third wo cometh quickly." We shall be able to understand all of this prophecy before the end. But the third wo which cometh quickly, will be the end, as we learn from the context, and from the last verse in chap. viii. Consequently we may know when the end is to occur quickly.

PROOF XVII. Rev. xiv. 6—8. "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel, to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come * * * And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen!"

From this it appears that shortly before the fall of mystical Babylon, those who preach are to announce that "the hour of his judgment is come." But there could be no such preaching, unless we are able to know beforehand when that hour is to come. That the fall of Babylon will be followed very soon by the end of the world, see the remainder of this chapter; also chap. xix., and 2 Thess. ii. 8, and elsewhere.

It is generally supposed that sounding the midnight cry is parallel with the preaching above described. But I am constrained to differ from this view ; inasmuch as the parable leads us to infer that when the cry goes forth, it will be too late for graceless souls to prepare to meet the bridegroom. Whether that cry will be given by men, or by the angel that sounds the last trumpet, or by the falling of Babylon, I know not ; but I believe that all the work of conversion will be over then, and that all who do not love the appearing of Christ, will then seek in vain for oil to replenish their lamps, or for admission to the feast. True Christians, who are only asleep in regard to the time of Christ's coming, but are glad to have him come, will trim their lamps and go forth to meet him.

If, however, this is not the correct interpretation, and if men are to sound the midnight cry before the end of conversions, we have another argument to prove that the time for the end can be known ; for otherwise they could not know when to give the midnight cry.

Now let us consider our Saviour's own words on this subject, which afford several additional proofs.

PROOF XVIII. In Matt. xxiv. 29, 30, and Mark xiii. 24—26, he tells us that in the days of the abomination of desolation, but after the tribulation which he shall cause to the church, shall commence a series of signs of his own second advent. The mere fact of signs being given proves our position.

PROOF XIX. In Luke xxi. 28, Christ tells his disciples "when these things [signs just given] begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads ; for your redemption draweth nigh." This they can never do, unless they can discern the signs of the time for the end.

PROOF XX. To set the matter beyond all doubt, our Saviour then "spake a parable : Behold the fig-tree, and all the trees. When they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, [of course, those living at the time of the signs,] when ye see these things come to pass, KNOW ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.” Matthew records it thus, “know that it is near, EVEN AT THE DOORS.”

PROOF XXI. Our Saviour next tells us that the day and hour are as yet known only to the Father. “Watch, therefore; for ye know not [now, and never shall but by watching] what hour your Lord doth come.” Matt. xxiv. 42—44. His coming will be as the lightning, v. 27. Of course, we are not exhorted to watch for it, but for the signs to precede it. Now only the Father knoweth. As a prophet, I have delivered to you what I have received from my Father respecting the signs to precede. When, in his Providence, certain events occur, then ye may know. Therefore watch for those signs. Those who keep the night watches remain in darkness until the signs of the morning begin to appear. Nevertheless they must watch for the signs; else the day will very likely have fully dawned, before they will be aware of its coming.

PROOF XXII. Verse 45: “Who, then, is a faithful and wise servant, [faithful to watch for, and wise to discern the signs,] whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? [to preach the near approach of the end to the household of faith, when the time for such preaching has arrived.] Blessed is that servant, whom his lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing.” Of course, he must know about the time.

PROOF XXIII. “But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming, &c. [shall get tired of watching, and give it up, because not stimulated by love;] the lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him,” &c.—implying that the day will not come unawares upon the good servant who never says in his heart, my lord delayeth his coming, but watches faithfully for the signs. See also, Luke xxi. 34.

PROOF XXIV. Luke xxi. 36, clearly implies that by watching and praying always, we shall “be accounted worthy to escape” having that day come upon us unawares and as a snare.

OF THAT DAY AND HOUR KNOWETH NO MAN, &c.

Let us read the whole verse: "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." Mark xiii. 32. If this is any objection, the passage must mean that no man ever shall know until the end comes. But that such is not its meaning, is proved as follows:

1. The text reads knoweth. If Christ had meant to say never shall know, why did he not use the future tense?

2. Such an interpretation makes Christ contradict himself; for he has just said, "When ye see all these things, [the signs he had just given them,] know that it is nigh, even at the doors."

3. It proves that Christ himself will never know any thing about it till he finds himself here!! For our Lord says, "Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels in heaven, NEITHER THE SON." If the objector is now afraid to follow out his principles, let him acknowledge he is mistaken in his interpretation; for, if this text proves that no man ever shall know, it equally proves that the "Son" shall never know until he actually finds himself here. Nor can he escape from the difficulty by saying, "Christ did not know it as man," for it is the "Son of Man" that is to appear "in the clouds of heaven."

Wesley said, "But of that day—the day of Judgment—knoweth no man,—not while our Lord was on the earth. Yet it might be afterward revealed to St. John consistently with this." Or it might have been given to Daniel in such a way as to be sealed then, and to remain sealed till the Providence of God unseals it near the time for the end.

IT IS NOT FOR YOU TO KNOW THE TIMES OR SEASONS, &c.

Let us read the context. "When they, therefore, were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power." Now observe,

1. It says it is not for you, living at this time, to know. It does not say it is not for men to know.

2. It does not say times or seasons which the Father intends shall never be known; but which he hath put in his own power to make known by a further revelation, or by the events of his Providence. The time is sealed or hidden until He unseals it. Those living at the time may know, because the Father will then give them the means of knowing; but it is not for me to tell you now; the Father hath put it in his own power.

Now turn over to Rev. i. 1. "The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass." This additional revelation given by the Father, in connexion with the occurrence in due time of events all ordered by Him, is the key to unlock the visions of Daniel, which the Father put in his own power to furnish.

And now, dear reader, let me entreat you to follow the example of the prophets of old, and search diligently what manner of time the Spirit doth signify. Many tell us the end of the world is at hand. Possibly they are correct; and, if they are, how unspeakably important that we all should know it. If there is only a possibility of their being correct, we should run to our Bibles, and search them, as we have never before, to see whether it is so. How much more, when the great and the learned, having applied themselves to discover some mistake in the arguments, have been unable to discover any; nay, further, when the attempts to confute them, thus far made, have only placed the arguments in a clearer light, and made them appear doubly strong.

For myself, I have been unable as yet to find the least shadow of an objection to the belief, that the 2300 days terminate sometime between March 21, 1843, and March 21, 1844. In respect to the meaning of the word sanctuary—whether it means the earth or Mount Zion, I am still undecided. If it means the earth, the conclusion seems unavoidable that the world will end as soon as the 2300 days expire. If, however, it means Mount Zion, a question occurs, whether the 1335 days are a part of the 2300 days, or whether they constitute a distinct prophetic period. If they belong to the 2300, they terminate with them, and be it observed that at the end of the 1335 days, will be the resurrection. If, however, they do not belong to the 2300, when do they begin and when terminate? Any one must perceive that the 1260 are a part of the 1290 days; also that the 1335 days commence with the 1290. Only one question remains,—did the 1260 and the 1290 commence together, or did they terminate together? That the 1260 terminated in 1798, no unprejudiced person, it seems to me, can doubt. And if the 1290 also terminated then, (having commenced thirty years before the 1260,) then the conclusion seems irresistible that the 1335 terminate about this time—being now forty-five years since 1798, which is the excess of 1335 over 1290. If, however, as is possible, the 1260, 1290, and 1335 days all commence at the same time, the 1260 having terminated in 1798, and the 1290 in 1828, then we are still within thirty years of the end. And this, it would seem with our present light, is the utmost limit to which time can extend, while there are many reasons for believing that but a few days more will close the scene.

Perchance you are a professor of religion, and yet, strange to say, setting in the seat of the scornful, and joining with an infidel church in the infidel cry, “Where is the promise of his coming?”—or, “The prophecies cannot be understood before their accomplishment,” or, “The time has been purposely concealed.” Why not honor God by believing his revelation?

Let me seriously ask, whether Christians living in the last days have not peculiar duties to perform? One told me lately he had practical duties to perform, without diving into the prophecies. And is it not a practical duty to listen when God speaks, to read what God writes, to receive with thankfulness what God communicates, and to be his mouthpiece to an impenitent world, declaring the day of vengeance at hand? Was it sufficient for Jonah to threaten judgments to the Ninevites? Was he not commanded to limit their time of probation to forty days? If we are in the last days, the most important practical duty we can perform is to proclaim "the hour of his judgment is come." "If the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; BUT HIS BLOOD WILL I REQUIRE  THE WATCHMAN'S HAND."

Paraphrase of Daniel XI. and XII.

Sylvester
BY S. BLISS.

BEFORE the communication made by Gabriel to Daniel, as recorded in these chapters, Daniel says in the 10th chapter:—

In the third year of Cyrus king of Persia, a thing was revealed unto me Daniel, whose name was called Belteshazzar; and the thing was true, but the time appointed was long; [extending to the end of the world;] and he UNDERSTOOD the thing, and had [more perfect] understanding of the vision [of the 2300 days.]

In those days, I Daniel was mourning three full weeks [inquiring and searching diligently, that I might know more fully, what, and what manner of time the Spirit of Christ, which was in me did signify, when it testified of the time of the sufferings of Christ, and the time of the glory that should follow, in the vision had in the third year of Belshazzar, with its explanation in the first year of Darius. See 1 Peter i. 10—12.] I ate no pleasant bread, neither came flesh nor wine in my mouth, neither did I anoint myself at all, till three whole weeks were fulfilled. And in the four-and-twentieth day of the first month, as I was by the side of the great river, which is Hiddekel; then I lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and behold a certain man clothed in linen, whose loins were girded with fine gold of Uphaz: his body also was like the beryl, and his face as the appearance of lightning, and his eyes as lamps of fire, and his arms and his feet like in color to polished brass, and the voice of his words like the voice of a multitude. * * * * * And he said unto me, O Daniel, a man greatly beloved, understand the words that I speak unto thee, and stand upright; for unto thee am I now sent. And when he had spoken this word unto me I stood trembling. Then said he unto me, fear not, Daniel: for from the first day that thou didst set thyself before thy God, thy words were heard, and I am come for [because] thy words [for understanding were heard.] * * * * * Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days: for yet the vision is for many [2300] days. * * * * * But I will show thee that which is noted in the scripture of truth; and there is none that holdeth with me in these things but MICHAEL, your Prince. * * * * And now will I show the truth.

Behold, there shall stand up yet [after this time] three kings in Persia [Cambyses, son of Cyrus, Smerdis the Magian, and Darius the son of Hystaspes;] and the fourth [Xerxes the Great] shall be far richer than they all; and by his strength through his riches, he shall stir up all [an army of 5,000,000 of men] against the realm of Grecia [but will suffer defeat.]

And a mighty king [Alexander the Great] shall stand up [in Greece,] that shall rule with great dominion, and do according to his will. And when he shall stand up, his kingdom [the Grecian empire] shall be broken, and shall be divided [into four kingdoms, Macedon, Thrace, Syria and Egypt,] towards the four winds of heaven; and not to his posterity, nor according to his dominion which he ruled: for his kingdom shall be plucked up even for others [his four generals, Cassander in Greece, Lysimachus in Thrace, Ptolemy in Egypt, and Seleucus in Syria,] beside those [his posterity.]

And [Ptolemy] the king of the south [Egypt] shall be strong, and one of his [Alexander's] princes; and he [Seleucus Nicator, king of Syria, in the north of Judea] shall be strong above him, and have dominion; his dominion shall be a great dominion. And in the end of [many] years, they [the kings of Syria and Egypt] shall join themselves together: for the king's daughter of the south [Bernice, the daughter of Ptolemy Philadelphus, then king of Egypt] shall come to [Antiochus Theus, who will put away his wife Laodice] the king of the north [Syria] to make a [marriage] agreement. But she [Bernice] shall not retain the power of the arm [of Antiochus;] neither shall he [Antiochus] stand, nor his arm [or seed;] but she [Bernice] shall be given up, [will be poisoned by Laodice,] and they that brought her, [her Egyptian women,] and he that begat her, [or as in the margin, "he whom she brought forth," her son,] and he [Antiochus her husband] that strengthened her in those times. But out of a branch of her root shall one [Ptolemy Euergetes, her brother,] stand up in his [father's] estate [as king of Egypt] which shall come with an army, and shall enter into the fortress of [Seleucus Callinicus, the successor of Antiochus Theus] the king of the north [Syria,] and shall deal against them, and shall prevail; and shall also carry captives into Egypt their gods, with their princes, and with their precious vessels of silver and gold; and he shall continue more years than [Seleucus] the king of the north [Syria.] So [Ptolemy] the king of the south [Egypt] shall come into his kingdom, and shall return into his own land. But his [Seleucus Callinicus'] sons [Seleucus Ceraunus, and Antiochus Magnus] shall be stirred up, and shall assemble a multitude of great forces. And one [of them, Antiochus, his brother Seleucus being dead] shall certainly come, and overflow, and pass through: then shall he return and be stirred up even to his fortress. And [Ptolemy Philopater] the king of the south [Egypt] shall be moved with choler, and shall come forth and fight with him, even with [Antiochus] the king of the north [Syria:] and he [Antiochus] shall set forth a great multitude; but the multitude shall be given into his [Ptolemy's] hand. And when he [Ptolemy] hath taken away the multitude [of Syrians,] his heart shall be lifted up; and he shall cast down many ten thousands [of the Jews of Alexandria, his own subjects:] but he shall not be strengthened by it. For [Antiochus] the king of the north [Syria] shall return, and shall set forth a multitude greater than the former [that Ptolemy overcame] and shall certainly come, after certain years, with a great army and with much riches. And in those times there shall many stand up against [Ptolemy Epiphanus,] the [infant] king of the south [Egypt:] also the robbers of thy people [the Romans] shall exalt themselves to establish [or fulfil the things spoken of them in] the vision [of the 2300 days.] But they [who stand up against Egypt] shall fall.

So [Antiochus] the king of the north [Syria] shall come and cast up a mount and take the most fenced cities; and the arms of the south [Egypt] shall not withstand, neither his chosen people, neither shall there be any strength to withstand. But he [Pompey, the Roman general] that cometh against him [Antiochus, king of Syria] shall do according to his own will, and none shall stand before him; and he shall stand in the glorious land, [Judea,] which by his hand shall be consumed. He [Pompey] shall also set his face to enter with the strength of his whole kingdom, and upright ones [or as in the margin, "equal conditions," his army being composed of his equals, with many of the nobility of Rome] with him; thus shall he do: and he shall give him [Cleopatra, queen of Egypt] the daughter of women, corrupting her, [so that she will favor his cause for a while,] but she shall not stand on his side, neither be for him [in his final contest with Julius Cæsar.] After this [desertion to Julius Cæsar] shall he [Pompey] turn his face unto the [Grecian] isles, and shall take many. But a prince [Julius Cæsar] for his own behalf shall cause the reproach offered by him [Pompey] to cease; without his [Cæsar's] own reproach, he shall cause it to turn upon him [Pompey.] Then [after the death of Pompey] he [Julius Cæsar] shall turn his face towards the fort of his own land [Rome:] but [as he is to be crowned emperor] he shall stumble and fall and not be found. Then [after the assassination of Julius Cæsar] shall stand up in his [Julius'] estate

[Augustus Cæsar] a raiser of taxes, (see Luke ii. 1,) in the glory of his kingdom: but within few days he shall be destroyed, neither in anger nor in battle [but will die peaceably in his own bed.] And in his [Augustus'] estate shall stand up [Tiberius Cæsar,] a vile person, to whom they shall not give the honor of the kingdom: but he shall come in [to imperial office] peaceably, and obtain the kingdom by flatteries. And with the arms of a flood shall they be overflowed from before him, and shall be broken; yea, also [our Saviour] the Prince of the covenant [which God made with Abraham, (Gal. iii. 16,)] will be crucified by those under his authority.]

And after the league [to be] made with him [Rome, by the Jews, B. C. 158,] he [Rome] shall work deceitfully: for he [Rome] shall come up, and shall become strong with a small people, [that were once but a little republic on the banks of the Tiber, in Italy.] He [Rome] shall enter peaceably even upon the fattest places of the province [of Judea;] and he shall do that which his fathers have not done, nor his fathers' fathers; he shall scatter among them [the Jews after their league with Rome] the prey, and spoil, and riches, [taken from other conquered nations:] yea, and he shall forecast his devices against the strong holds, even for a time [or 360 years from B. C. 31, when Rome triumphed over Egypt during the supremacy of Roman glory, to A. D. 329, when the seat of imperial power was removed from Rome to Constantinople, and the glory of Rome departed.] And he [Rome] shall stir up his power and his courage against the king of the south, [Egypt] with a great army; and the king of the south [Egypt] shall be stirred up to battle [with the Romans,] with a very great and mighty army; but he [Egypt] shall not stand: for they shall forecast devices against him. Yea, [Antony and Cleopatra with their army,] they that feed of the portion of his meat shall destroy him [by their treachery and cowardice] and his army shall overflow; and many [of his subjects] shall fall down slain.

And [when Antony and Augustus, after the death of Julius Cæsar, reigned jointly in Rome,] both of these kings' hearts shall be to do mischief [to each other,] and they shall speak lies at one table [each thinking to deceive the other;] but it shall not prosper, for yet the end [of the Roman prosperity] shall be at the time [or end of the 360 years] appointed. Then [after the conquest of Egypt] shall he [Rome] return into his own land with great riches; and his heart shall be against the holy covenant [which God made with our father Abraham] and he shall do exploits [in persecuting Christians, by which more than 3,000,000 suffered martyrdom] and shall return to his own land. At the time appointed [when the 360 years end] he [Rome] shall return, and come toward the south

[Egypt;] but it shall not be as the former [when Rome went to conquer Egypt,] nor as the latter [when it overthrew the Jewish nation:] for the ships of Chittin [under Heraclian, count of Africa] shall come against him; therefore shall he be grieved and return, and have indignation against the holy covenant [because the Christians refuse to bear arms in support of the state;] so shall he do; he shall even return and have intelligence with them that forsake the holy covenant [and the Christian religion.] And [those that take up] arms shall stand on his part. And they [the barbarians from the north of Europe] shall pollute [Rome] the sanctuary of strength, and [shall conquer the empire, out of which ten kingdoms, corresponding with the ten toes of the image, and horns of the fourth beast, shall arise. These ten kings being converted to Christianity] shall take away the daily sacrifice [of the pagan rites, about A. D. 503,] and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate [in its place—the Man of Sin,—Papacy, the Wicked to be revealed when that which hindered is taken out of the way; 2 Thess. ii.] And such as do wickedly against the covenant shall he [the Pope, now having the supremacy] corrupt by flatteries; but the people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits. And they that understand among the people, [“that do know their God,”] shall instruct many [in the truth:] yet they shall fall [before the persecutions of papacy, and die] by the sword and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days [or 1260 years from A. D. 538 to 1798.] Now when they shall fall, they shall be holpen with a little help: but many shall cleave to them by flatteries. And some of them of understanding shall fall to try them, and to purge, and to make them white, even to the time of the end [of papal supremacy;] because it is yet for a time appointed, [when the 1260 years end.] And the king [the Pope] shall do according to his will: and he shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every god, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods, and shall prosper [after his dominion is taken away in making war against the saints, and prevailing against them] till the indignation be accomplished, [when the Ancient of days will sit, judgment be given to the saints of the Most High, and the time come that they will possess the kingdom; Dan. vii. 22; and then that Wicked will be destroyed, by the brightness of Christ's coming; 2 Thess. ii. 8;] for that that is determined shall be done. Neither shall he regard the God of his fathers, nor the desire of women, nor regard any god; for he shall magnify himself above all, [taking for his title, “The Lord God, the Pope.”] But in his estate [when he has the supremacy] shall he honor the god of forces, [uniting civil with his ecclesiastical powers;] and [departed saints] a god whom his fathers knew not, shall he honor with gold and silver, and with precious stones and pleasant things. Thus shall he do [in Rome] in the most strong holds with a strange god, whom he shall acknowledge and increase with glory; and he shall cause them to rule over many, and shall divide the land for gain, [portioning out distant countries to whom he will.] And at the time of the end [of the Papal supremacy, when the Atheistical government of France, of which Bonaparte is the head, shall have succeeded to the dominion, and personify the exceeding great horn] shall the king of the south [Egypt] push at him [the government of France, which then has the supremacy in the Roman territory;] and the king of the north [Syria] shall come against him like a whirlwind, with chariots, and with horsemen, and with many ships; and he shall enter into the countries [of Egypt,] and overflow [it,] and pass over [into Syria.] He shall enter also into the glorious land [of Palestine,] and many countries shall be overflowed; but these shall escape out of his hand, even Edom and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon, [as his defeat in Syria will change his purpose of entering those countries.] He shall stretch forth his hand also upon the countries [of Europe,] and the land of Egypt shall not escape, [for after his discomfiture in Syria, Bonaparte will return and conquer Egypt.] But he shall have power over the treasures of gold and of silver, and over all the precious things of Egypt: and the Libyans and Ethiopians shall be at his steps—[his conquests extending to Nubia, ancient Ethiopia on the south, and to Barca, ancient Lybia on the west.] But tidings out of the east [of Europe, Russia,] and out of the north [of Europe, England, of the alliance formed against him] shall trouble him; therefore shall he go forth with great fury [with half a million of men, expecting] to destroy [Russia, which he will not accomplish,] and [instead of the victory he expected] utterly to make away many [of his own army, and lose the supremacy.] And he [the nations of Europe, who will represent the exceeding great horn after France shall lose the supremacy,] shall plant the tabernacle of his palace between the seas, in the glorious holy mountain [of Olives, when the nations are assembled in the valley of Jehosaphat, in the last great battle of the Lord God Almighty;] yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him, [for the Lord will fight against those nations as when he fought in the day of battle. Zech. xiv. 3.] And at that time shall Michael stand up [to receive the kingdom of the earth]—the great Prince which standeth for the children of thy people, [and his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east; Zech. xiv. 4;] and there shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time, [when all the tribes of the earth shall wail because of him.] And at that time thy people [all who are of the faith of Abraham] shall be delivered [from the dominion of death and the curse,] every one that shall be found written in the [Lamb's] book [of life.] And many [or the multitude] of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. And they that be wise shall shine [in the kingdom of the Lord] as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever. But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end [of papacy, when] many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased [respecting these things.]

Then I, Daniel, looked, and, behold, there stood other two, the one on this side of the bank of the river, and the other on that side of the bank of the river. And one said to the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river. How long shall it be to the end of these wonders? And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and swore by him that liveth forever, that it shall be for a time, times, and an half [that the supremacy of papacy shall continue;] and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people [at the end of the seven times or 2520 years from Manasseh's captivity, when the Gentiles had the dominion over them, till the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled,] all these things shall be finished.

And I heard, but I understood not: then said I, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things? And he said, Go thy way, Daniel: for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end [of papal supremacy, when it will be understood.] Many shall be purified and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand [how long it will be to the end of all these wonders,] but the wise, [they who are to shine as the brightness of the firmament at that time,] shall understand. And from the time that the daily sacrifice [of Paganism, about A. D. 508,] shall be taken away, and the abomination [of papacy] that maketh desolate shall be set up [to the time of the end, when knowledge shall be increased on this subject,] there shall be one thousand two hundred and ninety days [1290 years.] Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days, [1335 years from about A. D. 508.] But go thou thy way till the end [of these wonders] be: for thou shalt rest and stand in [for] thy lot, [in the resurrection] at the end of the [1335] days.

PHILOSOPHY OF MAN.—NO. III.

By J. T. WALSH.

Import of the term soul.

We shall now turn our attention, exclusively, to the term soul as found in the Holy Scriptures, and try to learn its true import. But, before we commence the work before us, we will call attention to an acknowledged rule of interpretation, viz: 'All words are to have their primary and obvious meaning, unless there is a clear necessity for departing from it.' With this rule before us, we ask, what is the first, primary, and obvious meaning of the term soul? We answer, its primary meaning is life. Let us now examine the Bible upon this subject. And,

1. The term soul signifies life. 'And God said: Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life,' [Heb. soul,] &c. Gen. 1: 20. Again in the 30th verse, 'And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every animal that creepeth upon the earth, in which is life,' &c., [Heb. a living soul.] A. Cruden says, the term occurs in the 24th verse, where we have the phrase 'living creatures,' and means living soul. Lev. 17: 11, 'For the life [Heb. soul] of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls; [lives:] for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul.' See also the 14th verse. Ps. 33: 19, 'To deliver their soul from death,' [to save them alive.] Ps. 7: 5, 'Let the enemy persecute my soul [my life] and take it; yea let him tread down my life [soul] upon the earth.' Gen. 35: 18, 'And it came to pass as her [life] was in departing, [for she died,] that she called,' &c. 1 Kings 17: 21, 'Let this child's soul [life] come into him again.' Job 12: 10, 'In whose hand is the soul [life] of every living thing, and the breath of all mankind.' Job 31: 29, 'If I caused the soul of the owners to expire,' or have caused its owners to lose their life. Rev. 16: 3, 'And every living soul [every thing that had life] died in the sea.' Job 17: 8, 'For what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his soul,' [his life.] Job 33: 18, 'He keepeth back his soul from the pit, and his life from perishing by the sword.' The Lord kept him back from the pit of corruption, and saved his life from perishing, &c. Is. 53: 10, 'When thou shalt make his soul [his life] an offering for sin.' In the 12th verse, 'Because he poured out his soul [his life, his blood] unto death.' 1 Sam. 24: 11, 'Yet thou [Saul] huntest my soul [life] to take it.' 26: 11, 'Because my soul [life] was precious in thine eyes.' Thus we have given a few cases where the term soul, evidently signifies life. Many more could be given, but this is unnecessary, as, in those referred to, we have a fair specimen. The most illiterate can see that to substitute the term immortal soul, in the above texts, would make sad havoc of the word of God.

2. The term soul signifies the person, being, man, the whole man or person. Gen. 2: 7, 'And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the earth, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul;' a living person or being. Gen. 14: 51, 'Give me the persons [Heb. souls] and take the goods to thyself.' Gen. 12: 5, See the place. Lev. 4: 2, 'If a soul [person] shall sin through ignorance,' In 37th verse: 'And if any soul [person] of the common people sin,' &c. Chap. 5: 1, 'If a soul [or person] sin, and hear the voice of swearing.' And in the 2d verse: 'Or if a soul [person, man, or woman] touch any unclean thing,' &c. Besides the souls, or persons, that went down into Egypt—the souls that were saved in the ark—the three thousand souls, or persons, who were saved on the day of Pentecost, &c., &c. There are hundreds of other places where this term is, undoubtedly, used in relation to the whole man, or person. 'Thou wilt not leave my soul [will not leave me], in hell, [the grave,] nor suffer thy holy one to see corruption.' Ps. 16: 10. With this quotation we pass on to the third proposition.

3. The term soul is used to signify a dead body, or dead person. Num. 9: 9, 'Some were defiled by the dead body [Heb. dead soul] of a man.' Num. 6: 6, 'He shall come at no dead body,' [dead soul.] Let none, then, ridicule the idea of dead souls, for it is a fact, that the term is so used in the word of God. Was not the soul of the Messiah dead when it was in the grave? But this is not all: every person will admit, that if a living person is a living soul, a dead person must be a dead soul. This must suffice for the third proposition; and more particularly as our object is to state them, and show their correctness without bringing forward a superabundance of testimony.

4. It is used in relation to the affections and the mind of man. David says: 'Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope in God, for I shall yet praise him,' &c. Ps. 43: 5. See, also, several other places in the Psalms. Why am I cast down? Why is my mind within me dejected? hope in God; &c. As it is used in reference to the mind, it sometimes expresses the emotions, desires, and affections of the mind. Gen. 23: 8, 'If it be in your mind' in Heb. if it be your soul, your wish, or desire. Sam.

It should be borne in mind, that impostors of this class are very particular in acquiring a readiness of utterance, in appropriate terms, of their oracular speeches; and that this woman would be particularly in her imitation of the prophets of Israel, in any repetition that she should attempt of their prediction. The conclusion of the Witch's speech, in the character of Samuel, was undoubtedly dictated by her cunning and resentment. Her impudence was quite sufficient to enable her to risk all consequences. Therefore she said, "Moreover the Lord will also deliver Israel with thee into the hand of the Philistines; and to-morrow shall thou and thy sons be with me; the Lord also shall deliver the host of Israel into the hand of the Philistines." This woman must have known one thing, which stood prominently conspicuous in the dealings of God with the Israelites, viz.—That, IN ALL CASES; when the Lord signifies through the agency of his prophets or the priesthood, his disapprobation of the people or their rulers, they were sure to be defeated in their battles with their enemies. Her prediction, therefore, of Saul's defeat and death, was not only sanctioned by the old prediction of Samuel, but, in her opinion, rendered certain, from the information she had just received from Saul. The opportunity, therefore, for avenging herself on Saul, by her denunciations, which he was duped to believe were fresh from the mouth of Samuel, would facilitate the destruction of her enemy, Saul, by increasing his panic, and depriving him of his remaining courage and prudence. However, the Hebrew word rendered "to-morrow," which the Witch used, is no indefinite, as to time, that Saul's subsequent defeat and death, in any battle with the Philistines, would have fulfilled her prediction.

In conclusion, we hope the articles on this subject, which precede these remarks, will be read attentively; and if any friend, or foe, can give better exposition, an exposition more consonant with the character of God and his Word, we hope they will enlighten the world on the subject.

We give place to the following extracts and reply growing out of an article in the December number of the Examiner, wherein the author expressed the opinion that "believing in the immortality of the soul is a religious duty." W.

understand the expression not in an absolute sense, but as a tendency. We certainly think such belief has a tendency to ruin more men than any one error ever introduced into the church. Not that it necessarily results in the death of those who embrace it, but, its natural and legitimate tendency is to sap the foundation of the whole system of gospel truth. We wish it distinctly understood that we do not endorse all that is said in either communication. We let both speak, and others must judge what is truth. With present light, we do not at all assent to the doctrine that "the Scriptures teach the non-resurrection" of any one.

STRICTURES BY H. GREW.

BR. STORRS.—In your December number you have verily given us a notable example of the fact that "man is prone to extremes." It is found in the article from the "Her. Future Age," in which the learned editor reasons himself out of reason by coming to the conclusion that "believing in the immortality of the soul is a damnable heresy!" Thus he consigns millions of true penitent believers on the Son of God, and followers of the Lamb, to the lake of fire, which is the second death. Do you really believe, that if you had died previous to your present view of the subject, that you would have been condemned to eternal perdition? Such extravagant representations injure the cause of truth, as they tend to prejudice the mind against what we advocate, which is true.

This preposterous conclusion of the writer is traceable to two errors. First, confounding the importance of the existence of a fact, with the importance of a correct belief in the fact. Secondly, confounding the belief of an error with the belief of every other error with which that error is logically connected, or with the denial of every truth of which that error is "logically destructive."

The fact of the Son of God being what he really is, in respect to his nature, and of his doing what he really has done, i. e., dying for us and rising from the dead, are of such importance as to be essential to the salvation of perishing men; but it does not necessarily follow that a correct belief in these facts is thus essential. To sustain this conclusion, it must be proved, either that God has made the correct knowledge and belief of what his Son is, and of what he has done for us, without exception, thus essential, or that he has made the correct knowledge and belief of these particular facts thus essential.

Paul wrote to the Corinthians, "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain, and ye are yet in your sins." This proves that the fact of his resurrection is essential to salvation. But in the dialogue, in the "Her. Future Age," he is made to say, "If you maintain this (i. e., that there is no resurrection of the dead saints) you are in your sins." Paul does not say this. We have no authority to make the belief of any particular truth essential to salvation which the word of the Lord does not plainly declare to be so.

The writer's argument is, "that these Corinthians seem to have believed all the truths but this one truth; yet the belief of the whole is regarded as valueless, because they affirmed a proposition, which, in its logical bearing upon those truths, rendered them vain, or of no practical use."

Now, I affirm that it is not true that if a man believes all the truths of the gospel, but this one truth of the resurrection of the bodies of the saints, that his unbelief in respect to this truth, renders other truths "vain, or of no practical use," in fact. Whatever may be the "logical bearing," or the inconsistency of his unbelief respecting that truth, he is, in fact, influenced to penitence, to a reliance on the Son of God for salvation, and to practical holiness, by the belief of other truths, and will consequently be saved.

It is also remarked—"You (Corinthians) say you believe that Christ was raised, as I preached; but this will avail you nothing, for in saying that there is no future resurrection, you affirm a principle which overturns the fact of the resurrection of Christ, as far as you are concerned."

There are persons who erroneously believe the body to be the mere present tenement of the soul, which they believe is immortal. Their principle, therefore, theoretically overturns the fact of the resurrection of Christ, only so far as the resurrection of their body is concerned. The connection of the resurrection of Christ, and their immortal bliss may be fully believed, notwithstanding their error concerning the dead body. To affirm that their belief in the resurrection of Christ and other important truths, will avail them nothing, is assuming the unwarrantable position that our Father in Heaven will condemn and reject the "weak in the faith," although he has commanded his church to receive them.

Such is the imperfection of the human mind that it really embraces principles which are theoretically inconsistent with each other. Therefore, I cannot admit the correctness of what the writer considers "an important truth," viz:

"A man may believe all things, but if he holds a principle which in its nature is subversive of what he believes, it is tantamount, in his case, to not believing at all."

Error in the human mind is often modified, and, in various degrees, neutralized by truth. The Calvinist believes the truth that men are blamable for their evil deeds. The Arminian says that in believing that all moral actions are decreed by the Almighty, he holds a principle which in its nature is subversive of what he believes. Now, whether the doctrine of the divine decrees of moral actions is true or false, in the mind of the Calvinist, it is not subversive of his belief of moral accountability; therefore it is not "tantamount, in his case, to not believing at all" in such accountability. The Arminian believes that God foreknows all things. The Calvinist says, that in denying the doctrine of divine decrees, in reference to moral actions, he holds a principle which in its nature is subversive of what he believes, for nothing which is uncertain can be foreknown, and nothing can be certain without decrees. Be this, however, as it may, the doctrine of the divine prescience is not subverted in the mind of the Arminian by the principle that moral actions are not the subjects of decree, consequently it is not "tantamount, in his case, to not believing at all" in foreknowledge.

One more illustration. A man believes in the Lord Jesus Christ as his Saviour. He believes that his obedience unto death is the adequate foundation of the sinner's hope and eternal salvation. Yet he believes that in his highest nature as the divine Son of God, the Saviour never died or suffered at all. Now, I affirm that he holds a principle which, in its nature, is subversive of what he believes; a principle which theoretically renders the means of atonement or reconciliation totally inadequate. Far be it, however, that I should affirm that this imperfection of his faith "is tantamount to his not believing" in the Saviour "at all." He has faith in the Son of God which works by love and overcomes the world.

We know that there are Christians who believe in "The Immortality of the Soul," whose minds and daily practice are influenced by holiness and the love of God and man, "by the truths they profess to believe." It is not true that by all, or even by much erroneous belief, men "place themselves in a state of alienation from the truth of God, by which they prevent themselves from being benefited by the truths they profess to believe." They lose the present enjoyment and holy influence of the truths they do not believe; they may, however, believe important truths, and be benefited by their sacred power and influence, in respect to their present holiness and comfort, and eternal salvation.

HENRY GREW.

DR. THOMAS' REPLY TO BR. GREW.

The following points in Mr. Grew's strictures, seem to demand a little attention. In the preceding critique he says:—

1. That, in the article alluded to, Dr. Thomas consigns millions of true penitent believers on the Son of God, and followers of the Lamb, to the lake of fire, which is the second death.

2. That he confounds the importance of the existence of a fact with the importance of a correct belief in the fact.

3. That he confounds the belief of an error with the belief of every other error with which that error is logically connected, or with the denial of every truth of which that error is "logically destructive."

4. That the fact of Jesus being what he naturally is, and of his dying and rising again from the dead, are essential to the salvation of men; but a correct belief in these facts is not essential.

5. That Paul does not say, that men are in their sins, if they maintain that there is no resurrection from the dead.

6. That we have no authority to make the belief of any particular truth essential to salvation, which the word of the Lord does not plainly declare to be so.

7. That it is not true, i. e., Mr. Grew is of opinion that it is not true, that, if a man believes all the truths of the Gospel, but this one truth of the resurrection of the bodies of the saints, that his unbelief in respect of this truth, renders other truths "vain, or of no practical use."

8. That the belief that the body is the mere present tenement of an immortal soul, is erroneous; this principle, therefore, theoretically overturns the fact of the resurrection of Christ, as far as the resurrection of their body is concerned. Such are "weak in the faith."

9. That God will not condemn the "weak in the faith," because he has commanded the church to receive them.

10. That error in the human mind is often modified, and, in various degrees, neutralized by truth.

11. That, to say that the Divine Son of God never died or suffered at all, is to hold a principle which theoretically renders the means of atonement or reconciliation totally inadequate; yet, Mr. Grew will not affirm that such a man's faith is vain.

The foregoing items seem to constitute the "pith and marrow" of our venerable friend's strictures. I shall now proceed to remark briefly upon them, one after the other, numbering my paragraphs according to the numbering of the points.

1. It does not necessarily follow, that if a man be not saved, he is therefore consigned to the lake of fire, which is the second death. It is written, "Whosoever speaketh against the Holy Spirit; it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world (aion, age or dispensation) nor in that to come."—Matt. xii. 32. Does not this imply that there are some offences, whether of omission or commission, that will be forgiven in the Future Age? Without discussing this point, doth not the reader see the probability of men rising from the dead, who, though not saved in the sense of possessing the Kingdom, may yet not be consigned to the flames of the second death. We do not affirm that it will be thus; we state the idea hypothetically, by way of illustration.

Is there no alternative to the resurrected between possessing the Kingdom and being destroyed in the lake of fire? The Scriptures teach the non-resurrection of "millions." The Scriptures do not teach that the destiny of mortal men is "either to be saved or buried in fire; these are not necessary alternatives. The Scriptures speak of "times of ignorance," and of God "winking at" the things done by men in such times; but they do not therefore teach that ignorant men are "blessed" and shall "inherit the Kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world." Though men boast in the present times as "the glorious and enlightened nineteenth century," the age is less enlightened in the gospel than was the age of the apostles. These are emphatically times of gospel ignorance; and whether God will "wink at" them as he did at the ignorant doings of the old Pagan world, I am not prepared to say; be this as it may, with the Scriptures in hand, I see no ground to believe that such "true penitent believers" as our venerable friend indicates, will ever possess the Kingdom, unless they believe the gospel concerning it; nor does it necessarily follow that they will be consigned to the lake of fire.

2. We do not make the confusion expressed in No. 2; it is our worthy friend, who doth not perceive the essentiality of a "correct belief" of important facts, to the obtaining of the Kingdom of God. Salvation is not predicated on the belief of mere past facts. We invite Mr. Grew's attention to this, that a man may believe all important historical facts concerning Jesus, but he cannot be saved, in any sense, unless he also believe the prophetic truths concerning the Kingdom of God. One of these truths is, that the saints shall arise bodily to "possess the Kingdom." This will come to pass whether we believe it or not. But if we deny it, or hold to that which subverts it, we theoretically overthrow the doctrine of the Kingdom, and therefore cut ourselves off from salvation in that Kingdom; for we are saved by the mindful belief of that doctrine, as well as, or in connection with—inseparable connection with—belief of the important facts alluded to. A correct belief of an important fact, is not only to believe that the thing happened, but also the meaning, doctrine, or truth, affirmed in connexion with it. That Jesus rose, is a fact; that he rose for the justification of believers in the Gospel of the Kingdom, which Gospel teaches the bodily resurrection of the dead saints, is the true doctrine of that fact; to believe the fact, and to be ignorant or infidel of its doctrine, is to have no part in that resurrection, into the hope of which the enlightened believer is immersed, and of which the Son of God is the "First Fruits."

3. I do not perpetrate the confusion indicated in No. 3. One error is as fatal to a man's salvation as a multitude of errors believed; and the belief of a multitude of truths is impotent to save, if the vital truth of the whole be omitted, or denied, or if an error be held which demolishes them. "A little leaven leavens the whole lump;" therefore, beware of the leaven of the Scribes and Pharisees, who say that "the soul is immortal and goes to glory at death;" for if it is so, there is no "resurrection unto life," or Kingdom of God to come. The doctrine is destroyed, and the gospel hope is gone.

4. There is a very fatal and universal error expressed in item 4. All "Christendom" supposes that belief in the "Messenger" is the matter of faith alone essential to salvation. Hence, "every one believes" that Jesus is the Son of God; that he died for sins and rose again. Yes, they believe after a fashion. Some piously believe; while multitudes believe in Jesus, as Turks believe in Mohammed—because every one believes in him in Turkey. But while they cry "Lord, Lord," how few believe his doctrine or obey his voice! Many do not believe his Message. He says he was sent to preach the Gospel of the Kingdom of God. Belief in God's Messenger alone will not save a man, no matter how pious he may be. We must believe in his Messenger and in the Message he has sent by him, if we would be saved. The Gospel of the Kingdom, spoken of in Daniel, and the other prophets, is the Message. "He that believes the Gospel and is baptized shall be saved." The Scripture does not say, he that believes "the Son of God is what he really is in respect to his nature, and of his doing what he really has done," and is baptized, shall be saved; it does not state this as the matter of faith, but the doctrine of the Kingdom and the things pertaining to the Messenger. Hence, when the Samaritans believed Philip preaching the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of the Lord Jesus, they were baptized—Acts viii. 12. Baptism, or immersion, is of no value, unless the subject believe these "things," and be brought to repentance by the belief of them. "We are renewed by knowledge," says Paul; ignorance is death. But alas! with Paul we may exclaim, "Who has believed the report?" Isaiah foresaw how few would believe the Report or Message of the Messenger of the Covenant when he should appear; and because of their unbelief in this report, Paul says a branch of Israel's olive was about to be cut off; and that, for the same cause, the Gentiles would be separated at the coming of the Lord. Every one believes in Jesus, but scarcely one believes in the Gospel of the Kingdom. This may be termed the sign that the Lord is at hand, and that the times of the Gentiles are about to close. We differ, therefore, from Mr. Grew, and maintain that a correct belief of doctrine and facts, with repentance, immersion, and holiness, are indivisibly essential to salvation in the Kingdom of God.

5. But Paul says, that the Corinthians were in their sins if they did not keep in memory a certain word he preached to them, which is the same thing. He preached the resurrection of the dead saints as a part of the word. Hymeneus taught that there was no future resurrection of the dead. Some believed it; of whom Paul says, "their faith was overthrown." "By grace," says he, "are ye saved through faith"—but if a man's faith is overthrown or shipwrecked, how can he be saved by grace through faith? A shipwrecked faith can no more save a man from death, than a shipwrecked vessel its crew from the briny deep. "We walk by faith,"—we must believe the whole truth, or we shall walk over a precipice and be dashed to atoms.

6. Granted; but the word of the Lord declares, that he that believes not the Gospel shall be damned. This Gospel is made up of "particular truths," and no one has any authority to say, that any one of them may be dispensed with. It is a "particular truth" of the Gospel, that "some who sleep in the dust of the earth shall wake to everlasting life;" it is a "particular truth" of the Gospel, that these persons "shall take the Kingdom and possess it for ever, even for ever and ever;" it is a "particular truth," that when they possess this Kingdom they "shall reign on the earth" as kings and priests; it is a "particular truth," that when this Kingdom exists, they shall have "power over the nations and rule them;" it is a "particular truth" of the Gospel, that they shall rule them with Jesus for 1000 years;—these are all a few particular truths, not facts, of the Gospel, which are demolished and scattered to the four winds by the principle, or error, that the saints are not bodily raised, the direct and inevitable conclusion resulting from the absurd dogma of inherent immortal-soulism, &c. Which of these particular truths have we authority to dispense with as unnecessary to salvation? If we dispense with one, why not with all? which the world has done in fact, and yet maintains that a man may be saved! But the word of the Lord plainly declares against it.

7. Our previous remarks show, that to believe all truths but the truth of the resurrection, is not to believe "The Truth." Strike out the resurrection from "the truth," and other truths become the mere baseless fabric of a vision; or send "the soul" to glory at death, and the truth of God is rendered of none effect by the tradition.

8. This item admits the doctrine we contend for, but apologizes for the believer on account of his weakness.

9. True; God will receive the "weak in the faith," but not the "weak in faith." It is by faith that men are able to overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil. A weak faith cannot accomplish this: it requires a strong faith to do it. A man who could not conscientiously eat meat offered to idols, though an idol was nothing, was weak in the faith, but his faith was so strong in one only living and true God, that he could have nothing to do with idols in any form without feeling defiled; and on the other hand, also, his faith was so strong in the gospel of the kingdom, &c., that he would have gone to the stake rather than have surrendered an iota of that truth, or have apologized for faithlessness in it. No where in the Word, has the church been "commanded to receive" men who are "weak in faith;" but, on the contrary, to "rebuke them sharply that they may be sound in the faith." Weak faith is the plague of this generation. The reception of such has swamped "the church," which has become faithless, disobedient, and ready to fall in the wilderness, like Israel of old. "Because of unbelief they shall not enter into my rest."

10. True. Now look on the other side:—truth in the human mind is often modified, and in various degrees neutralized by error, as in the case before us.

11. The Apostle John forbid the true believer to wish such a person God speed, or to show him hospitality; yet, so charitable is our venerable friend, that he will not venture to "affirm that such a man's faith is vain!"

In relation to faithlessness in one particular truth neutralizing faith in all other truths, I would cite the following example, which is indeed intimately connected with the resurrection of the saints. Paul says, "unto them that look for Him shall Christ appear the second time without a sin-offering unto salvation." After this affirmative declaration, is it necessary for the Apostle to say negatively, that He will not come and save those who do not look for his coming, before we can venture to affirm that to believe in and look for the coming of the Lord is necessary to salvation? When a thing is affirmed, the negative is implied; but weak faith is afraid to make the implication. A man may believe all about the history of Jesus, but if he believes not in the resurrection of the dead saints, or in the coming of the Lord to salvation, "posterous?" as it may seem to our venerable friend, on the faith of the apostle's doctrine, we hesitate not to proclaim upon the house-tops, that "he cannot enter the Kingdom of God."

EDITOR OF THE HERALD OF THE FUTURE AGE.
Richmond, Va., Jan. 15th, 1848.

PROPHETIC PERIODS.—NO. V.

THE SEVEN AND SIXTY-TWO WEEKS.

Having shown that the seventy weeks bring us down to the time when Jerusalem was "compassed about with armies, when the "transgression" of Daniel's people was to be no longer "restrained," and the iniquity of that people was "filled up," we now proceed to give our opinion of the sixty-two and seven weeks of Dan. 9. We have said in a previous number that we consider this a distinct period from the 70 weeks, and not a subdivision of it. If our view of the 70 weeks is correct, it is clear the lesser period must be another, and given for another purpose, viz: To give the time of the first advent of "Messiah." We freely admit, at the outset, that there are difficulties on this point; nor do we promise to make this topic as clear as that of the 70 weeks.

After Gabriel had given Daniel the "70 weeks upon thy people and thy holy city, to restrain transgression," [margin] &c., referring to events that would come within that period, he proceeds to give him another period for the coming of Messiah. Our translation reads "Know therefore," &c.: some students of Scripture translate the original word "also." Thus the Duke of Manchester, on the "Times of Daniel," reads the verse—"Also thou shalt know and understand from the going forth of the word to cause to return and to build Jerusalem, until Messiah the Prince [are] seven weeks, and sixty-two weeks." He remarks—"Our translators seem to have been influenced in the rendering of the verse by what they supposed must be the connexion and meaning, and they turned a mere copulative into an illative, and the future into an imperative." That is, they made an adverb, which is a mere connecting link in the discourse, to be an inference from that previously spoken. Whereas, Gabriel having given the period allotted to the further trial of Daniel's people and his holy city, next calls his attention to another measure of time which was to bring to pass an event that was to precede the final giving up of Jerusalem, the holy city, to be desolated, and trodden under foot of the Gentiles; and he says—"Know also," or likewise, &c.: in addition to what has been told you, understand how long it will be "to Messiah."

Mr. Greswell in his Dissertations, vol. 4, page 329, speaking of this prophecy, Dan. 9: 24, 25, says—"Two classes of events, which are neither the same in themselves, nor in their beginnings and their endings respectively, are connected together in the scope of its disclosures * * * to one of these classes we may give the name of the facts of the Christian ministry; and to the other that of the facts of the Jewish war."

If then the 62 and 7 weeks are a distinct period from the 70, where did they begin? If the view we have taken in a previous number is correct, viz. that the decree of Cyrus [Coresch] is the true decree for restoring Daniel's people, and to build Jerusalem—and if we have the true date of the 70 weeks, i. e. B. C. 423, or the second year of Darius Nohus, at which time the 70 years desolation of Jerusalem ended, (see Dan. 9: 2, and Zech. 1: 7, 12, 16,) then the decree to restore (thy people) and to build Jerusalem, could not have been more than eleven years previous, or the year B. C. 434. We have in this view taken the ground that the captivity in Babylon commenced in the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar; (see 2 Kings, 24: 12.) If, however, as some suppose, the captivity commenced in the first year of Nebuchadnezzar, (compare Dan. 1: 1, 2, with Jer. 25: 1,) then the 70 year captivity would terminate about twenty years prior to 423, or about 443-4 before Christ. If this last period be taken as the true date of the decree of Coresch, or the Scripture Cyrus, then the "7 weeks" counted as allotted to the completion of the Temple, or "46 years," (see John 2: 20,) which, though not exactly 7 prophetic weeks, yet, may be considered under the general term of 7 weeks, being 6 full weeks and 4 years into the 7th, then the 7 weeks would end about 398 B. C. Then add 62 weeks, or 434 years to that, and we have A. D. 36. If this view be correct the crucifixion could not have occurred as early as is generally supposed: but the exact year of our Lord's birth has never yet been fixed with certainty; neither has the year of his crucifixion. Different writers divide on the time of the first advent from seven years or more before the common, or vulgar era, to eleven years after. With this uncertainty about the birth of our Lord, it would not be strange if the crucifixion should also be found to be at a later period than has generally been supposed.

If however we should take another view of the subject, we might possibly be extricated from some of these difficulties, though we might encounter others perhaps equally as great. If we were to suppose the 62 weeks are the whole period given from the decree to restore, and to build Jerusalem "to Messiah;" and that the 7 weeks are only the first part of the 62, mentioned with special reference to the work to be accomplished in the first part of the 62, then we should find the 62 weeks, or 434 years, covering the entire period "to Messiah." In that case again, making the termination of the captivity eleven years, (as is evidently most in accordance with Scripture) before the end of the 70 years "desolations of Jerusalem," we should be brought back, for the decree of Coresch to B. C. 434, making just 62 weeks to the birth of Messiah, according to the vulgar era. Why should we not understand the language of Gabriel—"to Messiah the Prince," to mean to his birth, or first advent? Certainly he was proclaimed the Messiah at that time. It was revealed to old Simeon, "by the Holy Spirit, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ"—Messiah. When the old man took the child Jesus in his arms, he blessed God and declared that the promise had been fulfilled to him. When Jesus was born "the angel of the Lord" proclaimed him as the Messiah in these remarkable words, Lk. 2: 11, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ (Messiah) the Lord."

Surely here is evidence strong as the "Holy Spirit" that was upon Simeon, and "the angel of the Lord," that came to the Shepherds, could make it, that "Messiah" had come; and, hence, that the specified time, given by Gabriel to Daniel, "to Messiah the Prince," was now accomplished. The expression, in Dan. 9th, "after three score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off," does not define the exact period of that event; it may as well be 30 years after, as three years and a half after, as to any impropriety in the language.

The only difficulty in our mind to this last view of the 62 weeks is, that the language, in Dan. 9: 25, seems to indicate that the 7 weeks and the 62 are a period of 69 weeks: if this is really so, then this last view cannot be correct. But the expression "after three score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off" seems also to indicate, that the 62 weeks are the whole period given to bring us "to Messiah." And may it not be possible that the 7 weeks are the first part of the 62, specially noted, because of the work to be done in that period? If this is the case, then the decree of Coresch, B. C. 434, brings us, in 62 prophetic weeks, 434 years, exactly "to Messiah's" birth, when he was proclaimed the promised Messiah, as we have already seen. While we are satisfied that the decree of Coresch, the true Cyrus of the Scriptures, is "the commandment" spoken of by Gabriel, Dan. 9th, we are not satisfied whether that decree was issued B. C. about 444 or 434: one of those points, with present light, we believe is the true date.

We are not entirely alone in the suggestion that the 7 and 62 weeks commence at the same date. The great Joseph Mede, says:—"If we must have some limited time of forty-nine years, (7 weeks) I would date it from the same epoch as the sixty-two weeks, and make the times concurrent and not consecutive." He saw at least the possibility that these two periods might begin together.

ARE THE WICKED IMMORTAL?

"The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Bible.

THE CAUSE is onward, and the truth is spreading. We have received more than three hundred new subscribers since the December number was issued. We give a few extracts of letters, in this number, to let our friends see the feeling there is abroad in reference to the Examiner and its objects. Our friends will excuse us "this once," for publishing these tokens of their satisfaction, and others will do the same for not publishing all their expressions of favour. Since our last, the friends in Millville, N. J., have established a meeting where they can worship the living God through His Son, without being subjected to sectarian lordships. In that place, eight months ago, we believe, there was not an individual that sympathized with our views on the sleep of the dead and the destruction of the wicked. Now there are two who were Methodist preachers, at that time, and many more, who being crowded out of the churches for their avowal of these truths, that meet together "in their own hired house," and utter the convictions of their own minds untrammelled. The commencement of this work was a single copy of the "Six Sermons." Within the past two months, one hundred copies of those Sermons have been scattered, by the brethren in Millville, in that part of the State; and they have subscribed freely for the Examiner. Let all the friends, in every place, see that they do not enjoy the light alone. Make one more effort, and let that be a continual one, to help us on in the great work of vindicating God's truth and His blessed name from the reproach which men have heaped upon them in their hot zeal for the traditions of the Pagans, which appeared to them like jewels; and for the defence of which, they have seemed to think, like Jonah, they "do well to be angry." Most sincerely do we pity such, and earnestly desire that they may yet come to the truth, and be made "free" by it.

BE COURTEOUS.—We are sorry the Bible Advocate should be so excited with Dr. Thomas for a simple illustration which he used in reply to Br. Bell in the last Examiner. We hope that paper will keep cool for the time to come. We will only say, it has amazingly perverted both the Doctor's words and his meaning, and built upon that perversion a tirade of abuse ill becoming one who thinks "the Judge standeth at the door." We would like to know where the man is that has no error in his theory? Let him cast the first stone at his brother who differs from him. We certainly differ from Dr. Thomas in several things: and we equally differ with the Advocate. If we believed to constitute a man a real Christian, he must be perfect in knowledge and judgment, we should never hope to find a Christian on earth, till the next age shall come. If men are sincerely inquiring after truth, and using the best light they have, and do fall into some error, they are no more blame-worthy than they would be for having a fever, or breaking their bones, or being destitute of daily food. We might just as well fall into a passion with our fellow-men for suffering with hunger, being sick, or breaking their bones, as to get out of humor with them for their errors in doctrine, if they manifest the spirit of Christ in their lives, and are using their best endeavours to inform themselves as to what is truth. To be sick, or to be in error, are both misfortunes, and both cause loss and pain to a greater or less extent. The subject of these calamities is to be pitied not abused. We would think him a tiger that would fall upon a man with a broken bone and abuse him. Surely error is worse to the individual than broken bones; and we all have more or less; let us never forget that. Least of all has the Advocate occasion to complain of Dr. Thomas' "absurdities" while it maintains that the "millennium is past," and that it covered the darkest ages of Papacy!!

The Advocate, and some others who get "impatient," "dream" dreams, and "interpret" them, in our zeal for "the cause," may possibly be benefited by the following story:

"When Bulstrode Whitelocke was embarking as Cromwell's envoy to Sweden, in 1653, he was much disturbed in mind as he rested in Harwich on the preceding night, which was very stormy, while he reflected on the distracted state of the nation. It happened that a confidential servant slept in an adjacent bed, who, finding that his master could not sleep at length said, 'Pray, Sir, will you give me leave to ask you a question?' 'Certainly.' 'Pray, Sir, don't you think that God governed the world very well before you came into it?' 'Undoubtedly.' 'And pray, Sir, don't you think he will govern it quite as well when you are gone out of it?' 'Certainly.' 'Then, Sir, pray excuse me, but don't you think you may trust him to govern it quite as well as long as you live?' To this question Whitelocke had nothing to reply; but turning himself about, soon fell fast asleep till he was summoned to embark."

TENDENCIES OF IMMORTAL SOULISM.

In the "Mysteries of Romanism," exhibiting the "Demoralizing Influences of Popery," we find a Chapter on "The Tendencies of Romish Literature," one paragraph of which is the following:—

"Among the late perverts to Rome of high degree, we find chronicled the name of Lady Georgiana Fullerton, sister to Lord Grenville, and authoress of 'Ellen Middleton.' After reading this exciting novel, and observing the peculiar cast of thought and train of remark when adverting to religious exercises and duties, we were not surprised to learn that our authoress had become a full convert to superstition, and at last entered the mystical precincts of Rome. When we see Alice bowing in her closet before a picture of our Saviour, and then holding up the crucifix before the eyes of her dying husband; when we see what sacredness, awe, and efficacy, are attributed to the act of confession to a priest; when we hear Mrs. Tracy, heretofore the deadly enemy of Ellen Middleton, kneeling at her bed side, in hardly articulate tones saying to her, 'Pray for me when you are in heaven;' finally, when we hear Ellen's speech to her husband, in which she says: 'There is a blessed communion in which we both believe, between those who rest in heaven, and those who struggle on earth; you will pray for me when I am gone; and I will pray for you where I go:' who can doubt that the writer's mind was already enslaved to Romanism?"

And cannot this Protestant Editor, "Rev. C. Sperry," see, and "who can doubt, that the" immortal soul theory was what led Lady Fullerton straight down the gulph to Romanism; where thousands and tens of thousands more have gone and are going? Had Lady Fullerton fully believed the bible truth, "the dead praise not the Lord"—"the dead know not anything," does the "Rev. Editor," himself, believe she would have found an open door into "Romanism?" She honestly followed out the immortal soul theory. Its legitimate landing place is Romanism or Restorationism. Lady Fullerton landed in the former, and Bishop Newton in the latter. Will Mr. Sperry, or any one else, show us, if they can, the impropriety of asking a dying saint to "pray for" us when they "get to heaven"—or, for that dying saint to say "I will pray for you where I go," on the supposition that the dead do know "more than all the world," and are alive in the presence of God? Are they less holy there than while here? Are they less interested for friends left behind when they get to heaven than while they were with them on earth? Have they less access to God there than here? If it is answered—"Christ is the intercessor there"—We answer—He is no more the intercessor after saints die than before; and we are commanded to pray for one another; and we know of no Protestant that hesitates to ask a Christian to pray for him. Paul himself said—"Brethren, pray for me." It may be said—"True; we should pray for each other while here." We reply—Paul said, "I will that men pray everywhere." It may be said again—"Paul did not mean when they were dead." He said, "Everywhere;" and from that obligation it is for our opponents to show they are released by death, unless they are unconscious, and therefore incapable of the act. But the objector may say, "We have no Scripture example of living saints asking dying ones to pray for them when they get to heaven." We answer—"Thou hast said truly;" and the reason is obvious—the Bible saints understood that there is no knowledge in sheol, the invisible state, where their dying friends were going; their hope, their one and only hope was in the resurrection; the pagan fable had not obtained among them, that the soul is immortal: they understood their friends were "silent in the grave." But when the heathen superstition of "disembodied spirits"—"the soul immortal"—"the dead know more than all the world," stole into the church, then her communicants, who embraced this "vain philosophy," were fully prepared to slide into praying to saints—from that to a purgatory—and then into "Romanism" fully developed, or the "man of sin" large as life. No wonder Protestants have made so poor a stand against Romanism. Ever since Luther, by the persuasion of his brother Reformers, was tempted, and fell by the temptation, and gave up, or consented to hide his light on the subject of the non-immortality of the soul, Romanism has marched onward and "prevailed," and will prevail till the doctrine of man's natural, or inherent immortality is once more firmly placed where Luther placed it at the commencement of the reformation, among the "Roman dunghill decretals." It has no higher authority. The council of Lateran, under Pope Leo X. passed the following "Canon":—

"Some have dared to assert concerning the nature of the reasonable soul, that it is mortal; we with the approbation of the sacred council, do condemn and reprobate all such, seeing, according to the canon of Pope Clement the Fifth, that the soul is immortal: and we strictly inhibit all from dogmatizing otherwise: and we decree, that all who adhere to the like erroneous assertions, shall be shunned and punished as heretics."—Caranza, page 412—1681.

This canon shows that the doctrine of an "immortal soul," that lives when the man is dead, was supported in those days, as it generally has been since, by the authority of Creeds, rather than by the truth of God. Bishop Tillston says, in his Sermon, Vol. 2, printed 1774, "The immortality of the soul is rather supposed, or taken for granted, than expressly revealed in the Bible."

Do we not well say then—The tendencies of the immortal soul theory, is to lead men to reverence the creeds of men more than the Bible—their declaration of sentiments—their priestly domination, and hence directly forward into Romanism? The author of the work, "Mysteries of Romanism," tells us, p. 23:

"A court-lady, daughter of the Earl of Devonshire, having embraced the catholic religion, (in the reign of Charles I.) was asked by Laud the reason of her conversion. 'It is chiefly,' said she, 'because I hate to travel in a crowd.' Being desired to explain her meaning, she replied: 'I perceive your grace, (Laud) and many others are making haste to Rome, and therefore, in order to prevent being crowded, I have gone before you.'"

Multitudes of Protestants, in England and elsewhere, have gone to the Romish religion, because the Reformers did not maintain the principle of Luther when he first saw clearly the light, that the doctrine of an inherent immortal soul was only a "Roman dunghill decretal:" and multitudes more, in this country, will land there, if this age continues much longer, some of whom make great displays of zeal against her at present. The reason is, they hold substantially with Rome in her pagan fable of the consciousness of dead men.

WOULD YOU INHERIT THE KINGDOM?

Math. 6: 33. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

To understand this text we must view it with its connection. Our Lord had assured his followers "No man can serve two masters—Ye cannot serve God and mammon:" or, ye cannot serve God and a mind bent on the things of this world—such as riches, &c. "Therefore, I say unto you, take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for the body what ye shall put on." This verse and the following have been amazingly perverted by some minds, by not considering that it is common in Scripture to speak of a thing of less importance than another as if it were of no importance. Many examples of this may be given. Our Saviour said, Luke 14: 26, "If a man hate not his wife—and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." How are we to understand such an expression? By no means in an absolute sense. The apostles are the best commentators on the meaning of our Lord's words that we can have. Do they countenance the absolute sense of these words? See Eph. 5: 25, 28, "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it." "So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife loveth himself." And in the 29th verse the apostle says,—"No man ever yet hated his own flesh," or himself—his "life." The thing, in an absolute sense, is impossible. Again, our Lord, John 6: 27, says, "Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life." This is a text of the same character as the other; not to be explained so as to contradict inspired expositions of man's duty as to the things of this life. When man was placed in Eden, and in innocency, he was placed there "to dress and to keep it." Paul to Timothy, 1 Tim. 5: 8, says—"But if any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." And again, 2 Thes. 3: 10—12, he says—"For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat. For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busy-bodies. Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread."

With such a commentary on our Lord's words, we cannot be in doubt as to their meaning; and as we before said, he spoke in accordance with the custom of those days, in which, things of less value when placed by the side of those immensely more valuable are spoken of as of no value—to be hated—not to be regarded; that is, comparatively speaking. So the words "take no thought," &c., we are not to understand in an absolute sense. Paul did not so understand them, when a prisoner at Rome; and at a time, too, when he declares "I have finished my course—I am ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand." In the same chapter, immediately after, he tells Timothy—"The cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comest, bring with thee, and the books, but especially the parchments." Pray, Paul are you not taking "thought what you shall put on"? Why think about that "cloak," when you are just going "to be offered"? Paul cannot help thinking he shall want that cloak to keep him warm while here. He had learned, it is true, in whatsoever state he was to be content, but not so content as not to use lawful means to make his condition more comfortable when in his power. So when our Lord says, take no thought, he only prohibits such thought as is implied in serving mammon—such thought as rules and absorbs the mind to the exclusion of the service of God, the superior and most important of all thoughts and service; or such thought as implies distrust of God's fatherly care over us while we make his service the great, grand and absorbing business of life. We may paraphrase the verse and connexion thus: "You cannot have a mind devoted to God, and at the same time bent upon and absorbed by the riches of this world; therefore I say unto you, be not anxiously careful for your life about food and raiment, lest you serve mammon, and make a treasure laid up on earth your portion, and thus depart from God. To guard you against this anxious care consider the fowls of the air, though they lay up no stores, yet your heavenly Father feedeth them," &c. "Therefore be not anxiously careful, saying—What shall we eat? or What shall we drink? or Wherewithal shall we be clothed, (for the Gentiles, who know not God, make these things the all absorbing objects of their pursuit) and your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of these things; therefore, seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, or that righteousness which he requires, and all these things shall be added unto you, while diligent in business, but without distracting thoughts; take therefore no distracting thoughts about the future: the future, if it comes, will bring its own cares, but you should not anticipate them, and burden your minds by adding them to those of the present time; sufficient unto the day is the evil it brings." Such, we believe, is the true sense and meaning of our Lord's discourse. And he calls our minds to the immense value of an inheritance in the kingdom of God, in comparison of which, food, raiment, and life itself, are of no value.

God has a kingdom to be established. It is called "the kingdom of God;" and this by way of distinction from all the kingdoms that have gone before it. The kingdoms, or reigning governments of this world are emblematically set forth as dreadful beasts; savage, oppressive, warlike; and doomed to destruction: but another is to succeed them entirely dissimilar; mild, equitable, peaceable, and everlasting. We are required to pray—"Thy kingdom come." We are bound to pray understandingly: not to do so is to mock God. How can we pray understandingly for that of which we are in ignorance? How can such a prayer be sincerely offered? If we know not what it is we are praying for, how can we desire it? If there is no desire for that we pray for, our prayer is hypocrisy. Paul tells us, 1 Cor. 14: 15, "I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also." We may safely say—All prayer must be thus offered if acceptable to God. If so, then it is essential that we have knowledge in regard to the location and nature of the kingdom of God, else we do not pray with the understanding. These remarks are equally applicable in view of the command to seek first the kingdom; or, make it the first object of our attention. How can we seek it at all, if we are ignorant of its nature and location? How can the injunction have any weight with us, if we know not what it is we are to seek, or where it is to be found? It is vastly more important than most professed Christians suppose that we have clear and distinct ideas about this kingdom, if we would not pray about it hypocritically, and seek for it as one that beareth the air. Let us then inform ourselves on these matters.

1. Its Location: The prayer our Saviour taught us states distinctly where we are to expect the kingdom of God to be established. "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth," &c. It is on earth we are to pray for this kingdom to be established, or set up. Daniel, also saw in vision, chap. 7, "one like the Son of man" have "given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom;" and "all people, nations, and languages, should serve him." And the explanation of that vision shows that "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven" is that to be possessed by the saints, including Christ, the first and chief of the saints, or holy ones. Our Saviour also declares—"The meek shall inherit the earth;" thus settling the point, that the kingdom of God is to be on earth.

2. Its Nature: Its King is immortal—he can die no more; "death hath no more dominion over him." He will reign personally and visibly. "This same Jesus, that is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1: 11, "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven," &c. 1 Thes. 4: 16. Also Jer. 23: 5, "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth." These texts are a sample of many that go to show that the King is personally and visibly to reign, and to do so "on earth." The saints, those "that are Christ's at his coming" to establish his kingdom or set it up, whether they are asleep or awake, i. e. dead or alive, "will sit down with Christ on his throne," or become Rulers with him, as heirs through him, in the kingdom. It is common with the men of the present age, after political campaigns, to promote their friends, who have laboured, suffered, and expended funds in their cause; and they do it by bestowing profitable and honourable offices upon them. The King of kings, when he takes the kingdom, will, according to his covenant engagement, bestow a crown upon every one, who has faithfully adhered to his cause, while his enemies have had the kingdoms of the world in their possession. That will be the reward of immortality, or to have their vile bodies changed and fashioned like their King's most glorious body; and, with him, to be established as Rulers in the Everlasting Kingdom. This kingdom will be the same throughout the endless succession of ages; but it will undergo various modifications, each age rising higher in glory than the preceding. The next, or coming age, which commences this kingdom on earth, will be a mixture: that is, The rulers of that age, or thousand years, called the millennium, will all be immortal: the subjects, or those "left" from the overwhelming judgments upon the earth, with which that age will be ushered in, will be liable to corruption with their posterity who will be born during that age: and though the nations will be subjected to Christ and his "Joint Heirs," during the thousand years, or whatever the length of that age may be, so that no national demonstration of hostility to the government of Christ will be made, yet when that age closes a mighty combined effort will be made to overthrow His Government, but it will be signally and totally defeated; and, probably will be the last demonstration of hostility ever made to Christ's reign. Having now briefly noticed the nature of the Kingdom of God, we proceed to some remarks on the injunction to "seek first" this kingdom, and "His righteousness." The term "first," often signifies, "chief." If so in the text before us, then we are commanded to make this object the principal concern of our life; it is to stand out in our minds as the great business for which we now live: it is to have a prominence in our affections and actions, that no other is entitled to. But, how can this be the case so long as there is no definite idea in our minds as to the nature and location of this kingdom? Without this, how can the mind be made to realize its value, so as to give it that attention for which the demand is made? How can we obtain the knowledge necessary to give such importance to the subject as shall lead us to obedience to the command to make that kingdom the first, or chief object of our pursuit? To secure this end, must there not be somewhere a description of the Kingdom of God? Where can we find that description if not in the Bible? It certainly is not contained in the fancies of men, nor the creeds they have invented. If it is described in the Bible, how shall we learn what it is unless we "Search the Scriptures?" How then can any man be said to be seeking that kingdom who neglects this examination, and makes it not the most anxious study of his life? It is not reveries, or a few flights of fancy, that makes a man an understanding seeker of the kingdom of God. We must serve God in truth, as well as in spirit, or we "beat the air." Let us, then, most earnestly and prayerfully seek this kingdom by a careful study of the words of God, as spoken to us by the Holy Spirit through holy men of old.

To be Heirs of the Kingdom of God we must not only seek the kingdom but "His righteousness;" that is—The righteousness which God requires. Not some fancied, undescribable, and undefinable operation unknown except to a diseased imagination, but that holiness, or purity of mind and life, taught by Patriarchs and Prophets, but especially brought to view in the teachings of him who "spoke as never man spake;" and who exemplified it in his life, so that he became the living embodiment of all he taught; and left us in no doubt as to what constitutes holiness, or what that righteousness is which God requires to prepare us to be "joint heirs with Christ" in the Kingdom of God. It is "the righteousness of faith," or, that righteousness which is produced by a believing reception of the Son of God, and a constant contemplation of his holy life, conversation, and tempers; which by "beholding we are changed into the same image, from glory to glory," or honour, "even as by the Spirit of the Lord;" which Spirit works by the truth of God, that being its "sword," and the instrument of sanctification—"Sanctify them through thy truth—thy word is truth." Christ as we have said, was the living embodiment of the truths he taught, and left us an "example" that we should "walk even as he walked:" 1 John 2: 6, and 1 Peter 2: 21. Let us then, carefully look at him—his humility—his patience—his forgiving disposition—his resignation—his love of enemies—his love to God—his hatred of sin—especially, his spirit and practice of obedience; so that he could say "I delight to do thy will, O God." Here is a lesson for us to learn. Whoever lays it to mind, and believes it essential that he should learn this lesson, in order to an inheritance in the Kingdom of God, will see the propriety and importance of making it his "first" and principal, or chief object. It is not learned in a day; though we may form the resolution at once to commence the work, and make a beginning; but we shall find that the longest life is none too long to accomplish a work of such magnitude and importance. The doctrine and commandments of men have set up a lower standard, even that of fallible men, whose memoirs are sought and read—the standard of all their attainments. Whatever value there may be in such memoirs, they are worthless, if not pernicious, when compared with that standard given us by the Son of God.

Let us then, set the Lord Jesus before our minds for constant contemplation. If we find ourselves coming short let us not faint nor be discouraged, but renew our effort depending upon the aid of that Spirit which our Lord promised before he went away, and which he assured his followers our heavenly Father is more ready to give to them that ask him than we are to give good gifts to our children. Our Lord and Master watches over us, not to find occasion against us; but, to "help our infirmities." Thus, if we find we come short, we are to increase our "diligence" that we may grow up into the likeness of Christ, even "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ;" and thus "grow up into him in all things, who is the head:" Eph. 4: 13—15.

The Kingdom of God lies before us: we are called to give it our highest attention and efforts. Consider its value—its glory—its high privileges—its exalted honours—its endless durability. Consider, it was that which filled the Saviour's heart—"the joy set before him"—the Kingdom of God, where he would sit with his followers on the throne of his glory. It was that which occupied the minds of Patriarchs—Prophets—Apostles, and all the faithful martyrs. Shall we then neglect it? Shall we not heed the command of our Lord, who is soon to return to earth, and establish this kingdom? Where are our sympathies? Are they with the "kingdoms of this world," or, with the "Kingdom of our God and his Christ?" And let us remember—"The unrighteous shall not inherit the Kingdom of God."

BISHOP NEWTON—ETERNAL TORMENTS.

The following extracts are from the Sixth Vol. of Bishop Newton's Works, London Edition, 1787, and show the inextricable dilemma into which a powerful mind was plunged by the belief of man's natural immortality. We believe that nearly all immortal-soul theorists are, though unconscious of it themselves, Restorationists. The Bishop's topic, in "Dissertation" No. 60 is—"On the final state and condition of man." He is really a very great "heretic." "Hell," he says, "as a place of torment, is nowhere mentioned in the writings of Moses," &c. He then goes on to tell us that—

"GEHENNA is the more usual name for the place of torment, and better known among the Jews; but the origin of this name is of a later date. Gehenna, or the valley of Hinnom, the name of the old proprietor of the land, was a place in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem, where the worshippers of Moloch offered and burnt in the fire their sons and daughters to that grim idol; and that part, where these sacrifices were made, was called TOPHET, from TOPH, a drum, drums and such like noisy instruments being employed to drown the cries of these miserable children. The good king Josiah defiled the place, cut down the groves, brake down the images and altars, and filled it with dead men's bones, the bones of the priests who sacrificed there, and henceforth it became a kind of common sewer, where all the carrion, garbage and offals of the city were thrown, and to prevent any infection a fire was kept continually burning to consume them. This valley was further signalized by two memorable occurrences before and after this time. For here it was that Sennacherib, the king of Assyria's army, consisting of 185,000 men, were all slain in one night, and their bodies consumed by fire, according to the prophecy of Isaiah 37: 31, 33, 'For through the voice of the Lord shall the Assyrian be beaten down, which smote with a rod.' For Tophet is ordained of old; yea, for the king it is prepared; he hath made it deep and large: the pile thereof is fire and much wood; the breath of the Lord, like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it." Here also was a great slaughter and massacre of the idolatrous Jews by the Babylonians, and their carcasses, more than could be buried, were left a prey to the birds of the air, and the beasts of the field, according to the prediction of Jeremiah 7: 31—33, 'And they have built the high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire; which I commanded them not, neither came it into my heart. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be called Tophet, nor the valley of the son of Hinnom, but the valley of slaughter: for they shall bury in Tophet, till there be no place. And the carcasses of this people shall be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth; and none shall fray them away.' Such a horrid place as this, so deservedly execrated both by God and man, the stage of such destruction, the scene of such continual burning, was fitly considered by the Jews as a type and figure of hell-fire, and the name is adopted and repeated several times by our Saviour himself in the gospels. One other name is used in the Scripture for the place of torment, THE LAKE OF FIRE AND BRIMSTONE, which is a manifest allusion to the lake Asphaltites, where Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities of the plain were overthrown by brimstone and fire from heaven, and as St. Jude saith. 6: 7, 'are set forth as an ensample suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.' For men have no other way of expressing the invisible things of a future state but by some sensible objects, such as they have seen or known, or been accustomed to in this world."

"We cannot in the least discover, in what part of infinite space will be the mansions of just men made perfect. Neither can we learn with any more certainty which is the place of hell. Some have imagined, that the fire at the centre of the earth is the fire of hell; but it hath never been proved that there is any such central fire: it contradicts all our notions of philosophy. If there be any such fire, it may be prepared ready for the general conflagration; but after the general conflagration we are assured, there will be a 'new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness,' and consequently there can be no such place as hell. Others have conceived that a comet, and others again that the sun, will be the place of hell. There the fire is already kindled; but the Lord of the universe can easily kindle any star or planet, that it shall immediately become a furnace of fire for the punishment of rebellious creatures against their Creator."

Such endless conjectures are men, great men, led into, who depart from the plain Scripture testimony, that "the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth; much more the wicked and the sinner;" and that the portion of the sinner is to be burned "up root and branch," &c. But Bishop Newton had adopted the Pagan philosophy that the soul is immortal; which, as Martin Luther once said, is among the "monstrous opinions" to be found in the Roman dunghill of decretals." Defence, prop. 27, published 1530.

The Bishop next speaks of the duration and different degrees of rewards and punishments. As to the nature of these things he follows exactly in the so called "orthodox" strain of reasoning—dwelling upon the same texts on which they rely, and states his opinion that "the fire of hell is not metaphorical but real." After having dwelt upon the different degrees of bliss and misery, he says:—

"But the greatest difficulty of all yet remains to be considered, which is the duration of the happiness of the blessed, and of the misery of the damned. Mat. 25: 46, 'And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: and the righteous into life eternal.' That the righteous should be rewarded with everlasting happiness is readily admitted; it is what every one wishes, and what every one therefore easily believes: but that the wicked should be punished with ETERNAL MISERY, is of a harder digestion; it is not perhaps for men's interest that it should be true, and therefore they are willing to hope and believe that it may be false. And this article, I believe, hath not only stuck with infidels, but hath also raised scruples in the minds of many serious Christians. For indeed it is one of the most knotty points of divinity, and the hardest to be reconciled to our reason. Some assert in the strongest terms the eternity of hell-torments, others as peremptorily deny it, but for my part, I cannot entirely approve either the arguments usually urged in support of this doctrine, or the objections usually made against it. The truth may possibly lie in the mid-way between both," &c.

The Bishop then examines the subject, and attempts to disprove the doctrine of "annihilation." After quoting the usual texts to prove the doctrine of the eternal torments of the wicked; he says:—"But the words 'everlasting,' 'eternal,' 'forever,' and the like are sometimes used in a limited sense, and do not always signify an endless duration; and therefore though the punishment of the wicked be called 'everlasting,' 'eternal,' yet may it not for all that be of endless duration. . . . When Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities about them are spoken of, by Jude, as suffering the vengeance of ETERNAL FIRE; the fire continued no longer than till it had reduced them to utter destruction. The sense therefore is limited by the nature of the thing: but when the nature of the thing doth not limit and restrain it, the words should certainly be taken in their proper and genuine signification. . . . It must be admitted that God has threatened everlasting misery to the wicked as plainly and positively as he hath promised everlasting happiness to the righteous. . . . You cannot complain of injustice, for the rewards and punishments are equal: and it was really necessary that the rewards and punishments should be declared EVERLASTING. . . . You cannot then complain that the sanction of eternal penalties is unreasonable, for you see plainly that it is no more than is absolutely necessary; but possibly you may think, though it may be necessary in the government of this world for such things to be denounced by God and believed by men, yet there may not be the like necessity for inflicting them in the world to come. God is not obliged to execute his threatenings, as he is to make good his promises. But why is he not obliged to perform the one as well as the other? . . . If God will not execute as well as threaten, why does he threaten at all? . . . There is then sufficient reason to conclude that God will fully execute his threatenings as well as make good his promises, and the rewards and punishments consequent thereupon will be REALLY AND TRULY EVERLASTING; . . . and as long as they retain the same qualities, so long they will keep the same station; as long as they remain righteous or wicked, so long they will remain happy or miserable even to all eternity."

The Bishop then proceeds with a long and laboured argument to show that it is possible for the righteous in heaven to "commit iniquity," and asks, if "he should still continue in glory?" So "if the wicked should turn away from his wickedness" he "should be plucked as a fire-brand out of the fire." And the Bishop adds—"This I conceive is the true notion and representation of the eternity of rewards and punishments." After labouring to show that such changes may take place in the world to come, he adds:—

"Repentance, therefore, is not impossible in hell; but yet you may ask—What reason is there to think it possible? and I answer—Because it is IMPOSSIBLE FOR ANY CREATURE TO LIVE IN ETERNAL TORMENTS. Who among us can dwell with the devouring fire? who among us can dwell with everlasting burnings. . . . Nothing can be more contrary to the divine nature and attributes, than for a God all-wise, all-powerful, all-good, all-perfect, to bestow existence on any beings, whose destiny, he foresees and foreknows, must terminate in wretchedness and misery, without recovery or remedy, without respite or end. . . . God is love;" and he would rather have not given life, than render that life a torment and curse to all eternity. . . . Imagine a creature, nay, imagine numberless creatures produced out of nothing . . . delivered over to torments of endless ages, without the least hope or possibility of relaxation or redemption. IMAGINE IT YOU MAY, BUT YOU CAN NEVER SERIOUSLY BELIEVE IT, nor reconcile it to God and goodness. . . . God . . . could never make any [creature] whose end he foreknew would be misery everlasting. . . . The LETTER of Scripture may indeed sound forth everlasting punishments, but the SPIRIT of Scripture intimates the contrary. . . . The Lord proclaims himself, Exodus 34: 6, 7, 'The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin;' but how can such attributes consist with a system of irrecoverable vengeance for thousands, transgressions never to be forgiven, and torments never to have an end?"

Thus Bishop Newton was driven into the doctrine of the final restoration of all men and devils, as the remainder of the article shows, from which we have made these few extracts. How came he plunged into Restorationism? Because he set out with the false theory that all men and devils are immortal, or have eternal conscious being: there was the foundation of his error. He has proved, in the first part of his article, conclusively, that the punishment of the wicked is eternal; he then has, virtually, to deny his own position on that point, as well as deny the plain Scripture testimony of the endless duration of the sinner's punishment: and why all this? Because he adopts the Pagan and Papistical notion of "immortal souls," and makes the punishment of the wicked to consist in torment instead of Death, as the Scriptures affirm; for, "The wages of sin is death;"—and that death is everlasting, eternal, for ever and ever—no recovery—no restoration. The Bishop, to establish his point, has placed the righteous in a position that they may fall from glory, and thus come under the power of death, indirect contradiction of our Lord's plain words, that they who are accounted worthy to attain that world and the resurrection from the dead, can die no more. Luke 20: 35, 36. All this is the fruit of the common theory of endless being in undescribable torments. Man has no immortality in himself. Out of Christ he is dying: and he finally dies the second death, because he would not come to Christ that he might have life: he is consumed like the "fat of lambs; into smoke shall he consume away." See Psalms 37: 20. How long will men preach heathen philosophy and popish superstitions, instead of the plain testimony of the God of truth? They will do it till they cast off the traditions of men, and lay aside their "Standard Authors," which they are now deifying, and trust alone in the Lord's Truth and Spirit to guide them. When they thus honour God, they may expect that he will honour them. But while they trust in man, they are "cursed" with blindness. Bishop Newton's entire article shows a powerful mind, in a mighty struggle to extricate itself from a dilemma into which it had been cast by adopting the notion that the soul out of Christ is immortal. He cannot deny but that the "letter of the Scriptures" plainly "declares" the sinner's punishment to be eternal; but then, having fixed upon a false theory as to what that punishment is, viz: eternal torments, he starts back with "the spirit of the Scriptures intimates the contrary." Thus setting the "letter" and "the spirit" of the Bible at war with themselves. It is true, that while the Scriptures plainly declare that the punishment of the sinner is eternal, both the letter and the spirit of that blessed volume agree that the punishment of the sinner is not endless torment, in conscious being, but DEATH. To this fact there is the most perfect harmony and agreement throughout the book of God. By not perceiving this truth, the great mind of the Bishop was swamped in confused and unscriptural notions of Restorationism. He had, however, more courage than many modern ministers of the gospel, who lean strongly towards that doctrine, but have not courage enough to avow the workings of their own minds, lest it should make them unpopular. We do know that some of the ministers of the present age, in the "orthodox" churches, are at heart Restorationists, but dare not own it, and, perhaps, denounce us for believing that "all the wicked will God destroy." They have been driven and chafed in their minds by Universalists and Restorationists, till they no longer preach eternal torments in the strains they used to do, and are leaving their flocks to slide into Restorationism by insensible degrees, so that the "orthodox" churches are fast filling up with real infidelity, while their pastors occasionally denounce the true doctrine of the end of the wicked as "Destructionism" or "Annihilationism." Let them cry out still, if they will, or sleep, lie down, and love to slumber; the Judge of men will soon show by what principle we have all been actuated; and then shall every man receive according to his deeds—"To them who by patient continuance in well doing, SEEK for glory, and honour, and immortality, eternal life." But, if we have been ashamed of Christ, or his words, he will be ashamed of us in the day of his coming in his own glory and the glory of his Father, with the holy angels—then shall such "be punished with EVERLASTING DESTRUCTION from the presence of the Lord," &c.

Justin Martyr, in his dialogue with Trypho, the Jew, affirms that, "at the time of Judgment, those souls that appear worthy of God, die no more, but the rest shall be punished as long as God shall please to continue their existence, and their punishment." This passage Bishop Newton quotes, as favouring his views of Restorationism. But, if he quotes the language correctly, it appears clearly to favour the idea of the final non-existence of the souls who are found wicked; but, whether it does or not, the Bible positively declares, "THE SOUL THAT SINNETH IT SHALL DIE." Ezek. 18: 4, 20.

LETTERS.

THE COMMENDATION WE LIKE: Br. H. C. Hutman writes: "HARRISBURGH, Pa: It is impressed on my mind, the most forcible manner of expressing my favourable opinion of your Bible Examiner, would be by forwarding new subscribers, with the money for the same. I therefore take pleasure in telling you that by asking * * * this morning, they requested me to write you to send them a copy, commencing No. 1, Vol. 3."

Just let all our friends go and do likewise. If you get your Examiner worn out in showing it, we will send you another in its place.

Br. R. T. HARMAN writes:—

BAINBRIDGE, Pa.

Br. STORRS:—I must say, that I take much pleasure in reading your paper. The reason of it is, that it advocates the doctrine of the unconscious state of the dead, and end of the wicked. And to me there appears to be such a glory connected with those doctrines that it illumines the sacred page, and enables me to see from the word of God the whole plan of His dealings with His creatures from the time Adam was placed in the garden of Eden, down to the setting up of the kingdom of God. Adam lost his life by transgression; Christ came to ransom. All, therefore, who come unto Him shall have eternal life, and dwell in the kingdom of God forever; and those who refuse to come to Christ for life must die the second death, and "be no more,"—"be as though they had not been." How simple, how clear, how plain that view makes the Word of God. Before I embraced this view, the whole plan of salvation seemed dark and mysterious, but now it appears plain, clear, and glorious.

Br. RANSOM HICKS writes:—

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Bro. STORRS:—The "Bible Examiner" is gladly received by me. It is truly a welcome messenger indeed. And not to me only, but to others in the vicinity who also receive it. Go on—declare the whole council of God; and especially that portion which some intimate as being of minor importance, non-essential, &c., viz: "The dead know not anything—All the wicked will God destroy."—They shall be "burned up root and branch." "They shall be (not annihilated) but ashes under the soles of their feet who fear God's name."

Men who will not acknowledge their errors, but choose rather to cloak them, must always expect to be in error.

Thirty copies of the Examiner, for one year, are paid for by Br. Hicks. That is right, brethren, help us scatter the light.

Br. R. E. LADD writes:—

CABOTVILLE, Mass.

BROTHER STORRS:—Set me down for twenty copies of the Examiner. I admire it more and more. It is just what is wanted, and it will be more and more appreciated by the candid and honest minded advent believers, as one after another of their props give way under them. "Timeists" must have their race—Spiritualists must come to the truth, or go into actual fanaticism—"Endless misery" believers must embrace Universalism, Infidelity, or the "word of the Lord," on that subject. I shall labour, pray and preach, as far as in me lies, for the spread of the truth on these subjects, and the Examiner is exactly suited to this end. God bless you and our beloved Br. Walsh, whose writings have proved a great blessing to me, in your labours of love, so thankless to the mass of the professors of the religion of the cross.

BR. W. G. PROCTOR writes:—

RAYS HILL, Pa.

Let me express an idea that I have long entertained, viz.: that every truth to be believed, as necessary to salvation, is expressed in the Bible; so that it is unnecessary to coin words to express our views—and furthermore, it is dangerous to do so, for often the language applied is absurd and contradictory. I am happy to inform you, that, by the presentation of plain Bible truth, we are changing the state of things faster than we expected; for those who have, and who still continue to oppose us, are becoming more particular in their public communications. We have even succeeded in changing their manner of prayer, and instead of an immediate transition from earth to Heaven, their expressions intimate a hope in the resurrection. "Immortal, never dying soul" is seldom used in prayer, or otherwise; and the reason is, we have been bold in calling for their proofs, which has awakened up a spirit of investigation, and the community begin to see that much has been proclaimed for Bible truth that is not in the good book, and so they begin to require the Bible proof for what their clergy present for belief. If the love of party and popularity could be lessened, and moral honesty increased, we could be certain to succeed beyond all precedent.

THOS. P. HEDRICK writes:

LAUREL, Indiana.

BRO. STORRS—I take pleasure in sending you the names of new subscribers to the Examiner. Your paper is certainly calculated to do good, if the presentation of truth can affect it. What is truth if it is not presented in the word of the Lord, which all Christians agree is contained in the Bible? Now, can any child of God believe for one moment, or can they entertain the thought, that in speaking to us he would use duplicity? And is it not decent to make a revelation, in which the mind or purposes of the speaker does not appear in the language employed? Would not all pronounce such a course, "hypocrisy?" And yet how many good meaning Christians thus charge God foolishly every day. When God declares the sinner shall die (lose life) if he continues to sin, they declare he shall not die, but live, and drag out a miserable existence forever;—and "yet a little while and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be;" they reply, he shall always be, and his place shall always be in hell. When pressed with the question, whether a thing can exist and not fill space, occupy place, &c., the reply is—That means on the earth. I am thankful that I have been differently instructed. I wish to do all in my power to disseminate the light; but how many there are that prefer darkness rather than light.

Three "once" Methodist preachers, in this neighbourhood, are now sent out of the Lord to proclaim the sleep of the dead, and that "all the wicked will God destroy."

BR. N. M. CATLIN writes:

LA PORTE, Ind.

BRO. STORRS:—You have some warm friends in this section, who feel a deep interest in your "Bible Examiner," and your own welfare. Having had a knowledge of your trials from the time of No. 1, Bible Examiner, old series, to the present; and feeling indebted to you, under God, for much light in the Scriptures, they would tender their sympathy and support to the Examiner, as they wish still to continue an investigation of the "Truth" as it is in Jesus." It matters not that we do not agree with you in all the details of the Future Age, as held and advanced in the past. We have not a disposition to "pick out your eyes," nor to destroy your glasses. We hold that when the Lord shall bring again Zion, "His watchmen (will) see eye to eye," who now see through a "glass darkly." Relative to the themes of Life and Death, which are made prominent in your paper, we feel the fullest confidence that they have their foundation in the living words of God's living Son. And further, we feel confident that your recent prediction will be verified—"That a paper which advocates these truths will meet a support." Men who have been enlightened by the truth will not barter it for "pottage," nor regard what some deem treading on their "precious jewels."

BR. DANIEL B. ELDRED writes:

HOMER, Mich.

BRO. STORRS:—I am much pleased with the present form of the Examiner. I think the change is a good one, as it forms a very convenient tract to lend about the vicinity, and thereby continue to point to the record that God has given of his Son. "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." How true it is that men are unwilling to have eternal life through the Son of God. They will not come to him that they might have life, but climb up some other way; looking to the Platonic teachers, instead of the word of God for the truth. Notwithstanding all this, there is here and there one that will believe the record God has given of his Son. Brother E. Miller, Jr., is a faithful minister of the word. He is travelling a kind of circuit in this State, and a part of Indiana; and we think it important to have your Examiner in circulation as much as possible. We can point to several prominent conversions through its instrumentality.

E. W. KNIGHT writes:

GLEN'S FALLS, N. Y.

BROTHER STORRS:—You may be surprised at not receiving subscriptions from this place. The cause is this: the people have been, and are yet, very much opposed to "Millerism"—myself as much so as is the Bible; and have been from the first knowledge which I had of his calculating particular time; not from prejudice, but by applying the sure test; that is, the teaching of Christ. I have but one way of examining the Bible. My way is to test all by the teachings and spirit, or acts of Christ. Deut. 18: 15. Acts 3: 22, 23. Matt. 17: 5. These passages, with several others, prove that Christ is to be heard in all things. "Watch ye, therefore, for ye know not," said Christ, the Son of the living God. "Watch, for ye know," said Mr. Miller. The people of this place generally shun the very appearance of every thing that even appears like Mr. Miller's doctrine; and it is hard to make them believe that the Examiner is not a "Miller paper," as they call it.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.—NO. V.

THE THRONE OF DAVID.

In our last article on this subject we showed that Jehovah had "made an everlasting covenant with David," in reference to his throne and kingdom, "ordered in all things and sure." We shall now proceed to show that David's throne will be the throne of the world; and that David's son will sit thereon, and reign as "King of kings and Lord of lords."

And, first, permit us to state that David's throne is not in heaven above, and that, consequently, the Messiah, David's son, is not now sitting on it. David's "crown" has been "profaned," and "cast down to the ground;" and, surely, no one will contend that these phenomena took place in heaven! Besides, it must be obvious to the most ignorant that David never reigned in heaven; which he must have done, if, indeed, his throne be there, or, else, he reigned without sitting on it! But Jesus is not on the throne of his father David, for that throne has not been in existence for more than two thousand years! Neither is the Messiah, as some suppose, sitting on his own throne, for he has no throne except David's; and he is the only rightful heir to it. Jesus himself, however, settles this question, for he says: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on MY THRONE, even as I also overcame, and am sit down with my Father on HIS THRONE." Rev. 3: 21. We learn from this testimony that Jesus is now sitting "on" his "Father's throne;" and he promises that those who "overcome" shall sit "with him on his throne." The Messiah, then, has never yet reigned as King—as the Son of God; and as mediator between God and man, he "sits at the right hand of the Majesty on high, waiting till, his foes be made his footstool." Moreover, he promised his apostles that, when he should "sit on the throne of his glory, they, also, should sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." It is impossible, therefore, that He can now be sitting on "his throne," for the twelve apostles are slumbering in the dust of death, and the twelve tribes are in the dispersion. Before they can sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes, they must be restored—the Messiah must be revealed from Heaven—the "tabernacle of David" rebuilt—his throne erected, and the Lord Jesus must be exalted to it—then the twelve apostles, being raised from the dead, will sit on twelve thrones, judging or ruling the restored tribes of Israel. Then the prediction of Isaiah, concerning the reign of Messiah, will be fulfilled: "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign on Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before (or in the midst of) his ancients gloriously." Isaiah 24: 23. David, in reference to this time, says: "The Lord is King for ever and ever; the heathen have perished out of his land." The Messiah is to have "the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession." "He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment. The mountains shall bring peace to the people, and the little hills by righteousness. He (the Messiah) shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor. They shall fear thee (O Messiah) as long as the sun and moon endure, throughout all generations. He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass: as showers that water the earth. In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth. He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth. They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him; and his enemies shall lick the dust. The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents: the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts. YES, ALL KINGS SHALL FALL DOWN BEFORE HIM: ALL NATIONS SHALL SERVE HIM. And he shall live, and to him shall be given of the gold of Sheba; prayer also shall be made for him continually; and daily shall he be praised. His name shall endure forever: his name shall be continued as long as the sun: and men shall be blessed in him: ALL NATIONS SHALL CALL HIM BLESSED." 72d Psalm. This will be the fulfilment of the promise made to Abraham that "in him, and his seed all nations should be blessed."

Again, the Psalmist says: "All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O Lord, and shall glorify thy name." Ps. 86: 9.

From the above testimony, and much more which might be introduced, for the Bible is full of it, it is evident that in "the age to come," the "throne of David" will be the throne of the world; and that Messiah's dominion will extend over all countries, republics, kingdoms and empires: that his authority will be acknowledged by all kings, monarchs, and emperors; and that every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess that he is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." "And the Lord," says Zechariah, "will be king over all the earth: in that day will there be one Lord, and his name one." Chap. 14: 9. "And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations," after "the Judgment of the great day of God Almighty," of which we shall hereafter speak, "which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles," which will be the antitype of the Jewish feast. "And it shall be, that whoever will not come up of all the families of the earth to Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain." And if the family of Egypt shall not go up, and shall not come, that have no rain: there shall be the plague, with which the Lord will smite the heathen that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles. This shall be the punishment of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles."

Here we have several important truths presented to our consideration:

1. That in the age to come, when Jerusalem shall be the metropolis of the world, and Messiah shall be reigning on the throne of his Father David, "all nations shall go up to Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of hosts." We are not, however, to understand that every person who shall then compose the nations of the earth will go up to Jerusalem, (although the increased facilities for travelling might render even this practicable;) but, that all nations, by their Representatives, should go up to worship the Lord. Who these representatives shall be, will claim our attention hereafter.

2. We have the punishment which shall be inflicted upon the nation, or nations, that shall refuse to go up to Mount Zion to worship the King, the Lord of hosts—"they shall have no rain."

3. But as this would be no punishment to Egypt, seeing they have no rain, special provision is made for them as a nation—they are to have the "plague." Thus we have indicated a part of the policy, which will obtain, nationally, in the age to come.

Let the reader remember the quotation from the Psalms, which declares that "the kings of Sheba and Seba shall bring presents, and offer gifts," and then read the following in reference to the glory of Mount Zion and Jerusalem, when that state of things to which we have adverted, shall obtain: "And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising. Lift up thy eyes around, and see; all they assemble themselves, they come to thee: thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side. Then thou shalt see, and flow together, and thy heart shall fear, and be enlarged; because the abundance of the sea shall be converted (or turned) to thee, the forces (or wealth) of the Gentiles shall come to thee. The multitude of camels shall cover thee, the dromedaries of Midian and Ephah; all they from Sheba shall come: they shall bring gold and incense; and they shall show forth the praises of the Lord. All the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered to thee; they shall come up with acceptance on my altar, and I (the Lord) will glorify the house of my glory. Surely the isles shall wait for me (the Lord of hosts) and the ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons (O Zion) from far; their silver and their gold with them, to the name of the Lord thy God, and to the Holy One of Israel, because he hath glorified thee." O Jerusalem! "And the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister to thee: for in my wrath I smote thee, but in my favour have I had mercy on thee. Therefore thy gates shall be open continually; they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring to thee the forces (or wealth) of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought. For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; YES, THOSE NATIONS SHALL BE UTTERLY WASTED," Isaiah 60.

But we must turn from the contemplation of the authority and dominion of the Lord of hosts, and the glory, splendor, and magnificence of Jerusalem, when it shall be the metropolis of his empire—when all the kings, monarchs, emperors, and great men of the earth, shall surrender their authority, power, and wealth, and lay them at the feet of the King of kings and Lord of lords—we must turn, for the present, from this glorious and spirit-stirring theme to the RESTORATION OF ISRAEL, which will be the subject of our next number. J. T. W.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.—NO. VI.

THE RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.

Will Israel ever be restored? is a question of the first importance in the consideration of this subject. Some deny that they will ever be restored to their own land; but it would be easy to show that the destiny of the world turns upon the truth of this doctrine. We do not, however, design to go very extensively into a discussion of this point. We wish to give the general outlines of the things relating to the "Kingdom of God," in this series of articles; and to fill them up at some future time. The restoration of Israel, alone, would fill a volume. We shall, therefore, content ourselves with the presentation of a few testimonies on the question. We shall accompany the testimony with a few remarks.

1. In the eleventh chapter of Isaiah we have a prediction concerning, first, the birth of the Messiah: "And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of his roots."

2. We have his character indicated: "And the spirit of the Lord will rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord: And will make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord: and he will not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears: But with righteousness will he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth."

3. We have a prediction, which evidently relates to the future, concerning a judgment which he will execute upon the wicked: "And he will smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips will he slay the wicked."

4. We have a prophecy concerning the nature of Messiah's reign: "And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf, and the young lion, and the fattening together, and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together, and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the den of the basilisk. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: For the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

5. We then have a glowing prediction relative to the restoration of Israel—a prediction, which the student of the Bible will at once perceive, has never been fulfilled: "And in that day," the day of Messiah, "there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord will set his hand AGAIN THE SECOND TIME to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the isles of the Sea. And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and GATHER THE DISPERSED OF JUDAH FROM THE FOUR CORNERS OF THE EARTH. The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not distress Ephraim."

This prophecy refers to "the whole house of Israel"—that is, to the twelve tribes—Israel and Judah being included. And they are here distinguished by "the outcasts of Israel," and "the dispersed of Judah." And they are represented as being carried westward; they, therefore, come from the east—from the north-east of Asia, and those other countries already referred to, to which the ten tribes were carried away captive by Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, and from which they have never yet returned. The Lord, by his great power, will prepare an "highway" for the return of his people, by "utterly destroying the tongue of the Egyptian sea." "he will shake his hand over the river" of Egypt, and will "smite it in the seven streams" thereof, and "make them go over dry shod, as it was to Israel in the day that he came up from the land of Egypt."

Again, in the 27th chapter of Isaiah, we have this testimony: "And it shall come to pass in that day," in the "day the Lord with his keen and great and strong sword will punish Leviathan, the piercing serpent," and "slay the dragon that is in the sea"—"in that day the Lord shall gather from the channel of the river (Euphrates) to the stream of Egypt, (the Nile), and you shall be gathered one by one, O YE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the great trumpet shall be blown, and they shall come who were ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and the outcasts in the land of Egypt, and shall worship the Lord on the holy mount at Jerusalem." Again: "In that day will the Lord of hosts be for a crown of glory, and for a diadem of beauty, to the residue of his people." Ch. 28: 5. Moreover, it is declared, that "Israel shall be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation: you shall not be confounded nor ashamed without end." Ch. 45: 17. This prediction has never yet been fulfilled; for they have been "ashamed" and "confounded," for more than two thousand years. Let us now turn to the testimony of the prophet Jeremiah, ch. 3: 12. "Go and proclaim these words towards the north, and say, Return thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord; and I will not cause my anger to fall upon you: for I am merciful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger for ever. Only acknowledge thy iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the Lord thy God, and hast scattered thy ways to the strangers under every green tree, and you have not obeyed my voice, saith the Lord. Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord; for I am married to you: and I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, And I will bring you to Zion: And I will give you pastors according to my heart, who shall feed you with knowledge and understanding.

And it shall come to pass, when you shall be multiplied and increased in the land, in those days, saith the Lord, they shall say no more, The ark of the covenant of the Lord: neither shall it come to mind; neither shall they remember it; neither shall they visit it; neither shall that be done any more. AT THAT TIME THEY SHALL CALL JERUSALEM THE THRONE OF THE LORD; and all nations shall be gathered to it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem; neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of an evil heart. In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together from the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance to your fathers.

The hostility which obtained between Judah and Israel will then be removed, and they will worship the Messiah together on the holy mount at Jerusalem.

Again, we have another prediction: "Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth that brought the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, The Lord liveth, that brought the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them: and I will bring them again into their land that I gave to their fathers.

Behold, I will send for many fishers, saith the Lord, and they shall fish them; and afterwards will I send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks." Jeremiah, 16: 14-16.

Once more, the Lord has said: "For lo! the days come, that I will bring again the captivity of Israel and Judah, saith the Lord: and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it." Ch. 30: 3. And when they are thus restored, the Prophet declares that "they shall serve the Lord their God, and DAVID THEIR KING, whom I will raise up to them." Verses 8, 9.

From the testimony submitted we learn, that Israel and Judah will be restored; and that, when restored to their own land, they shall dwell together in peace; and serve the Lord their God, and the Beloved, (for such is the English of David,) whom Jehovah will raise up to them.

But, although we have scarcely commenced giving the testimony of the prophets upon this interesting question, we must leave them, and turn our attention to the evidence of the Apostle Paul: In his Epistle to the Romans, he argues the question of the fall of Israel, on account of their unbelief—their being cut off from their own olive, and the grafting in of the Gentiles. He informs the Romans "that blindness had happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles shall be come in;" and concludes by asserting that "ALL ISRAEL SHALL BE SAVED;" and then quotes this authority—"As it is written, There shall come out of Zion (or 'to Zion,' as it ought to be rendered) the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Romans, 11. We are not to understand, however, that every Israelite will be saved; for the apostle says elsewhere, that "a remnant" shall be saved; but that all the twelve tribes are to be the subjects of the salvation spoken of by the Prophets. It will be a national salvation, political and ecclesiastical in its nature.

The twelve tribes, then, gathered out of all the countries whither the Lord has driven them, and restored to the land of their fathers—the land promised to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, will be mortal men and women, organized under the new covenant which Jehovah will give to the house of Israel and the house of Judah. Messiah will be their king; and the twelve apostles will be associated with him in the administration of the affairs of the kingdom of God. These restored Israelites will not "inherit the kingdom," but they will be subjects; for the Messiah, according to the Prophets, is "to reign over the house of Israel for ever." How beautiful! how forcible!! and how sublime!!! is the language of Jesus to his apostles, when he said: "Verily I say to you, that ye who have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, YOU, ALSO, SHALL SIT UPON TWELVE THRONES, JUDGING THE TWELVE TRIBES OF ISRAEL." Matt. 19: 28.

Here we behold the Messiah, the Prince and Author of life, who was "born that he might be a king," promising to those "who had followed him," that, "in the regeneration"—the grand era of the new creation—the creation of the new earth and heavens—"when the Son of man should sit upon the throne of his glory," the twelve apostles "should also sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel!"

And how short-sighted are those who refer the fulfilment of this sublime promise to the "day of Pentecost." For, at that time, the ten tribes were far away from the land of their fathers; Jesus was not "sitting on the throne of his glory," but on the "throne of his Father;" and the apostles, so far from sitting on "twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel," were, with other disciples, assembled in an "upper room for fear of the Jews."

This, then, is all in the future; and it opens up to us a scene of glory, grandeur, and sublimity, far transcending the Royal Courts of this perishing state! Alas! what a dreaming world this is! Their eyes are shut to the glory of the future! Their ears are deaf to the voice of inspiration! They are "without hope and without God in the world."

END OF THE WICKED.

"IS ANNIHILATION THE PENALTY OF THE LAW?"

The editor of the "True Wesleyan," Luther Lee, takes up the above question in his paper of December 25th. The following review of Br. Lee, is by Br. Grew, of this city. Though it may be thought somewhat long, we were unwilling to divide it, and it will well pay for a careful perusal. The late Orange Scott once said to us, "If any body can answer your argument on the End of the Wicked, Luther Lee can." We bid him welcome to the work, or any one else. We want nothing but the truth; if we have it not, we desire to know where it is.

REVIEW OF LUTHER LEE.

When my mind was first enlightened to understand, as I humbly trust, the great truth that "the wages of sin is DEATH," the main arguments now offered by Mr. Lee, editor of the True Wesleyan, to sustain his views, were carefully examined. They may be found in Edwards' answer to Chauncy. I beg the reader's candid consideration of my reply to these arguments.

ARGUMENT 1.

"The Scriptures represent the punishment of the wicked as consisting in positive suffering, rather than in merely ceasing to exist. Luke 16: 23, 'And in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment,' ver. 24, 'I am tormented in this flame.' verse 25, 'Now he is comforted and thou art tormented.' Matt. 18: 34, 35, 'And his Lord was wroth and delivered him to the tormentors till he should pay all that was due unto him. So shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if you from your hearts forgive not every one his brother.' Rev. 14: 11, 'The smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever.' Matt. 8: 12, 'There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.' These Scriptures, with many more which might be quoted, describe the punishment of sin, but they do not describe annihilation, nor is it possible for what is here described to co-exist with annihilation."

Now I ask, how do these passages prove that "the punishment of the wicked" consists "in positive suffering rather than in merely ceasing to exist?" I affirm that these passages do not prove it, because,

1. Not one of them declares this.

2. Not one of them necessarily implies endless suffering. Rev. 14: 11, is not an exception. It is an undeniable truth that the inspired writers often use the terms translated "ever" and "forever and ever," &c., in reference to subjects which have a limited duration. Indeed, the original term aión, properly imports limited duration, age, ages, &c. It is worthy of consideration that terms implying unlimited duration, as aphthartos (immortal, incorruptible,) athanatos (neverdying,) akatalutos (indissoluble,) which are applied to the life and felicity of the righteous, are never, in the Scriptures of truth, applied to the life and misery of the wicked. It pertains to those who prefer the words which man's wisdom teacheth to those which the Holy Ghost teacheth, (though they may not intend this) to teach the tradition of immortal woe.

If then these passages do not necessarily imply endless suffering, or declare that the suffering, whatever it may be, is the punishment of sin rather than ceasing to exist, how do they prove it?

I affirm that these passages do not prove it, because.

3. We are to learn what is the chief penalty of the law or wages of sin, from those passages which plainly declare it, rather than from parables, or even from plain threatenings of some of the evil consequences of transgression. The word of the Lord is perfectly plain on this subject. Alas! how has the counsel of the Lord been darkened by words without knowledge. What was the declaration of the Almighty respecting the penalty for transgression when he first gave law to man? Was it thou shalt suffer immortal woe, or endless torments? No "Thou shalt surely die," or rather "dying thou shalt die." The same plain truth is repeated. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Again, "The wages of sin is DEATH." When the inspired apostle would exhibit the great penal consequence and desert of sin, he uses, not the term suffering or torment, but DEATH. Now I ask, if we affirm that suffering rather than death, (which is a cessation of life or conscious being,) is the wages of sin, do we teach according to the oracles of God?

These passages, which exhibit only a part of the evil consequences of sin, fail to prove that conscious suffering, rather than cessation of existence, is the great penalty of the law, because,

4. The terms used by the Spirit of Truth to describe the future and final punishment of the wicked accord with the first great threatening of death to the sinner. These terms are "destruction," "perdition," "lost," "consumed," "burnt up," "devoured," &c. Concerning the import of these terms, we need not doubt, for the destruction threatened is declared to be a "destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power," which fills the universe; and a destruction, not of happiness or well-being merely, but a destruction of "SOUL AND BODY in hell." Matt. 10: 28. Surely the husbandman puts the fire to the chaff which he allows no one to quench, with the design to burn it up and not to preserve it forever. So our Lord plainly teaches that the tares, the children of the wicked one, will be burned up.

These passages, none of which necessarily imply unlimited suffering, cannot prove that cessation of being is not the great penalty of the law of God, because,

5. Destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power, is a punishment of loss of far greater magnitude, and much more to be dreaded than any limited suffering which man can endure. Suppose a man to suffer a million of ages all that he is capable of suffering, mentally and physically, and then by some dispensation of divine mercy, he should be introduced into the presence of the Lord to enjoy his glory eternally! How trifling would all his sufferings be when compared with the "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

It is said that "these Scriptures—describe the punishment of sin, but they do not describe annihilation." "Annihilation" is an unscriptural term. If by it is meant only an entire destruction of conscious being, or, as our Lord teaches, of "soul and body," I have no objection to it. As, however, it is used by our opponents, as the basis of a philosophical objection, I do not use it in reference to the subject at issue. I affirm that "these Scriptures" express only a part of the punishment of sin. They do not state what the Scriptures declare the wages of sin to be, nor what God threatened Adam if he sinned. The fact that these particular passages do not describe utter destruction of being, is no more proof against such destruction, than the fact that some passages which describe the future felicity of the righteous, do not affirm its duration, is proof that it is not endless. The silence of one passage of Scripture is not to be adduced to oppose the plain and positive testimony of another.

The actual sufferings described in the passages quoted, cannot indeed "co-exist with annihilation" or conscious being, but this is no proof that they will not end in such destruction.

MR. LEE'S SECOND OBJECTION.

It is as follows:—"The Scriptures represent the punishment of the wicked as being inflicted in degrees, proportionate to the different degrees of ill desert on the part of sinners, individually; but annihilation admits of no degrees." "If annihilation be the penalty of the law, no man can receive a greater condemnation than annihilation, which the least must receive, who are condemned at all, for it admits of no degrees." To this I reply,

1. The fact that the Scriptures represent that divine justice will be honored by the infliction of various degrees of suffering, antecedent to final destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power, is no proof that the great penalty of the law does not consist in this destruction. This may reasonably be, as in fact we have seen it is, God's great and chief threatening for rebellion although it will be preceded by different degrees of suffering.

2. Although subsequent to utter destruction, sinners of different degrees will be on a level; it is not true that God's manner of destroying sinners "admits of no degrees."

It is no more true than that his supposed act of holding all impenitent sinners in eternal misery admits of no degrees. If God can hold all sinners in eternal misery with different degrees of suffering, he can destroy all sinners with different degrees of suffering. As the first death is attended by various degrees of suffering, so will it be with the second, which will terminate existence forever.

Mr. L. remarks, that "the common reply" to the two arguments above considered, "is, that the penalty of the law is neither suffering nor annihilation, by themselves, but is made up in part of both." To which he replies: "1. It is absurd to suppose that the penalty of the law is two things, and neither. It must be the one or the other, but not both. 2. This view is wholly unfounded in Scripture. We venture that not one text can be adduced which refers to any such division in the claims of the law, in the kind of punishment it demands."

I understand Mr. Lee, here to represent that every text which refers to the punishment of sin, refers to punishment of the same kind of one kind only, and that of "positive suffering." The texts he has quoted to prove what the punishment is, all imply "positive suffering." He quoted no text which threatens death, destruction, perdition, &c. I shall now quote 2 Thess. 1: 9, "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power." I affirm that the manifest import of this threatening is a destruction of persons, or, as our Lord teaches "of soul and body." Matt. 10: 28. The passage contains no threatening of any "positive suffering," but what is implied in their destruction. It is a most solemn threatening of the doom of the wicked at the second coming of the Lord Jesus. Whether the doctrine of eternal misery is true or false, this passage plainly teaches that the punishment of sin consists in loss, and not in "positive suffering" only; it consists, certainly in part or in whole, of banishment from the glorious presence of the Lord, whether the destruction be a destruction of "soul and body" or not. If then the scriptural declarations of the manner in which God will punish the wicked teach us what is the penalty of the law as Mr. Lee himself argues, then it follows from 2 Thess. 1: 9, and all the passages which declare that punishment to be death, perdition, destruction, &c. that such destruction, &c., pertains to the penalty of the law.

Whether it is most proper to consider the penalty of the law as consisting in destruction of being only, or in such destruction and different degrees of previous suffering, I ask for the proof that "it is absurd to suppose that the penalty of the law is two things." Is it absurd for a legislature to make the penalty of transgressing a law, both fine and imprisonment? He who can believe that it is reasonable and just for "the Father of Mercies" to punish a man for a single sin, and that the least which he can commit, by holding him in never ending torment, is the last person to charge others with absurdities.

Although the loss of being and of the eternal enjoyment of the ever blessed God is a punishment of such magnitude as not to be compared with any antecedent suffering, and consequently is most properly to be considered as THE penalty of the law, it is quite immaterial to the question at issue, whether we consider the penalty of the law to consist in this only, or in this and antecedent positive suffering. The term "penalty of the law," is not scriptural. However, we may argue about it, it is an undeniable fact that the Scriptures of truth plainly teach these two things: 1. that God will punish the finally impenitent with the "positive suffering" of many or few stripes, according to the different degrees of their criminality; and 2. That he will punish them with everlasting destruction from his presence and glory; with "the second death," "perdition," being "burnt up," "utterly consumed," destruction of "both soul and body in hell." So far from this being "absurd," it is precisely the reverse. It would be absurd not to do it. It would be "absurd" for the just God to adopt destruction of being simply, without any different degrees of preceding positive suffering, as his punishment of sinners.

MR. LEE'S THIRD OBJECTION.

"If annihilation be any part of the penalty of the law, it must be the smallest degree of punishment awarded to any sinner, and of course, all punishment over the smallest degree must consist in suffering, and not in annihilation. Suppose then a man to die after committing his first sin, for that one sin he must be annihilated. Suppose another man to commit ten thousand sins, and die a hundred years old. The punishment of one sin is annihilation, and of course the punishment of the 9999 sins is previous suffering; the one part ending all the rest, must be a blessing and can be no part of a curse. Again, if 9999 parts of the penalty of the law can be met in suffering, we are able to see no good reason why the one additional part could not be met in the same way and supercede the necessity of annihilation."

Let us first apply this reasoning to Mr. Lee's own opinion. "If (eternal misery) be any part of the penalty of the law, it must be the smallest degree of punishment awarded to any sinner, and of course, all punishment over the smallest degree must consist in (greater degree of suffering,) and not (simply in eternal misery.) Suppose, then, a man to die after committing his first sin, for that one sin he must suffer (eternal misery.) Suppose another man to commit ten thousand sins, and die a hundred years old. The punishment of one sin is (eternal misery,) and of course the punishment of the 9999 is (greater degrees of suffering.) Again, if 9999 parts of the penalty of the law can be met in (greater degrees of suffering,) we are able to see no good reason why the one additional part could not be met in the same way, and supercede the necessity of (eternal misery.)"

This reasoning is more ingenious than solid. If future punishment is eternal misery, it is the eternity which constitutes the greatness of the punishment. If it is destruction of being, it is the loss of the eternal enjoyment of the blessed God which constitutes its greatness. Destruction of being, involving this incalculable loss, must, in itself considered, be, in all circumstances, "a curse," not "a blessing." That it may be a less curse than such endless torments in hell, as some men describe, I freely admit to the honor of the divine character; but the terms less "curse," and "a blessing," can hardly be considered synonymous. Does the law threaten the murderer with "a blessing" because death terminates the agonies of strangulation?

MR. LEE'S FOURTH OBJECTION.

"The punishment of the wicked is associated with the punishment of the devil and the fallen angels, which does not appear to be annihilation." Matt. 25: 41. 2 Peter 2: 4. Jude 6. — hark! the devils cry out—"what have we to do with thee, Jesus thou Son of God? art thou come to torment us before the time?" It was not annihilation then that they feared," &c.

If our brother had done the devils justice, and hearkened to them a little longer to hear all their testimony on the subject, instead of turning away when he had heard just enough to suit his own theory, he might have received some good instruction by hearing them cry, "art thou come to destroy us?" Matt. 8: 29. Mark 1: 24. By all they said, it is evident that they expect to be tormented in a manner which will issue in their destruction. Be this as it may, the testimony of the Spirit of Truth must not be rejected. "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil." Heb. 2: 14.

The reference of Jude to the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, "suffering the vengeance of" aionion (age, lasting,) fire, is a reference to an example set forth and seen in this present world in the destruction of those cities for their iniquities.

MR. LEE'S FIFTH OBJECTION.

"The Scriptures describe the fearfulness of the punishment of the wicked, by the character and duration of the suffering which is to constitute such punishment. 'Cast into hell; into the fire that never shall be quenched—where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched; these shall go away into everlasting punishment.'"

I affirm that the Scriptures describe the fearfulness of the punishment of the wicked by the terms "death," "second death," destruction of the soul and body, i. e. of conscious being, by coming to an "end;" by perishing, by being utterly consumed, by not entering into life, and by the tremendous consequence of their destruction in the loss of the everlasting joys and glories of "Immortality," in "the presence of the Lord," and "the glory of his power." Mark 9: 45, 46, proves the very opposite to that for which it is adduced. Let Scripture explain Scripture. See Matt. 13: 40—"As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world." Christ "will gather his wheat into his garner, and he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." If the fire "is not quenched," the tares, or chaff, will be entirely consumed. If the worm dies not, the carcass is wholly devoured. The wicked will indeed go away "into everlasting punishment." As the punishment is destruction, and that destruction is everlasting, it necessarily follows that their punishment is everlasting.

MR. LEE'S LAST ARGUMENT.

"The expressions 'death,' 'shall die,' 'destruction,' 'shall be destroyed,' &c., are all used in other senses than that of annihilation."

That these terms, which, in their proper and literal import, as applied to man, plainly import the cessation of conscious existence, are sometimes used in a secondary or figurative sense, is true. This, however, gives us no authority to set aside their primary and literal import where there is no necessity to do so. If we do so, we make the Scriptures a nose of wax, and can prove any thing we please. God threatens the violator of his law with death. Sin is the transgression of the law. Death is the opposite of life, the cessation of it. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." "The wages of sin is death." Does the Almighty promulgate the fearful penalty of his law in figurative terms? Does any earthly legislator do this? If the terms death, destruction, destroy soul and body, perdition, burnt up, utterly consumed, &c., &c., are to be understood figuratively, who shall determine their import? If, indeed, the word of the Lord as plainly declared that the wages of sin is immortal wo, or eternal life in misery, as it declares that the wages of sin is death; if it as plainly and positively declared that the soul that sinneth shall live forever in torment, as it does that the soul that sinneth shall die, then indeed we might enquire after some figurative import for the one or the other of these contradictory passages. But when these threatenings of death, destruction, &c., which are so plain that he who runs may read and understand, are not even apparently contradicted by a single passage in the original Scriptures connecting actual suffering with endless duration, it appears to me a great perversion of scripture to set aside their literal import to twist them into harmony with this horrible doctrine. So far from the justice, or any other perfection, of the Almighty, requiring any greater punishment than is implied in the literal import of these dreadful threatenings, it is an impeachment of those perfections to suppose it. That the entire and everlasting destruction of the sinner from the presence and glory of God, attended with various degrees of torment as justice can apportion antecedent to cessation of being, is an adequate manifestation of the great evil of sin and of the divine displeasure against it, is a proposition which no man can reasonably deny. Mr. L. remarks: "The expression 'cut him asunder' as clearly expresses the act of taking away existence, as any term used; and yet, after they are cut asunder, they receive their portion and weep and gnash their teeth." I reply that our Lord's declaration does not necessarily imply any thing more than that destruction shall be connected with weeping and gnashing of teeth. If this is denied, we may refer the expression, "cut him asunder," to the first death, which is expressed by the terms "cut off," "cut down," which is perfectly compatible with the destruction of his being, by the second death, in the lake of fire where there will be weeping, wailing, &c. However we may understand the passage, it certainly is not true that the phrase "cut him asunder," "as clearly expresses the act of taking away existence (forever) as any term used." The declaration, "whose end is destruction," and the expressions "everlasting destruction," "destroyed forever," "perdition," "lost," all express it more clearly.

"How futile is it then, to pretend that any or all of" the passages adduced by Mr. Lee, prove that sinners will exist in endless misery. "in the face of so much proof," that "they shall be destroyed forever." Ps. 92: 7.

HENRY GREW.

ANOTHER LETTER OF CHAS. FITCH'S.

The following extract of a letter was written to the Editor of the Examiner by the late Charles Fitch, a few months before he "fell asleep." We see that Br. J. B. Cook has placed it in the "Appendix" to his work on "The True Source of Immortality;" but, we are sorry he should have omitted to state to whom the letter was addressed. It there appears as if it was written to himself. For the information of those of our readers who may never have heard of Br. Fitch, we would say, he was a holy, able, and faithful minister of the gospel: one who did not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, as he understood it, whatever reproach he might suffer for it. He fell asleep in Jesus, at Buffalo, N.Y., in Sept. or Oct. 1844.

CLEVELAND, [Ohio] May 25th, 1844.

DEAR BROTHER STORRS:—I have received a long letter from Brother Litch, touching the state of the dead, the end of the wicked, &c. It would be exceedingly pleasant to me, to be able to please him, and the dear brethren who agree with him, for I love them all, and would rejoice to concede anything but truth, to be able to harmonize with them in my views. But there is a Friend who has bought me with his blood, and I take more pleasure in pleasing Him, than in pleasing all the world besides. I never preached my present views touching the state of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked, until fully convinced that I could no longer withhold them without displeasing my blessed Lord and Master. Most sincerely and truly can I call God to record upon my soul, that I have never been influenced in this matter except by a full, solemn and irrepressible conviction to Him who died that I might live. I held my peace, most gladly, I can assure you, just as long as I dared to do it; and when I felt that I had no more right to be ashamed of God's truth on one subject than another, I bowed to His will and consented, henceforth, to believe and teach, that when a man is dead, he is dead; and that when a man is cast into a lake of fire and brimstone, and burned up, root and branch, and utterly consumed with terrors, he cannot, after that, be eternally alive. The idea that man is a being made up of parts, some of which may be dead, and others alive, at the same time, is to me a pagan superstition, out of which the Papists have contrived to raise large sums of money for their own vile purposes: nothing moved by the tremendous fact, that they were robbing God of the glory of being alone immortal, and Christ of the power of having immortality to give.

With regard to those brethren who feel called on to contend against the truths that the dead are dead, and that the destruction which awaits the wicked is destruction, and not something else, I have no feelings, I think, but those of brotherly love. They cannot feel any more confident that we are mistaken, than I do that they are; nor can my reasoning on the subject seem to them more futile, frivolous and inconclusive, than theirs does to me. I certainly have not adopted the views I entertain to gain any worldly good, nor can I ever renounce them for such a purpose. Having been led into them by firm conviction, and through the fear of God alone, nothing else can ever lead me back. And I feel as ready to defend the truth on these subjects in one place as in another; and I might as well attempt to suppress my breath, as to suppress these truths when I preach. I know that by the great body of Second Advent believers, with whom I am acquainted, they are admitted as truth; though ideas of expediency may induce them to be silent. I have heard a few object, but I feel persuaded that it is in some instances through fear that the promulgation of these truths will be detrimental to the influence of truth, touching the coming of the Lord. With this I have nothing to do. God will take care that the preaching of one truth shall not hinder the influence of another. I have been in Buffalo, Rochester and Cincinnati during the last two months, and I have not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God upon these subjects; nor can I, wherever I may be called to preach. I have no wish to differ from my brethren, but if they ask me to withhold God's truth, on any subject to please them, they ask what I am at no liberty to grant.

God willing, I shall see you at no distant day. My faith in the Lord's appearing is unshaken; and I long for it, more than I can express; and that, irrespective of my own interests. I want my Lord Jesus to wear His crown, and fully to taste the joy set before Him when He "endured the cross, despising the shame;" and I want the martyrs, who have bled for Christ, to live and reign with Him.

Yours, in the glorious hope, CHAS. FITCH.

ARE THE WICKED IMMORTAL?

"The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Bible.

PAGANISM IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.—We were forcibly struck at noticing the influence the Pagan Fable of an Immortal Soul has upon otherwise intelligent minds, in this age of the world, and under the light of the Bible, by the following editorial scrap in a paper of this city, the day previous to the funeral of John Q. Adams. It is as follows:

"OBSEQUES OF MR. ADAMS.—From the preparations making, it is believed that the funeral honours to the remains of the illustrious ex-President Adams, on their arrival in this city to-morrow afternoon, will be of such a character as will reflect credit upon the patriotism of Philadelphia. In view of the hallowed associations, what a beautiful and sublime feature will be the resting of the corpse of this patriot of four-score, for a night in Independence Hall. If the spirits of 'the just made perfect,' are permitted to mingle, invisible to mortal ken, on this earth, what a meeting will that be BETWEEN FATHER AND SON, in the sacred hall where American Liberty first drew its breath!"

The italicising is our own. Here is "the corpse of this patriot in Independence Hall." What next? "If spirits" of the departed signers of the Declaration of Independence, among whom is John Adams, father of him whose "corpse" is to be in the old "Hall," "are to mingle on this earth, what a meeting will that be between father and son, in the sacred hall," &c. It must be indeed a wonderful meeting for a "disembodied, immortal spirit" to come to old Independence Hall to meet a "CORPSE!!" In the mean time where is the "spirit" of John Q. Adams? Has it had no "meeting" with the "spirit" of his "father?" And must the "spirit of" his "father" come down to Independence Hall to meet "the corpse of" the son in order to have a wonderful "meeting"!! It is difficult to portray in language sufficiently vivid the folly that the immortal-soul theory leads men into. Truly, "like priest, like people." The Priests of "undying soul"-ism talk about departed spirits hovering over friends left behind; and no wonder political Editors should talk of "what a meeting between" the "spirit of" a "father and" the "corpse" of his "son"! Surely it must be a very wonderful meeting! What a glorious likeness between them! An immortal spirit and a corpse! What a similarity of feeling they will have! How exactly they will tally together! What a perfect sympathy! What exquisite philosophy! "The dead know not anything;" Eccl. 9: 5. "If the dead rise not, then they are fallen asleep in Christ are perished;" 1 Corth. 15: 16-18.

THE DEATH BY ADAM.—That death entered into the world by Adam's sin, we believe is a truth admitted by all Christians. They may, and do, differ about the character of that death; but that it involves the unbuilding of all men, so that they pass under what we all call death, is not disputed. Is this unbuilding of men the penalty of the personal sins of Adam's posterity? Seminally, or in Adam's loins, we "all have sinned," as Levi seminally, in Abram's loins, paid tithes to Melchisedec, [Heb. 7: 9, 10.] Whatever death was the penalty of the Adamic law all his posterity were liable to, whether they personally sinned or not. Hence we see multitudes of little children die who have never personally sinned. The death penalty, then, for Adam's sin, is not the penalty for the personal offences of his posterity: men do not, therefore, receive the penalty of their own sins by the corruption and death flowing from Adam's transgression. But the unchangeable law of God is—"The soul that sinneth it shall die"—and "The wages of sin is death." The Second Adam reverses not the penalty of the Adamic law, but restores again to life, all men, after the penalty has been inflicted. But the continuance in life, after such restoration, is another, and a very different matter; that depends on personal character. Those who, during their personal trial, "receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousness, shall REIGN IN LIFE, by Jesus Christ;" not only live again, but live forever: "die no more—death hath no more dominion over them." But, if men "will not come to" Christ, "that they might have life," while "the accepted time and day of salvation" continues, they die for their personal transgressions; and this death must necessarily be after the restoration from that death brought on all men by Adam's sin.

Whether those restored to life will have inflicted upon them "the second death," who have not been "enlightened" by revelation, or by the Gospel of the Kingdom in some age, or dispensation past, till they shall have it presented to their minds and personally reject it, is a point about which Christian men may differ. But it is enough for us to know, that men who have been enlightened, and have rejected the light, from love to sin, or "love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil," will "be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be glorified in his holy ones and to be admired in all them that believe IN THAT DAY." That punishment, we learn from the Scriptures, is to die the second time; from this death, which is the wages of personal sins, we have yet to learn where the text is to be found that gives any hope of a resurrection. It is "eternal," "everlasting;" no hope—no recovery. To that death every impenitent sinner is exposed; that death every sinner, who has been called by the truth of God, will experience, except he repent and seeks the remission of his sins, through the "one Mediator." There must be repentance towards God, and a forsaking our personal sins; and the punishment must be remitted, not inflicted, or there is no eternal life in us, nor for us. The punishment of our personal sins never has been borne by another. If it had been, it would be mockery to offer to forgive the debt. What! first demand and receive payment for our debts, and then turn to us and offer to forgive those debts!! After they are paid profess the debts are still due! No, no; Christ paid no man's debts; and he taught us to pray, "forgive us our debts." But if the common notion that Christ paid our debts is true, we should pray, "Lord, thou wouldst not forgive us our debts, and now thy Son has paid them for us: so we will deal with our debtors; somebody shall pay their debts to us."

Christ redeems us from the curse of the Adamic law, and restores all men to life, so that what we lost by Adam we regain by Christ; and, furthermore, he has become our kinsman, redeemer, and the "one Mediator," through and by whom we can now approach unto God and receive a pardon of our personal sins, or the remission of the punishment due to us for those sins, and obtain "the gift of God, ETERNAL LIFE," and "not be hurt of the SECOND DEATH."

PROPHETIC PERIODS.—NO. VI.

"The wise shall understand" is a phrase that has been much used by those who have contended that the definite time of the second advent of our Lord is revealed in the prophetic numbers, in Daniel. That the wise will understand some things, at a given point of time, we have no doubt. That there may be prophetic events, yet future, marked by the commencement of some prophetic period that may give the wise to understand, more definitely than some have supposed, the exact time of the advent, we think, is possible. That any past events connected with prophetic periods reveal that time, by means of those periods, we do not believe, unless the 1260 years of Papacy should be found to do it.

The time has not yet arrived, nor have the events occurred which are to give us the scriptural clue to the time of the advent. Dan. 12: 7, concludes, in our translation, with these words—"When he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people all these things shall be finished." The Septuagint reads, as translated by Thompson, John Q. Adams's favorite translation—"When an end is put to THE DISPERSION, they will know all these things." This translation, with present light, we adopt: and think till that "dispersion" of the Jews, "Daniel's people," is ended, vain will be all attempts to arrive at any thing like certainty as to the time of the advent. That dispersion is evidently ending, but is not yet ended. It becomes us to "watch"—to mark the passing events of providence; particularly in relation to that long dispersed people, the Jews. Think of it as men will, they are now, and will continue to be "a sign" to all who regard the Bible as a revelation from God. The dealings of God with that people reveals the truth of prophecy and revelation with a clearness and conviction that nothing else ever has; and we doubt not they will continue to be a most prominent sign of the coming and reign of Messiah on David's throne. For one, we feel bound, in the name of the Lord, to sound it in the ears of all who hate, despise, or treat with contempt, the literal posterity of Jacob, or who would rob them of the promises made to them, as a people, the awful words of inspiration uttered first by Isaac, Gen. 27: 29—"Cursed be every one that curseth thee, and blessed be he that blesseth thee," and repeated in Numb. 24: 9, at a time when Balak was anxious to have Balaam curse that people; but God said, no. "He couched, he lay down as a lion, and as a great lion; who shall stir him up? Blessed is he that blesseth thee, and cursed is he that curseth thee." The nations, churches, or individuals who have treated that people with scorn, and attempted to rob them of the promises God has made to them, may well tremble in view of the awful responsibility they have assumed.

When the "dispersion" has an end put to it, we may expect, very soon, to see events take place so clearly showing themselves as the events predicted, to be connected with the advent, as to remove all doubt from the minds of the watchful and wise, as to the immediate appearing of the Lord of Glory. We are disposed to believe the 1290 and 1335 days, Dan. 12th, are literal days, and belong to future events. Our reason for this is, that the prophecy of Dan. 10th to 12th is a historical prophecy, and not a symbolical one. It is a literal history of events, giving in detail the great outlines of things future. Hence we are not at liberty to make any part of it symbolical—the time any more than the facts. Besides, the term rendered days, in this chapter, is the same term used in chapter 10: 13, "The prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days," where no one doubts but that literal days are intended; and it is not the same term translated days, chapter 8th, "Unto 2300 days," &c. We conclude, therefore, that the 1290 and 1335 days are literal, and fall within the life time of individuals who will live after the "dispersion" is ended: and perhaps relate to the conduct of the "wilful king," chap. 11th, whose manifestation may yet be future. That this king is an individual king we are constrained to believe, for the same reason that we believe the days are literal. What reason, on earth, can be assigned for making all the other kings in this prophecy individual kings, as is manifest they are, and then convert this wilful one into a symbol to represent a system? The prophecy contemplates "a time of trouble" connected with the reign of this wilful king, or at the close, connected with which is the taking away the daily and setting up of the abomination that astonisheth: from that point there are 1290 days of trouble; and at the close of 1335 days those that have been waiting, and have endured, will be "blessed."

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

"THE INGATHERING OF THE JEWS.—The Jewish race, kept distinct from all others, and retaining peculiar characteristics for so many centuries, it seems is about to make a movement toward the re-possession of the promised land and the holy city.

"The Rothschilds, the richest family in the world, and the acknowledged financial head of all the tribes of Israel, have bought the whole land of Canaan—at least, they have the refusal of it, at a price within their means, and can close the bargain whenever they choose to do so.

"They are not wanting in power to sustain themselves in this position. They have a sufficient diplomatic influence in every court in Europe, and nothing is wanting but the complete removal of Jewish disabilities in England, to give them all the influence that they require. The liberal views and conduct of the present Pope are favourable to the great movement, which cannot be far distant.

"The land of Israel, which, under this dynasty, would soon extend from the Nile to the Euphrates, would be in the new track of the commerce of the eastern world. The caravans which transported goods from the Mediterranean to the Persian Gulf, or directly into the heart of Asia, were superseded by ships, which sailed around the Cape of Good Hope; but steamboats and railroads will soon bring the commerce of Europe and Asia back to its old channel, and the Jews, occupying the central position of Palestine, will make that country the great mart of trade and finance for the whole eastern world. The east and west will both contribute to the riches of the Jewish nation—merchants will flock there from all parts of the world, and lines of steamers on the Mediterranean, the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean, with railroads connecting Egypt, Persia, Hindostan and China, with the city of Jerusalem, can scarcely fail to restore it to all the magnificence and splendor it enjoyed in the days of Solomon.

"These views, as any one may see, are by no means chimerical. The facts on which they are based are sufficiently notorious, and there is nothing either impossible or improbable, in these predictions. These are the views and expectations expressed by some of the most intelligent Jews in this city, and we see no reason for their concealment."

Since the above appeared in the Dispatch, the following Foreign Intelligence has been received:

THE JEWISH DISABILITY BILL.—The adjourned debate on the bill for removing the civil disabilities of the Jews, was resumed on the 11th inst., by Mr. Pearson, who was followed by Messrs. Cooper, Horsemann and Cockburn, in support of the measure, and by Lords Drumlaurie and Seymour, and Messrs. Spooner and Banks against. The debate was wound up by a masterly speech from Sir Robert Peel in favour of the bill.

ANGELS—AGGELLO.

The term "angel" is from "aggelos," "aggello," and signifies "to tell"—"to deliver a message"—"a messenger." The connection and circumstances must determine the nature of the messenger.

MEN CALLED ANGELS.

When men are called angels the term is always indicative of office as messengers. It is, therefore, when applied to men, an official title. There are numerous instances of this title being applied to men. See Rev. 1: 20, and 2: 1, 8, 12, 18, and 3: 1, 7, 14. In most instances, however, our translators have very properly translated the term, "messenger." See Math. 11: 10, "aggelon." See also 2 Corth. 12: 7.

"A thorn in the flesh, the messenger [aggelos] of Satan to buffet me," &c. This messenger was, doubtless, the false teachers of which the apostle speaks in the previous chapters. "His letters, say they, are weighty and powerful, but his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible." At the 13th verse, chapter 11, the apostle says: "Such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into apostles of Christ. And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into an angel [aggelon] of light, [or puts on the appearance of an angel of light.] Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness." See also Luke 7: 24, and 9: 52, and James 2: 25.

ANGELS WHO ARE NOT MEN.

Do the Scriptures teach that the term ANGEL is applied to an order of beings who are not, and never were men, that is, of Adam's race? Let us look at Heb. 1: 13, 14: "But to which of the angels said he at any time, sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool? Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" See also Heb. 2: 16: "For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham." This text, it appears to us, shows conclusively that there is an order of beings who are not and never were descendants of Adam; whose nature Christ took not on him, or, as the margin reads, "took not hold of," consequently they did not belong to the posterity of Adam. One of these angels appeared to Manoah and his wife: see Judges 13th. At first they supposed him to be merely "a man of God;" but when he "ascended in the flame of the altar" then they "fell on their faces to the ground;" and then they "knew that he was an angel of the Lord;" and "Manoah said unto his wife, We shall surely die, because we have seen God." Observe here, that to see an angel, or the angel of the Lord, is said to be seeing God. "True," says one, "because 'the angel of the Lord' is Christ, and he is God." A strange conclusion truly, that God is his own angel!!

Angels, as an order of beings, are one in nature, but various in rank.

IN NATURE, IS MESSIAH AN ANGEL?

Is the Lord Jesus Christ an angel, in nature, of any order or rank of angels? Let us look at Heb. 1: 4-8, "Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son? And again, when he bringeth in the first begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him. And of the angels he saith, Who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire. But unto the Son, he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom."

Here, if we do not mistake, the apostle affirms that God never said to an angel, of any order, "Thou art my Son;" again, he declares that the Son is "much better than the angels;" and again, "Let all the angels of God worship him;" all of which expressions show that he, himself, is not an angel in nature. In the 13th verse the apostle uses this language—"To which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool?" That is, God never said this to an angel; therefore, the Son of God is not an angel, for God did say this to the Son.

Again, chapter 2, verse 5, Paul says—"Unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world [age, or dispensation] to come, whereof we speak;" and verse 8, he says—"For in that he put all in subjection under him: but now we see not yet all things put under him: but we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels," &c.

Here, if we mistake not, we have the fact stated that he who is made of God the head of "the world [or age] to come," is not an angel; and that though he was higher and better than the angels, yet, to prepare him to be the head and "father of the everlasting age," he was made, for a while, "a little lower than the angels;" but now having "suffered death," he is to be "crowned with glory and honour." The 16th verse, already quoted, expressly declares, that "he took not on him the nature of angels;" which language could have little force if he were in nature an angel of any order.

Once more: Our Lord, himself, when speaking of certain events to take place, Mark 13: 32, says—"Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son," &c. Here he clearly distinguishes himself from the angels; and the form of expression shows that he places himself in a higher scale than the angels, and superior to them. These texts are sufficient to show that our Lord is not, and never was an angel in his nature: therefore he is not "The angel of the Lord" spoken of in the Scriptures. That angel is evidently one in nature, and a distinct being from our Lord. In proof of this see Lk. 2: 9-11. Here it is expressly said—"The angel of the Lord" proclaimed to the shepherds, saying—"Behold I bring you good tidings—for unto you is born this day a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." Here the distinction between "the angel of the Lord," and our Lord Jesus Christ is demonstrated; also, in Matt. 2: 13, the distinction is equally marked—"The angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream, saying, arise and take the young child [Jesus] and his mother and flee into Egypt," &c. The same distinction is observed in Matt. 28: 2. "The angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door [of Jesus' sepulchre] and sat upon it," &c. At the 5th verse, it is said, this "angel answered and said unto the women, [who came to the sepulchre,] Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus—he is not here," &c. But, "the angel of the Lord" was there, and spake to the women: therefore, Jesus is not "the angel of the Lord."

MINISTRATION OF ANGELS.

Such being the fact, it seems clear that the common notion on this subject is an error; and it has led to many other errors. It has made men lose sight of the ministration of angels. They seem to suppose that whatever is done on earth, God or His Son must do personally; thus stripping them of the glory they would give to any earthly king or governor; to that of saying to one go, and he goeth; and to his servant do this, and he doeth it. No, they make the Almighty and His Son Jesus Christ to serve personally, as though God were incapable of constituting an order of beings with power, or understanding sufficient to manage the affairs of this province of his dominions, [this globe,] in this age or dispensation. The Scriptures teach us that God has, and does now, in this age, manage the affairs of this world, directly by the ministration of angels. Let us look at a few texts. Gal. 3: 19, "Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made: and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator." Here the apostle assures us that "the law" itself was "ordained," i. e. introduced, or given "by angels." We shall be further satisfied of this by turning to Acts 7: 53, where "Stephen, full of the Holy Spirit," says of the people of Israel, "Who have received the law by the disposition [or ministration] of angels, and have not kept it." Compare this again with Heb. 2: 2—"For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord Jesus, &c. Here the apostle makes a clear distinction between Christ and angels: the angels communicating the law, with all its awful sanctions, and our Lord Jesus Christ bringing in the Gospel, with all its glorious mercy.

Stephen further informs us, Acts 7: 38, speaking of Moses, he says, "This is he, that was in the church [congregation] in the wilderness, with the angel which spake to him in mount Sinai, and with our fathers; who received the lively oracles to give unto us," &c. Here we have the same truth as repeated by Paul and reiterated by Stephen, at the 58th verse, that the law was given by the ministration of angels, a principal one among them being the chief speaker: that angel being the one who had special charge of the posterity of Jacob, and acted as Jehovah's agent in all that related to that people; and still he was but an angel and not Jehovah himself, nor his Son, acting personally. Even the Son of God himself, while here upon earth, was ministered unto by angels: see Mat. 4: 6, 11; Lk. 22: 43, "And there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him." If then our Lord himself was ministered unto by angels, shall we think it strange if God has ever employed angels in making communications to men, and in managing the affairs of the world? The present world and its affairs are managed by the ministration of angels, so to speak, as agents—officers—princes, &c.; but the next age, or "world to come," is to be under the direct and personal agency of the Son of God: Heb. 2: 5. Some of the angels have the name of God upon them: thus, Gabriel signifies, "Strength of God," or "My strong God," &c.; Michael signifies, "Who is like God." This leads us to an important inquiry, viz:

IS MICHAEL THE LORD JESUS CHRIST?

Let the Scriptures settle this question, and not our fancies, nor the "traditions" of men. First, then, We have shown that in nature our Lord is not an angel of any order; but "The Son of God," and "better," or superior to angels. Michael is an angel in nature, and of the highest order of angels: see Jude 9. "Yet Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee." It may be proper that we remark upon this text before proceeding further. What are we to understand by "the body of Moses?" The same, we think, as Paul meant by the body of Christ. See Col. 1: 24; "Christ—for his body's sake, which is the church." Also 1 Cor. 12: 13, 27; "For by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body—now ye are the body of Christ," &c. The body of Christ here is the church of Christ. Is not "the body of Moses" the church, or congregation of Moses?

Did Jude refer to anything written in the Scriptures, or are we left to mere conjecture as to what he means? We think he clearly had reference to things "noted in the Scriptures." Let us turn to Zech. 3: 1, 2: "He showed me Joshua the high priest standing before the angel of the Lord, [the angel that communicated to Zechariah in the previous chapters] and Satan standing at his right hand to resist him. And the Lord said unto Satan, [by the mouth of the angel,] The Lord rebuke thee O Satan." Here is the very language quoted by Jude. What was the "resistance" or "dispute" about? The angel adds—"Even the Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem rebuke thee: is not this a brand plucked out of the fire?" We see then what the dispute was about, of which Jude speaks, and which he calls "the body of Moses." It was in reference to Jerusalem and the Jews, or the congregation of Moses. The angel of the Lord engaged in this controversy with Satan, Jude tells us, is "Michael," and that he is the arch, or chief angel: "the first of the order of beings called angels." Joshua "may be considered the representative of the posterity of Jacob. He and his 'fellows' [verse 8,] are declared to be 'men wondered at'; that is, men who are signs, or types. They appear to be types of the nation. Joshua was clothed with filthy garments;" emblematical of the polluted state of the nation for a long period; but those garments were taken away and he was clothed with a change of raiment, so, the Lord said, verse 9, "I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day." "Satan," signifies adversary; and in the text may be considered the type of all the enemies of the restoration of Jacob, or "the body of Moses," and of Jerusalem being "plucked out of the fire."

We will now examine Dan. 10: 13. "Michael one of the chief princes came to help me." The question arises here who spoke these words? The assumption that it was Gabriel, and that he spake them of Christ, we consider, stands on a very weak foundation. That Christ appeared to Daniel, and is described by him, verses 5 and 6, none, we presume doubts, as the description corresponds exactly with that of John's, Rev. 1: 13—15, where we know our Lord was the person described. Daniel tells us, verse 9, "I heard the voice of his words"—"and [verse 10] behold a hand touched me"—"and [verse 11] he said unto me," &c. Now, we desire to know, where is the authority for saying that the glorious personage, whom Daniel saw, was not the same whose "hand touched" him, and who spoke to him? We confess we see no authority to disprove it; nor, with our present light, do we believe there is any. If then this glorious person was Jesus he certainly was not Michael; for he says—"The prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days; but lo, Michael one of the chief princes came to help me," &c. But, says one, What could Christ want of the help of an angel? We might ask in reply—What does God want of the help of men? Yet, we find the following strong language used in Judges 5: 23, "Curse ye Meroz, (said the angel of the Lord,) curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof; because they came not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty." God and his Christ both use agents to "help" them, because it pleases God to work by their instrumentality. Michael, therefore, came to help Christ in a matter that related to Daniel's people; which people were emphatically the nation over whom this angel had special charge: and hence called [verse 21st,] "Michael your prince."

The careful reader will observe that this vision, Dan. 10th, was in the third year of Cyrus. That king gave commandment, in the first year of his reign, [see Ezra 1: 1—4] to restore the people, and to rebuild Jerusalem, according to the prophecy in Isa. 44: 28, "That saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid." Under that decree the restoration of the people commenced, [see Ezra 2d] and the foundation of the temple was laid in the second year of Cyrus: [see Ezra 3: 8, 10, 11.] Then the enemies of the Jews set themselves to hinder the work. The Jews answered their enemies by telling them that what they did was by the command of Cyrus king of Persia: "then the people of the land hired counsellors against them," &c.: [see Ezra 4: 1—3.] "In the third year of Cyrus" the news of this opposition would reach Daniel, in Persia; and this causes him to "fast three full weeks," Dan. 10: 2, 3. At the close of this fast he had the vision afterwards recorded: and the glorious personage he saw informs him [verse 13] why he had not sooner come to him: "The prince of the kingdom of Persia"—the presiding angel there, or Cyrus himself—"withstood" his influence in behalf of the Jews "one and twenty days," or during the period of Daniel's fast, till "Michael one of the chief princes," or the angel having special charge of the Jewish nation, "came to help" him; and he [who was speaking] "remained there with the kings of Persia" that "twenty-one days," and then came to Daniel to make known to him what should "befall thy people in the latter days." If we have taken a correct view of this matter, here is strong evidence against the common idea that Michael is Christ. If our Lord is ever called an angel, it must be in regard to office; but Michael, as we have seen, is an angel in nature, and of that order of beings, and "one of the chief" or first among them.

We think it has already been made to appear that God manages the affairs of this world by the ministration of angels. May it not be true then that certain angels have special charge, not only of the "heirs of salvation" in particular, but of particular families, cities, states, kingdoms, and people? Our Lord taught that the persons who are accounted worthy to attain the world to come, and the resurrection from the dead, shall be equal unto the angels. He also taught his followers that they were to have authority over certain cities and people: see Math. 19: 28, "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." See also Luke 19: 15—19. Here he assures the faithful they shall have "authority over cities." In Rev. 20: 6, we are taught that those who have part in the first resurrection shall be kings, &c., and reign with Christ the thousand years.

MICHAEL'S SPECIAL CHARGE.

If these things are so, may it not be true, as already intimated, that different ranks of angels have authority, or charge, over certain people, nations, and communities, as well as over particular individuals? We have seen the truth clearly stated they do, by comparing Gal. 3: 19, with Acts 7: 53, 38, and Heb. 2: 2. Then, as the Jews were the nation first or highest in the favour of God, as the Scriptures abundantly testify, the angel who has the special oversight of that nation would be one of the first of the chief princes, or the archangel, and is declared to be Michael. He it was who had special charge of that people; and when they were trodden under foot Michael is represented as not standing up for them; but when the time comes for their deliverance, and the deliverance of their city, from the treading under foot by the Gentiles, Michael is represented as standing up for their benefit, as in Daniel 12: 1. Here the children of Daniel's people are to be delivered, every one that is found written in the book: or, "the remnant" that escape the awful judgments of that "time of trouble."

But, who are "Daniel's people?" This question, it seems to us, can have but one answer to an unbiased mind. Look at the context: commence with chap. 9: 15. "O Lord our God that hast brought thy people out of the land of Egypt," &c. Can any doubt what people that was? Again, verse 16, "For our sins—Jerusalem and thy people are become a reproach," &c. The same people still. Verse 19, "For thy city and thy people are called by thy name." Verse 20, Daniel says: "While I was—confessing the sin of my people Israel," &c. What people is this? Can there be a doubt but he is still speaking of the Jews, the posterity of Jacob? Then Gabriel tells Daniel, verse 21, "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people," &c. Here we clearly have the same people—the Jews. The glorious personage that speaks to Daniel, chap. 10, verse 14, says—"I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days," &c. Where is any authority for changing to another people, here, from that spoken of previously? We think there is none at all. The same glorious personage, in chap. 11, tells Daniel, verse 14,—"The robbers of thy people shall exalt themselves," &c. Same people still, viz: the Jews, posterity of Jacob, and children of the fathers whom God brought up "out of Egypt," chap. 9: 15. In only one verse more does the phrase occur in this prophecy; and in that verse we are bound to apply it to the same posterity of Jacob, unless we can show a plain and scriptural reason for departing from the uniform application of the phrase to that people. No such reason, we believe exists; and therefore we feel bound to follow the sense already given to the expression by the three witnesses who have before spoken on the subject, viz: Daniel, Gabriel, and Christ. In the mouth of such witnesses, we should suppose, the most incredulous would be satisfied that Daniel's people are none others than Jacob's literal descendants. At a given point of time "Michael shall stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people—and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book;" or who are alive after that "time of trouble." The angel who has had that people under his special charge, and who did not utterly forsake them, [see Lev. 26: 44.] while they and their city were "trodden down of the Gentiles," now, when "the times of the Gentiles [treading them under foot] is fulfilled," stands up for their deliverance, and they are delivered. At the same time, or in the vicinity of that time, there is to be a resurrection, and the saints, made immortal, take the kingdom under the whole heaven: a new age, or dispensation opens, elsewhere spoken of as of a thousand years continuance.

3. Testimony of God the Father.

Ps. 89: 19, Then thou spakest in vision to thy holy one, and saidst, I have laid help upon one that is mighty. 25, I will set his hand also in the sea, and his right hand in the rivers. 26, He shall cry unto me, Thou art my Father, my God, and the rock of my salvation. 27, Also I will make him my first-born, higher than the kings of the earth. I the Lord have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant to the people, for a light to the Gentiles. Heb. 1: 6, 9, And again, when he bringeth in the first-begotten into the world, he saith, and let all the angels of God worship him.—Unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.

Guided by the light of heavenly truth, let us now proceed to the consideration of the following important and highly interesting question. Is Jesus Christ called God, is he worshipped, has he created the universe, is he preserver and Saviour and King and Judge, as the self-existent, independent, omnipotent, and only true God: or, as the Son of God, begotten, upheld, exalted and glorified by the Father?

Revelation alone must answer this question. Let no conclusion of imperfect reason, no false inferences of our erring minds, no prejudice in favor of our long cherished systems, prevent our receiving the divine testimony on this subject.

Let us first consider in what sense the Scriptures of truth apply the title of God, to Jesus Christ.

That the mere application of this title to Christ, does not prove him to be the self-existent Deity, is evident from the 82d Psalm, where we find it applied to earthly rulers. See also Exod. 7: 1; 22: 28.

John 10: 35. From Heb. 1: 8, it is evident that it is as the begotten Son, that he is called God. "Unto the Son he saith, thy throne, O God," &c. And in the very next verse, and in immediate connexion, the same person who is called God, is plainly represented as having a God. "Therefore God, even thy God," &c. See also John 20: 17: Rev. 3: 12. Here, then, the Bible, which is its own best interpreter, plainly teaches us that he is not called God in the highest sense; for the supreme Deity can neither be begotten nor have a God.

John 1: 1, In this passage of divine truth, it is declared that the Word, who is called God, "was with God." Here also the Holy Scriptures teach us, that in whatever sense the Word is called God, he is a distinct being from the supreme God, otherwise he could not be said to be with God. Now as it is no where expressly revealed that the Word or Son is "the same numerical essence," or the same being as the Father, how can the passage bear such a construction? We have Bible authority for saying, that the term God is sometimes used in an inferior or figurative sense; but have we any authority from Scripture or reason for saying, that the supreme God was with the supreme God? "To what class of men could John address the asseveration," that the supreme God was with himself? "Where did these singular heretics suppose" the supreme God was, except with himself? Is there any intelligible idea in the proposition, that the same numerical essence was with the same numerical essence? Or can we conceive that one supreme God was with another supreme God?

The Scriptures of truth afford more light on this important text. In John 17: 5, our dear Redeemer prays, "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." Here it is just as evident that the glory of the Word cannot be the glory of the supreme Deity, as that supreme Deity cannot be a subject of prayer. This cannot be considered the prayer of his "human nature," for that nature, so far from enjoying glory "before the world was," did not then exist. Our Saviour evidently refers to the state of which John wrote, John 1: 1. The same nature prays as then existed, to be restored to the same glorious condition. Does not this conclusively prove that the Son is dependent on the Father, for the highest glory he possesses?

Rev. 19: 13, Here we are instructed that the Word is "the Word of God." Is it not the design of the Spirit of truth to teach us, by this term, that the Son is the medium of communication or manifestation of all the glory of God, (in creation, providence and redemption,) to his intelligent creatures? "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father."

Rom. 9: 5, Christ—who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen. Here our precious Redeemer is again called God, over all God, which is expressive of his high authority and dominion. Compare this passage with Ps. 45: 6, where Jesus is called God on the throne of the kingdom. In the view of this glorious character, believers love and adore him.—But whether he is possessed of this dominion, or in dependent right, or by the pleasure and appointment of the Father, the Scriptures must determine. Dan. 7: 13, 14, I saw in the night-vision, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. Matt. 28: 18, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. John 17: 2, As thou hast given him power over all flesh, &c. Luke 22: 29, I appoint unto you a kingdom as my Father hath appointed unto me. Ps. 2: 6, 8, Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion. Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, &c. Acts 5: 31, Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel and forgiveness of sins. Here we are taught that Jesus Christ executes the high offices of Prince and Saviour; that he gives repentance and forgives sin, all by the power and appointment of the Father.

To be over all, and to have all things under him, are synonymous expressions. "But when he saith all things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted which did put all things under him."—1 Cor. 15: 27, He is therefore dependent on another being, even the Father, for having all things under him, or being "over all." HENRY GREW.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

Since the last Examiner went to press this truly wonderful man has fallen asleep; and one of the greatest ornaments of the age now slumbers in the dust of the earth. We have seen nothing concerning this great and truly good man that has interested us more than the following account of "two visits" to his mansion, last fall, by E. Chadwick, Principal of Starkey Seminary. We have no doubt it will interest all our readers. We copy from "The Christian Palladium," Albany, N. Y.

It was the writer's privilege, a short time since, to hold a religious conversation with the venerable sage, John Quincy Adams: and I now send you a brief outline of his interesting remarks. Trembling with years, and in feeble health, Mr. A.'s example in frequenting the house of God, and in the diligent perusal of the Scriptures, is worthy of all imitation.

My first visit to the venerable patriot was on a pleasant morning in August, in company with a spirited Teacher's Convention, numbering about one hundred gentlemen and ladies, from various states, who went in a body to pay their respects to Mr. A. He gave us a simple, hearty welcome to his mansion, the same plain, ancient, two-story house, which was occupied by his distinguished father.

The feeble old man, in plain dress, meets us at the door, shakes hands with all, invited us into his spacious, but now crowded parlour, kindly says he is glad to see us, wishes he had seats for us all to sit down,—is "very happy to see so many gentlemen, and especially happy to see so many ladies, who are engaged in the good work of instructing the children of the country." And he playfully added, with a smile, "gentlemen, I have always found it pleasant to have the good opinion of the men, but still more gratifying to have the good opinion of the women."

After a few moments spent in conversation, singing, looking at the busts and portraits of Washington, and other worthies, adorning the entry and parlors, we partook of a refreshing draught of pure COLD WATER—the simple beverage which has given him strength for so many years,—and commending him, in our hearts, to God, we took our leave, thankful for the privilege we had enjoyed.

I spent the succeeding Sabbath at Quincy and observed that this fervent octogenarian, with a small and feeble frame, walked twice to meeting. His house stands about a Sabbath-day's journey from the synagogue; He walked without a cane, looked out all the hymns, without glasses, and stood during all the singing, and during all the prayers. So confident is he, that his neighbours remark, "If the President is not at meeting, when in town, we know he must be sick." His father, John Adams, belonged to the same church—that planted by the Pilgrims—and he was equally punctual. Mr. Charles Francis Adams, son of J. Q. A., and originator of the popular law for protecting fugitive slaves, is also a communicant of the same church, and seems to be walking in the same steps. Rare spectacle! three generations of illustrious men, walking in the same moral, "steady habits." All witnessed by the same town and the same church! The day was unpleasant, and yet the large church was well filled, both forenoon and afternoon. Doubtless the punctuality is greatly owing to the example of such leading men.

Second Visit.—Mr. Adams keeps (apparently) no servants. He delights not to be ministered unto, but to minister. Call at his house, and you find he is himself as one that serves. Ring or knock, and he comes himself to the door, extends his hand, and without the least palaver, conducts you to a chair in the sitting room, or parlor, and treats the humblest caller as an equal. Being thus seated by him, after he had kindly made some remarks upon his health, &c., I observed to him that he was reputed to be a diligent reader of the Bible, but that, whilst his other opinions had been made so public, I had seen very little notice of his religious sentiments—the result of his long continued Bible-reading. I added, that if I was not indulging an unreasonable curiosity, and proposing an unwelcome request, I should be gratified to know what opinions he had formed upon a few points, particularly upon the character of Christ, and the Holy Spirit.

He replied, "I have never obtruded my religious views upon others; but I have no views to conceal." He said, "My practice, since I was thirty years of age, has been to read in the Bible, the first thing I do, every morning. [He has been always a very early river.] "This practice I have followed with but few interruptions [for fifty years.] The versions which I have read, are (1) our common English Bible; (2) Thompson's translation of the Septuagint, a very literal translation, (he remarked); (3) the Latin Vulgate; (4) Calvin's Translation in French; (5) the Catholic translation in French; (6) Luther's translation in German; (7) the New Testament in Greek." Upon naming each of the above versions, he made interesting remarks on their character, and the slight discrepancies between them; spoke of the different chronology of the Septuagint, &c.

He continued, "These are the versions I have used. My habit has been, to read each morning, two chapters in one of these, and then the same in one of the others, comparing them together. In this way I have read them all through twice or more. Commentaries I have read not much, controversies not much. But I have read the Bible." This last sentence he repeated with emphasis. He not only "reads the Bible," but endeavors to understand it; receives it as a revelation from God, and believes it. He compares, not only Scripture with Scripture, but version with version, Protestant with Catholic, ancient with modern.

Thus he has "read the Bible." What views, on the great theme of revelation, has it given him?

He says,—"I do not find in the Bible, a Deity of three persons. Nor do I find Christ to be the Supreme God." Says he does not conceive of the Father as strictly a person, but a vast Being, incomprehensible and glorious, far transcending all our thoughts of a person. He is revealed as our Creator, &c., referring to such passages of Scripture as Ps. 19; 1, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handy work."

He mentioned the three angels who came to Abraham's tent. Said he had no idea that they were the three persons of the Godhead! I remarked that I apprehended the word "person," was used by many in the sense of the Latin word "persona," from which comes our word "personate." But with great readiness, Mr. Adams replied that he "did not let the Catholics off so;" that their word "persona" meant "person"—a human being, or one like a human being. In proof of this he referred to the use of the word in Latin plays, by Terrence, Plautus, &c.; and quoted from Cicero's letters: "Contra ejus personam multa fecit,"—"did many things against his person."

Mr. A. believes strongly in the pre-existence of Christ. Says he was certainly with the Father before men were made, and before the world was. If not Paul was mistaken!

He thinks "the Spirit is pure spirit." God, in love, moves upon the hearts of his children. The means or influence by which He does it is called his Spirit.

Mr. A. evidently has thought much on these great subjects. He has thought for himself. He is strongly opposed to "creeds." Says, that although an Arian, he can subscribe to no human creed, whether Arian, Athanasian, Socinian, Unitarian, or Trinitarian. He takes the Bible for his creed, and tries to believe that. Says there is more in that than he can comprehend; trusts he shall know more hereafter; speaks like one who now sees through a glass darkly and dimly, but earnestly desires more clear and glorious light; trusts and believes that it is in reserve for him. On the verge of the grave, he is evidently sincere and earnest. No one could listen to him, without being impressed that he is honest. He laments his littleness of knowledge; confesses it; but longs to know more of God and of heaven.

Amid all his busy cares in life, he has studied God's word in many languages; has read it through in Latin, French and German, more times than most persons have in English; and has himself made an entire metrical version of the Psalms! God be thanked for the strength that word has given to his servant, making him the fearless champion of Truth and of Right.

TO MR. J. T. WALSH:—Does the soul consciously exist after death till the resurrection?

My Dear Sir:—I am content to leave the points already discussed to our readers. I will, therefore, in this article, call attention to a few considerations not before noticed in this friendly discussion.

First. The express condemnation of the doctrine of Sadducees. Their views are comprehensively expressed in Acts 23d, 8th.—"For the Sadducees say there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit; but the Pharisees confess both."

Here are three negative positions embraced by the Sadducees, and their opposite by the Pharisees, and on each of them, Paul declares himself a Pharisee.

What was the creed of the Sadducees as here presented? They denied a future existence for man, by denying both the resurrection of the body, and the separate existence of the soul, or spirit.

There is no way to escape the force of this, but to deny the reference of the word "spirit" to the soul or spirit of man, disembodied. But what else could they mean? Man's hope and destiny was the topic under consideration.

1. By spirit they meant something distinct from angels, because they are mentioned separately.

2. They believed in a God, and therefore the reference is not to him.

3. They did deny the spiritual existence of man as well as the resurrection of the body. How natural that they should be named together, especially as the Pharisees believed both. I believe therefore that by "spirit" we are to understand the spirit of man before the resurrection of the body.

Secondly. In Matt. 23d, from the 23d to the 32d, we have a detailed conversation between Christ and some of the leaders of this sect, when they urge what they considered a fatal objection to a future existence, as well as the resurrection of the body. In answering this objection the Saviour utters this remarkable language, 31 and 32—"But as touching the resurrection of the dead, have ye not read that which was spoken unto you by God, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob?"

God is not the God of the dead but of the living."

There are two points to which I wish to call particular attention.

1. God is the God of Abraham, but God is not the God of the dead, and therefore, Abraham, though in appearance, and in the language of men dead, he is not really so, otherwise God would not be his God. With any other view the text contradicts itself.

2. God is only the God of the actually living, while he is the God of Abraham, therefore Abraham is actually living.

You will reply, perhaps, that it is the resurrection the Saviour is proving. But the word of necessity implies nothing more than a future life, to stand up, to live again, and the context obliges us to give it this definition in this place. 1. Because of the declaration "in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage" which must be understood as tantamount to, in the future life, "they neither marry," &c.

2. Because Christ declares Abraham then living, which fully disproved the doctrine of the Sadducees.

If it be said he calls God the God of Abraham in view of his subsequent resurrection to life "at the last day," I reply: 1. The text does not declare that God is the God of those now dead, but who are to live, but emphatically "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living!"—those actually now living.

2. Abraham's future resurrection to life and consciousness, ceases to be a matter of rational expectation, unless his soul still exists in a conscious state.

I submit it to the reason of the unbiased, that if there be no soul, separate and distinct from the body, capable of living after that has died, there is no such being as Abraham of Mesopotamia in existence.

There being no such person, he cannot be raised from the dead, for the obvious reason, that a being that does not exist, cannot have a resurrection.

The appeal to omnipotence will avail nothing in this case, for omnipotence cannot do, what in the nature of things is contradictory and impossible.

God can create another being resembling Abraham, but he would not be the Abraham that once "dwelt in tents with Sarah and Isaac, heirs of the promise," but another; and if made to feel he was, he would be deceived. And hence I fully believe your view destroys the hope even of a future resurrection. The two doctrines live together and die together. Another being created to take my place could not recognize my previous affections as his own.

After a thousand years, during which time I have not only failed to think, but the whole power of thought has become annihilated—my whole being returned to the dust from which it was taken—my resurrection is an utter absurdity.

Third. Another passage is found in Matt. 17th. 2d. "And there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him." Here I believe both doctrines are illustrated and confirmed to the disciples. Here was Elijah in a resurrection body confirming that doctrine. Here was Moses, who died and was buried 1400 years before, a proof of the other doctrine contended for.

But had not both bodies? I cannot say, though both were made known to the disciples, what was their appearance. God sometimes assumes a body and makes his angels to appear as men, spirits or flaming fire. Could he not clothe, for the time, the soul of Moses in a body, as it pleased him?

There is no proof that he was raised from the dead, i. e., that his body was raised, and if you deny my declaration, you must base that denial on sheer assumption.

My dear sir, on this side of the question I have now done. I am most respectfully and truly your friend and brother,
W. H. BREWSTER.

REPLY TO MR. BREWSTER.

Dear Sir,—In your article you base an argument,

1st. On "the express condemnation of the doctrine of the Sadducees."

Truly, in Acts 23d, 8th, it is said "For the Sadducees say there is no resurrection, neither angel nor spirit." What is the force of this passage? The Sadducees, by denying a "resurrection," as a necessary consequence, denied the existence of "angels and spirits;" thus predicating the existence of them upon their resurrection. There seems to be a hint here, that "angels" have attained to their present condition by a previous probation and resurrection from the dead. This idea receives support from the Mosaic account of Man's fall, &c. According to this view, the existence of "spirits" should be predicated on the resurrection of men. The saints, when raised, are termed the "spirits of just men made perfect." But this merely by the way.

"The Pharisees confess both." "Both" what? The term "both," refers to two only. But you say "here are three negative positions embraced by the Sadducees, and their opposite by the Pharisees, and on each of them, Paul declares himself a Pharisee."

Now the term "both," referring to two things only, must be applied to "angels and spirits," whose existence is predicated upon a resurrection, or else, if you apply it to "angels and spirits," you must leave out of the question the "resurrection," altogether! And, accordingly, we do find just such an idea among some of the Pharisaic Jews, who affirmed, "that the resurrection was passed," the soul having gone to heaven at death, and overthrew the faith of some."

But, waiving all this, did Paul affirm "himself a Pharisee" in the three particulars above noticed? He has not left us to infer his meaning, for in the 6th verse he tells us in what sense he is a Pharisee. He says—"I am a Pharisee—concerning the hope and resurrection of the dead, I am called in question." So there is no evidence that he was a Pharisee, believing in all the paganism of disembodied spirits, and "ghosts of frightful mien."

After asking what was "the creed of the Sadducees," you reply, "they denied a future existence for man, by denying both the resurrection of the body, and the separate existence of the soul, or spirit." Now, if you had finished the sentence at the term "body," you would have expressed the truth in the case, for the Sadducees truly "denied a future existence for man, by denying the resurrection of the body"—upon which that "existence" depends! But denying this, the other followed as a necessary conclusion.

2. Your second argument is founded on Mat. xxii. 23—32.

Now, be it remembered, the Sadducees affirmed there was no resurrection; (see 23d verse,) and consequently no future life for man. Death, with them, was an "eternal sleep;" and for the purpose of puzzling the Lord, they asked him—whose the woman shall be in the resurrection, for the seven had her? They did not ask whose wife she shall be in the intermediate state, or the state between death and the resurrection; but whose wife she shall be in the resurrection? The Lord replied, "ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God. For in the resurrection, (not in the state of the dead,) they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven;" thus predicating the angelic nature upon the resurrection. He continues, "but as concerning the resurrection of the dead, (not their separate existence,) have you not read that which was spoken to you by God, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? God is not the God of the dead, (who live no more, as you suppose) but of the living;" that is, of those who shall live again by a resurrection, which you Sadducees deny. Such is the obvious meaning of the passage. You say "God is not the God of the dead"—that is, of those who are "really dead;" then by what logic will you make him the God of those who are half dead? Again you say, "God is only the God of the actually living;" but why prefix "really" and "actually" before "dead" and "living?" Do not the words express the ideas? Men are either dead or alive, and therefore the case stands thus:

1. God is not the God of the dead;

But Abraham is dead;

Therefore God is not the God of Abraham.

This is not the true position; let us try another.

2. Living men are not the subjects of a resurrection;

But Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are living;

Therefore they will not be raised from the dead.

Are you willing to endorse this? Perhaps not; let us try again:

3. God is not the God of the dead, who live no more;

But Abraham, Isaac and Jacob will live again;

Therefore God is the God of Abraham, &c.

This expresses the truth on the subject, and both of us can endorse it with all the heart!

I have no objection to your definition of the term resurrection—"to stand up, or live again." It is a re-living, or living again, and necessarily implies the previous death of the subject. No death, no re-surrection; no re-surrection, no future life.

You speak of "Abraham's resurrection to life and consciousness" as "ceasing to be a matter of rational expectation, unless his soul still exists in a conscious state." Really, I should like for you to help me to an understanding—a "rational" understanding of this sentence! In the first place, you endow Abraham with "life and consciousness"

while dead, and then, strange to tell, raise him to "life and consciousness"! He will then have a double life and double consciousness! May we not say, that, if Abraham's soul exists in a state of "life and consciousness," his resurrection to "life and consciousness" "ceases to be a matter of rational expectation"? It would, indeed, be an absurd "expectation."

You then "submit it to the reason of the unbiased, that if there be no soul, separate from the body, there is no such being as Abraham in existence." Further on you say, "There being no such person he cannot be raised from the dead, for the obvious reason that a being that does not exist, cannot have a resurrection."

Here you have precipitated yourself against the sharp rocks of skepticism, and cannot save yourself without "suffering loss."

If Abraham's soul is not living, you say he does not exist; and, consequently, he cannot be raised from the dead. This is your argument. Of course, then, the body of Abraham, to say nothing of his soul, has no existence; and this, according to your view, can never be raised: so that you are driven to the dreadful alternative of denying the resurrection of the body in toto! Then, if there be any resurrection, it must be affirmed of the spirit; but this, according to your view, is alive, and therefore cannot be the subject of a resurrection to life. So your view leads to a denial of the resurrection altogether. Here, then, we have this Pago-Christianized Theology to the life. The spirit or soul survives the body—this returns to dust, and ceases to exist—therefore it can never be raised—therefore the grave will never yield up its prey; but have the "victory"—therefore we can never sing, "O! grave where is thy victory!"—therefore the sea will never give up its dead—therefore death is an "eternal sleep"! From such theology good Lord deliver us! But this is the legitimate tendency of the popular doctrine. It leads the mind back to Infidelity and Paganism. I am sorry, truly so, to find friend Bréwster advocating such views.

Again, you say, "the appeal to omnipotence will avail nothing, for omnipotence cannot do, what, in the nature of things, is contradictory and impossible." My good sir, you are in company with those Athenians who mocked when they heard Paul on the "resurrection of the dead," and with those to whom he said—"Why should it be thought incredible that God should raise the dead?" Is there anything in the "nature" of the resurrection "contradictory and impossible"? I am almost constrained to say—"You do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God;" for if the body has no existence, and cannot be raised, Paul erred when he said—"Our vile bodies shall be fashioned like his most glorious body." And, "if the spirit of Him who raised up Christ from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his spirit that dwelleth in you."

But how can a body be "fashioned" when it has "no existence"? Or how can "mortal bodies" be made alive if they have no "existence"? This, according to your view, is "contradictory and impossible." The resurrection is, in a qualified sense, "a new creation;" but it is the reorganization of the former body. If this be not so, how is it, that we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may RECEIVE IN BODY, the things he has done, whether good or bad?" And how are they who "sleep in the dust of the earth to awake?" How is the "earth to cast out her dead?" as the Prophet says.

May I not adopt your language, and, with all the emphasis I can give it, declare that, if your view be correct, THE "RESURRECTION IS AN ABSURDITY?"

3d. Your third proof is Mat. 17: 2, on which I shall be brief. And,

1st. We may remark, that the whole transaction is a "vision," and does not necessarily involve the personal presence of Moses and Elijah. But,

2d. Granting they were there personally, what does it prove? Of Moses it is said that he died, and the Lord buried him. The man Moses died, and the man Moses was buried; and if he personally appeared on the Mount of Transfiguration, he must have been raised from the dead.

Of Elijah it is said he went up to heaven in a chariot of fire, and no difficulty is presented in his case; but how you invest him with a "resurrection body," I cannot conceive. Elijah was not the subject of a "resurrection," but a translation. All he left when he went up was his mantle, which he left as a legacy to Elisha. It is said that the "Devil disputed about the body of Moses," but we have no evidence that Elijah left his body as a legacy to his Satanic Majesty, and received another as he went up.

You say, "there is no proof that Moses was raised from the dead." The very fact of his appearing on the mount, is "proof" to my mind.

You say, "God sometimes assumes a body," &c. Where is the proof of this? The bodies of "angels" are not "assumed." They "appear as men," because this is their form. Man was made in their image. I regard it, therefore, as a "sheer assumption" on your part to deny the resurrection of Moses. If he personally appeared on the Mount, he was certainly raised, and his presence there would be the proof.

In conclusion you say, "On this side of the question I have now done."

O! that I could hope soon to have you on this side of the question, contending for incorruptibility, immortality and eternal life in Christ, by a resurrection from the dead!

Shall I not hear from you on the passages previously quoted? I have much additional testimony in store, and should like to have an opportunity of presenting it; if not in hope of changing your views, at least for the benefit of our readers. May the Lord bless us both, lead us into all truth, and give us an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom, is the prayer of your sincere friend,

SCRIPTURE EXPOSITIONS.

EPHESIANS II. AND III.

VERSES 11 and 12. Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called uncircumcision by that which is called the circumcision in the flesh made by hands. That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world.

The apostle having previously clearly stated their high calling, and the exalted standing to which they had now attained, next gives them a word of caution. "Wherefore remember," call to mind, recollect—"that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh"—that is, were not of the nation in covenant with God—"remember that at that time ye were without Christ,"—Christ being of the Jews, and not previously having been proclaimed to them—"being aliens"—strangers to, ignorant of, separate—"from the commonwealth of Israel," not citizens; and as a consequence—"strangers from the covenants of promise,"—not allied to God in covenant—"having no hope,"—of the resurrection from the dead: or, of the adoption of children, "and without God in the world,"—atheists in the world; having no knowledge of the true God or the nature of his service, nor of that glorious state to which God designed to raise the holy and unblamable in love.

VERSE 13. But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometime were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ.

"But now in Christ Jesus"—by the regenerating power of "the word of truth," which is the seed in producing a union with Christ, who is the truth, as well as the life; so that now—"ye who sometime were afar off"—that is, aliens—"are made nigh"—no longer aliens, but brought to be worshippers of the true God—"by the blood of Christ." Christ was of the Jews by blood. When his blood was shed, or his life received by descent from Abraham was given up, his relation to them, "after the flesh," being dissolved, he enters into relation with persons out of all nations by the Spirit of Life, or through the spirit by which he lives forever more, and which raised him up from the dead.

VERSES 14—18. For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; and that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby. And came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh. For through him we both have access by one spirit unto the Father.

"For he is our peace"—i. e., he is the author of it—"who hath made both"—Jews and Gentiles—"one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition,"—the wall of division—"having abolished"—made useless, rendered worthless—"in his flesh"—i. e., in his sufferings—"the enmity"—that which was the cause of the division between Jews and Gentiles—"even the law of commandments contained in ordinances"—those under which the Jews had heretofore been held; which by the sufferings and death of Christ were now rendered worthless. In bringing about the death of Christ both Jews and Gentiles were active agents—united in his crucifixion—and could therefore have no just cause of complaint if they were all placed upon the same footing. The purpose of God was, now that Christ had made useless the law of ordinances—"to make in himself [Christ] of twain [Jews and Gentiles] one new man"—bringing both into union with himself, so that they should constitute one body, while he [Christ] would be the head of this "new" and spiritual creation; thus constituting "one new man;" as perfectly united together as the head and body of the one animal man—"so making peace"—or concord, union, harmony, between those who before were in discord:—and that he might reconcile both [Jews and Gentiles] unto God in one body by the cross"—by his death—"having slain the enmity thereby"—the animosity existing between them; that is, his condemnation and death was the occasion of the hostile parties uniting together, [see Acts 4: 27.] as some great and deeply interesting event, not unfrequently, unites men from extreme points, as well as abolishing the law of commandments—"and came"—by his ambassadors—"preaching"—proclaiming—"peace"—reconciliation—"to you who were afar off"—who were aliens, i. e., Gentiles—"and to them that were nigh"—the Jews: "for through him [Christ] we both [Jews and Gentiles] have access," admission, "by one spirit"—even that spirit which was upon Christ our head without measure—"unto the Father." Being united with Christ as a branch to the vine, or to keep to the figure of the apostle, as the members of the one body are united with the head and partake of whatever life animates that, so all the members in Christ have access through their head, by the spirit of life in him, to the Father, and in no other way: for, saith the Savior, "No man cometh unto the Father but by me."

VERSES 19—22. Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God. And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord. In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit.

"Ye"—Gentile christians—"are no more strangers and foreigners" as ye were once—"but fellow-citizens"—that is, are united under one head and system of government and favor—"with the saints"—the holy ones who first hoped in Christ; [see chap. 1: 12.]—"and of the household" family—"of God." The apostle now changes the figure to a building—"And are built upon"—rest firmly on—"the foundation"—the word of truth, the gospel of their salvation, [chap. 1: 13.] proclaimed—"of the apostles"—messengers of Christ, "and prophets"—either those of the Old Testament, or those of the New, or both—"Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone"—that without which there would be neither union or strength in the building: and he was that of which prophets and apostles all testified who spake of salvation for men; and which was chosen of God to be the head or foundation of the new, or spiritual creation—"in whom all the building"—the whole body of saints, "fitly framed together"—each part adapted to its place and in its proper position. Any part of a building out of its place weakens the whole: but properly adjusted it becometh, or—"groweth unto a holy temple in"—or, on—"the Lord"—he being the head stone, or foundation—"in whom," or, on which—"ye also are builded together"—built up in company, each forming a part of the structure—"for a habitation"—an abode, residence, a home—"of God through"—en—"by the Spirit." The church, the spiritual building, is designed of God as the home, the abode, the residence of his Spirit: first resting in Christ without measure, and from him flowing into every soul built on him; thus making them partakers of the divine nature; and, ultimately, exalting them to the immortal honor of a tabernacle, for God, that shall not be taken down, and eternally be that temple through which he will manifest his glory before other created intelligences: and this is "the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints:" see chap. 1: 18. Let us see to it, that none of us put forth a hand to mar or injure any person, even one of the least, composing this building, or that God is endeavoring to bring into its structure. The least of all may be as important, in its place, as the greatest; and, indeed, fills a place that the greatest could not occupy.

CHAP. III. VERSES 1-7. For this cause I Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles; if ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you-ward: how that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery; as I wrote afore in few words: whereby when ye read ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ. Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit: that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel: whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power.

The first verse seems to be the commencement of an exhortation which is interrupted to the close of the chapter, and then resumed at the first verse following. Paul, for preaching the word of truth, the good news of salvation, to the Gentiles, was grievously persecuted by the Jews, and at length is found a "prisoner" at Rome, from whence he sent out this epistle. He calls to their mind the fact that he was a prisoner for their sakes, on their account; and then reverts to his call to preach Jesus Christ to them, and says, "If ye have heard of the dispensation"—of the charge or trust committed—"of the grace"—favor—"of God which is given me to you-ward: how that by revelation" the Lord Jesus unveiled himself to him, so that he saw him, and received his mission directly from Christ; and in such manner as precluded all doubt on the subject of his call and work: see Acts 26: 12-18, and 1 Corth. 15: 5-8: at this time, Jesus—"made known unto me the mystery"—the secret—"which in other ages"—or previous dispensations—"was not made known as it is now revealed"—uncovered, brought to light, rendered conspicuous—"unto the holy apostles and prophets"—persons who communicated truths directly by inspiration of God: and such there were in the days of the apostles: see Acts 11: 27, 28, and 13: 1, 2; and other places. To these prophets and apostles God made known clearly—"by the Spirit, that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body"—with the Jews—"and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel"—which promise is, that all, without regard to nation, that become holy and blameless in love, shall have "the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself," or, be made partakers of his incorruptibility and endless life: of which glorious tidings, Paul says—"I was made a minister"—or, a servant, to the Gentiles—"by the effectual working of his power:" see again Acts 26: 12-17.

VERSE 8. Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ.

"Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints"—or, holy ones, that is, the least of all the apostles, as is evident from 1 Corth. 15: 8, 9, which see—"is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ." Christ has riches; and they are unsearchable, and so extensive that they cannot be explored, nor exhausted. Let us dwell here a moment. What are we called to? First, a union with Christ: to become his bride. Of course, partners in his treasures, honors, and whatever belongs to him. Let this truth be proclaimed. But who and what are we? Mortal, corruptible, dying creatures; whose foundation is in the dust; and all of whose tendencies are to return to dust again; with no principle of immortality or endless life in ourselves. To such creatures Christ is proclaimed, as seeking to bring us into a relation to himself of the nearest and most interesting character. Men are allured by the charm of riches, gold, inexhaustible mines; that wakes up their whole being, and they eagerly inquire what it is, where it is, how they can find it, how they may possess themselves of those treasures; and if they find there is even a chance for success in the pursuit, they enter at once on the expedition, hazarding all the labor, toil, risk, suffering, or privation that may be attending the enterprise. Now, says the apostle, I come to proclaim to you riches unsearchable, a mine that is inexhaustible in Christ. He is the Son of the living God, and heir of God: heir of his incorruptibility, glory, endless life, and whatever pertains to the fulness of God. He proposes to share these riches with us: and in exchange for this short and fleeting life to give us an endless life: instead of these corruptible bodies to give us incorruptible ones: instead of the dishonor of consuming in the grave, by worms, to raise us to crowns of glory that fade not away: in a word, to give us riches as much more glorious, valuable, and durable than the richest diamonds, or the most refined and pure gold, as they exceed the most worthless and loathsome object that earth bears upon its surface. But all comparison fails, and we feel the deepest sense of weakness in the attempt, and leave it to your own reflections to follow up the contemplation of the honor, glory, and riches that are so freely offered to us in Jesus Christ.

VERSES 9-12. And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God. According to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord; in whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him.

"To make all see"—to enlighten all: not the Jews only, but those of every nation—"what the fellowship"—participation, communion—"of the mystery"—the secret of the calling of the Gentiles, "which from the beginning of the world"—or, ages—"hath been hid in God"—not known as now, though in the purpose of God—"who created"—caused to exist, formed, instituted, or, formed anew, regenerated, renovated; [it may relate here entirely to the "one new man," chap 2: 15, or the one "body," verse 6; the regeneration committed to Christ,]—"all things by"—through, or, in—"Jesus Christ: to the intent that"—in order that—"now unto principalities"—authorities—

"and powers"—rulers—"in heavenly things"—in things relating to the kingdom of God, or the regeneration—"might be known by"—or in—"the church the manifold"—the immense, the infinite, "wisdom of God." The whole scheme of creation, redemption, and renovation, is one of boundless wisdom; faintly manifested at first, and but imperfectly understood until after the death, resurrection and ascension of Christ, and the consequent outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and the further gift of prophecy in the days of the apostles, by which was made known, vastly more perfectly than in any previous dispensation, the boundless wisdom of God in the work of renovation, progressing to a completeness and perfection never before conceived of by the sons of men; not even the most enlightened, viz., the Jews; and which even the first Christians, not excepting the apostles, were slow to learn: so much so that the Saviour said, "Oh unwise and slow of heart to believe;" and Peter had to be taught in a vision, by a sheet let down from heaven, even after his baptism of the Holy Spirit: and our Lord Jesus had personally to appear to Paul with light from heaven that overpowered him, before the church fully understood, or engaged in earnest to carry out God's designs of mercy and salvation to the Gentiles; which design was not new, for it was "according to the eternal purpose," according to the determination before the ages: that is, before either the Christian or Jewish ages; and as expressed, or set forth, exposed to view, [for so the original word here translated purpose, signifies,] to Abraham, when God informed him, that in his seed, which is Christ, all the families of the earth should be blessed: this was that "which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord," that "the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and partakers of his promise in Christ Jesus;" verse 6: "in whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him." Through the promise of God, and the knowledge of his purpose to make us, Gentiles, partakers in the adoption of children, we now have access to God, with a firm reliance upon his mercy to us, who are in Christ, united to Christ, in the one body. Glorious privilege, glorious calling, glorious hope: and let the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ have glory now and evermore, through our head and deliverer, the Son of God.

IS THIS AGE FINAL, OR PREPARATORY?

No. 1.

Most Christians are looking for a glorious state of triumph for the Church of Christ on this earth. Do the Scriptures warrant such an expectation? Let the word of truth decide the question, and not our prejudices or fancies. We go back to the time of Moses; Numb. 14: 21, "But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Here is a most solemn oath of the living God. Has the promise made by this oath ever yet been fulfilled? Surely, none can be at a loss for an answer. How did the Psalmist understand this subject? See, Psalms 22. 27. "All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee." Has this prophecy ever had its fulfilment? Certainly not. But he tells us when it shall be, viz: When "the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is Governor among the nations;"

verse 28. At that time it is said "a seed shall serve him: it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation. They shall come [the seed,] and shall declare his righteousness unto a people that shall be born, that he hath done this." Here is a people to be born, after the kingdom is the Lord's, who are to be taught the works God has wrought in subjecting the nations. This portion of Scripture needs no further comment to show that the events spoken of are future, and they are not "conditional;" a phrase much used by those who, though not designedly, are, in fact, turning the Scriptures into "a cunningly devised fable."

That we do not misunderstand the Psalmist in this matter, let us look at Psalm 72, where speaking of Messiah's reign, he says, "The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents: the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts. Yea, all kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him." At the 17th verse he adds:—"His name shall endure for ever: his name shall be continued as long as the sun: and men shall be blessed in him: all nations shall call him blessed." In view of that glorious period he breaks out in praise and prayer, verses 18 and 19, "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be his glorious name for ever: and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen, and amen." These are no dark sayings; but full, clear and plain. It does not require a Solomon to show that this prophecy is unconditional, future in its accomplishment, and before the new earth dispensation. See verse 8. "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." Compare this with Rev. 21: 1—"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away: and there was no more sea." The two periods are as distinct as language can make them; and it seems to us, the impartial mind cannot fail to see it.

Let us next examine Psalms. 102: 13—22, "Thou shalt arise, and have mercy upon Zion: for the time to favor her, yea, the set time is come. For thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favor the dust thereof. So the heathen shall fear the name of the Lord, and all the kings of the earth thy glory. When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory. He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer. This shall be written for the generation to come: and the people which shall be created shall praise the Lord. For he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from heaven did the Lord behold the earth. To hear the groaning of the prisoner; to loose those that are appointed to death. To declare the name of the Lord in Zion, and his praise in Jerusalem. WHEN THE PEOPLE ARE GATHERED TOGETHER AND THE KINGDOMS, TO SERVE THE LORD." Here the language is clear. It is at a time when the Lord personally appears in his glory. This was written for a future period: and the people which shall be created shall then praise the Lord. The Prophet Habakkuk says: "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea," Hab. 2: 14. This certainly relates to the future.

IN THAT AGE, THE JEWS MISSIONARIES.

The Prophet records from the mouth of the Lord, Zech. 8: 21—22. "And the inhabitants of every city shall go to another, saying, let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts: I will go also. Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord." Here is a prophecy too plain to be mistaken. The next verse shows that this is to be at a time when the Jews will be missionaries to "the nations." The objector may say "Jews are the spiritual seed." If that is admitted it does not in the least affect the argument; because there are those "of the nations" who are not Jews; and these "take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, we will go with you for we have heard God is with you." We understand, of course, that it is the literal Jews that are spoken of in this verse; and we believe the remnant of them, who escape the terrible judgments with which that period will be ushered in, will be converted at the manifestation of Christ personally to them as he manifested himself to Saul of Tarsus on his way to Damascus. At that manifestation they will weep and mourn as described, Zech. 12: 10-14; and it will not be the mourning of despair, but of genuine repentance for having so long rejected their true Messiah, the crucified Jesus: "in that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and uncleanness," Zech. 13: 1; and the iniquity of that land will be "removed in one day;" see Zech. 3: 9. This people, thus saved, not changed to immortality, but among the "left of the nations," [Zech. 14: 16,] will be the first or chief of the nations, during the next age or dispensation; and will be employed as suggested by the text, Zech. 8: 23, that is, as missionaries, successful missionaries to "all languages of the nations." Under their labors among those left of the nations, "many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of Hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord."

A QUESTION.

In Heb. 2: 14, the apostle, speaking of Christ, says: "that through death he might destroy him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil." Again, in John 3: 8, it is said, "for this purpose the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil."

Here the two inspired witnesses speak too plain to be misunderstood. They mean simply this, that Christ will destroy the devil and his works."

Will some one that believes in the immortality, and never ending sins and torments of those persons that die in their sins,—and the immortality and never ending sins and torments of the devil, tell me how, and when, Christ will bring about the great event of destroying the devil and his works?

DOES IT DO ANY GOOD?

We have heard so many sneers from a certain quarter against the view we entertain on the immortality question—and it has been so significantly said "I never heard of the doctrine doing any good," that we have concluded to give these ignorant persons two items, among many within our knowledge, of good done by the hated doctrine.

OSWEGO, IND., April 1st, 1849.

BR. STORRS:—For your encouragement I would state, that the "Six Sermons" have been blessed in bringing some dear souls to the correct knowledge of Bible Truth. God has been pleased to make a single copy, when introduced into a neighbourhood, a pioneer for the herald of salvation to follow. In this way numbers have been led to know, that sin and death came through the first Adam, and life and immortality came through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; and that God does not send death to gather his saints unto himself, but, that he will send Jesus Christ to gather them at the second advent, who will present the entire church; as the glorious bride, without spot or wrinkle, unto God his Father, arrayed in beauty, possessing immortality and incorruptibility, whose inheritance will be in the new heavens and new earth—the inheritance incorruptible, undefiled and unfading. Hence, a need of the second coming of Christ is felt, and in this manner a way is opened for proclaiming this blessed doctrine.

S. A. CHAPLIN.

DEAR BROTHER STORRS:—It has now been about two years since your "Six Sermons" first caught my eye. They called in question a doctrine, the truth of which I considered of vast importance; viz. the immortality of the soul: for upon this, and the doctrines unavoidably growing out of it, I had based all my hopes of future bliss and glory. I was a Universalist. Believing that all men are a compound of mortality and immortality, destined at the death of the body to ascend in their nobler nature, which was a part of Deity himself, to his own right hand to enjoy his favor forevermore. This, in my estimation, being true, I decided that God would not punish sinners with eternal torments in hell forever, for in so doing he must of necessity punish a part of himself. I was preparing, as fast as my circumstances would permit, to proclaim this, to me, glorious doctrine. But before I had completed my investigation of the "Six Sermons," I became fully satisfied that the entire system [of natural immortality] was based upon the serpent's first lie,—"Ye shall not surely die." I rejected it at once, and was led as I believe into a knowledge of the true source of immortality; and to see that God would render unto every one according to their deeds. "To them who by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life." Since that time I have felt it my duty to proclaim, according to the ability given, life and immortality through Jesus at his coming and kingdom. During the past year I have travelled through a part of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, and Ohio: and among those looking for the coming and kingdom of Jesus, I have found but three, who do not believe with you in respect to the nature and destiny of man: one in Illinois, one in Indiana, and one in Ohio. I believe these truths should be kept in the front of all preaching; for they are the fundamental doctrines of the Bible. They strike a death blow to Universalism in all its parts. I have found in conversing with Universalists, since I embraced my present view, that they are entirely unprepared to meet these truths. The weapons they use so successfully against eternal torments fall lifeless when tried against the Bible view of the destruction of the wicked.

Yours, in hope of Eternal Life,
D. P. HALL.

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, MAY, 1849.

ENDLESS LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

"He that hath the Son hath life: he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5: 12.

BIBLE EXAMINER.—We have concluded to say a few words as to the prospects of our paper; and especially as some, even of our friends, from our silence and through insinuations of others, have been led to think that the Examiner is amply sustained. We abhor the everlasting begging and dunning practiced by some.

From our subscribers we have not received funds sufficient to pay our printer for the present volume; and unless we can realize at least four hundred more new subscribers during this year, we shall be exceedingly embarrassed in finishing the volume for 1849, and shall be plunged in debt, without having received a cent for our personal labors. If half our present subscribers will send us two new ones, each, with the pay in advance, we shall be able to finish the year not only free from debt to the printer, but also a trifle for our own services; at which you will rejoice, if we have contributed any thing to your profit. No subscription will be received for a less time than one volume. All the numbers for 1848 can be had if desired.

Any person who will send us two new subscribers, with pay in current money, free of expense to us, we will send a copy of Dobney, in paper cover, without charge. Dobney on Future Punishment, or the end of the Wicked, is the most grand and interesting work that has yet appeared. If any prefer the Six Sermons instead of Dobney's work, as a premium for the two new subscribers, we will send three copies of them. We now leave the subject with our friends, to do what they judge best and right.

DR. JOHN T. WALSH.—All letters to him should be addressed PHILADELPHIA, Pa., No. 63 Ogden St.

TOUR EAST, WITH VARIOUS OBSERVATIONS.—Our apology for the lateness of the Examiner this month, is our absence. After our last went to press we concluded not to issue the May number till our return. We left Philadelphia March 28th at six o'clock in the morning, and arrived in New York City, 100 miles, at half past one, P. M., where we were welcomed to the hospitable home of our old friend Henry F. Johnson. A meeting had been given out for the evening in American Hall, Broadway, where, notwithstanding the wet weather, we had the satisfaction of seeing many old friends, and a good assemblage of attentive hearers, to whom we spoke "of things new and old;" and again in the same place the next evening. Saturday, March 31st, we left New York at 8 o'clock in the morning, by the cars; going north and east we passed through Bridgeport, New Haven, and Hartford in Connecticut, Springfield, and Worcester in Mass., principal towns and cities on the route, and arrived at Boston about six o'clock in the evening, having travelled about 230 miles in ten hours, including stops. This is winging our way fast enough for any age but the present. So has steam entered into the composition of men's minds, in these days, that the means of locomotion are altogether too tardy, and invention is at its "wit's end" to see if some more expeditious means of conveyance cannot be brought into use, whereby the land of promise [California!] can be gained in "two days" by travelling the heavens above instead of the earth beneath. Yes, they seem determined to travel in the air, and are quite confident that they can succeed, and thus all but annihilate distance, making a pleasant ride, above the clouds, to California or England in "two days." Truly, "man" was "made upright," but we "have sought out many inventions." But all these movements indicate the closing up of the present age, as truly as the attempt to build Babel indicated the confusion of tongues, whereby the devices of men were overthrown to establish the purposes of God.

Sabbath, April 1st, we preached three times in Chapman Hall, Boston, to an attentive congregation. During the week we attended several meetings and preached. Sabbath the 8th, we again spoke to the people three times; and Thursday following, being the State Fast of Mass., we preached twice. In our discourses we took up the signs of the times; the saint's inheritance; the locality of the Kingdom of God; the prospects of the Jews; the nature of the coming age; and the immortality question; as well as practical holiness, or the importance of being Christ-like in our lives and conversation. True, we had to touch all these subjects but slightly, time not allowing us to enlarge upon them; but we have the satisfaction of knowing that what we did say made the people anxious to hear more; and we were strongly importuned to remove to that city, to preach statelily; but we were compelled to decline, believing that the providence of God called us elsewhere. We may again visit the friends there, as we were urged to do if we could not take up our residence with them. The house of Br. Prescon Dickinson was our home while there; and many have proved his hospitalities as well as we. From Boston we went to Lowell, the city of Factories. Here we were cheered by the cordial greeting of our beloved brother, the "eminent Methodist preacher," Merrit Bates of the "Wesleyan Methodist Connection of America." We felt some as Paul did when he met the brethren at "Appi-forum, and The Three Taverns" on his way to Rome, and "thanked God, and took courage." It was truly refreshing to meet with one minister of the religion of Jesus Christ who manifests its spirit, and is far removed from the narrow spirit which characterises nearly all religionists of every name and party. Here also we met our old friend and brother Wm. H. Brewster, Br. Walsh's polemical opponent, who is also a minister in the Wesleyan Methodist connection, and preaching in Lowell. Our interview with him was of a most pleasant character, and contrasted amazingly with the narrow spirit of most of our theological opponents. Differ as we may and do on some subjects, we felt that the bonds of christian friendship and fellowship were strong and unbroken. We gave Br. Brewster a copy of Dobney on Future Punishment, and since learn that he was highly pleased with the "first part," which was all that he had read at the time. We hope and trust he may be equally well pleased with the "Second part;" and if so, we doubt not, he will become the powerful advocate of "the faith he once destroyed."

We were invited by the official members of the Wesleyan church, to whom Br. Bates ministers, to preach to them on the immortality question. We gave them five Discourses on the subject—two during the week, and three on Sabbath, April 15th. The word spoken was listened to with deep attention. We had both Methodist and Universalist ministers to hear. Br. Bates openly avowed his belief in our view of the end of the wicked; and we doubt not he will be fully sustained by the church and congregation to which he ministers in Lowell; he had preached one discourse to them on the question before our arrival, which made them the more anxious to hear us. Br. Bates went to the Annual Conference of the Wesleyan church, for New England, while we were in Lowell; and though all knew his views on the immortality subject no objection was made to passing his character; the Conference thus manifesting a noble spirit of toleration which does them much honor, and honors the religion they profess. Several copies of Dobney on Future Punishment were disposed of at that Conference, and also of our "Six Sermons." The church at Lowell unanimously requested Br. Bates to return and labor among them another year: Br. Brewster also returns to his congregation in Lowell. Our visit to that city was highly gratifying and encouraging. We parted with the friends there, particularly with Br. Bates, with much regret: it was painful to take the final grasp of that brother's hand, with whom we had enjoyed such a refreshing season; but, we shall meet again; so proclaims the voice of faith. A history of that brother's trials and persecutions, in years past, for the truth's sake, is a chapter written in the "book of remembrance;" and will not be forgotten when God shall "make up" his "jewels." He has a part to act, in future; for which may our Lord fully prepare him, and strengthen him mightily in its performance. Eight years has his mind been exercised more or less on the immortality question. When he was Presiding Elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church, in the Troy Conference, we sent him a copy of "Three Letters," the first thing we ever published on the subject. Those Letters were originally written to the late Rev. Orange Scott, afterwards founder of the "Wesleyan Methodist Connection of America," and which he often told us he was unable to answer. It was by his advice we published them; though his name was suppressed as the person to whom they were written. In the spring of 1841 we sent a copy of those Letters to Br. Bates, and the seed then sown has never ceased to vegetate, though sometimes it has lain comparatively dormant, and then starting forth with fresh vigor, till at length it has appeared in strength, and is vigorously manifesting itself.

The "Three Letters" became the basis of the "Six Sermons," which were first published in Albany, N. Y. in the spring of 1842, and before we had any thing to do with "Millerism." We make this statement because that theory has often been charged with being the author of the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked as advocated by us in our "Six Sermons." But there was never any connection between the one and the other; and Mr. Miller always opposed our views on the immortality question. It is true that we were drawn into Mr. Miller's theory for a time, but renounced all his peculiarities more than four years ago, and some of them more than five years since; and have had no connection with his peculiar views for more than four years past; the leaders in that system are among our opposers.

From Lowell we returned to Boston, and from thence to Springfield, where we were welcomed by many friends, particularly Brethren R. E. Ladd and Moses Stoddard, good men and true, who stand for the right and truth at whatever cost. Sabbath, April 22d, we preached morning and afternoon in Dwight's Hall; and in the evening in the Universalist Church, on the subject,—"No immortality to man except through Jesus Christ." Here we had a large and attentive congregation, to whom we opened and expounded the Scriptures as to the fact, that the death threatened Adam was not a moral one, but a literal dissolution of his entire being; from which there is no recovery except by Christ, and no immortality only by a union with Christ, and being made partakers of the divine nature in him; or, without holiness—being made Christ-like. After the sermon, full liberty was given to question us, and we answered all that chose to ask; and there were several, which gave new interest to the subject.

While in Springfield we visited the grave of O. Scott, to whom we refer in our previous remarks. He sleeps in the Cemetery, near the Methodist Church. Near two years have passed away since he has "slept in the dust of the earth," awaiting "the voice of the archangel and the trump of God" to waken him to meet his descending Lord. Many reflections rushed upon our mind as we gazed upon the spot of earth where he lies whose warm hand we had often pressed—whose animating voice and countenance had often cheered us—by whose side we had often stood in doing battle against oppression—and who, first of all ministers of the Gospel, encouraged us to proclaim to the world our views of no immortality to wicked men. Our emotions, as we stood by his grave, can be more easily imagined than described. We did not indeed fancy an immortal spirit fled to some imaginary heaven; but we did feel an oppression come over our mind that he with whom we were once so intimate in active life was now before us, but could not hear our voice, nor mingle his affections with ours. No, silence reigned: but hope was there; and that hope was in our heart that he who lay before us in the silent dust would, ere long, hear the voice of the Son of God, and come forth to eternal life. We reluctantly took a last look of his dusty bed, and turning away, could scarce restrain our tears: it had a softening and chastening influence on our affections which still remains; and we shall often reflect upon that scene, and live in hope that we shall meet again where death is known no more.

From Springfield we travelled west to Albany, N. Y., the place where we first preached our "Six Sermons" in 1842. At Albany we now preached three times, and trust the Lord will bless the word spoken to the good of such as heard it. Our interview with old friends was of a refreshing character. Some, however, were scattered abroad, and some had fallen asleep. We here became acquainted with Eld. Jasper Hazen, Editor of the Christian Palladium, a periodical of the Christian connection; he is Editor also of the American Christian Messenger. We were refreshed by the kind and brotherly spirit he manifested towards us. We cannot but love men, who, though they differ from our views, manifest that they are in possession of a brotherly heart. "Love is the fulfilling of the law;" without this all our professions and knowledge are vain. Eld. Hazen was among our hearers while in Albany, and we feel a pleasure in the remembrance of our interview with him.

On our return to Philadelphia, we spent the first Sabbath in May in the city of New York, and preached three times in the American Hall; but the day was one of the most rainy of the season, so that few attended.

Now, after an absence of six weeks, we are once more at home in our "own hired house." Our Heavenly Father has kindly watched over us in our travels, so that no harm has befallen us in passing over near a thousand miles by steam power. He has brought us to our habitation in peace, and preserved ours in safety during the period of our absence; and we now desire to record His loving-kindness and tender mercy. To Him be glory and praise through Jesus Christ, His Son, our Saviour and Hope.

THE TRUE WESLEYAN—IMMORTALITY.

Since our last paper went to press, the Editor of the True Wesleyan has commenced a series of articles on "The Immortality of the Soul." In the first article he stated the reasons for discussing the question, and the conditions on which replies would be admitted into the Wesleyan: one of those conditions was, if the respondent be an editor he shall publish both sides in his paper. We had a personal and friendly interview with the Editor of the Wesleyan, and an understanding that we were to republish in the Examiner no more of his articles than we might be disposed to reply to. With this arrangement we left our response to his article "No. 2," with him, on our way to Boston. Soon after we arrived at Boston we received a note from the Editor of the Wesleyan, saying that he had concluded to have his articles stereotyped, and make a book of them; and as such a work should contain a reply to all the objections urged against his views, and as those replies would most naturally arise out of his rejoinders to ours, he desired that we should first publish in the Examiner, and then he would copy from our paper and respond when through with his regular course of argument: this would enable him, with least expense, to stereotype his rejoinders to complete the book. We wrote him in reply, that we did not wish to oppose any obstacle in the way of his book being got up in the way most convenient to himself; but still, thought his new proposition would give him a double advantage: first, the influence of his entire argument would be on the minds of the readers of the Wesleyan before the first of my replies would appear; and then, second, each of my articles was to be accompanied with his rejoinder to prevent the minds of his readers from losing whatever impression his series of articles might have made; and besides, the time that would elapse from the time his articles were published to the appearance of mine, would make it necessary for me to quote more from his than if they followed immediately. Under these considerations we requested him to return the article we left him, and now present our readers with his article from the Wesleyan, of March 24th, with our reply: it is as follows:

THE IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.—NO. II.

THE IMMATERIALITY OF THE SOUL.

The Scriptures alone can certainly and satisfactorily settle the question before us, in the minds of christians, yet there may be arguments drawn from reason and philosophy which have much force; and as these may assist in coming at a right understanding of the Scriptures, we will commence with them, and close with a direct appeal to the Bible. We will commence with the spiritual nature of the soul. The soul or mind is not matter but spirit, and of course forms no part of the body. This raises an important issue with one class who deny the immortality of the soul. There are some who deny the existence of a soul or spirit in man, to be contradistinguished from the body, and insist that what we call the mind is a mere function of the brain, and that the brain itself is intelligent.

So far as the researches of philosophy extend, there are but two primary substances in the universe, and these are MATTER and SPIRIT. All we know of these substances is certain properties and phenomena which they exhibit. Matter is known to possess the properties of Impenetrability, Extension, Figure, Divisibility, Indestructibility, Inertia, Attraction. Spirit is that which thinks, perceives, remembers, reasons, wills, and is susceptible of love, hatred, joy and grief. The former of these properties are found in our bodies, in common with all other matter; the latter constitute the phenomena of the mind. It is not reasonable to suppose that properties so opposite to each other, inhere in the same substance, and the only rational conclusion is that matter is not mind, and that mind is not matter. There must therefore be in man an intelligent spirit, which forms no part of the body, and this is what we call the soul. We reason upon the modern and generally admitted principles of natural philosophy, and unless we are greatly mistaken, the whole system of philosophy will have to be exploded to invalidate our arguments.

The admitted properties of matter, and the admitted properties of mind, cannot inhere in, and be essential properties of the same substance. A few illustrations will make this plain. The body is matter, every part of it is matter; the bones are matter, the flesh is matter, the blood is matter, the nerves are matter, the brain is matter, and all the secretions are matter, every part is matter, and the whole is matter, and to every part and to the whole belong the properties of matter above described. Where these properties inhere, as they do in the body, the properties of mind cannot inhere.

Inertia, which is an essential property of matter, cannot inhere in the same substance with will or volition, which is an essential property of mind. Inertia is that property in matter which renders it incapable of self-motion, or self-action; matter acting only as it is acted upon: will or volition is that property of mind which renders it capable of self-determination and self-action. Now as matter can only act as it is acted upon, and as mind has the power of self-action, they cannot be the same substance.—matter cannot be mind, mind cannot be matter. Again, matter can only be moved by physical force; matter acts on matter by contact, and one material body cannot act on another material body, only as their surfaces come in contact; but mind is acted upon by motives, and acts from motives, and mind acts on mind through the medium of motives without physical contact. This proves as clear as a sun-beam that matter and mind are not the same.

To insist in opposition to the above view, that mind is matter; that intelligence and volition are its inherent properties, and consequently that man has no soul, which forms no part of his body, must subvert the admitted principles of philosophy. Philosophy insists that inertia is an essential property of matter; man's body is matter, as shown above, and yet it exhibits locomotive powers, and is seen acting without any visible agent acting upon it, and hence the doctrine of the inertia of matter must be given up, or we must admit that there is a rational soul inhabiting in the body, which controls it, moves it, and guides it. We see a steam engine in motion, and we know that the power of motion does not reside in any part of the machine; that it acts only as it is acted upon. We know that the steam propels it, but we know at the same time that the steam acts only as it is acted upon; that there is an intelligent, reasonable agent that directs the whole.

So with the body; it is an animal machine, the bones are studs and braces to support the frame, and are levers for the purpose of mechanical action; the muscles, by their contractions and distensions, operate on the bones and set the machinery in motion; but the muscles have no intelligence, or volition, and when the machine is in order, they are under the control of, and are guided by the mind. The foot or hand cannot will to move; the eye cannot will to open or shut. This our own consciousness proves. Let any man try to will with his foot or hand; and his own consciousness, which is the highest proof possible, will tell him that there is no power to will in his foot or hand. Man can will, and may be conscious of willing to move his foot, but at the same time he is conscious that his foot does not will, and that he does not will with his foot, but that he, his mind, wills concerning it. The muscles are put in motion by a power superior to themselves, which must be intelligent. Now what is this power? Those who deny that man has a soul, which is no part of the body, and which is an immaterial spirit, say that the brain is this self-determining, controlling and guiding power. This we deny on the ground that it is matter, and only matter, and possesses only the properties and powers of matter. If it be said that there is something in or associated with the brain which is not matter, which is superior to matter, the whole argument is given up, for that is just what we contend for, and that superior something which is not matter, we call the soul. If it be said that the brain is only matter, then however refined it may be, it possesses only the properties of matter, one of which is inertia, directly the reverse of self-operation. The brain then cannot act only as it is acted upon, and we come back to the question, what is this superior power that sets the muscles in motion, when we will to move the foot or the hand? If it now be said that it is the brain, we ask what power acts upon the brain, causing it to act on the muscles? The brain being matter, can act only as acted upon. We have then got to give up the first principles of Natural Philosophy, or seek for some higher cause of the phenomenon of motion. We allow that the muscles operate on the bones, that the brain operates on the muscles, through the nerves, all the nerves and spinal marrow terminating in the brain; but we insist at the same time, that there is an intelligent soul which acts on the brain, or it would never act. This doctrine being admitted, the phenomena of matter and mind are made to harmonize without involving any philosophical contradiction, or absurdity; deny it, and the principles of natural philosophy, which past ages have developed and matured, are thrown back into chaos, and we have to begin, de novo, and grope our way in search of first principles.

The above view accords with our own consciousness. Every man is conscious of thinking, but we are not conscious of thinking with any part of our body, not even the brain. That the head is the seat of the intelligence, no rational man can doubt; we are conscious that the thinking operation is carried on within the head, but no man is conscious that his brains think. The rational soul is mysteriously united to the body, and the brain is doubtless the point of union, and constitutes the medium through which the soul holds communion with the physical world without. The fact that this union is mysterious constitutes no objection, for if we deny it, there will be as great a mystery involved in the idea that the whole mental phenomena is the result of properties inherent in matter, and found only in the brain, in contradistinction from all other matter.

RESPONSE TO ARTICLE "No. II."

BR. LEE.—As you have kindly granted me the use of the Wesleyan to respond to your articles on Immortality. I hope to do you the justice to keep to the conditions you have specified in your last number; and I earnestly pray that the Father of Lights may give us both understanding, and guide us into truth. Whatever may be the result of our controversy, I truly desire that we may be able so to conduct it as to show that we can, if we must, differ in love.

The philosophical part of the question interests me but little, and hence, upon that part, I shall probably say but little. I perfectly agree with you that "the Scriptures alone can settle the question before us." The facts of inspiration must determine what is the constitution of man. Philosophers have never yet come to an agreement among themselves on this subject; and their speculations may well be termed "legion." Their imaginings have mainly grown out of the notion that there are "two substances;" though in that they were not always agreed. Bishop Berkly, it seems, adopted the notion which amounts to this, viz: "matter does not exist." Berkly, indeed, calls man a substance, but then he is an incorporeal substance. He, and Plato before him, regarded motion and intellect as real and independent existences, and not as qualities of matter; this doubtless led him to his conclusion as to the non-existence of matter, inasmuch as we see neither motion nor intellect except in connection with matter. Locke declares, we do not know what matter is; and endeavors to prove from this fact, that we do know what immaterial substance is! Truly, "the world by wisdom knew not" man, any more than it did "God."

The Double Substance theory is that from which you reason on the question under discussion. So far as I am concerned, I wish it understood that what constitutes the being of God does not enter into this controversy. We agree "THAT HE IS," but what He is, beyond the fact that He is Spirit, I shall not attempt to define. Whatever He is, it proves nothing as to what man is.

You tell us, "so far as the researches of philosophy extend, there are but two primary substances in the universe, and these are matter and spirit." The term "primary" implies secondary "substances." What are these? Are they neither matter nor spirit? Among your definitions of matter is "indestructibility; but you say "every part of the body is matter." Do you really believe "every part of the body" is "indestructible?"

Again, are electricity and light matter? and do they possess the property of "inertia?" "The whole system of philosophy" is "exploded" if the properties of matter, as you have defined them, pertain not to these.

"Inertia, which is an essential property of matter," you tell us, "cannot inhere in the same substance with will or volition, which is an essential property of mind." But, is it not a fact, that the mind "inheres" in the "brain," which, you say, is "matter?" and hence, is it not a fact, that mind, will and volition, "inhere" in matter?

You say again—"Inertia is that property in matter which renders it incapable of self-motion, or self-action," &c. Is this true of light, of magnetism, and electricity? If not, does not your argument fail?

It appears to me that you have given the properties of what philosophers term "inanimate matter," and not matter organized, or living matter; and hence I think you do not reason conclusively on this point.

If light, magnetism, and electricity be spirit, and not matter, then "attraction" is not only the property of matter, but mind, or spirit also. "Matter," you say, "can be moved only by physical force." But the muscles move, or contract and expand, it is said, by nervous power. Do the nerves exert a physical force? If so, what sends the electric current along the nerves? Do you say, "it is the will." If so, as "matter can be moved only by physical force," must not the will be physical? that is, must it not be matter?

Once more, you say—"Matter acts on matter by contact, and one material body has no power to act on another material body, only as their surfaces come in contact." But, does not matter act on matter without contact of surface? The sun, millions of miles from the earth, acts with tremendous "force" on it. And do not all the planets act on one another without contact? According to the philosophy upon which you base your argument, mind can do no more. "This proves," if not as "clear as a sun beam," yet, clear enough, "that matter and mind are" modifications of "the same." Br. Lee being judge: and thus you "subvert the admitted principles of philosophy." Does "philosophy insist that inertia is an essential principle of" organized "matter?" If so, it is false philosophy.

Br. Lee says, "We are not conscious of thinking with the brain." Are we conscious of thinking without our brain? For my part, I am just as conscious of thinking with my brain as of seeing with my eyes; or, as I am conscious of walking with my legs. But suppose I had not that consciousness, would that any more prove I did not think with my brain, than it would prove my stomach did not digest my food because I am not conscious of that? The brain, by excessive study, becomes fatigued and pained; and we are conscious of using our brain when we think; and when it becomes affected by disease, we feel an inability to think.

We again repeat, that the darkness philosophy has thrown over this subject, arises from the Double Substance theory; and this principle is in opposition to the relation in Genesis, where God is considered, not as an immaterial substance, but simply as an "ETERNAL BEING, who by his will condensed that which constitutes heaven and earth, and communicates to matter, motion and life." No philosopher has ever been able to give even a tolerable definition of his fancied "immaterial substance;" the expression itself is without meaning, and an evident contradiction of ideas; and since the idea of substance contains the idea of matter, ought not the expression "immaterial substance" to be rejected from Philosophy?

In conclusion,—If the philosophy upon which your reasoning is founded be true, that "inertia is that property in matter which renders it incapable of self-motion or self-exertion;" and, in order to these manifestations, there must be added "spirit," or an immaterial substance, without which "self-determination and self action" would be impossible; then, does it not follow, that all animals, birds, reptiles, insects, fishes, and the smallest animalculæ, possess "spirit," or the immaterial substance, as really as man? for they all are "capable of self-motion, or self-exertion." Shall we not rather conclude that the Infinite, Eternal, and Self-existent Being, who is the Creator of all things, has power to organize matter so as to impart to it life, and endow it with "self-determination and self-action," without the fancied immaterial substance?

Yours truly, in the Gospel of Christ, with much esteem,

GEORGE STORRS.

FUTURE STATES.

By REV. REGINALD COURTENAY, A. M.

ON THE INTERMEDIATE STATE.

Let us now turn to St. Paul, 1 Cor. xv. "The trumpet shall sound, the dead shall be raised incorruptible; this mortal shall assume immortality. Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O Death, where is thy sting, O HADES, where is thy victory!" Here the apostle exults over Hades and Death together, because God, he knew, would on his appointed day rescue the souls of men from their dark dominion; and make an utter end of those evil powers, who, in the strength of sin, had reigned for a time over mankind. And it would appear from his language that the victory of Hades over the soul is as complete as that of death. But if there be an intermediate consciousness, and for the redeemed an interval of most blissful rest, Hades has no victory at all. Death may conquer the body, but Hades, so far from subduing the soul, would actually liberate it from a heavy burden and bondage, and promote "the glorious liberty of the children of God." St. Paul however declares that Death and Hades now reign together: nevertheless, knowing that they shall hereafter be cast together into the "lake of fire," and that an interval of death and unconsciousness, to be terminated on the last Day, is but a momentary decease, and scarcely to be regarded as an evil, he anticipates the final triumph, and exults over them as already subdued. For Hades may be deemed to have no captives, unless she can bind them in everlasting chains.

Departing saints are sometimes known to triumph, in the hour of dissolution, as if their victory were already won. And Christians who "have fought the good fight" are certainly not forbidden thus to triumph, although it be not till the Last Day that Death is swallowed up in victory. For the interval will not be felt; no train of thought will disturb the deep sleep of the dead, sickening the soul with hope deferred: but they shall find that Scripture realised to them, "It is appointed unto men once to die;—and after this the judgment."

Death and Hades however are still permitted to reign; and are destined to exert their destroying power till the end of the world. At the opening of the "fourth seal" in the Apocalypse, St. John "Beheld a pale horse, and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hades followed with him. And power was given to them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth." Here is Hades painted as one going forth to devour and destroy, in league with death. In the same book they are again coupled together, in their present subjection to the Son of Man, and in their final fate. "He hath the keys of Hades and Death," to unlock their dark gates on the predestined day; and when he executes the judgments committed to him, they shall be together cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death," and be themselves destroyed. Shortly before this, in the vision of St. John, the "sea gave up the dead that were in it, and Death and Hades (the supposed abode of living souls) delivered up the dead which were in them."

Still more numerous are the passages of the Old Testament, wherein death and Hell,—in the Hebrew Sheol, in the Greek Hades,—are mentioned together, not as if Hades were a pleasant place of refuge for the disembodied souls, the victims of death, but as if the two were conjoined in the work of destruction. See Job xxvi. 6. Prov. xv. 11, xxvii. 20. Hab. ii. 5.

It cannot be pretended that Hades is the place or state of the body merely—or indeed of the body at all. While the body moulders into dust and is scattered to the four winds, the soul is in Hades. "Thou wilt not leave my soul in Hades, nor suffer thy Holy One to see corruption," was David's prophecy concerning Christ. If in any passage of Scripture the body should seem to be in Hades, it is because a locality is given to Hades which does not in strictness belong to it; and it is then placed in the grave. Thought can have no locality: "one might as well say of a disembodied spirit that it is hard or heavy; or a cubic foot in dimensions, as to say that it is here or there." Hades has no more locality than has Death; though both are in Scripture occasionally localized, or personified. But because the body descends into the grave, and will rise again from the grave, the man, body, and soul, is said to do the same. "All men shall rise again, with their bodies;" and before resurrection the dead are said to "dwell in dust;" to "sleep in the dust of the earth." Yet it is plain, that the instant that mysterious tie is severed which connects the body and soul, all that gave locality to mind is wholly lost. When therefore it is said, that on the return of the body to the dust, "the spirit returns to God who gave it," we ought not to imagine, as some do, an ascent of the spirit towards the skies; but simply an assertion of the fact, that the spirit, which when given by the Creator, and detached, as it were, from Him, constituted a living creature, has now reverted back to him who gave it, and become, not by change of place, but of ownership, His property again.

Our Lord declared that as Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so should he himself be three days and nights in the heart of the earth. Here the heart of the earth is simply put in opposition to the belly of the whale, and the words do not differ essentially from those of the more usual prediction that our Lord should be three days in the grave. We read also that our Lord "descended into the lower parts of the earth." But no stress can be laid on this, inasmuch as it is not evident that the earth itself is not intended, which in comparison of heaven is termed, the lower (parts or regions.) ta katotera tes ges: as where Isaiah says, "Sing, O ye heavens; shout, ye lower parts of the earth."

The mention that is occasionally made in Scripture of an abyss, deep or bottomless pit, as the abode of certain spirits, and of the soul of Christ during its separation from the body, deserves consideration in relation to this point. This abyss appears to be the same as Hades, and to be a place wherein spirits are confined. Hence proceeded the locusts of the Apocalypse, and perhaps also Apollyon their king, and hence also the beast, on whom sat the Babylonish idolatress. It is probably a place of confinement for spirits, wherein they are prevented from all exercise of their powers. "I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand, and he laid hold on * * Satan and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the abyss, and shut him up and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more." And it is the same as Hades, for this fate of Satan seems to be precisely that of the rebellious angels of St. Peter and St. Jude. Moreover we know that our Lord descended into Hades; and St. Paul writes, "who shall descend into the deep,—the abyss—that is, to bring up Christ from the dead." That it is a place of confinement would appear also from the intreaty of the Legion of demons to our Lord, that he would allow them to go into the herd of swine, and not command them into the abyss. Now the confinement of a spirit seems to be the same as the destruction of all his consciousness; if the mind be reduced to inactivity, all its thoughts perish, activity being of the very essence of thought.* But this imprisonment in Hades, whether of the human soul, or of an evil spirit, need not be local, inasmuch as thought is not local. Strictly speaking, the spirit or soul or life of man neither moves upwards to God and heaven nor downwards to the grave. The union of mind with matter alone can give locality; and it is this union imagined or foreseen, that has occasioned those Scriptural expressions—to "dwell in the dust,"—to "rise again with their bodies."† But these expressions would not have been used, this union during the intermediate state would not have been supposed, unless the condition of the disembodied soul harmonized with that of the body, so that when the one was buried, the other also could be said to sleep, and to be in "a land of darkness."

Again, we may learn something concerning Hades, from the fact that our blessed Lord himself descended into it, and on the third day rose again from the dead. It is evident from Scripture, that the death which our Lord endured did not wholly terminate with his passion on the cross. God raised him up, "having loosed the pains of death, because it was not possible that he should be holden of it." And the heart of Christ was to rejoice, and his flesh to rest in hope, because the Father would not "leave his soul in Hades, nor suffer his Holy One to see corruption." Now inasmuch as it was an infinite condescension in our Lord to take upon him our nature, and subject himself to the burden of the flesh, what were the PAINS OF DEATH to him, what the triumph of his resurrection, if death had merely relieved him of the burden of the flesh, and enabled his liberated soul to pass into rest and glory? How was corruption obviated by his resumption of that body of flesh which he had laid down on the Cross? Some are accustomed to say, that the glory of the resurrection of the saints at the Last Day will mainly consist in the investiture of their souls with glorified, spiritual bodies. But Christ took again the body in which he suffered. Again, "Christ being risen from the dead, it is said, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him." Death then had dominion over him, until he "rose again from the dead." But for this resurrection the Holy One would, like David, have seen corruption; corruption would have had dominion not over a mere frame of flesh, but over that holy soul in which was no sin. Christ laid down on the cross all that life, which his Incarnation and Nativity had given him,—his human body and soul. "I lay down MY LIFE: I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again."

And what signify those sublime words, "I am he that liveth, and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore."‡ And, "In that he died, he died unto sin once, but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God." Shall we make them mean, "I lay down my body; I have power to lay it down, and resume it." "I am he that am embodied, and was disembodied, and behold I am embodied for evermore." "In that he parted with his body, he died unto sin once, but in that he hath it again, he liveth unto God." Rather we should believe, that our blessed Lord parted with his human soul; parted with that life itself, whereby he now liveth. If his resurrection from the dead had been merely the taking his body again, it would have been no more a victory over death, than was his incarnation; or at least no more than was the creation of Adam from the lifeless dust of the ground. But Hades grasped a human soul; and that, was wrenched from her dark dominion.

* Thus in Rev. xvii. 8, it is written, "The beast which thou sawest was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition." Now if by perdition is meant everlasting punishment in the lake of fire, everlasting consciousness, it would seem that there is no consciousness till the beast passes from the abyss, and goes into perdition. The expression, "is not," may however merely signify, "is no longer upon earth."

† And to that remarkable passage above quoted—"Many bodies of the sleeping saints, (recumbent, reclinant saints), arose, and came out of their graves."

And so glorious was this victory over Hades, that in reference to this Christ is spoken of as the Son of God. He is termed, "the first begotten from the dead," he was "declared to be the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead;" and we are told that "God hath fulfilled his promises of mercy, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is written in the second Psalm, 'Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.'" Thus also, "they who are accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead; cannot die any more, and are equal to the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection;" and are said to "groan within themselves, waiting for the adoption,—to wit, the redemption of the body;" for "the manifestation of the Sons of God."

Had the victory been gained on the cross, our Lord's last words would have been those of exultation; sounds of joy and triumph would have filled the heavens, as at the nativity; and angels would have bidden the disciples to weep no more, cheering them as they did on the third day. And the bodies of the saints which slept need not have been detained in their graves until after his resurrection; but at once appearing unto many, might have testified to the subjugation of death.

Some persons are inclined to believe, that our Lord, when he entered the realms of Hades, entered as a conqueror; bringing into these desolate shades a light and life not their own; nay, proclaiming in them that gospel which his apostles afterwards preached on earth. They refer to the words of St. Peter,—"Christ was put to death in the flesh, but quickened in the spirit; by the which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison, which sometime were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited, in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing." But all that St. Peter asserts is, that our Lord preached to the spirits in prison by the same spirit by which he was quickened; not by any means that he preached while he was numbered among the dead. And indeed, if there be meaning in words, the quick are not to be confounded with the dead; but to be "quickened" is to be raised again from the dead; which happened to our Lord not on the cross, but on the third day after his crucifixion. Then it was that the quickening spirit of immortal life, which utterly abhors and is incompatible with the state of death, visited and reanimated his mortal soul.

Let us consider too by what means Christ triumphed over death. Even by first submitting to death. He "tasted death for every man;" and "through death subdued him that had the power of death." He drank this bitter cup, and drained its very dregs, that the vials of wrath might not be poured out upon guilty men. Whatever gloom then there was in Hades before the advent of Christ, into that gloom he entered; whatever were the "pains of death" for the worst of sinners, those pains he underwent; nay, whatever would have been the utmost tyranny of Hades and Death over men, but for his mediation, to that Christ for a time succumbed. By no less a sacrifice could he have accomplished his great design of subduing death, by first submitting to death.* To suppose that the grave was a more lightsome place to him than it is, or would have been, to the worst of sinners, is to forget the price which was paid for redemption; and to leave room for the conscience-stricken sinner to dread lest he should be excluded from the benefits of the resurrection, since so dark a death as his had not been undergone by the Saviour. By first enduring all, Christ overcame all. Not in descending into the abyss, but in ascending up on high, he led captivity captive. Hades did not acknowledge him as a conqueror till on the third day he broke her bonds asunder, and cast away her cords from him; and mounted his eternal throne on "the holy hill of Zion."

No more inappropriate season for preaching could possibly be imagined, than that which is arbitrarily chosen for the publication of the gospel to the "imprisoned spirits." That they were in Hades at the time we have indeed ample reason to believe; but they were then as it were in the condemned cells, beyond the reach of reprieve, and waiting till they should be summoned from the bottomless pit, to go into perdition.

The doctrine of redemption through Christ's suffering of death, as well as the express language of the New Testament concerning Hades, confirms that testimony of the Jewish Scriptures which makes of Hades a land of darkness, and where all things are forgotten; a place wherein "the living know that they shall die" the dead "know not any thing." Spirits condemned and under confinement,—the souls of men while subject to the dominion of death,—and the proud city that was to sink to utter ruin and desolation, are alike said to be cast down to Hades, because they are all alike subjected to the Power of Destruction, have gone into darkness, silence, and death; and have become as though they were not. But still their souls are safe, still they live unto God, who have died in faith; even in the faith of Abraham, whose belief was "in God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not, as though they were."

[We by no means endorse every expression in the foregoing article, though the general view is correct. ED. EXAMINER.]

* The death to which Adam became liable through his transgression is said to be temporal, spiritual, and eternal, the latter being sometimes held to include the suffering of eternal fire. But erroneously, for not only is the latter punishment a consequence of resurrection unto damnation, not of death; but, had this been a part of the original curse, our Lord, we may venture to believe, must have descended into the flames of Gehenna itself, in order to rescue man, by "tasting of death for him."

ROME.—THE INTERVENTION AND ITS TERMS.

Letters from Florence of the 10th inst. state that a French steamer from Gaëta had landed the Secretary of the French Legation at Rome at Civita Vecchia, and that he had immediately left for the capital. He was said to be the bearer of the ultimatum of the foreign powers for the reestablishment of the Pope. It appears that a simultaneous movement has been arranged between the powers; the French were to occupy Civita Vecchia, and Ancona; the Austrians, Ferrara; the Neapolitans, the frontier. On the arrival of the steamer from Gaëta, another steamer was immediately dispatched to Toulon with orders, it was said, to embark the expeditionary force. Civita Vecchia was being fortified.

The Postivo of Rome states that the following are some of the terms imposed by France and England on the Pope as the conditions on which they will aid his return to Rome: A general amnesty, a complete secular Government, inviolability of political liberty, abolition of the holy office and ecclesiastical tribunals except in the matter of the Clergy, and the suppression of proprietary religious orders.

SECRETS OF THE INQUISITION.

The correspondent of the Daily News describes a visit he had paid to the many small, dark, and damp dungeons of the Inquisition. The building is out of the beaten track, being in a sort of cul de sac behind St. Peter's. The dungeons, and all their apparatus, are to be thrown open to the inspection of the public, and will furnish a sight not likely to recommend priestly rule to the people. The correspondent says: The officer in charge led me down to where the men were digging in the vaults below; they had cleared a downward flight of steps, which was choked up with old rubbish, and had come to a series of dungeons under the vaults deeper still, and which immediately brought to my mind the prisons of the Doge under the canal of the Bridge of Sighs at Venice, only that here there was a surprising horror.

I saw imbedded in old masonry, unsymmetrically arranged, five skeletons in various recesses, and the clearance had only just begun; the period of their insertion in this spot must have been more than a century and a half. From another vault full of skulls and scattered human remains there was a shaft about four feet square ascending perpendicularly to the first floor of the building, and ending in a passage off the hall of the chancery, where a trap-door lay between the tribunal and the way into a suite of rooms destined for one of the officials. The object of this shaft could admit of but one surmise. The ground of the vault was made up of decayed animal matter, a lump of which I found imbedded in it a long silken lock of hair, as I found by personal examination as it was shovelled up from below. But that is not all: there are two large subterranean lime-kilns, if I may so call them, shaped like a beehive in masonry, filled with layers of calcined bones, forming the substratum of two other chambers on the ground-floor in the immediate vicinity of the very mysterious shaft above mentioned.—[It must be remembered that of late the power of the Holy Inquisition, even in Rome, was greatly fallen from its former high estate.]

BR. ELON EVERTS, Vergennes, Vt., writes:

BR. STORRS:—The Examiner is what the community here need. I am glad to see that such honest hearted, bold, influential men as Elder Bates and Hand are investigating the doctrines advocated in your paper. I am glad that Br. Walsh has no mean competitor. Mr. Brewster will probably mount the highest rampart, and ply the largest guns that his side can afford, but when his bulwark falls, (for error can't stand) it seems that the way will be cleared for him to join the victors, and lead on the host that has been shielding themselves behind the same untempered mortared wall. Truth is mighty and it will prevail.

Yours in Christian bonds.

BR. N. M. CATLIN, Kingsbury, Ind., writes:

BR. STORRS:—The Truth is spreading in these parts: people are investigating. I have disposed of all the "Six Sermons," which I ordered a short time since. I shall, I think, soon order more, and thus help spread the light of truth.

THE NEW WORK.—"The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment," by H. H. DOBNEY, Baptist Minister, England, is the very best work on the End of the Wicked we have ever seen. It is written in the kindest spirit, and cannot give offence to any. Though kind, it is clear, uncompromising and overwhelming against the popular theory of natural immortality and endless misery; and demonstrating, so far as argument can do it, that utter destruction is the punishment of wicked and unrepenting men. Put this work into the hands of all who will read, not forgetting ministers of all sects and parties. It contains 288 pages, 12mo. Price 75 cts. bound, or 50 in paper covers; this last, only, can be sent by mail. For each dollar, current money, sent us free of expense, we will send two copies of it and pre-pay the postage on them; or, we will send three without pre-paying the postage where the Post Masters will allow them to be thus sent. Since the notice we published in the Advent Harbinger, we find that the Post Offices are not uniform in requiring the postage to be pre-paid. In New York City they demanded it, and would not forward them without; but, we find, on our return home, that the Post Office in Philadelphia makes no such demand; so that we can do it or not, as those who order the work may desire.

One-third discount will be made to those who purchase six or more copies, if current money is sent us. Cash, always, with the order.

DEPOSITORIES OF BOOKS.—Dobney on "The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment," reprinted from the English edition, may be had in Boston, Mass., of Geo. T. Adams, 87 Hanover St., Hat and Cap Store; Lowell, Mass., of Eld. M. Bates, Chapel St., one door above Elm; Albany, N. Y., at Christian Publication Office, No. 8 Commercial Buildings; New York City, of Dr. John Burdett, Dentist, No. 2 Union Place, and of Henry P. Johnson, No. 327 Hudson St.; Rochester, N. Y., of Eld. Joseph Marsh, Advent Harbinger Office.

All orders sent us, at Philadelphia, Pa., for Dobney, to be forwarded by Express, will be sent to New York City, without expense, going north, east or west.

Our "Six Sermons" can be had, as above, of Eld. Marsh Eld. Bates, Geo. T. Adams, and Dr. Burdett.

BUSINESS NOTICES.—Eld. EVERTS. We have sent C. W. Sperry's paper regularly to Bristol, Vt., this year. We now send also to "Charles Sperry, Plainfield, N. H.," as you request. Shall we continue to send to both names? We shall, unless you direct otherwise.

James P. Compton. The "five dollars" your letter purports to contain is not received. Post Master says there is no help for us. The papers and 40 copies of Six Sermons, 12mo., are sent same as if we had received the money.

S. A. Chapin. All the papers and Sermons have been sent as you desired, and also 8 copies Six Sermons, 12mo., to you.

Eli Cross. We should have paid the postage on the first that you ordered of Dobney—by mistake it was neglected—it is paid on the last. Charge us with the first.

Dr. M. Helm. We have sent you twelve copies of Dobney, James Carless. Books sent as directed: one-third discount on them: $1.32 still due you.

James Donelson. Four of Dobney's work were sent you in our absence; we have sent another copy since our return.

If any errors have occurred in answering orders in our absence, send the word, at our expense, and we will make all right.

Our Examiner for June will not go to press till the middle of that month.

Our Hymn Book is not yet published; we have not the means to do it. E. Miller, Jr., pledges to take 75 copies. Who next?

TRUE WESLEYAN—IMMORTALITY.

A REVIEW, BY DR. J. T. WALSH.

No. I.

At the request of a friend, I undertake to review the philosophical part of Mr. Lee's argument in favour of natural immortality. I desire the reader to consider this article as a continuation of Br. Storrs' argument, in reply to Mr. Lee's "No. 2," which appeared in the last Examiner. I shall also review Mr. Lee's Scriptural argument, although I consider that my friend Mr. Brewster has managed that part of the subject as well as any one can do it. I expect nothing more conclusive from Mr. Lee; and, indeed, there is nothing new in his philosophical argument; and, if left to my choice, I should pass it in silence; but as some of my friends think a review necessary, at their suggestion I write. And now to the argument:

1. Mr. Lee proceeds to give us the properties of matter, and all he says about the essential properties of matter, is just as applicable to a stone as to any part of the human body. He gives us the essential properties of inanimate matter, and finding no consciousness, no reason, no intelligence in this, he rushes to the illogical and unphilosophical conclusion, that organized living matter cannot think! This foundation—his starting point, is wrong, and his superstructure worthless. The question is, not whether a stone can think, but whether a living man, organized from the elements of nature, thinks by his brain. When Mr. Lee has proved that thought is not an essential property of matter, he has gained nothing. I can prove that sound is not an essential property of a musical instrument, but what will that prove? Will it prove that the harmony of sounds is not dependant upon the organization of the wind (or other musical) instrument? Take the wood of which an instrument is made, and there is no music in it. Let it be organized, and yet there is no music. What is the reason? Why music is not an essential property of wood; this is matter, and there is no music in matter; what is wanting now to produce the "concord of sweet sounds?" We must have the atmosphere, for where there is no atmosphere sound cannot be produced. But the atmosphere is matter, and there is no music in matter? Ah, says Mr. Lee, an intelligent mind is necessary to the production of sound. Yes; but there is no music in the mind. The mind has the power of producing what is not an essential property of itself. And it has the faculty of appreciating the harmony of sounds produced. Now for the application of this illustration: There is no sound, or harmony of sounds, in an instrument, none in the atmosphere, and none in the mind; but, by combining the three we have what was not in either separately. So, there may be no thought, no reason, no intelligence in inanimate matter; but when that matter is organized, as we see it in man, who will affirm it cannot manifest thought? But it may be objected that, in the case supposed, there is an intelligent mind operating upon the instrument and the atmosphere, producing the result.

Let us take another, then; and we will suppose the case of a watch. There is no time in the materials of which a watch is made; and, yet, when organized by an intelligent mind, it will indicate the hour, minute, and second. The maker winds it up, and it continues to perform its functions until it runs down. So with man; there may be no reason, or thought in the component parts of his constitution separately considered; but when organized, and put in motion by the spirit of life in the atmosphere, breathed into his nostrils by his Maker, he awakes to consciousness, to thought and reason.

Mr. Lee has not to be informed, I trust, that by combining, chemically combining, two substances, a third can be produced, possessing none of the properties of the two elements used. He has not to be informed, I hope, that man is chemically formed or organized; and that the light of analogy makes it highly probable, to say the least of it, that matter, thus chemically combined, is capable of manifesting mental functions.

2. Mr. Lee makes "indestructibility," an essential property of matter; perhaps he means annihilation; for "indestructibility" is certainly not a property of matter.

One word as to what Mr. Lee and other natural philosophers term the essential properties of matter. It must be evident to those who reflect, that philosophers have only given us the essential properties of some forms of matter; for Inertia is certainly not an essential property of all matter. We have no evidence that inertia is an essential property of light; on the contrary light seems to be self-moving and ever-acting. This is true of caloric, galvanism, electricity, and magnetism. May it not be true, in a much higher sense, of the aura that pervades the brain and nerves?

One word as to the use of terms. The word nature embraces all created things, animate and inanimate. Thus we have organized and unorganized nature. The organized is again divided into the vegetable and animal. Matter is nowhere in the scriptures, contrasted, or put in opposition to spirit. Spirit is not the antithesis of matter. Animal stands opposed to spirit. We use the term matter as expressive of that which is tangible, or of which the senses take cognizance. But matter exists in ten thousand forms, and is capable of almost endless combinations and sublimations. The term spirit, when used in relation to the wind, to man, and to angels, seems to express different modifications of matter. The word immaterial—not material, not matter, does not appear to be applicable to anything in the universe. But, for the sake of argument, let us suppose that there is an immaterial thing in existence; how will you prove it? You cannot see it, for if you can see it, it is no longer immaterial. You cannot smell it, nor hear it, nor feel it; it is not tangible to any of the senses; how, then, will you define it? The fact is, that which is immaterial has a name but no local habitation.

Matter may be regarded as embracing all that God has created, but under this generic term we have various orders, classes and species of matter; thus we have matter in its simple, or elementary form, then in its compound form, without regard to chemical affinity; then we have it chemically constituted, without relation to life; then in its organized form, in relation to vitality, as seen in the vegetable kingdom, and in the lowest orders of animalcule; then in its more refined and exalted form as we see it in the human constitution; and lastly, in its highest degree of refinement and sublimation, called spirit, of which the angelic nature is a specimen. God is alike the creator of all forms of matter; or, if Mr. Lee likes it better, he is the creator of matter and spirit; and why should we affirm intelligence of one and not of the other? How does Mr. Lee know that volition is an essential property of spirit? The fact is, he assumes this, and then argues that gross matter, no matter how organized, cannot think. If God has created beings purely spiritual, they must have been created before they were endowed with consciousness, volition and thought; and therefore thought, &c., would not be an essential property of spirit. Mr. Lee does not know the essential properties of all matter, and therefore cannot affirm that thought is not an essential property of some forms of matter. God who formed matter, can make of it what He wills to make; He can combine, refine and organize it in a thousand proportions and forms, with a view of its manifesting as many functions. From the same original elements of matter He can make a thousand different kinds of fruit—the orange, the apple, the pear, the cherry, &c., &c. Yet these are all matter, but how different their qualities? And as is the organization, so is the quality of the fruits whether of acidity or sweetness.

And so it is in the animal world. Out of matter God makes bones, muscles, ligaments, nerves of motion, nerves of sensation, arteries, veins, glands, &c. Here we have matter in various forms, and each form has its own peculiar function, which it possesses in virtue of its organization. The man, therefore who affirms that matter in none of its forms can think, neither understands what he says, nor whereof he affirms. I shall return to this question in my next article.

A REVIEW BY J. T. WALSH.—NO. II.

Mr. Lee says—"If matter can think, thought must be an essential property of matter, or it must be the result of some peculiar modification of matter, neither of which can be maintained. If thought be an essential property of matter, every part and particle of matter must think. If thought be essential to matter, what does not think is not matter."

Mr. Lee's logical powers fail him here, for it does not follow "if matter can think," that "thought must be an essential property of matter." The "essential property" of a thing is that "property" without which it cannot exist. Both matter and spirit can exist without thought, consequently thought is not an essential property of either. It is possible, however, for "thought to be the result of some peculiar modification of matter." But what sort of reasoning is this? "If thought be essential to matter, what does not think is not matter!" We might as well argue thus:

Inertia is an essential property of matter.

And that which does not possess this property is not matter.

But light, electricity, &c., do not possess inertia. Therefore they are not matter.

Thus according to the received principles of natural philosophy, we see that light, &c., is not matter; it must, therefore, be spirit, and consequently intelligent; for Mr. Lee holds thought, &c., to be an essential property of spirit; and then, according to his own mode of reasoning, "if thought be an essential property of" spirit, "every part and particle of" spirit "must think!" Thus his whole theory, when exhibited in the light of reason, vanishes into thin air.

Mr. Lee asks the question—"Is thought the result of some modification (of) matter?" His whole reasoning on this question amounts to this—that matter cannot think, because it is matter! This is the alpha and omega of his argument. Now, I ask Mr. Lee, what are the attributes of organized matter, in its various modifications? He answers—"Indestructibility, Divisibility, Impenetrability, Inertia," &c. This is not the whole answer; it does not meet the case. And the question recurs—what are the properties of matter? Now, in order to meet this question fully, let us state a few principles. And,

1st. Spirit is defined to be that which has the power of self-motion, volition, consciousness, thought, reason, and intelligence. And,

2d. Matter is defined as above. (See indestructibility, &c.) Now, we affirm that the true answer is not given in either case. Let us see. Here are four nerves: the function of one is to transmit sounds; the function of another is to transmit light; the function of another is to transmit odours, and the function of another is to transmit the sensation of taste. These nerves are matter, yet they have different properties. One will transmit sounds, but will not and cannot transmit light. This proves that matter may be so organized as to possess different functions. This is true not only of sound and sight, but of taste and smell. Here are two nerves; the one a nerve of motion, and the other a nerve of sensation. They have different functions, but they are both matter. In all this there is no addition to matter, nor subtraction from matter; but matter, by being modified in its organization, develops new properties and functions. There is no infidelity or atheism in this philosophy, for we maintain that matter only possesses those properties with which God has endowed it. Mr. Lee's argument, on this point, is all lost. Man is not God, and therefore it is presumption to argue from the nature of one to the nature of the other. The nature of God is unorganized, while the nature of all other beings is organic. This fact proves them to be material.

But let us come to the point more closely. It is admitted that man thinks, feels, and acts; but how does he do this? Mr. Lee says, "By his rational soul." That is, by his spirit or mind. Now, what are the functions or faculties of man? Let us look at them: Here is amativeness, or the sexual feeling. But this, according to Mr. Lee's philosophy, is not an essential property of matter; and therefore it belongs to the spirit or "rational soul." Here then we have mind, immateriality, immortality, desiring sexual intercourse. But, then, this function is not confined to man, but the whole animal world possesses the same. They, therefore, have the same "rational soul." Mr. Lee, perhaps, may say this is mere instinct. Very well, is instinct a property of matter? Here you are stranded again! Take another human faculty—love of offspring. Is this a function of matter, or spirit? Of matter it cannot be, according to Mr. Lee's theory; therefore it must be of spirit: so we have the "immortal spirit" exercising the parental function! And the beasts have the same faculty, therefore they have the same spirit!

Take another case. Man has the faculty of love, combativeness, destructiveness, love of gain, &c. &c. Are these functions of matter or spirit? Of matter they cannot be, according to Mr. Lee's theory; therefore they must be properties of spirit; and thus we have the "immaterial spirit" in love with human flesh, quarrelling, disputing, destroying, seeking gain, &c. &c.

But it may be said that the animal propensities are not attributes of the spirit; then, pray, of what are they attributes? Of matter? This would be fatal to your whole theory! For love, anger, sexual feeling, and the love of gain are not among your "essential properties of matter."

But if man possess an immortal mind; which is the seat of all the affections, moral and mental powers, of what use is the body? of what use is matter? of what use are the five senses? of what use is the brain? Just none at all! According to Mr. Lee's philosophy, a man is just as perfect without matter as with it; and, in fact, more perfect:—more perfect in the ratio that spirit is superior to matter! Of what use are impenetrability, divisibility, inertia, &c., in the economy of man? Matter is of no account. These are its only properties! away with it, it is not fit to live! yea, it does not, and cannot live! Man can live, and think, and reason; love, be amative, desire gain, hate and destroy without it! Certainly God degraded Himself by making anything out of it! Why did He create it? Why don't He annihilate it? Mr. Lee's hand and pen, which he uses in advocating error, are made of it. His mouth and organs of voice, which he uses in speaking, are made of it. What a pity! His Bible is made of matter, the baptismal element is matter, his paper is matter, his eyes are matter, his ears, his nose, his palate, his nerves, his lungs—they are all matter, merely possessing impenetrability, inertia, &c.! Of what account are they! Surely it was a work of supererogation to create them! The steam he uses in printing is matter, the locomotive is propelled by matter, the magnetic wire is matter, the electric fluid is matter! All is matter!

But, if man be in possession of immortality, he inherits it. And Mr. Lee says—"matter can only act as it is acted upon." Now look at the laws of generation. Here we have matter acting upon matter, producing what? Transmitting what? "Immateriality," says Mr. Lee. That which is material can give birth, then, to that which is immaterial! Matter can produce that which is not matter. 'But,' will Mr. Lee say, 'the mind begets mind—spirit begets spirit?' Then it has "divisibility" which is a property of matter? Man has the power of transmitting the elements of his own organization, and if immortality be a part of his organization, he can transmit this. This is self-multiplication—"divisibility"—matter!

Again, life itself is transmitted, together with diseases of various kinds. And here we come to a very important consideration, viz: That which has no constitutional function cannot be diseased. If matter therefore, in none of its forms and modifications, has any attributes or functions, it can never be diseased. And as the body of man is matter, it cannot be diseased! We never hear of marble or stone being diseased. The diamond is not subject to fever; but vegetables and animals, including man, are liable to disease and death.

We come back to the conclusion then, that organized matter is capable of manifesting a variety of functions, which are susceptible of derangement or disease.

But, upon Mr. Lee's hypothesis, disease cannot exist, for matter, having only the properties he ascribes to it, is not susceptible of disease, and immortality cannot be diseased; and, therefore, we come to the happy conclusion, that there is no such thing as disease! This is certainly the long-looked-for philosophers' stone!

But the truth is, all parts of man are subject to derangement, disease, and death; and still all is matter; but if the mind be "immaterial" or immortal, it can not be deranged or diseased. And here we leave this argument for the present.

In Mr. Lee's article No. 4, he introduces a long quotation from Mr. Watson, in which it is argued, that because "God is spirit" the mind of man is of the same nature. This argument is not only a lame one, but altogether out of place in this connection; so we shall merely observe respecting it,

1st. That the nature of God is not the subject of discussion.

2d. That God only hath immortality. And,

3d. That men are exhorted to seek for it, which would be absurd if they had it.

SCRIPTURAL PSYCHOLOGY—NO. II.

In Genesis xlii., 21, we read: "And they said one to another, we are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us, and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us." This is an allusion to Joseph's being sold by his brethren. They acknowledge their guilt. They tell us of "the anguish of his soul," when they were about to sell him to the Ishmaelites, and he "besought them not to do it. Did Joseph have an immortal soul, which was filled with "anguish" at the prospect of being sold? Immortal souls are not the subjects of "anguish;" they are incapable of sorrow or pain. We learn then that Joseph himself was filled with "anguish," and not his immortal soul.

In the 17th chapter, 14th verse, we have the following: "And the uncircumcised male-child, whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, that soul shall be cut off from his people." Here the term "soul" is evidently used as equivalent to "male-child," which, if uncircumcised was to be cut off from Israel.

In Genesis xii. 5th. we read of "the souls" Abram and Lot had "gotten in Haran." Again, "the king of Sodom said to Abram, give me the souls, and take the goods to thyself." Chap. xiv. 21.

"Esau took all the soyls of his house," and "went into the country from the face of his brother Jacob;" and these "souls" are defined as "his wives, his sons and his daughters." Chap. xxxvi. 6. The "souls" of Jacob by Leah—"all the souls of his sons and his daughters were thirty and three," xlvii. 15. By Zilpha, "sixteen souls;" by Rachel "fourteen souls;" by Bilhah "seven souls." "All the souls that came with Jacob into Egypt, who came out of his loins—were sixty and six." Now, if these were immortal souls they came "out of Jacob's loins," and, consequently, immortality is transmissible!

"Two souls were born to Joseph in Egypt;" are immortal souls "born" of the flesh? Men are born of corruptible seed; is that which is immortal and incorruptible, developed from a corruptible germ?

Having examined every passage, or nearly every one, in Genesis where the term soul occurs either in the common version or the original, I will now pass to Exodus. Chapter xii. 16. "And in the first day there shall be a holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be a holy convocation to you: no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every soul must eat, that only may be done by you." "Save that which every person or man 'may eat' is the proper rendering; and Webster so translates it:

Chapter xxiii. 9. "Also thou shalt not oppress a stranger; for ye know the soul of a stranger, seeing ye were strangers in the land of Egypt." Mr. Webster renders the term "soul;" in this passage, "heart." "Ye know the heart"—the feelings of a stranger.

Ch. xxx. 12. "When thou takest the sum of the children of Israel after their number, then shall they give every man a ransom for his soul to the Lord." A ransom for his life; and the reason is given—"that there may be no plague among them."

In chapter xxxi. 14, The Lord in speaking of the sabbath, says: "Whoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people." Here it signifies person. It has the same meaning in chap. xii. 15, also, in verse 4th, and in chap. xvi. 16. In chap. xxx. 15, where it speaks of making "atonement for souls," it signifies life. See also, 16th verse. The word soul occurs but seldom in Exodus; the above, I believe, are the principal places. Let us turn to Leviticus.

In the following places it is used for person or persons: iv. 2, 27; v. 1, 2, 4, 15, 17; vi. 2; vii. 11, 12; xii. 11; xiii. 30; xvi. 15, 43. In the 11th verse of this chapter, where the phrase—"and my soul shall not abhor you," it is used in reference to God, and is equivalent to "and I shall not abhor you." In the 17th chapter of Leviticus, 10th verse, we have the following: "And whatever man there may be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, that eateth any manner of blood, I will even set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people." It certainly requires no extraordinary perception to see the meaning of "soul" in the above sentence. What follows throws additional light on the psychology of man. "For the life of the flesh is in the blood: and I have given it to you upon the altar, to make an atonement for your souls," (your lives;) "for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul," or life.

Here we have the important truth, that "the life of the flesh is in the blood." The blood, so to speak, is the menstruum or vehicle of life. The blood, as we have elsewhere stated, is electric and magnetic, as an analysis of its constituent parts will show; but we shall not give an analysis of it at this time. When this position is denied, however, it shall be forthcoming.

Moses was a divine physiologist; he understood the Homœan philosophy, or philosophy of man, far better than Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, or any of the moderns, who ascribe life, intelligence, and every other mental attribute to an "immortal soul."

ON ATONEMENT.

Far be it from us, that we should be charmed away from the Cross of Christ by any human eloquence or philosophy. What is the doctrine of that Cross whence emanates the life-cry to a lost world? It is, that God has made the soul of his Son "an offering for our sins," Isa. 53: 10; that he has "laid on him the iniquity of us all," 6 v.; that "he bare the sin of many," 12 v.; that "he was wounded for our transgressions," and "bruised for our iniquities," 5 v. He was "cut off, but not for himself." Dan. 9: 26. If this language does not reveal the "vicarious" sufferings and death of the Son of God, which some persons affirm is a "pernicious doctrine," what confidence, I ask, can we have in any of the words of the scriptures? The Saviour himself and his apostles confirm the obvious import of the words of the prophets. "I lay down my life for the sheep." John 10: 15. "The Son of man came to give his life a ransom for many." Mark 10: 45. "Christ died for our sins," Cor. 15: 3; "is sacrificed for us," 1 Cor. 5: 7, "that by means of death, for the redemption of transgressions," &c. "to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." Heb. 9: 15, 26. "Bare our sins in his own body on the tree." 1 Peter 2: 24. Without this great and glorious truth of the "vicarious" suffering of the divine Son of the Infinite, "the grand problem" of life for a lost world, finds no solution in the combined wisdom of angels or men.

It was the defence of this very doctrine, that "our Lord Jesus Christ gave himself for our sins," that called forth the anathema of the inspired apostle, "though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel—let him be accursed." Gal. 1: 3-8. This is the only platform on which our Father's wondrous love places its lever to raise a fallen world.

Justice is "offended," and must be satisfied, or sinners cannot be saved. God is the just God as well as the Saviour. How he can be just and save transgressors of his righteous law, is itself a grand problem, solved only by the Cross of Christ. From perverted views of "offended Justice," we may turn aside, but we may not turn aside from the oracles of God. "Awake, O Sword, against the man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of hosts, smite the Shepherd," &c. "He shall magnify the law and make it honorable." "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness, for the remission of sins that are past—that he might be just and the justifier of him which believeth on Jesus."

The doctrine of vicarious suffering and death was shadowed forth by all the sacrifices under the law, particularly by the scape goat. These were types of "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world." The doctrine may be rejected by the wisdom of this world, yet it pleases God by the foolishness of its preaching, to save them that believe.

FUTURE STATES.

By REV. REGINALD COURTENAY, A. M.

ON THE INTERMEDIATE STATE.

It yet remains for us to consider some passages of the New Testament which have been much relied on in proof of an intermediate state of consciousness. Our Saviour thus exhorts his disciples: "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him, who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell;" that is, "in Gehenna?" "What," asks an eminent divine, "can be more clear? If the soul had such a necessary dependence on the body; that when this dies itself must needs die with it, then he that kills the body would with the same stroke murder the soul too. But our Saviour tells us that this is impossible for man to do, the soul remaining even after the death of the body, and being out of the reach of any created power, that is able to destroy it. If it be said that this is meant only of the utter destruction of the soul, which no man is able to effect, God having promised a resurrection to life again, this will appear to be only a wretched shift to avoid the force of the plainest text. For in this sense our Saviour might as well have denied that it is in the power of man to kill the body of another man, that is, to destroy it utterly and finally, because God will raise it again at the last day. But our blessed Lord grants, that the body may be killed by man in the same sense whereby he denies that the soul can be destroyed by him, and therefore speaks not this only with reference to the resurrection."

It may nevertheless be fairly maintained, consistently with the view of the future states which has been advocated above, that our Lord is here speaking with reference to the resurrection only; and wholly passes over without notice the interval between death and judgment. Shortly after, in the same discourse, he prepares his disciples to bear persecution, by a similar mode of encouragement. "He that findeth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." And in another place, to exactly the same purpose, "He that loveth his life shall lose it, and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep in unto life eternal." These passages sufficiently explain what is meant by "not able to kill the soul." Dr. Bull believed that the soul of the renegade, as well as the soul of the martyr, lives after the death of the body. But if so, what is meant by "he that loveth his life shall lose it?" Even on Dr. Bull's supposition, it must signify, not the loss of life in the intermediate state, wherein good and bad men alike live, but the destruction of the soul in Gehenna. Because man cannot effect this, it is said that he is unable to "kill the soul." Agreeably with that doctrine, implied in almost every page of the New Testament,—"It is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment,"—they are said to lose, or to keep their lives, in reference to the destruction which will be inflicted, or the immortality which will be conferred on the soul, on that awful day.

St. Luke reports the words of our Lord somewhat differently. "Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do; but I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear; Fear Him, who after he hath killed hath power to cast into Gehenna; yea, I say unto you, Fear Him." Here there is no allusion to an interval between death and judgment; and not only they who have killed the body have no more that they can do, but God himself, it appears, doth nothing, until the day arrive for the execution of his judgments. Throughout all these passages the things contrasted are, life temporal, and life eternal; death temporal, and death eternal,—and we are not to fear them which kill the body, or inflict temporal death; but Him only who can kill the soul, or inflict eternal death.

Dr. Bull however maintains, as we have seen above, that since the bodies of the wicked rise again, men can no more be said to be able to kill the body than to kill the soul; except in reference to the different states of the soul and body before resurrection. If the resurrection of the wicked unto damnation were in Scripture represented as a temporary return to life, this argument would be unanswerable. But the bodies even of saints are in Scripture termed mortal bodies, and may be killed: though the Almighty can and will at the last day quicken them by His spirit. The temporal life of a sinner being taken away, nothing remains but for him to be "cast into hell;" while the temporal life of the righteous being lost, he still "hath eternal life," in that he has the promise not given to the sinner, "I will raise him up at the Last Day." And so St. Paul labored;—"if by any means he might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."*

"That the soul is alive after our death," says Jeremy Taylor, "St. Paul affirms: 'Christ died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him.' Now it were strange that we should be alive and live with Christ, and do no act of life." Strange indeed: but Christ died for us, and rose again, that we through death and resurrection might have that eternal life. Then, when we rise, he will "come again and receive his disciples to himself, that where he is, there may they be also: then shall they, and not before, "ever be with the Lord."

* Whatever obscurity and difficulty there may be in the subject here treated of, it arises from the singular use in Scripture, of the terms life and death. To kill the body, and send the soul into Hades, a suffering which may be inflicted on the righteous as well as the sinner, and to destroy the body and soul in the flames of Gehenna, are both called in Scripture, Death. The temporal existence common to all, no less than the spiritual and eternal existence of saints in heaven, is termed Life.

That there is an intermediate consciousness has sometimes been collected from the account of the translations of Enoch and Elijah, and the appearance of the latter, with Moses, at the transfiguration of our Lord. The former of which facts, it shall nevertheless be said, does most strongly point to a conclusion directly opposite, which the difficulty concerning Moses cannot reverse, but at the utmost merely neutralize or obscure. Enoch, we are told "walked with God; and he was not, for God took him," and this St. Paul explains by saying that Enoch "was translated, that he should not see death." Here to be taken to God, and to die, are represented as directly opposite things. Enoch was saved from Hades, from the power of corruption, from the state of "the dead who cannot praise the Lord;" and admitted to his presence in heaven. Of Elijah we learn that he likewise "was taken up into heaven," without seeing death, without any dissolution of the body, or banishment of the soul to Hades. In both of these cases, undoubtedly, the translation to heaven was a great and a singular reward for singular piety and devotedness. Yet if, apart from resurrection and ascension into heaven, it be, as some believe, a great privilege to be delivered from the burden of the flesh; a privilege involving nearer communion with God, what advantage had Enoch or Elijah? And how can it be said, that God took them, rather than any other departed saints? It may be said, that they were, at once admitted to that superior blessedness which God will confer on all his saints when their bodies are raised in glory at the Last Day.* But the account of Elijah's appearance at the transfiguration precludes this idea. It is true that our Saviour's appearance at that time was such as to give the three favored disciples some conception of his future glory. For it was the fulfilment of his promise made a week previously, "There be some standing here which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom." And St. Peter says in reference to the wonderful scene, "We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known to you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye witnesses of his majesty." But still it is plain that his full glory and majesty was not then revealed, even to the chosen disciples. For St. John writes, "we know not what we shall be; but we know that when Christ shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." And this, though St. John had beheld Christ not only at his transfiguration, but also in those greater splendours which he records in the book of Revelation; and though St. Paul, who had ample intercourse with the other apostles, had been favoured with repeated visions of Christ. It is plain then that though the glorious appearance which our Lord put on was, in conjunction with the voice of approval from heaven, a sufficient proof and manifestation of the glories of his future kingdom, yet it was not a full display of them. Jesus indeed "was not yet glorified;" he had not as yet "ascended into heaven that he might fill all things;" nor testified that "all power was given unto him in heaven and in earth." It is not to be supposed then that they who appeared with him had as yet received their full glory. It would therefore be difficult for those who believe in an intermediate consciousness to say in what respect these persons were in a more favored state than other departed saints. And though any one is at liberty to conjecture that some superior degree of blessedness was conferred on Enoch and Elijah, the declaration concerning the former, "He was not, for God took him,"—seems to imply a difference not in degree but in kind, between the fate of Enoch and that of the rest of the dead. For if it be contended, that God "took" Enoch and Elijah, without death, but that this "does not forbid us to believe that he 'takes' others, to a similar reward, after their death; we may reply by asking—On this supposition, how does it appear from Genesis that Enoch did not die? The children of Rachel "were not," when they were taken from their mother by death; and therefore when it is written that Enoch "was not," this would rather show that he departed this life in the ordinary way. We can learn that he was translated only from the words, "God took him."

When however the question arises, Whence, from what blissful region did Elijah come, in what form did he appear? much, and indeed insuperable difficulty arises from the appearance of Moses with him. For Moses was not translated that he should not see death; he died upon Mount Nebo. His appearance with Elijah might indeed lead us to conclude that both came from the same world or state, and that the condition of Enoch and Elijah therefore differed not at all from that of the rest of the blessed dead, who die in the Lord. But this notion is wholly incompatible with the fact, that while the translation of the former was a reward, the death of Moses was a punishment. Yet how could it be a privation to Moses to be admitted, rather than to the earthly Canaan, to the heaven of Enoch, and Elijah? And how can we suppose that the disembodied spirit of Moses, dwelling in Hades, enjoyed the same life (if life at all,) as they, whose especial reward was that they should not see death; but who were raised, body and soul, to some heavenly region? Surely it is probable that Moses and Elias came from different regions; had been in different states. We are not told whether the two wore similar forms. But the power which called Moses' spirit from the grave could render him visible to the eye, for a special purpose, as was Samuel at Endor.* Such similarity of aspect decides nothing with respect to the condition of their souls. It is in the very highest degree improbable that a disembodied soul in Hades should be in the same state as the soul which was raised to heaven, and had never dwelt, as far as we have reason to believe, in any other than a corporeal habitation.

If however any one is inclined to conclude, from his appearance at the transfiguration; that Moses was honored after death with translation into the heaven of Enoch and Elijah, this will by no means render it probable that other departed saints enjoy a similar blessedness to that of these distinguished servants of God.

* Not that this is exactly in accordance with Scripture, which represents their privilege as consisting especially in exemption from death.

* The soul separate from the body is not an object of sight (since at a man's death all that was formerly visible of him remains before our eyes in the corpse,) so that nothing can be inferred respecting a separate state of the soul, from the visible appearance of Moses and Elias, which the apostles witnessed.—Lectures on a Future State. That is, nothing can be inferred from the fact of their visibility; though we may nevertheless draw conjectures from the fact of their then consciousness.

This conclusion is strengthened by the accounts which the Scriptures have given us concerning the miraculous raising of the dead. For nothing can be collected from these accounts to show, or even faintly suggest, that the souls of the persons raised were summoned from a world of consciousness. They appear to have awakened as from a profound and dreamless sleep. If they had been recalled from the heaven of Enoch and Elijah, would they have foreborne to speak of it; to reveal somewhat concerning this glorious state or place of the dead? Yet tradition, full of fond and vain fictions as it is, does not even profess to record a revelation of this kind; nor even offer us as genuine one single testimony, by any of these persons, in proof of an intermediate consciousness.

Farther; it would be hard to imagine in what way resurrection could be a blessing, or indeed how it could be other than a severe trial and affliction, except on the supposition that the dead are, literally, "in a land where all things are forgotten." Let us turn to the case of Lazarus. He "slept;" and our Saviour proceeded to Bethany, to "awake him out of sleep." Did this mean, to summon his soul from the lower heavens; nay, as some would suppose, from the society of angels, and just men made perfect, and bring it back to reoccupy its frail tenement of clay in this world of sorrow and sin? Surely this would be consistent neither with the words, nor the gracious design of our Saviour.

If it be objected that St. Paul has said, "to die is gain;" this can be equally well explained either on the supposition of an intermediate consciousness, or of a momentary hiding in the grave until the indignation be overpast: while on the other hand, the apparent discordance between the words of St. Paul, and the fact of our Lord's raising the dead, is certainly the less, when we adopt the supposition that they were raised from a state of mental torpor.

IS THIS AGE FINAL, OR PREPARATORY?

No. II.

ISAIAH ELEVENTH CONSIDERED.

ON this chapter immense labor has been bestowed to harmonize it with the theory of the burning up of the world in 1843; but still it reads just as it always did, and shows conclusively an age in this world that has never yet been seen, and never can be, if there is not a dispensation yet future differing essentially from any that has ever gone before. Here is presented to us a Branch out of the root of Jesse. None will doubt but that the Son of David—the Son of God—is here intended. Under his government the animal creation will become changed so as to be harmless and docile; and "the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for, THE EARTH SHALL BE FULL OF THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE LORD, AS THE WATERS COVER THE SEA. And in that day [when the earth is thus full of the knowledge of the Lord] there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people: to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious." That is not all: "It shall come to pass in THAT DAY that the Lord shall set his hand again THE SECOND TIME to recover the remnant of his people which shall be left from Assyria," &c. Not the gathering of spiritual Jews, but his people whom he had once before gathered: not a gathering from Babylon, as will soon be seen: that gathering was not in "that day" just spoken of. "And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." Here the language distinctly marks the two nations into which the posterity of Jacob were divided in the days of Rehoboam, son of Solomon; one nation was called Judah, and the other Israel, and sometimes Ephraim, from the principal tribe of the nation of Israel. This latter nation was not "scattered," but was "cast out" of the land of Israel into Assyria, some hundred years before Judah was carried captive into Babylon. Israel was therefore called "outcasts," as in the text before us: see also 2 Kings 17: 20. Nor was "Judah dispersed" to the "four corners of the earth" till their Temple was destroyed by the Romans. The promise in this text, therefore, clearly relates to their gathering subsequent to that destruction; and as no such gathering ever has taken place, it must still be future, and is not "conditional," and is as certain as a "Thus saith the Lord" can make it. If any doubt remained, the next verse would dispel it: "The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim."

Before Ephraim or Israel was carried away into Assyria, there was continual strife, contention, and war between the two nations. When one shall be assembled, and the other gathered, this envy and vexing each other shall be known no more. And let it never be forgotten, these things are to be done "in that day" when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord;" of course future, and a glorious day. In that day, verse 16, "There shall be a highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt." Here we see what the first "recovering" was, which is alluded to, verse 11, where it is said, "The Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people," &c. It was their being brought up out of Egypt, and it is "the remnant" of the same people of whom the prophet speaks.

The prophet then goes on to tell us what that people will say when gathered: "And in THAT DAY thou shalt say, O LORD, I will praise thee: though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortest me. Behold, God is my salvation! I will trust, and not be afraid: for the LORD JEHOVAH is my strength and my song; he also is become my salvation. Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation. And in that day shall ye say, Praise the LORD, call upon his name, declare his doings among the people, make mention that his name is exalted. Sing unto the LORD; for he hath done excellent things: THIS IS KNOWN IN ALL THE EARTH. Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion: for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee."—Isaiah 12. This subject is made so plain by the prophet that it does really seem wonderful that any should call in question the meaning of the prophecy, or attempt to spiritualize it. That it applies to any events that have ever yet occurred, can not be shown. That it is not a conditional promise is equally manifest. So surely as the Branch of Jesse's root ever reigns on earth, so surely, "in that day," will these things come to pass: so we believe.

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, JUNE, 1849.

ENDLESS LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

"He that hath the Son hath life: he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5: 12.

BIBLE EXAMINER.—All the numbers for 1848 can still be supplied. No subscription will be received for a less time than one volume. Any person who will send us two new subscribers with one dollar current money, free of expense, shall have, as a premium, one copy of Dobney, in paper cover, or, three copies of the Six Sermons, 18mo. pamphlet of 120 pages: or, three copies of the "Christian Psalmody" in paper covers. Please state distinctly which you will have, and how they shall be sent.

"CHRISTIAN PSALMODY, OR PSALMS AND HYMNS FOR THE USE OF ALL CHRISTIANS" is the title of the new Hymn Book we are publishing, and which will be ready for delivery before our distant subscribers receive this paper. The authors of this compilation have labored to present it free from those objections which are justly urged against other selections: and they flatter themselves that no intelligent christian will find cause for objection to the work. The work is designedly small, and yet, sufficiently large to give variety. The largeness of a Hymn Book is no recommendation, as most congregations confine themselves to a select few out of the mass. In that now presented the compilers have labored to embody this select few.

The work is got up neatly, 24mo., 128 pages, in paper covers, at 15 cents single copy; $1 per dozen, or, $8 per hundred. Cash always with the order.

BR. W. M. G. MORSE, of Springfield Mass., we are afflicted to learn, died of the Small Pox, in its most malignant form, Friday, May 18th. Br. R. E. Ladd writes, that "He fell asleep as he had lived a consistent, humble christian, and in full hope of a glorious immortality at the coming of Christ." We would mingle our tears with those of his afflicted wife and children; and we offer for their consolation that Jesus our "Lord" will soon be "here," and He is "the resurrection and the life;" so that our beloved brother will sleep but a short time before he will hear that same voice that called Lazarus out of the grave, saying "William come forth." "I will raise him up at the last day" is the promise of our soon coming Lord and Life.

THE TRUE WESLEYAN AND IMMORTALITY.—We ask our readers carefully to examine the "Review," by our Assistant Editor, of the articles of Rev. Luther Lee, Editor of the Wesleyan. Here are two master minds; one on each side of the question. We would gladly publish the articles of the True Wesleyan entire if our room would admit; though we really think, by giving Br. Lee's article "No. 2." entire in the last Examiner, we have given the gist of his whole argument on the philosophy of man's natural immortality. What he has said since is only an amplification of the same points, which when stripped of all their dress are summed up thus:—

1. There are only two primary substances, viz.: matter and spirit. 2. Matter has no power of self-motion or self-determination, however it may be organized. 2. Therefore, wherever we see matter endowed with this power there must have been added to it an immortal spirit or soul.

This, we say, is the very soul of all the Wesleyan has said on the philosophy of immortality; and, if it is true, it endows every animal, insect, or crawling worm upon earth with an immortal soul, just as really as man; and strips Jesus Christ of all the glory of bestowing immortality upon us by his work and mediation.

The "Review," when finished, will be transposed into a book, 18mo.: and we hope friends will be prepared to give it a wide circulation in that form, especially among the readers of the "True Wesleyan." The price of the work will be given when we find what it will cost.

DEFINITE TIME FOR THE ADVENT OF CHRIST.—We see by some of our exchanges, an effort is again made to fix such a time. Whether that discovery will ever be made we shall not argue now; but one thing to our mind is perfectly clear, and that is,—no such discovery will ever be made by the modus operandi now in use: viz., That the "70 weeks," of Dan. 9th, terminated within the period of the first advent, or three and a half years after. Nothing is plainer to us than that the 70 weeks include all the time till "the holy city" was given up to the Gentiles; or, to that time when Jerusalem was compassed about with armies. Our Lord commanded his disciples to "begin," their work "at Jerusalem," and he never told them to leave it out of their labor till "ye shall see Jerusalem compassed about with armies;" then, and not before, terminated the "70 weeks determined upon thy people AND thy holy city, to finish transgression." Then their iniquity was "filled up;" and then the "condemnation to the fire of Gehenna" came upon the city and people; and in the middle of one week, following the 70, the sacrifice and the whole Jewish ritual was made to cease, by the destruction of the temple and its services. Till the advocates of definite time abandon their premises, about the end of the 70 weeks, they labor in vain.

SUPPORT FOR THE EXAMINER.—Just as our paper was going to press, we received the following communication, which we insert, by request of the writer, who has long been known by many of our readers.

NEW YORK, May 31st, 1849.

DEAR BRO. STORRS.—I am sorry to see by your last paper, that the Examiner has received so feeble a support: in view of which, allow me to ask your readers if they are aware that Bro. Storrs, from affluence, has become poor since he embraced the great truths of life and death? Do they really know that he has devoted as much time as has been necessary to the supervision of the paper without receiving money enough to pay the printer? Are they willing that it shall now go down without an effort to succor it? I trust not—but that we all, according to our ability, may do something to sustain and extend its influence.

The Examiner may not, upon all points, advocate the views we hold and deem important, but are we for that to withhold our support? Are not the enemies of the glorious truths we believe withering up on every side? and by misstatements and every device of the adversary doing all they can to disparage the truth, and those who uphold it? Whatever may be the opinion of others, it is my firm belief, that the Examiner advocates a view of the divine law of the utmost importance, and one intimately connected with those of the resurrection and the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ.

The paper has contained single articles worth the subscription; and I hope that soon we shall have a weekly instead of monthly, to scatter broad cast these truths through the length and breadth of the land. I would suggest, as Bro. Storrs is not wont to put forth appeals for aid in every paper, that all the friends will hear the call that has been made, and send each according to his ability, as the Lord hath prospered him.

Yours, in the hope of Endless Life,

HENRY A. CHITTENDEN.

N. B.—All who are able, should get as many copies of Dobney as possible, and circulate in their respective neighborhoods. They will thus not only help Bro. Storrs, but give circulation to one of the most important theological works ever published. One hundred thousand copies ought to be scattered immediately. H. A. C.

PREACHING every Lord's day by the Editors of this paper at Commissioners Hall, Third St. below Green, morning and evening.

THE SECOND ADVENT OF CHRIST—We learn that one objection to the Examiner is, that we do not say enough on the above topic. We firmly believe that event is now "nigh, even at the door;" but we have no idea of attempting to find out an exact day or year for its occurrence, unless events future should shed more light on prophecy and prophetic numbers than has ever yet been elicited; and we think the propensity to do it tends to an intolerant spirit that ill becomes those who are looking for the advent. The leading advent paper (we mean of Mr. Miller's school) said in March 1844—"There are none of the prophetic periods, as we understand them, extending beyond the Jewish year 1843. The above we shall ever maintain as the immutable truth of the word of God, and therefore, till our Lord come, we shall ever look for his return as the next event in historical prophecy." Yet, the same paper made large professions of its wisdom in discovering that the tremendous events of 1848 were a wonderful fulfilment of prophecy, giving evidence that they had always been right in their theory: and they say, in 1849—"We hail the emancipation of the sons of Abraham from their long, cruel, and ignominious political and religious bondage to the Gentile powers of earth, as another evidence of God's faithfulness in fulfilling his word," &c. Now what is all this but saying, indirectly, (for they never "confess" directly) "We thought, in 1844, there was no more historical prophecy to have a fulfilment prior to the advent, but great things have come to pass that we looked not for: nevertheless, we will turn these things to our account, and make the most of them to keep up the appearance of the truth of our theory."

After the "Jewish year" 1844 had passed away, one of the conductors of the paper, of which we have spoken, held the following language in his Harmony of Prophetic Chronology, and Time of the Advent to be Known, in which he leaves the "Jewish year 1843" and stretches out the period to the "end of 1847." "Those who are brought to view as the subjects of the wrath of God at the Second Advent, are those who reject the testimony of God on the time of that event." Yet, "the time" of this leader has all failed; but his developments since have painfully shown that his uncharitableness, and that of his associates, has not failed. We see that these leaders have been mistaken both in time and in events; and yet they have severely denounced us for "not following" them. After 1844 we looked for and expected to see the breaking in pieces of the monarchies of Europe before the advent; and were not taken by surprise when the French revolution of 1848, and the events following, occurred. We believed, before their occurrence, that such "historical prophecy," or prophetic events, would occur before the "return" of our Lord.

We believe that many "historical prophecies" are still to have a fulfilment on this earth, before the "new heaven and new earth" of Rev. 21; but how many of them are to be prior to the second advent, or personal return of our Lord, we do not know. Were we believers of the school above referred to—that is, believers in the theory that denies the return of the literal posterity of Jacob "to the land wherein their fathers have dwelt"—that maintains the burning of the whole globe at the precise time of the advent, immediately to be succeeded by the new heaven and new earth, and the ending of probation to all the human family, without regard to the unavoidable ignorance of many—we say, were we believers in such positions, we could not, with our present light, believe that the advent would occur for many years to come, unless we were to account many of the prophecies as "cunningly devised fables."

While we by no means approve or condemn all that is published in those papers claiming the peculiar name of "Advent" Papers, we have thought they furnish as much reading on that topic as would answer the largest desires of the class of our readers who feel that subject to be the one on which they delight most to dwell; and we have supposed that these readers of the Examiner take one or other of those papers, which are published weekly. We have always avowed, that the principal object of the Bible Examiner is the full discussion of the Immortality question. And while one of the advent papers, viz., "The Harbinger and Advocate," published at Rochester, N. Y., by Elder Joseph Marsh, gives a considerable amount of matter on the immortality question, there is no paper that enters so largely into the subject, or that has the means of doing it, as the Examiner, and this at a price that places it within the reach of all.

We intend to have more variety as soon as we can find room for it. Yet, we believe our paper is not without variety; and supplies a place that no other in the nation does or can. The development of the spread of the great truths we advocate, of no immortality to man out of Christ, nor without a resurrection from the dead, in England, within the last few years, has disposed us to occupy a large portion of our paper with extracts from that source, to the exclusion of much that would otherwise have appeared in our columns on other topics. We consider, however, whatever others may think, that this question of immortality lies at the foundation of every other truth of the Bible relating to salvation; and that no one can fully understand what man needs, and what the gospel proposes to do for him, that does not understand this subject; nor can he see either the importance or value of the second personal advent of Christ, unless he understands this truth, viz., "If no resurrection, there is no future life," and "if no second personal advent of Christ, then there is no resurrection;" and, consequently, our immortality and future life depends upon that advent and the resurrection by Christ, who is the "resurrection and the life." But our immortality or future life, neither of them, depend upon Christ or his advent, if men are possessed of immortality by creation, or natural generation: and, as a consequence, there would be no use in the resurrection; and the coming of Christ again would be a matter of very little importance. Hence we feel safe in saying, as a general thing, those who believe the common theory of man's natural immortality do not and cannot feel the value of those grand gospel truths—the personal advent of Christ, and the resurrection of the dead.

MORAL DEPRAVITY—ORIGINAL SIN.

No. II.

WE now proceed with our examination of those texts which are supposed to sustain the position of the "Assembly's Catechism," as presented in our previous number. It is an easy matter to throw together a number of texts that seem to prove the common theory; and if time-worn traditions are to settle the meaning of those texts, without the aid of other portions of scripture, or the use of the faculties God has given us to search the scriptures, as those who must give account for themselves, we might conclude the Assembly of Divines and their adherents are right in their declaration, that we all inherit a morally depraved nature from Adam, "utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite unto all that is spiritually good, and wholly inclined to all evil, and that continually."

We shall now take up Psa. 51: 5: "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me." This text is considered conclusive by the advocates of inherent moral depravity. Truly, if it is, the Psalmist, instead of confessing his sin, hides himself under a cloak, as most other sinners do who believe the common theory. He had committed great sins—murder and adultery. If he does affirm the doctrine usually drawn from the text, he throws the blame first on his mother, and then indirectly, at least, on God. Let us see. "Why did I sin these great sins?" Ans. "Because my mother conceived me in sin;" i. e. "conveyed to me moral depravity." And again, we ask him, Why did you commit these enormous sins? Ans. "I was shapen in iniquity." But who shapened you? Ans. "Thy [God's] hands have made me and fashioned me."—Psa. 119: 73. We sum up thus—"I have committed adultery and murder, because God made and fashioned me in iniquity in my mother's womb." The blasphemy of such a position is apparent, and it is the legitimate result of the doctrine of inherent moral depravity. Let the advocates of that doctrine not blush to own their own child, if determined to maintain a theory like that of the Assembly's Catechism. If it be asked, 'what did the Psalmist mean if that was not his meaning?' We answer in the language of Wesley on another topic, "It were better to say there is no meaning at all, than to attribute such a sense to the language." To charge the God of truth and holiness—who hateth iniquity—with having caused the birth of untold millions with a moral nature "utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite to all spiritual good, and wholly inclined to all evil," &c. is a blasphemy, one would think, enough to make a devil tremble to utter.

We reply, however, that the language is of similar import to that in Psa. 58: 3: "The wicked are estranged from the womb: they go astray as soon as they be born, speaking lies." Now we all know that none "speak" at all "as soon as they be born;" and hence, the most that can be made of the expression is, that those who are now wicked, commenced an early course of wickedness. That a want of attention to truth in early life has resulted, as all know it does and will result, in confirmed wickedness and falsehood. So the most that can be made of the Psalmist's sentiment, Psa. 51: 5, is, that in his humiliation and penitence for his sin, he speaks in a style of hyperbole, which is not uncommon under deep feeling, when the mind struggles to give utterance to its emotions; but the exaggeration in such cases is not misunderstood by any who have not a theory to serve.

But again,—if the Psalmist's expression proved, so far as he was concerned, that he was born with a nature morally depraved, which we do not admit, it could not prove that all other men were in like manner. Job affirms the opposite of himself; for, he declares he had cared for "the fatherless and widow," and that he had "guided her from" his "mother's womb;" Job 31: 15-18. Here, then, is proof of one of Adam's posterity that was not born with a nature "utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite to all spiritual good," &c.; for, James declares, that "pure religion, and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows," &c. Job affirms that he did this from his "mother's womb." Just as early as David was corrupt, Job was pure; so that if we give the advocates of inherent moral pollution the full benefit of Psa. 51: 5, their theory is at an infinite distance from being established; and, especially, when the holy and blessed God has warned us all against using the "proverb that the fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge."

The next text urged in support of the common theory, that we will notice, is Job 15: 14: "What is man, that he should be clean? and he which is born of a woman, that he should be righteous?" If this text proves anything for that theory, it proves too much. It would prove that Jesus Christ himself had a morally depraved nature—he was "born of a woman." Not to press that point, however, we ask, Who utters these words? Do you say, They are inspiration. We reply, Just as much as the words, "thou shalt not surely die," are inspiration. "Eliphaz the Temanite" is the speaker; of him the Lord says, chap. 42: 7: "My wrath is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends; for ye have not spoken of me right," &c. Here is the Lord's own testimony that Eliphaz's discourses are not inspiration, and therefore are not authority: and mark—when Eliphaz had finished the discourse of which we are speaking, Job commenced, chap. 16: 3, by calling that discourse "vain words." In that same discourse, verse 4, Eliphaz charged Job with casting off fear, and restraining prayer before God; which, to say the least, was not true; and hence we may expect to find other untruths in his talk, and none more so than the insinuation in the verse under consideration.

SCRIPTURE EXPOSITIONS.

EPHESIANS CHAP. III.

VERSE 13. Wherefore I desire that ye faint not at my tribulations for you, which is your glory.

Because of the access and glorious privileges spoken of, "I desire that ye faint not"—that you do not despond, or be timid—"at my tribulations" distresses, calamities, the pressure that is on me—"for you"—or, on your account,—"which is your glory:" that is, they were to conduce to their inheriting the glory of which he had spoken in the previous part of the epistle.

VERSES 14—19. For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that he would grant you according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God.

"For this cause"—that you may inherit glory, "I bow my knees"—in prayer—"unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ"—through whom alone we can have access to the Father: and—"of"—from—"whom the whole family"—patria, kindred, tribe, race, progeny—"in heaven"—who have been translated, as Enoch and Elijah; or, who may have been of the number who "came out of their graves after his resurrection,"—"and in earth are named." The whole race of saints, wherever they are, and whenever they lived, derive their spiritual and divine life from him, as the appointed head of this family; and therefore take his name whose nature they possess; as children take the name of their father. As the head of this family all communications with his Father are made through and in the name of Christ. Thus, to the Father, Paul said, he prayed, "That he would grant you"—of this family, who are still on earth—"according to the riches of his glory"—according to his glorious riches, wealth, or abundance, which is inexhaustible and unsearchable—"to be strengthened with might"—increased in power—"by his Spirit"—which is the efficient agency in communicating power, or might—"in the inner man"—or, that new and spiritual nature derived from Christ, and through union with him, "that Christ may dwell in your hearts"—that Christ may have a home, a permanent place, in your minds, or affections, so that every thought shall be under the government of that Spirit with which he was filled. This home, or residence, for Christ in the hearts, or affections, cannot be attained except "by faith," a strong and unwavering confidence in God, through his Son, who is the medium, and the only one, through which the Spirit of God is communicated to men. The apostle prayed that such communication of the Spirit might be made, "that being rooted and grounded in love," taking root, or striking roots into, and made firm in love. The figure is beautiful. Love is the soil in which, and in which done, the christian can grow: God is love: Christ is the gift of love; the grand office of the Spirit is to shed abroad the love of God in the heart of believers: they are planted in love: they should strike their roots deep therein, and become firm and unmovable in it: thus will they honor the God of love, resemble Christ in love, become unblamable in love; and so attain unto the full and perfect adoption of children to God, and partake of his immortality, incorruptibility, and endless life, at the revelation of Jesus Christ. And Paul desired that they might now be rooted and grounded in love, so that they "may be able"—fully able—"to comprehend," to understand, to know, to lay hold of—"with all saints"—in company with all the holy ones—"what is the breadth"—how wide—"and length," how extensive—"and depth"—how inscrutable, or unsearchable—"and height"—how high the elevation of the love of God—"and to know the love of Christ:" here the apostle, himself, has attained that elevation in description that his own head, as it were, becomes giddy, and he exclaims from astonishment at his discoveries—"WHICH PASSETH KNOWLEDGE." Well said, truly: it is even so: and the loftiest intellect that shines and expands before the throne of God must now, and will forever, have to make the same acknowledgment. Well, saith the apostle, I will stop here in my effort to describe THE LOVE of Christ and God; but I pray, "that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God." Truly, this wish is the cap stone of the arch, and all language fails in any attempt at exposition: we will only add—Even so, Amen.

Verses 20 and 21. Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us. Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

The apostle after his masterly flight, in his attempt at a description of the love of God and Christ, seems unwilling to descend till he had planted a standard even above the cap stone, and he proceeds to give a shout of triumph while he runs up the flag of the kingdom, and says, "Now unto him who is able to do"—how much, Paul?" "all we ask"—yes, and all we think, yea, and—"above"—over, beyond—"all we ask or think:" and not only beyond that, but "abundantly above" it: yea, "exceeding abundantly above all we ask or think." We can ask for much, but, we may think of more, perhaps, than we dare ask for; but after all, in our deepest and highest thoughts, we do not, hardly, begin to reach even the outskirts of the treasures God has in store for, and which he is able to give to those that love and obey him through his Son. But, says the apostle, he is able to do these things "according to the power that worketh in us," by which we were formed of the dust, brought up in animal nature, developed an intellectual nature, now a spiritual nature, whereby we are already made partakers of the divine nature: and what cannot that power effect which has already accomplished so much? Who shall fix its bounds? Who can tell where or when it is to stop in its developments in us? Will it stop with this age? No: therefore, "Now unto him be glory in the church"—the assembly of the holy ones—"by Christ Jesus"—who is the head of that assembly; through him let glory be given to God, his Father and our Father—"throughout all ages, world"—aion, ages—"without end"—or, throughout all the endless succession of ages. This age is not to terminate the wonders of God's love and power. There is to be a continued, an endless number of ages, succeeding each other; each rising higher in glory and in the richness of their developments, without ever exhausting the fulness of God. The idea of the next age being the last is a dream of ignorance, a mere fancy, unsupported by the Scriptures, and at war with the Divine administration, so far as it has yet been developed. What unthought of glories, then, still lie in the future. We have no need of "endless torments" to stimulate us to seek eternal life: "the joy set before us" is ample. The preaching endless torture, as a motive to seek and serve God, has only originated in ignorance and superstition. Let the Scripture truth of God's love and kind designs take its place, and see if we do not have a more consistent race of Christians.

DOCTRINE OF ATONEMENT.

We give the following extract from a pamphlet on the above topic, by Eld. Jabez Chadwick, of Enfield Centre, N. Y. The author is an educated man, of the Christian denomination. It expresses our views on the subject, and we cheerfully endorse it.

The atonement is a cardinal doctrine of the Christian religion. And all Christians so regard it. Nevertheless, it is viewed in very different lights. And the views of those, claiming the title of orthodox, have undergone various changes and modifications. Opinions concerning it, which were once deemed of vital importance, are now rejected by a great majority of the churches, as unscriptural, and inconsistent with the grace of pardon, and the justice of damnation. The doctrine, however, is not rescued by these changes and modifications from all perversion and mistake. It is a subject which manifestly requires further investigation.

It will be my object in this essay to remove the misapprehension, and correct the abuse which has attended, and still attends this doctrine, and to place it before the reader in its Scriptural light.

In the first place, much will depend on the right definition of the term, atonement. Things should be called by their proper names, and clear and definite meanings should be affixed to the words we use in relation to any subject. A deficiency here cannot fail to be attended with much confusion and perplexity.

What, then, is the true definition of atonement? I answer, that it is the reconciliation, agreement, or coming together, which is affected between men and God, through the mediation of Jesus Christ.

That this definition is correct will appear from critical examination of the original Greek word which is translated "the atonement." This is "tee kutallagee," the true meaning of which is the reconciliation. The word atonement occurs but once in the English version of the New Testament, viz., Rom. v: 11, whereas the original word occurs several times: but, except in the aforesaid passage, it is rendered reconciliation. It also occurs a number of times in its verbal, or participial form, and is rendered reconcile, reconciling, and reconciled. It also occurs frequently in the Old Testament, and is rendered sometimes atonement, and sometimes reconciliation, reconciled, &c.

The above mentioned passage in Romans reads thus: "And not only so, but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement." (Gr. teen kutallageen, accusative case, i. e. the reconciliation.) Atonement was formerly used by the English to mean reconciliation and pronounced at-one-ment. Unless the translators considered this as its true signification, it is hard to account for their rendering the same Greek word, letter for letter, once atonement, and twice, at least, reconciliation. I wish it to be duly remembered that the words, "the atonement," in Rom. v: 11, and "reconciliation," which occurs twice in 2 Cor. v: 18, 19, are from the same Greek term, and in the latter cases, as well as in the former, the Greek article is prefixed, so that it should have read "the reconciliation," instead of "reconciliation." There is manifestly no reason why the article should not be expressed here, as it is in the passage in Romans. "The ministry of reconciliation" or "the words of reconciliation" committed to Paul and others, does not pertain to any method of reconciliation, but to a certain, peculiar, definite method, described in the Gospel, and hence it should have been emphasized by prefixing the definite article, as it is in Greek. It is further evident that reconciliation is the true meaning of atonement, from the fact that the Greek word, from which it is rendered, occurs frequently in its verbal, or participial form in the New Testament, and is rendered invariably reconcile, reconciled, or reconciling. It occurs twice in the context of Rom. v: 11, and is rendered "were reconciled," and "being reconciled." The verbal, or participial form of this Greek word occurs also several times in the before-mentioned v. chapter of 2 Cor., and is rendered "hath reconciled," "reconciling," and "reconciled." It occurs also in the same sense, Rom. xi: 15, Eph. ii: 16, and Col. i: 20, 21.

It is, therefore, perfectly clear that to atone, in the New Testament sense of the term, is to reconcile; and that the atonement is the reconciliation, viz., the reconciliation which is effected between men and God by the mediation and work of Christ.

Reconciliation appears also to be the appropriate meaning of the word, as it is used in the Old Testament. The original Hebrew word is said to have another signification, viz., cleansing: but I believe that all concede that reconciliation is one of its meanings. And it appears that this is the sense in which the inspired writers, generally, if not always, use the word, when speaking of sacrifices, and other means of obtaining intercourse and favor with God.

Atonement was indeed made by various means; but reconciliation is the sense which its different applications will bear. Moses, for instance, made an atonement for the sins of Israel by prayer. Ex. xxxii: 30. "And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses said unto the people, ye have sinned a great sin: and now I will go up unto the Lord: peradventure, I shall make an atonement for your sin." Aaron, in the time of the plague, made an atonement, by taking a censor, and fire from off the altar and putting incense thereon, and offering it to the Lord, as he stood between the living and the dead. See Num. xvi: 40-48. Phineas made an atonement when he executed summary justice upon Cozby and the Midianitish harlot, by thrusting a javelin through both their bodies. See Num. xxv: 7-13. And from time to time, the priests made an atonement by sprinkling the blood of the victims which had been offered in sacrifice, "upon" and "before the mercy-seat" in the inner court. The atonement did not consist in killing and offering the victims. These were only the means of it. The atonement, itself was made subsequently, by sprinkling the blood as above, or in such other ways as God directed.

In all these cases, we may attach the sense of reconciliation to the word atonement. Indeed, Aaron, in making atonement for "the holy place, the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar," is expressly said to "have made an end of reconciling them." See Levit. xvi: 20. It is also written, ch. vi: 20, "And no sin offering, whereof any of the blood is brought into the tabernacle of the congregation to reconcile withal in the holy place shall be eaten: it shall be burned with fire." Reconcile is manifestly used here as a substitute for the word atone. Again in ch. viii: 15, Moses is said to have "sanctified the altar to make reconciliation upon it," i. e. atonement. Moreover, in the time of Hezekiah, it is said, 2 Chron. xxix: 24, that the priests killed the bullocks selected for sacrifice, and made reconciliation with their blood upon the altar to make an atonement for all Israel: for the king commanded that the burnt offering and the sin offering should be made for all Israel." Here the sense of reconciliation is given to the word atonement. It is, therefore, clear that this is the radical meaning. The atonement was not the sacrifice itself; but the end which was thereby effected after the blood was sprinkled as directed. The sacrifice was the means and the atonement, or reconciliation, was the end obtained.

So the sacrifice of Christ, to which the typical atonements referred, was not the atonement itself; but only the means of it. There is as plain a difference, in this case, as in the other, between the means and the end.

The sacrifice of Christ is often referred to, as though it constituted the atonement: whereas it was only the means of it. The atonement itself, i. e. the reconciliation, was a subsequent thing, and was effected by his appearing before God in the heavenly sanctuary, "not with the blood of bulls and goats: but with his own blood," and continuing to intercede in our behalf. The offering of himself, inclusive of his whole mediatorial work, is to be considered in the light of appointed and necessary means, with reference to an important end, viz., the reconciliation between men and God. To substitute the end, which is the reconciliation, for the means, whereby it is effected, viz., the work of Christ, is to confound things which are obviously different. This want of a proper discrimination between the means and the end has led to great misunderstandings, perplexity, and abuse, which I shall show hereafter. For the present, I shall only define the reconciliation in question.

"IMPORTANCE OF THE RESURRECTION."

We give the following extract from Dobney's new work, hoping it may interest our readers so that they will desire to see the book, and send for it. We wish that work scattered far and wide, and as soon as possible. Public mind, religiously, is shaken; and unless some more consistent theory than "endless torment,"—which grows out of the notion of man's natural immortality—can be shown to be the doctrine of the Bible, we may soon see infidelity sweep the churches themselves with the besom of destruction. If ministers would not be swept away with a swelling flood, that is rising, let them learn, and fearlessly proclaim—No immortality out of Christ—and, "All the wicked will God destroy." Some say—"It is non-essential." They may learn otherwise when too late.

It has been already submitted that scripture recognises only two bodies for man—the present animal-body, soma psuchikon, and the spiritual body, soma pneumatikon, and at the same time knows nothing of any conscious existence in a perfectly disembodied state. Which of course makes the resurrection [leaving it as yet an open question, what is meant by it precisely, and when it takes place] to be all-important. It at the same time undoubtedly teaches the immediate enjoyment by the saint of the presence of his Saviour, and the blessedness of heaven. In confirmation of which remarks, the reader is requested to study attentively in its connection—

2 CORINTHIANS, chap. iv.

17. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

18. While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal.

Chapter v.

1. For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

2. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven.

3. If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked.

4. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.

5. Now he that hath wrought us for the self-same thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit.

6. Therefore we are always confident, knowing that whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord.

7. (For we walk by faith, not by sight.)

8. We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and present with the Lord.

At the close of chap. iv the apostle testifies how lightly his manifold afflictions sat upon him. And afflictions were they of no ordinary kind.—'troubled on every side—perplexed—persecuted—always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus—always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake; or, as he speaks in a subsequent chapter, when he is compelled to compare himself with others,—in labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes, save one: thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of water, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren: in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness.' Yet with sublimest heroism he points to calamities and sufferings which would drink up the spirits of most of us, and says 'These light afflictions! these light afflictions! Do we ask the secret of this victorious composure? He tells us that he was habitually regarding the unseen realities of the next state, 'Knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus, shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you.'

Here we perceive distinctly that it was his confidence in a resurrection that lightened his spirit of its load, and cheered him on his lonely and stormy way. We ought to compel ourselves to notice this, agreeing exactly as it does with his wont on other occasions. For it was his habit to console himself with the thought of being raised from the dead, which was the 'recompense of the reward' unto which 'he had respect,' as the first chapter of this epistle also shows, for having said 'We would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia, that we were pressed out of measure above strength, inasmuch, that we despaired even of life,' he goes on to say, 'But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God who raiseth the dead.' 2 Cor. i. 8-9.

But let us return to our proper passage. The apostle having said that notwithstanding all his troubles he persevered in his arduous course, animated with the confident hope that God who raised up Jesus would also raise him up, v. 14, regarded without displacency the perishing of his outward man, v. 16, seeing that his afflictions would work out for him a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, v. 17. For he was accustomed not to look at the visible, which is the fugitive, but at the unseen and eternal. v. 18.

Let it be observed that all this grows directly and continuously out of v. 14, (v. 15 being parenthetical, and arising out of the last clause of the preceding verse.) The being raised up by Jesus is the thought which, as the grand source of his joy, and secret of his career, he is dwelling on, which reconciles him to the perishing of the outward man, and makes his afflictions light as the gossamer. Our division of chapters here is peculiarly unfortunate; v. 1-8 being but a continuation of the interesting subject, the word, For, marking the close logical connection,—For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle be dissolved, called before our outward man perishing, 'we have a building of God, a house not made with hands,' that is, another body,—eternal in the heavens? Which does not mean that the body he would have was at that time in heaven waiting for him to enter into it, but it was a heavenly body, a body invested wherewith, he should dwell for ever in the heavens. But it may be allowed me to paraphrase the entire passage, without passing to give the reasons for the rendering I shall adopt, which I trust will be obvious to the general reader. Continuing the thought which he had announced towards the close of chapter iv. he thus proceeds,—

“For we know full well, that if our body, which alone persecutors can hurt; or hunger and fatigue affect, were, to be overcome of death, which sooner or later must be, we are quite assured that we shall be found more gloriously arrayed. This indeed is a vile body, in which we often groan; feeling acutely the ills of life, but Christ is able to endow us with a body fashioned like unto his own glorious body. And such awaits us. I have called the present body a house, and as such what it is but an earthly house—a house of dust—in the formation of which human beings were (instrumentally) employed; but the body I shall have, or to keep to the figure, the house which awaits me, is in no wise of human origin [not made with hands] it is celestial [in the heavens] and unlike this changing, decaying structure, is eternal.

“Oh! how I long to find myself in this celestial body, [earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with my house which is from heaven.] I say, I could long for evening to undress, to lay down this gross corporeal investiture, and find myself in that body of heavenly texture which awaits me. For I have no fear of being found utterly disembodied; and though, if such a thing might be, I could prefer to pass without dying into my ultimate condition as Enoch and Elijah did, yet am I more than ready to welcome the sharpest pangs of death, in order to find myself relieved of all the ills attendant on humanity in its present condition, and invested with that spiritual body in which I shall, oh glorious hour! find myself present with the Lord. For in this body I am absent from my Saviour, in that I shall be for ever with the Lord.”

To me it appears that this purposely free paraphrase gives the exact idea of the passage. In which Paul contrasts the present body with the next; longs to lay down the one and assume the other, which he calls eternal, and on the assumption of which he would find himself present with the Lord; and recognises nothing as intervening between quitting the one body and finding himself in the other and eternal one, the investiture with which was essential to his being present with the Lord. The eighth verse is the logical conclusion of the whole.

Now remembering that scripture recognises no perfectly disembodied state, and only two bodies, and that the next is the resurrection body, we are again conducted to the same conclusion to which Matt. xxiii. and 1 Cor. xv. brought us, and are again reminded of the grand importance of the resurrection, which is a more capital doctrine in scripture than in our modern systems of theology.

AFFECTIONATE PREACHING.

There is something in an affectionate statement of gospel truths peculiarly calculated to find its way to the heart. Christianity is a religion of sympathy. It is founded on the principal of human wretchedness. It meets man in every species of sorrow and affliction. It takes him by the hand when deserted by human supports. It pierces the clouds which throw a melancholy gloom over the path of life; and opens before ‘the way-worn traveller,’ a ‘hope full of immortality.’ Let us reflect upon this peculiarity of our holy religion, and consider what an advantage it gives us in our public addresses. By far the greater part of our congregations are suffering in one way or other. We cannot enter a family, and be permitted to know what is passing within it, without perceiving that there is a worm corroding the root of their comforts—some ‘poisoned arrow,’ drinking up their spirits—some intolerable burden subduing their strength. To such, how suitable is the invitation of a compassionate Saviour, ‘Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will refresh you!’ How appropriate is the character of the great High Priest who is ‘touched with the feeling of our own infirmities!’ To such, how adapted are the consolations of the Spirit, the promises of the Gospel, and the resting place of the saints! To overlook such circumstances, and to discuss abstract truths in a cold and formal heartless manner—O what a loss of opportunity! what a mocking of human misery! what dereliction of duty! what a prostitution of office! what a fearful responsibility! Let us, my reverend brethren, pray for the heart of a shepherd—for ‘bowels of compassion.’ Let us take the sufferer by the hand, and conduct him to the Saviour! Let us lead him to the wells of salvation! Let us pour the healing balm into his bleeding heart, and assure him that there is One who sympathises with his sorrows, and who ‘is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him.’ Forgive my earnestness, and permit me to say, that Christ is the only subject which meets the wants and wretchedness of man; Christ, in his person and offices; Christ, in his doctrines and atonement; Christ, in his spirit and in his government; in his love, his condescension, his mercy, his salvation,—as the guide and support and comfort of his people; as their Redeemer, their Friend, their Advocate, their Forerunner, their Representative; the Fountain of all blessedness, both in time and eternity!—Jarram.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The recent arrivals from Europe bring deeply interesting intelligence. A synopsis of it in the Ledger, of this city, commences by saying, “The whole of continental Europe seems ready to burst into one general conflagration.” Such is the truth: and we have long looked, and are still looking for a “conflagration” there, such as will leave in the shade all the horrors Europe has ever witnessed. How soon, or how rapidly it may manifest itself we do not know; but we believe it is at the door, and cannot long be delayed.

The “intervention” of France in the affairs of Italy, which we noticed in the last Examiner, turns out to be, it seems, a mere hypocritical pretence of helping to maintain the liberties of Italy against Austria, while the real design was to restore the Pope and maintain him in power. But the Italians were not deceived by the shameful movement of French republicanism as the following items from Rome will show.

On the 27th, the Constitutional Assembly resolved to adhere to their resolution of opposing the entrance of the French.

Orders have been issued to undermine Milan, on the approach of the French to the side of the sea-board. Cannon are planted on the road and the gates and streets that lead to Civita Vecchia. The long cornered gallery erected by Pope Borgia, between the castle of St. Angelo and the Vatican Palace, has been blown up with powder, and the materials used to block up the entrances to the city.

A deputation of the Central Committee had protested against the invasion, and informed General Oudinot that Rome would resist his entrance by force, and blow up the Quirinal, the Vatican, and St. Peter's which were already undermined.

The French General replied, that his instructions were imperative, and that he would enter Rome by force, if not quietly received.

The following is a proclamation addressed by the Roman Government to the French who invaded their territory.

"Frenchmen, your ancestors brought us liberty, but you bring us slavery. In destroying the Roman republic you will destroy your own. Oh shame! You stood by during the misfortune of Lombardy. You had not a word of consolation for the fall of Piedmont. Your venal writers calumniate the heroic efforts of Hungary.

"On this very day, with an impudent mockery, you come to destroy Roman liberty. Are you, indeed, soldiers? If you are, choose a foe worthy of your courage. Do not come to defy the rising strength of a petty State. If you wish to combat against republican arms, cease to be republicans yourselves. Frenchmen, answer truly, whom do you wish to restore to power? Are they the priests? That hereditary race who have caused so much blood to flow, and occasioned so many woes to France herself? Study your own history, and you will see what you are about to do for us. We have an implacable hatred of sacerdotal domination. You wish to impose it on us by force. You are about to place us on a level with the Canesè. Frenchmen! before undertaking a detestable work, ask of the sky above you, and it will answer that it has been polluted by sacerdotal iniquities in all ages. Ask your youth and our women, and learn an uninterrupted tale of seduction, of debauchery, and of venality. Ask of our farmers for whom they have laboured. They will answer, for the priests! Ask to whom belongs the fifth part of the State. To the priests! Ask to whom belong the most luxurious abodes, for whom are the most exquisite delicacies, and who are those obeyed by thousands of menials. The reply will still be—the priests! the priests! Frenchmen, your mission is the work of hell!"

The secret of the whole movement is, we think, the French President has sold himself to Papacy, and papal priests; and hence will soon find his fate sealed, as all others will who "worship the image of the beast;" for, they are to drink the "wine of the wrath of God that is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation."

The following items we extract from the remarks of the Ledger on "European Politics." Speaking of the present conflicts in Europe, it says:—

"The Hungarians rose, almost as one man, in defence of national independence; and being aided by Polish Generals and Polish troops, they have driven the reactionary Austrians out of their country, and are now within a short distance of Vienna. The Austrian government, thus menaced, has called to its aid the grand enemy of all popular governments in Europe, Russia. This step has lifted the veil and thrown off the mask; and proclaimed to the people in all Western and Southern Europe, that no faith can be safely kept with Princes, and that their only road to their natural rights is through republicanism."

Thus there seems likely to be a "rushing of the nations;" but we wait for the developments, knowing that the Kingdom of Christ is at hand.

THE NEW WORK.—"The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment," by H. H. Dobney, Baptist Minister, England, is the very best work on the End of the Wicked we have ever seen. It is written in the kindest spirit, and cannot give offence to any. Though kind, it is clear, uncompromising and overwhelming against the popular theory of natural immortality and endless misery; and demonstrating, so far as argument can do it, that utter destruction is the punishment of wicked and unrepenting men. Put this work into the hands of all who will read, not forgetting ministers of all sects and parties. It contains 266 pages, 12mo. Price 75 cts. bound, or 50 in paper covers; this last only can be sent by mail. ## IMMORTALITY.

REVIEW—No. V.

Mr. Lee says—"Its (the spirit's) improvement, is a distinct matter from the improvement of the body."

What does he mean by the "improvement of the body?" Does he mean the growth of the "body?" What does he mean by the "body?" Does he mean the whole physical organization, or a part of it? If he uses the term as indicative of the whole organism, then it is equivalent to the man; which would be to make "the improvement of the spirit a distinct matter from the improvement of the man." Understanding Mr. Lee, therefore, to mean the physical constitution, the question recurs—does he mean by "the improvement of the body" its growth in bulk or size? If so, I would remark, that stubborn facts establish the law, that other conditions being equal, the development of mind is in the ratio of the development of the physical organization. What are these "other conditions?" The answer to this question is found in the fact, that there are several systems of organs, giving rise to different functions, and modifying the manifestations of mind. The ample development of the glandular system does not increase the mental power; but modifies it. The excessive development of the muscular system does not impart mental activity; but it gives durability to body and mind. The sanguineous and nervous systems impart physical and mental activity.

Again, a person may be born with an organization unfavorable to the development of much mind—they may be idiotic; but, in this case, the nervous system will be defective. Again, they may be diseased, and, from this cause, imbecile. Again, education may have been partial and defective; the muscular system may have been cultivated at the expense of the nervous; and then, "the body may grow and flourish in all the perfection of health, and the mind make little or no progress." Again, the nervous system may be developed at the expense of the sanguineous, and "the body," or man, "be of exceedingly frail structure, pale and wan;" but it is not true that "a great mind may develop itself from within." The mind of such a person may possess great vivacity, sprightliness and brilliance, but it will be wanting in strength, depth, power and durability. But, in all this, the law holds good, that, as is the organization, so is the mind.

Mr. Lee says—"Some of the greatest geniuses the world has ever produced, have had but just body enough to hold the soul." This is a mere fancy sketch, containing no argument. A man, however, may be a "genius," with little or no talent. Again, Mr. L. says—"These facts certainly indicate that the soul and the body, are not one and the same thing!" Truly! who ever contended that they were "one and the same thing!" The one may be an attribute of the other, and both may be mortal—both matter.—Mr. Lee's "facts" to the contrary notwithstanding!

2. Mr. Lee tells us, that "the body comes to maturity and begins to decline, at an age when the mind has but just commenced its career of improvement." This is a fallacy, for the "career of improvement" begins almost with our birth. "A sound mind in a sound body" is a sentiment, which embodies the truth upon this subject. The nervous system may be healthy, unimpaired and elastic, when the muscular and glandular have declined; and the mind may thus be proportionably active, when the physical strength is partially gone. But when there is a general decay of the whole organization, the mind goes down with the body. And whether a man shall be a dolt at "fifty, sixty, or seventy," depends upon the strength, soundness and durability of the whole constitution.

3. Mr. Lee alludes to the doctrines of phrenology, and informs us that nothing is gained by admitting their truth—that phrenologists "will not make this the issue, and base their science on the doctrine of materialism, to stand or fall with it." If by "materialism" Mr. Lee means matter, I affirm that phrenologists do base their science on "materialism;" for they base it on the anatomy and physiology of the brain—which is matter; while, at the same time, they may not follow up their principles to their legitimate results. I shall not reflect upon the motives of those phrenologists, who have labored to popularize, and harmonize phrenology with sectarian theology. But, for one, fearless of all consequences, I DO MAKE THE ISSUE, AND BASE THE PHRENOLOGICAL DOCTRINES UPON THE MATERIAL ORGANIZATION OF MAN, INDEPENDENT OF ALL "IMMATERIALITY," IMMORTALITY, OR INCORRUPTIBILITY; AND I CHALLENGE ALL PHRENOLOGISTS, NO MATTER WHO, NOR WHERE THEY ARE, WHETHER IN EUROPE OR AMERICA, TO DISPROVE THE CORRECTNESS OF THIS POSITION.

This is the only view that will, or can harmonize with the volume of Revelation; and every effort to harmonize the sublime science of mind, with the paginated traditions of modern sectarianism, degrades both it and them!

Yes, sir, a voice speaks from the highest heavens, and proclaims to all the sons of men, that they are mortal, having not one spark of immortality, but corruptible and perishing; and mental science—the science of man—sends back the sound, all is mortal!

4. We shall now examine Mr. Lee's concluding philosophical argument, which is this: "The mind often develops itself in greater power and glory, just at the moment of death, shining out from an emaciated body, already wan and cold."

Here Mr. Lee rallies all his powers, concentrates all his forces, and pours along his logical troop! We shall pay particular attention to this argument, not on account of its strength, but on account of its commonness.

"The mind often develops itself in its greatest power and glory, just at the moment of death." This, as a proposition, is monstrous; as an argument, absurd; and as a fact, is not true. "The mind develops its GREATEST POWER AND GLORY, at the moment of death!" Did ever the mind of a man, "at the moment of death," develop the powers of a Solomon?—a Bacon?—a Locke?—a Herschell?—a Franklin? Here are specimens of mind in its "greatest power." Did ever the mind of man, "at the moment of death," when the "emaciated body" was "already wan and cold," develop the "glory"—the eloquence of a Cicero, or a Demosthenes? The answer is, and must be, in the negative. But Mr. Lee says—"It is true that in some cases the mind appears to decay with the decaying body, but to prove that it is the body or any part of it, this would have to be always so without exception, which is not the case." Mr. Lee has the argument here by the blade, instead of the handle; and cuts himself rather than his opponent! The mind should never "appear to decay with the decaying body," if it be immortal! If it be neither "the body nor any part of it," there should be no "exception" to the "power" and "glory" of its development "at the moment of death," which, as Mr. Lee says—"is not the case." And now I will explain to Mr. Lee why it is, that some minds are more brilliant in death than others.

1. It depends upon the nature of the disease, and its seat. There are some diseases which preternaturally excite the brain, and consequently, the mental powers. We witness this in various forms of fever. And sometimes this febrile condition becomes so exalted and intense, that the patient becomes eloquent, musical, furious and insensible by turns, according to the nature of the case. In this condition the patient's animal, moral, or intellectual faculties may be principally excited, and develop their functions accordingly. They may shout, pray, sing, or curse, swear and rage, just as their different faculties are the seat of the most intense cerebral action. Some, in this condition may "die shouting glory! glory! glory!" and others die perfectly frantic and furious.

Again, in disease of the heart and lungs, the integrity of the mind is partially maintained till death closes the scene; but this is because the brain is not immediately involved in the disease, and therefore it manifests its functions, though with less power, to the last.

2. Another cause, already hinted at, is, the fact that death sometimes commences at the heart, and at the lungs. The first is called death by anæmia—the want of a due supply of blood to the heart. In this case the faculties may be retained to the last for the reason already given.

The same remarks apply to death by apnæa, privation of breath. The person, being cut off suddenly, retains his senses to the end; or, if not dying suddenly, he gradually wastes away by consumption of the pulmonary organs, and dies in possession of a degree of mental power.

Death by coma may either be sudden, or more or less protracted according to circumstances.

These are some of the reasons why some persons die in the possession of some mental power, and others perfectly insensible. These phenomena are perfectly plain upon the view we take of the constitution of man; but can Mr. Lee, or any one else, explain them upon his hypothesis? "The mind may kindle up at the moment of death, and blaze out with intellectual fire," but it is the mere flickering—the mere flashing up, of the waning intellect, which, like the dimly burning taper, gives signs of its extinguishment! "The body" may be "wan, cold and helpless," and the mind will shine as dimly, and burn as faintly as the expiring lamp! An occasional out-burst—an occasional flash, is not the strength, power and glory of a giant mind; but the sure indications of a speedy dissolution.

Mr. Lee speaks of "the mind, being roused by the prospect of heaven, or seized with the terror of impending perdition," as "flashing with the fires of immortality," and "shedding a living glare as it quits its house of clay and enters upon the destinies of the spirit world!"

The whole of this is a beautiful delusion! a sublime absurdity!! There is no truth—no argument—no logic in it. This going to "heaven" at death, or down to "perdition," are old wives' fables. They are pagan traditions, newly vampyred by the Mother of Harlots and abominations of the earth.

No, gentle reader, man is mortal, death is the extinction of life and sense and mind; and nothing but the resurrection can restore these attributes to man. So we come back to our starting point—no organization, no life; no life, no mind.

And here we leave Mr. Lee, to the mercy of his own ill-fated philosophical arguments.

REVIEW—No. VI.

Having examined Mr. Lee's philosophical argument, I now proceed to his scriptural.

1. His first argument is based upon Gen. 35: 18, "And it came to pass, as her soul was in departing, (for she died,) that she called his name Ben-oni."

The reader will please bear in mind that the subject before Mr. Lee's mind is the "immateriality of the soul," and that this text has been adduced to prove it! But if he can see any connection between it and the subject, he can see far better than I can. Her "soul departed," ergo, it is immortal! Truly, this is an "age of reason." Mr. Lee says, "Her body did not depart. Her brains did not depart!" And was there nothing else which could "depart," and which, in scripture language, is termed the "soul?" Could not her breath—her life depart, and "her body" and "brains" remain? This text proves only one thing, and that is the departure of the woman's soul, life, or breath; and has no bearing whatever upon Mr. Lee's question.

But Mr. Lee thinks his doctrine of "immateriality," is taken for granted in the Bible! This is begging the question. The Bible, so far as I know, takes nothing for granted; and, even if it did, this would not do away with the necessity of Mr. Lee's proving his position, by proving that the Bible takes it for granted. Let him not assume this, but prove it.

2. His second proof is Numbers 16: 32, where God is spoken of as the "God of the spirits of all flesh." What has this to do with Mr. Lee's "immaterial soul?" I admit that God is "the God of the spirits of all flesh," because "in Him we live, move, and have our being;" but this does not prove that "the spirits of all flesh" are the "immaterial souls" of all flesh. Inasmuch as "the spirit of life," or "breath of life," which inflates the lungs, oxygenizes the blood, and gives life to the flesh, is from God; He is emphatically the "God of the lives of all flesh." And, I apprehend, this is the meaning of the passage. In Numbers 27: 15, 16, there is a passage of similar import.

3. Mr. Lee's third argument is Job 14: 22. "But his flesh upon him shall have pain, and his soul within him shall mourn." Were I disposed to be hypocritical, I might analyze this thus: First, we have the "flesh;" second, the "him;" and third, the "soul." The "flesh" is not the "him," because it is upon "him;" and the soul is not the "him," because it is in "him." It follows, therefore, according to this mode of reasoning, that neither the "flesh" nor the "soul" constitutes the "him;" or man. How will this tally with Mr. Lee's theory? This shows the folly of all such reasoning. The simple meaning of the text is this: The "flesh upon" his person "shall have pain, and his heart within him shall mourn."

4. His fourth proof is Job 31: 30. "Neither have I suffered my mouth to sin; by wishing a curse to his soul." Here, again, I may ask the question, What has this to do with the "immortality of the soul?" The term soul is often used as a Hebraism for the person, and as often used for life; so that the text and context must determine its signification in any given case. In the text before us, it evidently means life, or the person of whom life was an attribute.

5. His fifth argument is chapter 32: 8. "But there is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." This is the most plausible scriptural argument yet offered by Mr. Lee, but this does not prove his point. Mr. Lee himself admits that this "appears to be an allusion to God's breathing into man the breath of life; after he had formed him of the dust of the ground, by which he became a living soul." In addition to this admission on the part of Mr. Lee, it is remarkable that the spirit is represented as being without knowledge until the "inspiration of the Almighty gives them understanding." Mr. Lee makes another important admission, which I hope the reader will remember. It is this: "Man here denotes the visible, tangible frame, the body; in this there is a spirit." Very well; "man," then, is the "body," animated by "a spirit"—"the breath of life," and God gives them "understanding." Thus Mr. Lee has helped us to the refutation of his argument.

6. Mr. Lee's sixth proof is Proverbs 19: 2, "that the soul be without knowledge is not good." He thinks "this text clearly implies the existence of an intelligent soul, distinct from the body." But how can an "immortal soul," which is self-conscious—self-intelligent, "be without knowledge?" Here Mr. Lee is caught in his own snare! I regard this text, therefore, notwithstanding what Mr. Lee says about the definite article, as being similar, in this respect, to the passage, "the soul that sins, it shall die;" and as referring to man, in relation to that attribute of his nature which is the seat, or sensorium of the mind.

7. His seventh argument is based on Eccles. 12: 7, "Then shall the dust return unto the earth as it was:—and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." This clearly refers to God's "creating man of the dust, and breathing into his nostrils the breath of life;" and has no more to do with the "immateriality of the soul," than the blood of man. When man dies, that which came from the earth, returns to the earth; and that "breath of life" which God "breathed into his nostrils" returns to him in the expanse of Heaven. In point of fact, however, the body is not less from God than the spirit, or "breath of life." Both are from Him. And this same author, Solomon, as well as Moses, speaks of the beasts as possessing the same "spirit of life." "They all have one breath; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."

8. Mr. Lee's eighth proof is Ezek. 18: 4, "Behold, all souls are mine: as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine." Why did not Mr. Lee quote the whole verse? Why did he omit the last clause? Was it because the whole verse would not answer his purpose? "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," was too strong for Mr. Lee! He reminds me of a person, who is running along a beautiful lawn, where everything is pleasant to the eye, and grateful to the senses; but suddenly an awful precipice presents itself, and the man starts back with horror at the impending danger! So Mr. Lee, conscious of the truth of his position, passes rapidly from text to text, hoping to fortify his favorite doctrine of "immateriality," when suddenly and unexpectedly he treads upon the very brink of a logical abyss, where all his arguments are in danger of being precipitated to the gulf below. He pauses, starts back, and retreats!! with the words sounding in his ears, and vibrating along the fibres of his brain,—"THE SOUL THAT SINNETH, IT SHALL DIE!" This text, so far from helping Mr. Lee, is fatal to his whole theory; for it affirms that the sinful soul shall die, which is incompatible with his view of the subject.

9. His next argument is founded on Zech. 12: 1, where God speaks of forming "the spirit of man within him." There is no difficulty here, according to our view, whether we understand the term "spirit" to apply to the life or the mind. Both life and mind are "formed," developed, or manifested "within" the man. But Mr. Lee takes a liberty which the rules of logic do not allow him. He proves that man has a soul or spirit, but its nature he takes for granted. He is not required to prove that man has a "spirit," but to prove "that spirit immortal." This he has failed to do; for to do this it is not enough to prove that the spirit is a distinct entity from the body; but he must also show that it is necessarily immortal. This he can never do.

10. His tenth argument is based on Rom. 8: 16, where Paul speaks of the witness of the Holy Spirit "with our spirit." On this I remark that neither God nor man "bears witness," except by words or signs addressed to the minds of men. "The spirit bears witness with our spirits," minds, or hearts, if you please, that we are the children of God: but this "witness" is in his word, and addressed to our understandings; and not to our feelings or passions. The christian has better evidence of his being a "child of God," than a mere impulse, or feeling, which is the sport of a thousand circumstances. When his heart, his life, his words, &c. are all in harmony with the Gospel, then it is that "the spirit," by that word, "bears witness" with his mind, his conscience, that he is born of God.

11. His next proof is 1 Cor. 2: 11, "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of a man which is in him?" This belongs to a class of texts already examined, and means no more, I apprehend, than that a man is alone conscious of the operations of his own mind.

12. Mr. Lee refers to chap. 6: 20 as a proof—"For ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and your spirit, which are God's." This proves that men can glorify God "in the body," although "matter," which, I suppose, is more than Mr. Lee would willingly admit. The text clearly teaches us the whole man, "soul, body and spirit," should be devoted to His cause. That all the physical, moral and mental powers should be consecrated to his service. I see nothing in this to favor the popular theory.

13. He then refers us to 2 Cor. 4: 16, where Paul speaks of an "outward" and "inward man." I am willing that Peter shall explain Paul. "See 1 Peter 3: 3, where he defines the "inward" or "hidden man" to be "the heart."

14. His fourteenth proof is 2 Cor. 7: 1, "Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." Apart from the absurd idea that "filthiness" is here ascribed to an "immaterial spirit," it must be evident to those who think for themselves, that the apostle meant no more than that they should put away all evil—all immoral contaminations, and be holy in life, temper and disposition.

15. Mr. Lee's final argument in the article I am reviewing, is James 2: 26, "For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." In this passage, it is perfectly evident the term "spirit" signifies "breath," the breath of life; and it is so rendered in the margin. This text is against Mr. Lee, and proves that, after the expiration of the breath, there is not an "immortal spirit" animating the body; but that as "faith without works is dead," so "the body without breath is dead also."

In Mr. Lee's concluding article on the immateriality of the mind, he argues thus: "The same words which are applied to man to describe his spiritual nature, are applied to God," "and any criticism which will invalidate the evidence in proof that the human soul is spirit, and not matter, will equally weaken the argument in support of the idea that God is a spirit."

Now, kind reader, that you may see the force of this argument, I will apply it to another matter, thus: "The same words which are applied to" the wind, "to describe its "spiritual nature, are applied to God," "and any criticism which will invalidate the evidence in proof that the" wind "is spirit and not matter, will equally weaken the argument in support of the idea that God is a spirit."

This is Mr. Lee's argument, only it is applied to the wind instead of man; and the reader can at once see its fallacy. I could give examples as Mr. Lee has done, but this is unnecessary. We might as well argue that because certain terms, generally applied to other objects, are used in relation to God, that their natures were similar, as to argue that because the term spirit is applied to man, therefore his spirit is like God's—immortal. The terms "sun," "soul," "heart," "wings," "shadow," &c. are used in relation to Jehovah; but who would thence infer that He is of the same nature with the "sun," or that His "soul" and "heart" are of the same nature with the "soul" and "heart" of man?

Does Mr. Lee really believe that God has a "soul" and a "heart"? If so, He is a compound being, and no compound is eternal. These words are used in reference to Him, in an accommodated or figurative sense; so also is the term spirit when applied to man—to the wind—to the breath of life—to the mind—and to the life itself.

"God is a spirit" in the highest sense of the word; but when this term is applied to the wind, and to man, it is used in a subordinate sense. As well might Mr. Lee argue that because the same word is applied to the beasts, therefore, they have "immortal spirits." Mr. Lee's argument, to be valid, must hold good in all cases to which the term is applied; or else, if there be an exception, I shall maintain that man is an exception.

Mr. Lee refers to the text, "the spirits of just men made perfect," which, I apprehend, applies to persons raised from the dead, and not to men in the flesh. He also quotes the text, "God is spirit; and they that worship him must worship him with spirit and with truth," to follow his reading. What is the meaning of the passage? It is this; that mere outward forms—the "drawing nigh unto God with the lips, while the heart is far from him"—is not acceptable worship. His worship must proceed from the heart—be pure, sincere, and according to the "truth;" for "in vain do you worship me; teaching for doctrine the commandments of men." But the text contains not the slightest proof that the spirit of man is immortal, which is the point to be proved. Mr. Lee has signally failed in this part of his argument; indeed, we may say of them all, that they contain the elements of their own refutation. He set out to prove the "immateriality of the soul," and the reader can judge how far he has succeeded. Sometimes he affirms "immateriality" of the "soul," and then of the "spirit;" he quotes a text to prove this of the "soul," and, anon, of the "spirit;" so we are, after all, at a loss to know whether he affirms "immateriality" of both, or of one. The popular theory presents a chaotic system—a confused mass—a perfect Babel, without order and without light. The advocates of it talk of "spiritual substances," and yet deny the existence of spirit-matter, as though there was any difference between "substance" and "matter!" But I have gotten through with Mr. Lee's arguments, and must await his next article.

THE DISCUSSION.—As Br. Lee, of the True Wesleyan, has expended his strength, in his article No. IX. on the immortality of the soul, particularly on a paragraph in our "Six Sermons," we have judged best to give the reader his entire article; and we should be pleased to see Br. Walsh's reply to it in the Wesleyan. We really wish we were publishing a weekly paper; for, in that case, we would give all Br. Lee's articles entire, which would give us much pleasure; and we have been half tempted to give them as it is. We would reply to the following article ourself, but do not choose to interfere with our Associate Editor in his review.

THE CONSCIOUS-EXISTENCE OF THE SOUL AFTER THE DEATH OF THE BODY.

An argument from the immateriality, or spiritual nature of the soul.

Our first argument in proof that the soul does not die with the body, but maintains a conscious existence after the body is dead, is drawn from its immateriality or spiritual nature. The foundation for this argument has been laid in the preceding numbers, in which the immateriality of the human soul has been proved. We are not called upon here to prove this point, but only to make an application of it as a truth already established.

Before we enter upon the direct argument, it is necessary to state the precise point to be proved by it. It has been misunderstood, and hence, met by a misdirected and insufficient reply. Rev. George Storrs, in his six sermons against the soul's immortality, meets the argument thus:

"It is said—The soul is spiritual, hence indestructible, and therefore immortal. One single consideration is sufficient to overthrow this argument, and show that it has no force. He who created can destroy. Our Saviour saith—Fear him who is ABLE to destroy both soul and body in hell."

It should be remarked on this extract, that as a reply it is defective in two particulars:

1. It assumes that "destruction" means a loss of conscious existence, when applied to the soul. This is not admitted, but as it belongs to another division of our subject, we will not argue it here, but leave it to be attended to in its proper place.

Its capital defect is, it entirely misapprehends the question. The argument does not rest upon the assumption that God cannot destroy or annihilate a spirit after he has created it, but only that the soul is immortal in its nature, having no tendency in itself to annihilation, and must exist forever, unless sent into non-existence by the same Almighty Power which gave it being. There is an important distinction between the natural immortality of the soul, and God's power to annihilate it, which Mr. Storrs entirely overlooked in his attempt to meet the argument. God may be able to destroy what is immortal in its own nature, and what would live forever but for such destruction; hence, could it be proved that God can destroy the human soul; yea, could it be proved that he will annihilate it, it would not follow that it is not ever living in its own nature. If the soul is not immortal in its own nature, it must cease to exist by the operation of the laws of its being, just as the body does, and can need no destruction from the Almighty, any more than the body, to cause it to cease to exist. To argue that God can destroy the soul, as Mr. Storrs does, implies that it will not die of itself, without the direct exertion of Almighty Power to do it. The body is mortal, is a compound, an organism, and by the operation of the laws of its elemental and organic nature, must wear itself out and cease to exist, without being destroyed by the direct operation of external force, as is implied when Mr. Storrs affirms that God can destroy the soul. On the other hand, if the soul is a simple spiritual essence, immaterial, uncompounded, and indivisible, it must be immortal in itself, and must exist forever, unless actually destroyed by the Almighty Power that gave it existence.

This argument then, is not designed to prove that God cannot destroy the human soul, nor even that he will not, but only that the soul, being spirit and not matter, simple and not compound, indivisible and not dissoluble, it must be immortal in its nature, and live after the body is dissolved, yea, live forever, unless destroyed by the Almighty Power that gave it being. To this point we will now direct a few thoughts.

1. The soul being an immaterial, uncompounded spiritual essence, as fully proved in the preceding, it cannot be affected by such agents as operate upon and destroy compound bodies and organisms. Frost will kill the body, but no one will contend that an immaterial spirit can be frozen to death. The body is divisible, and may be cut to pieces, but it will not be pretended that an immaterial, intangible, indivisible soul can be cut to pieces, with saws, knives and axes. It is admitted that the soul resides in the body during our natural life; now suppose a machine should be constructed, which at one blow would cut the body as fine as the sand upon the sea shore, would the soul be cut to pieces by the operation, admitting it to be in the body at the time? It certainly would not, unless that which is immaterial can fill space so as to obstruct matter—unless that which is indivisible can be divided.

Suppose you cast both soul and body together into a furnace as hot as the one prepared by Nebuchadnezzar, and what will be the result? The body will be consumed in a moment; but the soul will not be burned up. An immaterial, uncompounded spirit cannot be affected by material fire, any more than it can by frost; it could dwell alike in the sun or in the polar regions. The reader will now see the importance and force of our long argument on the immateriality of the mind. It is a vital point; if we have proved in the preceding numbers, that the human mind is an immaterial spirit, as we trust we have, the above reasoning shows that it must be immortal in its own nature, and that it will live forever unless it be destroyed by God its Maker. By all the conclusiveness, then, by which we have sustained the immateriality of the soul, does its immortality follow.

2. The argument drawn from the immateriality of the soul, not only proves that it is immortal in itself, living forever, if left to the operations of the laws of its own nature, but it proves that God cannot destroy it, in the manner in which destructionists generally suppose. Be particular; we do not say that God cannot annihilate a human soul, or any simple spirit which he has created, but only that he cannot do it in the manner in which destructionists generally contend he will do it. If God should annihilate the human soul, it would require a simple withdrawal of that Almighty Power which he put forth when he created it, and which not only sustains every human soul, but the universe of both matter and mind. This mode of annihilation forms no part of the creed of destructionists; they argue their doctrine from the Scriptures, which threaten and describe the punishment of the wicked; and represent the loss of existence as a part of, and end of this punishment, and as the result of positive infliction and suffering; and hence, they rely upon the words, destroy, burned up, consumed, and other like expressions. The argument founded upon the spiritual nature of the soul, proves that God cannot annihilate it in this way. If God himself has made the soul immaterial, he cannot destroy it by bringing material agents to act upon it. God cannot dissolve that which is uncompounded, or divide that which is indivisible. The reader is requested to bear in mind that the question at this point, is not—would the soul fall back into non-existence, should God withdraw his creating and sustaining power? but—can the soul be burned up, or be annihilated by the exertion of power upon it? We will close this argument, with the following extract from Mr. Drew's essay on the immortality of the soul. It may not be conclusive in itself, but taken in connection with our reasoning, on the immateriality of the soul, is not without its force.

"It has been already proved, that material bodies can never act but when they bring their surfaces into contact with each other. As an immaterial substance has no surface, it is a contradiction to suppose that matter can ever be brought into contact with it: to suppose such a contact possible, is to suppose a surface in an immaterial being, which at the same time is excluded by its natural immateriality. Whatever has an exterior, must have an interior; and what has both must be extended: and what is thus extended, cannot be immaterial. An immaterial substance, therefore, can have no surface, and that which has no surface can never be brought into contact with that which has; it therefore follows that the soul must be inaccessible to all violence from matter, and that it cannot perish through its instrumentality. As matter can only act by contact, it follows that without being extended beyond its physical nature, it never can destroy the soul. And to suppose matter to be thus extended, is to suppose it to be matter and not matter at the same time. Nor can any accession of power overcome the contradiction. No acquisition of power can alter the identity of its nature, or communicate to it a force of which its nature is incapable.

"We cannot conceive that an accession of power can cause matter to accomplish everything which is placed within the reach of its nature: but to suppose matter to extend its influence beyond the limits of its own existence, or to act where it is not, is to suppose its presence and absence at the same time. And to suppose it to annihilate a nature with which it has no physical connection, is to suppose it to act where it can have no influence; or that it can act and not act at the same time; which every one must see, is not only a moral but an absolute impossibility. It therefore follows, that the soul cannot perish by the instrumentality of matter, whatever influence be attributed to the application of its power; hence in reference to every material weapon,

"The soul, secure in her existence, smiles
At the drawn dagger and defies its point."

"It is certain that nothing cannot communicate what it does not possess; nor produce what it has not the power of producing. A being which can communicate annihilation, must be one which is in existence, for that which is not in existence can communicate nothing; and for the same reason can produce no effects. And that being which is in existence, cannot from the certainty of its own existence, include the absence of existence within its nature, and consequently, can never communicate to another that absence of existence or annihilation which it does not possess itself. Annihilation, therefore, can never be communicated, either by a being which is in existence, or by one which is not.

"If the soul be annihilated, it must be either by something which is in existence or by something which is not. But that which is in existence, can never produce what is physically contrary to itself; and that which has no existence can never act. The power which is supposed to reduce the soul to a point of annihilation, must either exist in this given point or it must not:—if it exist we have not yet arrived at that point which describes a nonentity: and where nonentity is not, annihilation can never be; and if it exist not in this given point, the soul can never be annihilated by its influence.

"Annihilation must be the result of power or it must not. If it be the result of power, power must continue to operate upon a subject, until the subject itself, through the influence of that power be reduced to a nonentity. But in admitting power to have an active operation, until it produces a nonentity, we admit a palpable contradiction. The admission of a power which is known to exist only because it produces a nonentity furnishes the mind with a chaos of contradictions—because that which produces a nonentity is not power but nothing."

The above extracts from Mr. Drew go to show that the soul cannot be annihilated, as destructionists suppose, by the punishments and pains of hell; and as it (the soul) cannot be annihilated in the way they suppose, and as their arguments all tend to prove that it will take place in this way, so far as they prove anything, their entire theory must fail. But we have got yet to consider the main point, which is the Bible doctrine on the subject.

REVIEW—No. VII.

In Mr. Lee's article No. 9, he takes up the question of "the conscious existence of the soul, after the death of the body." His argument is "from the immateriality of the soul." He tells his readers that "the foundation for this argument has been laid in preceding numbers, in which the immateriality of the human soul has been proved." Those of our readers, who have read his articles, and our Review, will doubtless be prepared to determine whether Mr. Lee has "proved" the "immateriality of the soul." I humbly conceive he has not "proved" it, nor is it in his power to "prove" it, by all the argument he can bring to bear upon the question.

Mr. Lee thinks the question has been "misunderstood," and attempts to define it more accurately. He quotes from Brother Storrs' "Six Sermons" the following paragraph:

"It is said—The soul is spiritual, hence indestructible, and therefore immortal." One single consideration is sufficient to overthrow this argument, and show that it has no force. He who created can destroy. Our Saviour saith—Fear him who is ABLE to destroy both soul and body in hell."

Upon this he remarks, that "as a reply, it is defective in two particulars:"

1. It assumes that "destruction," means a loss of conscious existence, when applied to the soul," which is "not admitted;" but, because "it belongs to another branch of the subject," he does not argue it. I will also let it pass, at present, for the same reason.

2. Mr. Lee says—"Its capital defect is, it entirely misapprehends the question." Let us see: Mr. Storrs states the argument of his opponents thus: "The soul is spiritual, hence indestructible, and therefore immortal." There is no "misapprehension" of the question here, for Mr. Lee himself argues upon this hypothesis; and the very article I am now reviewing, is based upon this assumption.

But, perhaps, Mr. Lee alludes particularly to the latter part of this paragraph, where Mr. Storrs says "one single consideration is sufficient to overthrow this argument, and show that it has no force. He who created can destroy. Our Saviour saith—Fear him who is ABLE to destroy both soul and body in hell."

I apprehend that, if Mr. Lee will examine this argument again, he will find more force in it than he is disposed to admit. The radical idea of immortality, is, not subject to death, or deathlessness. It follows, therefore, that that which is absolutely immortal cannot be "destroyed" by any power in the universe; for, to reason otherwise, would be to make it mortal and immortal at the same time, which is an absurdity. And hence the force of Mr. Storrs' argument—if God be "able" to "destroy" the soul, it is not absolutely immortal, because if immortal, it is necessarily indestructible. There is more argument, therefore, in Mr. Storrs' reply than Mr. Lee could perceive, or, perhaps, was willing to admit. Mr. Storrs' argument stands thus:

That which is immortal cannot be destroyed;
But God can destroy the soul;
Therefore it is not immortal.

But, I apprehend, Mr. Lee himself does not state the question as clearly as it ought to be stated. The primary question, and the one Mr. Lee has been discussing, is this—is the soul naturally immortal? Mr. Lee says it is; and that it is in its nature analogous to the nature of God. If so, it cannot be destroyed, because God cannot destroy himself! But God can destroy the soul, therefore it is not analogous to the nature of God—it is not immortal. Thus Mr. Storrs' argument comes back in all its original force.

We take the broad ground, first, that the soul is naturally mortal; second, that he is able to destroy it; and third, that he wills to destroy it, if wicked. In order, therefore, for Mr. Lee to meet this question fully in all its latitude, he must prove, that the soul is naturally immortal—that God is not able to destroy it—and that he does not will to destroy it! under any circumstances.

3. But, the fact is, Mr. Lee does not know what the soul is. He says "it is a simple spiritual essence, immaterial, uncompounded, and indivisible. Now, how does Mr. Lee know that the soul is "a simple spiritual essence, immaterial, uncompounded, and indivisible?" All this is mere assumption, without the shadow of a shade of proof! May I not ask Mr. Lee how he knows the soul is "uncompounded and indivisible?" From whence did he get his information? for it must be based upon facts, or be a matter of revelation. If upon facts, where are they? And, if upon revelation, give us the proof.

But he says—"This argument is not designed to prove that God cannot destroy the human soul, nor even that he will not, but only that the soul, being spirit and not matter, simple and not compound, indivisible and not dissolvable, it must be immortal in its nature, and live after the body is dissolved; yea, live forever, unless destroyed by the Almighty power that gave it being."

Here Mr. Lee argues the immortality of the soul, upon the absurd assumption that it is "spiritual, uncompounded and indivisible!" What an argument! Credat Judeus Apella. But, after all, Mr. Lee virtually yields the question, for he does not introduce this argument to prove that God cannot, or that he will not destroy the soul! Then, pray, what is gained to his cause by his argument? I confess I can see nothing, for he says it "will live forever, unless," yes, "UNLESS destroyed by the Almighty Power that gave it existence!" Well, suppose God should "destroy" it, as he says he will, what then becomes of Mr. Lee's favorite doctrine? It will be as though it never had been! Moreover, in confirmation of this view of the subject, we are taught that the Lord God "drove out" the man from the Garden of Eden, lest he should partake of the tree of life, eat, and live forever, an immortal sinner. Immortality, being an attribute of God—"he only having immortality,"—he cannot destroy that which is immortal, because to do so would be to act contrary to himself. To prevent, therefore, such a result as would have followed the act of Adam's eating of the tree of life, he drove him out, and obstructed his way to the life-imparting tree; knowing that, if he should partake of it, he would live forever as a necessary consequence. All the evidence, then, going to prove that God is "able," and that he wills to destroy the soul of the sinner, equally disproves the "natural immortality of the soul."

But, I repeat it, Mr. Lee does not know what the soul is. He speaks of it as an entity—as a distinct thing or essence, "uncompounded" and "indivisible." But, the truth is, Mr. Lee has been discussing the merits of an attribute, rather than an entity. Life, strictly speaking, is not an entity but an attribute. Immortality is not a thing-entity or essence, but a quality, an attribute of the thing of which it is predicated. Reasoning, therefore, upon a false assumption, what a flourish of "saws," "knives" and "axes!" Mr. Lee makes in his first paragraph. His whole argument on this point, is inconclusive and defective in the extreme, when considered in relation to the truth of his own theory! The fact is, he subverts his own hypothesis, as we shall presently see.

Mr. Lee concludes from his reasoning on the "immateriality of the soul," that "God cannot destroy it, in the manner in which destructionists suppose." Further on he says—"God cannot dissolve that which is uncompounded, or divide that which is indivisible." Thus Mr. Lee's own reasoning brings us back to the point, that, if the soul be immortal, it will, by a necessity of its own nature, live forever. But, as God has declared that, "the soul that sins shall die," it follows, as a necessary consequence, that it is not immortal; and, therefore, that it can be destroyed by an "exertion of power upon it;" and also, by being left to the operation of its own laws, as in the case of Adam.

Having subverted his own theory, Mr. Lee invokes the aid of Mr. Drew to effect its annihilation! Mr. Drew's first sentence is a death-blow to Mr. Lee's whole argument on the fancied "immortality of the soul!" Mr. Drew says—and Mr. Lee endorses it—"It has been already proved, that material bodies can never act but when they bring their surfaces into contact with each other!" This may have been deemed sound reasoning in the days of Mr. Drew, but, at the present time, every school boy of ordinary intelligence, knows better. Mr. Lee appears to have been asleep for a quarter of a century, without even dreaming in the time; and now that he is waked up he supposes every thing is just like it was when he fell asleep! He is waked up in the wrong place! and supposes himself living a quarter of a century past; and, consequently, speaks and reasons in harmony with the ideas which he obtained at that time! But he is behind the age, or else he would never have endorsed the sentence already quoted. Mr. Drew continues: "As an immaterial substance has no surface, it is a contradiction to suppose that matter can ever be brought into contact with it," &c.

I am willing to submit it to the reader, yea, to Mr. Lee himself, whether Mr. Drew has not disproved the very position he intended to establish! Let the reader remember, then, that Mr. Drew and

Mr. Lee regard it as "a contradiction to suppose that matter can ever be brought into contact with" that which is "immaterial." It follows, therefore, from their own principles, that, as the body is matter, and the soul, in their estimation, is "immaterial," they can never be brought into contact! They, therefore, have no connection whatever! If this argument is not suicidal, there is no truth in the universe. According to this absurd and "vain philosophy," God, being "immaterial" in their view of the subject, can have no connection with the universe of matter he has created. I hesitate not to say, that this opinion is atheistical in its tendency, and absurd and monstrous in fact!

Mr. Lee, by endorsement, says—"Whatever has an exterior, must have an interior; and what has both must be extended: and what is thus extended cannot be immaterial." Mr. Lee, by the aid of Mr. Drew, has clearly proved, admitting the correctness of their reasoning, that the soul is nothing! The following is their description of it: It is "simple," "uncompounded," "indivisible," "indissoluble;" without "exterior" or "interior surface," is not "extended" and "can never come into contact with matter!" Thus they have, by laboring to make the soul everything, reduced it to nothing! They have proved the very point we at first stated, viz.; That that which is immaterial is nothing—it is a nonentity!

And, just at this point, let me ask Mr. Lee a few questions: Upon your hypothesis, was the "immaterial soul," as you will have it, created of the dust, or breathed into the nostrils of Adam? If created of the dust, it is not "immaterial;" and, if breathed into his nostrils, it had "extension"—"surface," and necessarily came in "contact with matter;" and is, therefore, not "immaterial!"

Again, how many "immaterial souls" did God create in the beginning? How many had Adam? How many had Eve? Did they have more than one each? If they had only one each, whence have their numerous offspring derived theirs? You say it is "indivisible" and "indissoluble," consequently it is not transmissible! And that which is transmissible comes in "contact with matter;" but you say the "immaterial" soul "cannot come into contact with matter;" therefore it is not transmitted; and, consequently, unless God creates an "immaterial soul" for every child born, the offspring of Adam have no "immaterial soul!"—ergo, in your opinion, they have no soul at all! So Adam, according to the working of your philosophy, has given birth to a soulless progeny! Thus Mr. Lee, in attempting to prove that men have "immaterial souls," has actually proved that they have none at all!

The remainder of Mr. Lee's article abounds in the same sort of logic; it is suicidal in reference to his own theory! If Mr. Lee can reason no better than this upon his favorite view, he will murder his own cause, and bury it so deep, that no mortal hand shall ever be able to disinter it!

It would be a waste of time to extend the review of this article any further; but the reader, who is curious to see how completely Mr. Lee subverts his own theory, is referred to the article itself.

In conclusion, let me say, that Mr. Lee is utterly unable to sustain his theory by such arguments as he has adduced in the above article; nor do I believe that the man lives who can do it, by any sort of argumentation within the grasp of mortal intellect.

We fall back upon the conclusion, established alike by philosophy and revelation, that man is mortal in every part; and that immortality is the gift of God, through Jesus Christ, by a resurrection from the dead!

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST, 1849.

ENDLESS LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

"He that hath the Son hath life: he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5: 12.

BIBLE EXAMINER.—We have now exhausted all the funds we have to publish the Examiner. We are in debt to our subscribers, who have paid for this volume, four numbers more, which we intend they shall have if we can contrive any way to pay the printer; till then our friends must not look for the Examiner's regular monthly visits. We regret that we are brought to this necessity, but "the destruction of the poor is their poverty;" so we submit. We can still furnish the back numbers of the Examiner from January 1848. About three hundred new subscribers for the present year would give us the means to complete this volume; and we can furnish that number with the Examiner from January last; here we leave the matter.

ANY PERSON who will send us one dollar, current money, free of expense, for the Examiner for 1850, i. e. for Vol. V. before the middle of December next, we will, on the receipt of the money, send them one copy of Dobney on Future Punishment, in paper cover; or, three copies of the Six Sermons, 18mo; that is—the pamphlet of 120 pages; and if the Examiner is not published next year, we will send, instead of it, two more copies of Dobney; or, eight of the Six Sermons, as they shall choose. Please state distinctly in all cases which you will have. This proposition cannot apply out of the United States.

LOOK AT THIS.—One of our monthly exchanges, printed on paper about the same quality as our own, with 40 pages to the number, exceeding the Examiner in amount of matter only as 70 exceeds 42, that is, to use a printer's phrase, it has 70 thousand ems, whilst the Examiner has but 42 thousand, is $2 per year in advance. Each number has a paper cover, and so the postage is 3½ cents instead of one, or 1½, like the Examiner. Now look at the following statement. This monthly exchange gives its readers 840 thousand ems annually, at a cost to the subscriber of $2 42 cents, including postage: we now give 504 thousand ems at a cost to subscribers of from 62 to 68 cents!! We propose to give our subscribers for 1850 a semi-monthly, which will make one million and eight thousand ems, [1,008,000] or an excess over our exchange of 168 thousand ems, and all at a cost, including postage, of from $1 24 to $1 36 cents, or about one half the price of our exchange, provided we receive two thousand paying subscribers for the next year. But if we publish only once each month, as now, and yet increase the price of the Examiner to $1 00, we shall then give you nearly five-eighths as much matter as our exchange gives for less than half the money.

BOOKS BY MAIL.—Our friends who order bound books sent by mail are informed, by law they "are not mailable matter;" and our Post Office will not forward them. We have had several calls to send bound Hymn Books and Sermons by mail: we cannot do it. Please remember this.

THE IMMORTALITY DISCUSSION.—Br. Lee, of the True Wesleyan, has nearly finished his side of the question. The Wesleyan of July 14 contained three numbers on the subject; in reference to which the Editor says—"This week's paper contains the whole of the direct argument against annihilation, at, or subsequently to the resurrection;" and he asks "particular attention to this argument;" and adds—"We believe it to be unanswerable, though we are liable to over value our own argument; at least, we could not answer it to our own satisfaction, and that is our rule of testing an argument." We thank Br. Lee for this very candid confession: we should not expect he could answer two sides of any question to his own satisfaction at the same time. We have been in a similar position sometimes ourselves; but further light has shown us that we could answer our previous argument to our entire satisfaction. And we think Br. Lee may yet, with the light that shall be shed on his path, be able to answer his own argument to his entire "satisfaction," so far as he has stated the argument of his opponents clearly; which he has by no means done in all cases. His favorite phrase is "annihilation;" with that he and our opponents generally try to make a sound; and many minds are more affected by sound than sense. Let any one, even Br. Lee himself, read over his entire argument and substitute death for his unscriptural and unwarrantable word "annihilation," which we never use, and the largest portion of his argument will be found powerless. Just here we cannot forbear giving an extract from a letter we received from the late ORANGE SCOTT, founder of the "Wesleyan Methodist Connection of America." Writing us not many months after the first appearance of our views, in 1841, he says:

"S**** has been out against you; and, two weeks ago, B**** preached, or rather read a labored discourse against you. It was full of sophistry! and so are P*****'s articles!! and so is every thing I have yet seen against you!!! You must, however, expect something when Lee comes out, for he can make a lie appear like the truth. You are likely to have work enough to answer all who oppose you; but you have put your hand to the plow and must not look back."

Br. Lee seems to lay considerable stress upon the opinions of "the fathers," in this controversy, so we have thought to give him a specimen of the opinion of a father of the Wesleyans in America. The letter of Br. O. Scott was written to us before we had put forth the strength which the Lord afterwards gave us, by which he enabled us to bring out the "Six Sermons;" those were not preached till a year later; and to use Br. Lee's language, "We believe" the main positions of our Six Sermons are "unanswerable;" sure we are Br. Lee has not answered them; "though we are liable to over value our own argument." Br. Lee has put forth his strength; and we acknowledge that we expected if any man could show us to be in error, that man was Brother Lee; but skilful as he is both in logic and "sophistry," in our judgment, he has utterly failed, this once, to make the pagan fable [we will not say "lie"] "look like the truth." So far from it, that we now consider the matter settled firmer than ever before, that man has no immortality out of Christ; and no future life except by a resurrection from the dead; and, also, that "all the wicked will God destroy;"—"THEY SHALL BE AS THOUGH THEY HAD NOT BEEN." Ob. 16. Call that "annihilation" if you will: it is what God says of the wicked, in plain words, in opposition to all pagan, papal, and protestant inferences. We rejoice that Br. Lee has made this last effort; and we wish to make no other reply, ourselves, than what is contained in our Six Sermons and views on the intermediate state as found in our 18mo. pamphlet; we will risk that with Br. Lee's "unanswerable argument" the world over, and have no fears for the result in any mind not bound by sectarianism. Our Associate Editor will, of course, finish his Review of Br. Lee's argument so soon as we shall have the means to publish it; and if the "unanswerable argument" is not thoroughly answered and its fallacy fully shown to the "satisfaction" of others, if not to Br. Lee's mind, we are greatly mistaken.

NOTE.—We wish it distinctly understood, that Br. Scott's reference to Br. Lee related only to his logical and controversial powers; not that Br. Scott or we ever had an idea that Br. Lee would knowingly attempt to make a lie look like the truth, but that such is his skill, that if he took the side of error, he could make it seem truth.

THE ATONEMENT.—We have heard that some persons have busied themselves in reporting that "Br. STORRS denies the atonement;" and some, we fear, under the garb of professed friendship, have helped on this falsehood by insinuating their fears that we deny the atonement. If you read the Examiner you need have no fears but that you will know our belief, for we have not shunned to declare our views on any Scripture subject when we thought there was a call for it. Br. E. Miller, Jr., has written on the subject of the atonement in the Advent Harbinger, and we are gratified to see that he advocates the same view that we expressed in the Examiner as long ago as April, 1848. We have not hesitated to express them publicly and privately since. We have no room to enlarge now, though we had intended to do so soon. But those who have read the articles in the late numbers of the Harbinger, by Br. E. Miller, may regard these views as substantially our own. We believe Christ died for our sins, but not in the sense of "paying our debts," nor "in our room and stead;" if so, universal salvation inevitably follows; and it is mockery to ask God to forgive our sins when the debt is paid. Some men's theology converts the God of love into a demon, and then deprives him of all exercise of the glorious prerogative of "forgiving iniquity, transgression and sins." We believe they do it "ignorantly in unbelief," being blinded by the creeds and traditions of men. May the Lord for-give them.

PREACHING every Lord's day, morning and evening, at the Saloon of "TEMPERANCE HALL," Third Street, below Green, west side, by the Editors of the Examiner.

CHOLERA—We are living in the midst of this sweeping scourge. Several of our Congregation have been attacked by it and suffered severely. We have been called to mourn its fatal visitation in the loss of our beloved brother James Masson, who died July 14th. Br. Masson was an every day christian—one of the right sort. He was always in his place in our public worship. He was one of our earliest friends in this city, and could always be depended upon. It is sad to see his place vacant. Great as the loss is to the Church, it is greater still to a large family of children, and other relations, to whom he was a father indeed; and to add to their affliction, Sister Masson, whose health has long been feeble, followed her husband in a few days to the silent grave; and thus are their household, almost with one stroke, deprived of both father and mother. Two more consistent christians are seldom met with: their last end was peace—they fell asleep in Jesus in the full hope that they would be awaked by him at his appearing and kingdom. Happy they who are always ready.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

No. I.

The Saviour inquired of the hypocritical Pharisees and Sadducees, "How is it that ye cannot discern the signs of the times?" This inquiry implies that the indications of the times, if carefully observed and inquired after, will show clearly the position we occupy in the world's history, and need not be mistaken. The times in which men live are to determine, in a great measure, their course of conduct; for it will appear in the course of our remarks that what may be proper and right to be done in one age, or in one period of an individual's life, may be exceedingly improper and wrong to be done in another age or period. We may illustrate this truth in various ways. For example—A mariner may go to sea at once, when his vessel is loaded, if wind and tide favor him, and there are no indications of a disastrous storm about to burst over him; but should such indications appear, so apparent as not to be mistaken by a careful observer of the signs, would he do well to disregard them, and rush out to sea, perilling all, rather than delay the commencement of his voyage? And if he should thus disregard the signs of the coming storm, and launch forth, and is wrecked and all lost in the tempest, is he not justly stigmatized as a fool for his course? And is he not blame-worthy? Did not Paul censure the Centurion of the vessel which carried him prisoner to Rome, because he disregarded the sign he had given him, that if he loosed from a certain port it would be attended with loss and damage? See Acts xxvi. Again—The farmer, when about to gather in his crops, or the fruits of the earth, carefully watches the signs of the weather, waiting for favorable indications to reap down his fields. He will not be guilty of the folly of reaping down his ripe grain, when there are indications of a storm immediately upon him. He watches with care and solicitude signs to satisfy his mind as to the course he is to pursue, and he is governed in his operations by the conclusions at which he arrives in his observations. Does he not act wisely in doing so?

Let us now take Scripture illustrations. Of Noah it is said, Heb. xi., 7, "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house, by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith."

Noah was "warned" of a coming flood, or had some sign or token, by word or otherwise, of that coming event. He heeded it, and prepared an ark to the saving of his house; and we all say he was wise in doing so. But suppose he had disregarded the sign, or warning, would he not have perished with the ungodly? And we here remark, to illustrate the principle we laid down at the outset, that though it might have been very proper and right for Noah to have bought land and built houses before he received the warning or sign of the flood, it would have been folly and madness for him to do so afterwards, and full evidence that he did not believe the flood was coming. And what a sorry sight it would have been for Noah to be preaching a flood at hand, and instead of giving his attention to building the ark, had spent his time in buying farms, building houses, factories, railroads, or hunting for gold mines. Surely a scoffing world might justly have said he was either a hypocrite or a fool.

Let us look at another case: Heb. xi., 24-26, "By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter. Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season: esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward."

Moses understood the signs of the times. He knew the period of the bondage of Abraham's seed "in a land not theirs" was near its accomplishment: and he understood that the nation that oppressed them about that time was to be "judged," and Israel brought out, or delivered. Observing these signs of the times, he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; or, refused the throne of Egypt, the pleasures of which he saw could only be enjoyed for a season. At a previous period, and under different circumstances, it might have been right and proper for Moses to occupy a place at Pharaoh's court; but the time had come—the signs had appeared—that Egypt was to be judged and Israel delivered. If Moses believed this, could he consistently continue at Pharaoh's court, and acknowledge himself the son of Pharaoh's daughter? Hitherto there had been no harm or wrong in his doing so; but now the case is different. Has he "faith" in God's word or not? He has; and changes his course of life, and departs from a position he could no longer occupy with safety. It is true he was guilty of an act of indiscretion, but even that was overruled to separate him from a position that to him was full of danger. When Moses came from his forty years retirement in Midian to demand of Pharaoh to let Israel go, suppose in connection with that demand he had daily been bargaining with the Egyptians to buy their land, and contracting with them to build him houses; would that have been consistent with his professed faith that God was about to plant Israel in the land of Canaan—the promised land? Surely such a course would have been highly inconsistent; yet it might have been perfectly proper in the early part of Moses' life, but the signs of the times forbid it now.

We take another example. When the Jews were carried away captive into Babylon for seventy years, God, at the commencement of their captivity, expressly commanded them to build houses in Babylon, and dwell in them, and seek the peace of the city, where they might dwell. See Jer. xxix. Hence, it was right, proper, and their duty, to do so at that time. But, by and bye, the times indicate that they are soon to return to Palestine:—would it now be proper for them to be purchasing fields and building houses to dwell in, as if they were still to continue in Babylon? True, many of them did; and of course did not return with their brethren who went up out of captivity: they had no faith or no inclination to share the fortunes of their brethren who left Babylon to return to Jerusalem. Did they act faith in God's promise of restoration? We have introduced this case as illustrating our principle, that what may be right and proper to be done at one time is neither right nor proper at another; and would be a mark of great folly if not of wickedness.

We might illustrate our principle with other examples, but we judge these are sufficient for our purpose: we proceed, therefore, with the application. The Lord Jesus Christ is to return to this earth, and is to receive the throne of his father David; the present age is to end, and a new order of things is to be established on earth. We shall not stop here to prove these points, believing that a large portion of our readers embrace them as settled truths, though they may differ somewhat as to the order and character of the events of the coming age, while nearly all of them will admit that a very great change is coming over the world. Believing, then, that the personal advent of Christ to this earth the second time, and that a great change is to take place in the world at that time, are events to be realised at some period; and seeing great convulsions now going on in the earth, does it not become us to be wise, and inquire what those commotions indicate? or of what times are they the signs? And if satisfied, that they are signs of the "kingdom of God" being "nigh at hand"—that fifth universal empire so clearly exhibited in Dan. ii. and vii., and shadowed forth in the Book of Revelation—does it not become us to regulate our pursuits and course of life in agreement with such evidence and such a revolution as the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth implies? We should not suppose any sane man could give any other than an affirmative answer. The point then to settle is—do the events of the times in which we live indicate the soon bringing in of the kingdom of God, or reign of Christ personally upon the earth? In answering this inquiry we do not design to go formally over the prophecies that relate to the four first universal monarchies set forth in Dan. ii. and vii., as those topics have been to the minds of most of our readers often fully presented, and there can remain no reasonable doubt but those four monarchies have had their day, and passed away, and that we have been for many centuries in the divided state of the fourth; i. e. Europe divided into a number of petty monarchies, amazingly controlled by a mongrel power, symbolized by a "horn having eyes as a man." This power being acknowledged by all Protestants to be the Politico-Ecclesiastical power of Rome. This power is again symbolized in Rev. xiii., by a beast rising up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns. This description marks the time of the development of the politico-ecclesiastical power of Rome as coming into existence in the divided state of the fourth, or Roman empire, when kingly governments were in existence, as the crowns upon the horns indicate. In the seventeenth chapter of Rev. we are presented with another aspect of the same power: it is the politico-ecclesiastical power of Rome, after some of the kingly powers of the divided Roman empire have fallen, so that the scarlet colored beast there, though it has seven heads and ten horns, is presented without any mention of crowns at all; perhaps not because it had no crowns on any of its horns, but because some of them had become republican at the time "the judgment of the great whore" is to take place. It is evident John was shown that power at a period just prior to its destruction, and while the seventh vial of the seven last plagues was being poured out. At that time he was shown a corrupt woman [a corrupt ecclesiastical power] sitting upon a scarlet-colored beast, [a bloody secular or civil power] full of names of blasphemy. To mark its location on earth it has seven heads and ten horns, showing that it is Roman, and can answer to no other power in existence than the Papal, civil and ecclesiastical power combined, as seen in the symbol of a corrupt woman riding and directing a bloody beast, in a time when republicanism had been established in some of the horn kingdoms. If this view is correct, it fixes the time of this aspect of the Papal power to the period since France, "the eldest son of" that corrupt "church," became republican; or subsequent to February 1848.

This corrupt woman, who has a name written upon her forehead, "MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS, AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH," was riding and governing the beast that had been in the bottomless pit, but ascended out of it just prior to the aspect of it presented in this 17th chapter. The same power under another aspect, in Rev. 13th, went into captivity, or descended into the bottomless pit; this was done in the days of Napoleon Bonaparte, when for a time the Papal power was stripped of all its civil authority; but afterwards this beast was re-instated or ascended out of the bottomless pit, though under another aspect: it was the "eighth" king, though in fact "of the seven;" i. e. it is the same power as the beast of Rev. 13th with seven heads, &c., but had now taken its last form. In this last form the beast, or civil power of Papacy, would be brought into circumstances calling for the intervention of the other civil powers, symbolized by the horns, and they should have one mind, and should give their power and strength unto the beast, not to the woman; but to strengthen and establish the papal civil power. And what do we see at this very time? One of the strangest and most astonishing events that has ever been recorded on the pages of history, viz. a nation just emerged from monarchy and thrown the crown from its horn in contempt, volunteers by her rulers, to restore the Pope to his civil power; and in doing this, that nation is seen agreeing with the despots of Europe to reinstate the Pope in his civil power, i. e. they "agree and give their power and strength to the scarlet colored beast!" But mark well, this is only to be done "till the words of God shall be fulfilled;" for, before this conflict is over, there will be a hatred kindled up against the woman—the ecclesiastical power of papacy—which shall only be quenched by eating her flesh and burning her with fire. The woman includes the city where her abominations have been concocted, and from whence they have been carried into execution; and also, most likely, all those kings of the earth, or old Roman empire, that have committed fornication with her, by upholding her spiritual wickedness and bloody persecutions. Hence we are of opinion that Rome itself, i. e. the city, will be utterly destroyed in the conflict, as was ancient Babylon, which was a type of it; and then one principal city after another, whose rulers were in the agreement to re-establish papal civil authority, will meet with a like destruction; and most likely Paris will be the second in the fall, and so on till they are all overthrown, and Europe is a desolation, as the prophecy clearly indicates it will be. This, of course, brings in that state of anarchy which we understand the scriptures clearly to teach as immediately preceding the establishment of a fifth universal monarchy—the kingdom of God—or the personal reign of Christ on the throne of his father David, which Jehovah has promised to give him, in spite of the rage of kings and rulers of the earth of whatever form their governments may be.

We do not feel justified, till we shall have further developments, in going more into details, or particulars, of coming events. The details may vary from any of our calculations, but the great fact that the scarlet-colored beast is soon to go into perdition, or be utterly destroyed, together with the woman who has been its rider, and that the reign of Christ is soon to follow, to our mind, admits not of a doubt. It may, however, be several years, and probably will be, before the whole work is accomplished; but it is nevertheless now in a state of accomplishment.

We may give more on this matter at another time, but rest here for this month. If these things are so, can we live in the same course of management of our temporal affairs that might have been justifiable and proper before the signs of the times indicated that this age is drawing to a close, and that the kingdom of God and the reign of Christ on earth and under the whole heaven is about to be opened? Let conscience do its work, and let us see to it that we do not slight its warning voice in these perilous times.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

FIRST QUESTION.—"How do you harmonize Zech. 14th with Matt. 13: 37—43?" s. w. c.

We suppose this question relates to the fact that Zech. 14, represents that there are persons "left of the nations" who, evidently, are in a state of trial after the advent of Christ, and in that day when "The Lord shall be king over all the earth:" while Matt. 13, seems to convey the idea of the entire destruction of the wicked at the end of the age, or at the time of the second advent of Christ. The 14th of Zech. is too plain and positive on the fact that there will be left of the nations, after the advent, who are in a probationary state, to be disproved either by argument or sophistry, however skillfully managed. We do not believe, that a soul who has attempted to explain away that view, has ever satisfied himself yet, for any length of time. It is an impregnable fortress against all and every class of advocates for the termination of probation to all men, without regard to their circumstances for hearing and knowing the truth, at the end of this age. No language could make the subject plainer than that used by the prophet Zechariah, that a state of trial to some of the inhabitants of earth will be continued after "the Lord my God shall come and all the saints [holy ones] with thee."

Our Lord, Matt. 13th, is speaking only of a specified class of wicked men, symbolized by "tares," and those too in a specified location, viz. "among the wheat;" and they grew "TOGETHER" with the wheat; and so nearly resemble it, that men, in the present age, have not sufficient judgment to be entrusted with the work of rooting them up. The original word, "tares," signifies "bastard wheat;" it resembles genuine wheat, and is scattered among it. The symbol therefore shows the class of wicked persons spoken of are professors of religion, and that they are in the nominal churches; the parable relates to them, and to them only. In relation to such wicked professors, with which the devil has filled professedly christian churches, from various motives, such as respectability; to get on better in business; and to cover up their wickedness under the cloak of religion, we have no idea that they will be of the number "left" of whom Zechariah speaks. They are "children of the wicked one"— his offspring, or the fruit of his producing: "the harvest" for them "is the end of the world"—aionos—age: the end of the age that precedes the second advent, or personal reign of Messiah. Then they who have imposed upon true christians, and been a "scandal" to the cause of pure christianity, will meet with judgment, symbolized by being cast into a furnace of fire: their hypocrisy and wickedness exposed, and themselves cut off under circumstances of shame and anguish which will be a standing monument of God's abhorrence of all such characters. All this has nothing to do with those not included in this specified class; and the fact that our Lord adds—"Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father," shows there is somebody "left" for them to shine upon; and we are not left in the dark as to whom they are to enlighten, viz. "Every one that is left of the nations," contradistinguished from the nominal churches who have been judged.

SECOND QUESTION.—"Is the city of Zech. and of Rev. 20, the camp of the saints, and that of Rev. 21, which John saw come down from heaven, all one?" S. W. G.

If we understand this question, we answer, no. And with present light, we believe them to be three distinct cities; or, three distinct periods of time are covered by their history. Zechariah's being at a period somewhere prior to the advent, without now attempting to define that period: Rev. 20th being during the thousand years; Rev. 21st, after the thousand years; or, if during the thousand years, then to be regarded simply as a symbol of the glorified church, shining "forth as the sun," as the great city of Babylon was previously a symbol of a corrupt, persecuting, and destroying church. The latter being utterly destroyed, or "burned with fire," the pure and glorified church takes its place on earth, to bless those that are left of the nations, and spread its light and glory on all around, as the corrupt church had scattered darkness and spread a curse on earth's inhabitants before.

THIRD QUESTION.—"Will the saying of Peter, 3d chap., take place at the advent or towards the evening of the day of the Lord?" S. W. G.

We infer that this question relates to what Peter says of "The heavens and earth which are now" being "kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." If Peter is speaking of the literal heavens and earth being dissolved by fire, it must, we think, clearly relate to the close of the day of the Lord, as it is an event connected with the "judgment and perdition of ungodly men:" this, certainly, is not universal till the end of the thousand years. See Rev. 20: 11—15:

SCRIPTURE EXPOSITIONS.

EPHESIANS, CHAP. V.

The apostle now proceeds to caution them against a class of sins which he thus enumerates.

VERSE 3. But fornication, and uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints.

"Fornication"—to which the Gentiles were notoriously addicted, even in connection with the worship of their gods, thus putting a religious sanction upon that abominable sin—"and all uncleanness"—all impurity—"or, covetousness"—pleonexia—same word translated "greediness," chap. iv. 19; signifying "inordinate desires." It may relate to any object; whether money, food, drink, dress, or furniture, or whatever may be used for the gratification of the senses, or animal nature: "let it not once be named"—mentioned, heard of, or known—"among you"—let them have no existence in your midst—"as becometh saints"—those who by profession are holy.

VERSE 4. Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks.

"Filthiness." The word signifies anything indecent or obscene—"nor foolish"—simple, useless—"talking"—which benefits none and may injure the talker and hearer—"nor jesting"—the primary signification of the word is politeness; but it is used to signify, jesting, buffoonery, scurrility, or low, vulgar abusive language. It is quite as likely the apostle uses the word here to speak against that mock and hypocritical politeness which is so common in people destitute of real love to their fellow men, who seek to make up for it in professions and unmeaning compliments: but, he says, such things "are not convenient"—anekeonta—are not fit, not becoming, not proper, ought not to be. "Not convenient" is a very tame translation: as though men might do it, if it were only "convenient!" It is evidently a prohibition—a course of conduct not fit for imitators of God and Christ. "But rather giving of thanks." The word here seems to signify not the giving of thanks, in the ordinary sense, but—"decorous or, instructive conversation"—the opposite of the conversation just censured.

VERSE 5. For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, or covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

On this verse we need not remark, except again to call attention to what is said of the "covetous man"—he "is an idolater." We ask the reader to look again at our remark on verse 3, as to what constitutes a covetous person. Such persons are now denominated idolaters; and with propriety. That object of sense, which a person sets his mind upon inordinately, that is, immoderately, to excess, or disorderly—becomes his god: he is under its government—pays it the homage of obedience; looks to it as the object of his supreme happiness. Though he, himself, may not be aware of it, through blindness of mind, yet his life and conversation will make it manifest where his heart is. Listen to the conversation of many professing to be seeking a treasure in "the kingdom of God;" what do you hear? Alas! Balls, parties, dress, food, drinks, sensual gratifications, furniture, houses, lands, gold, dollars, offices, honors, &c., &c., all tending to show that they have those inordinate desires which constitute them the covetous persons, who Paul says are "idolaters," and who shall have no "inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God." Fearful words! Who has not cause of alarm? "Whose conversation is in heaven?" Who really manifest, by all their course of life, that they esteem the love of God and Christ, and an "inheritance in the kingdom," of more importance to them than all animal gratifications put together?

VERSE 6. Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience.

This verse is too emphatic to need comment. If any man attempt to make you think these inordinate desires are harmless, beware that you are not deceived by them: God's judgment will fall on all such.

VERSE 7. Be not ye therefore partakers with them.

Be not partakers with them. If partakers with them in their wicked practices, you will be also in their exclusion from the kingdom of God, and in that wrath that is to come upon them.

VERSE 8. For ye were sometime darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light.

"Ye were sometime"—in time past—formerly—"darkness"—used figuratively for ignorance: that is, "Ye were formerly ignorant of the wicked character and ruinous end of the course of life you were in"—"but now are ye light"—used figuratively for knowledge; that is, "Ye have now knowledge in regard to those things"—"in the Lord"—by that "word of truth" which has been preached to you, by which you have been brought into union with the Lord, so as to be "partakers of the divine nature;" thus, dwelling in light; therefore, "walk as children of light"—let your course of life correspond with the knowledge and truth ye have received.

VERSE 9. For the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness, and righteousness, and truth.

It is by the Spirit of God that spiritual light, truth, or knowledge has been communicated, through prophets, apostles, and Jesus Christ, and its direct operations in the mind by the word of truth: and the fruit it produces is the opposite of the fruit of ignorance in which they formerly had their course of life: it is "in all goodness and righteousness"—piety to God, sanctity of life, "and truth"—verity, in opposition to what is false or wrong—it signifies, also, sincerity. Such is the character of the "new creature," or spiritual nature which is brought out by the Spirit in such as do not grieve and quench it.

VERSE 10. Proving what is acceptable unto the Lord.

"Proving"—try, examine by the light—the word of truth—ye have received—"what is acceptable"—well-pleasing "unto the Lord."

VERSE 11. And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.

"Have no fellowship"—no communion or participation "with the unfruitful"—noxious, destructive "works of darkness"—or ignorance; such as described in the previous verses: "but rather"—the more (walking in the light, and in obedience to the word of truth) "reprove," rebuke, or convince "them," that is, show them that their way is destruction.

VERSE 12. For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret.

This verse needs no comment.

VERSE 13. But all things that are reprov'd are made manifest by the light: for whatsoever doth make manifest is light.

"All things that are reprov'd"—discovered—"are made manifest," or discovered, "by the light"—by the knowledge, or divine illumination imparted to men: "for whatsoever doth make manifest"—or discovers to men the sinfulness of sin, and its dangerous consequence, "is light"—is divine knowledge, or illumination.

VERSE 14. Wherefore he saith, Awake, though that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light.

"Awake"—egeirai—to arouse one's self to a better course of conduct—"thou that sleepest"—that art slothful, careless, secure in sin—"and arise from the dead"—used figuratively to denote thy destitution of divine life—"and Christ shall give thee light"—shall shine upon you. Light here is equivalent to life. "Sinner arouse thyself—break off from sin—rest not in thy destitution of divine life—look to Christ—he came that you might have life, and that you might have it more abundantly; pursuing this course you shall receive that life, and thus gain eternal life, which is given unto us in Christ, and in him alone."

VERSE 15. See then that ye walk circumspectly not as fools, but as wise.

"See," take heed, take care, be cautious—"then, that ye walk"—that you live—"circumspectly"—accurately, or assiduously—"not as fools"—asophoi—unwise, foolish, destitute of true wisdom, pagan; i. e., in the practices he had warned them against—"but as wise"—those possessed of true knowledge, even that "light," or illumination, which "Christ gives" to those who receive spiritual life from him, when they arouse themselves from that careless and slothful state of sin spoken of in the previous verse.

VERSE 16. Redeeming the time, because the days are evil.

"Redeeming"—use, employ,—"the time, because the days are evil"—i. e. calamitous, afflicting, distressing: therefore, make the best of them—use, or employ them to the best advantage.

VERSE 17. Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is.

"Therefore"—because the days are evil—"be ye not unwise"—ignorant, or destitute of true knowledge—that is, the knowledge of the truths herein presented to your minds—"but understand what the will"—purpose, design, intention—"of the Lord is." That purpose, design, and intention is, that we should be holy—separate from all those wicked practices and dispositions before enumerated—and that we should be filled with divine knowledge and love, that God's full design and intention may be fulfilled in our "adoption of children to himself by Jesus Christ." "How glorious is the design and purpose of God to those who embrace his plan to become holy and unblamable before him in love. Let us understand it and act accordingly.

VERSE 18. And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit.

"Wherein is excess"—prodigality, debauchery, rioting—"but be filled with the Spirit"—or spirit of holiness. The use of intoxicating drinks brings men under their animal nature, and prepares them for debauchery, rioting, &c. Being filled with the Spirit, raises them superior to the control and slavery of animal, or, merely sensual gratifications; and thus giving the spiritual nature the predominance they rise in the strength of divine life, and ripen for the adoption, or immortality, incorruptbility, endless life. Instead, therefore, of seeking such light and transitory enjoyments as arise from the intoxicating stimulants, to which so many resort, give yourselves to spiritual joys.

VERSE 19. Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord.

"Speaking"—litanies—recounting, setting forth, narrating, reciting, declaring, [see the song of Moses, and Miriam, Exodus 15, for an illustration]—"to yourselves"—that is one to another—"in psalms and hymns"—sacred poetry in opposition to the light trash used by such as seek only the gratification of the animal senses—"and spiritual songs—making melody in your heart"—mind; the understanding employed as well as the voice, if we would make melody "to the Lord." How much solemn mockery we have reason to fear there is even in professedly religious assemblies: how much melody of voice with no correspondence in the mind. Let us beware of such hypocrisy.

VERSE 20. Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

All we need to remark on this verse is the manner in which thanks are to be offered to God. "In the name"—signifying in, through, or by, the person "of our Lord Jesus Christ." He is the head of our spiritual creation, as we have before shown—no man can come unto the Father but by him: it is in virtue of our relation to him, or union with him, that we are pleasing to God; and our only way of access, by prayer or praise, is by being in Christ—one with him, by that spiritual relation which constitutes us members of "his body, his flesh, and his bones," [verse 30;] that is, God regards us with approbation, or our prayers or praises, only as they proceed from us as of the person of Jesus Christ, his well-beloved Son. Thus appearing, He accepts both our prayers and praises as if they arose from Christ in person; and they really are such, because they are the out-breathings of that "one spirit" that animates his body, and gives vitality, or spiritual life to the whole in connection with its head, Jesus Christ.

EVENTS FUTURE.

By HENRY E. CARVER.

BRO. STORRS.—With you, I also believe that there are events, and momentous events too, in the history of the world to transpire ere that "same Jesus" shall stand upon the Mount of Olives, as brought to view in Zech. xiv. 4, and yet I am also clearly convinced that we may reasonably expect a speedy deliverance from this corruptible state, to that incorruptibility consequent on the resurrection of those who sleep in Jesus, and the change of those who are alive and remain; so that while I look forward, perhaps years, for the fulfilment of Zech. xiv., yet I do believe that it is our privilege to expect the speedy redemption of the body.

In order to harmonize what may seem inconsistent in this, permit me to call your attention to some of the circumstances attending the descent of the Son of Man to earth the second time. The prophet speaking of the day when his feet shall stand upon the Mount of Olives, says: "and the Lord my God SHALL COME, and all the Saints WITH THEE." Again, the apostle declares that it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is; and again, "when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, THEN shall ye also appear with him in glory." From the above texts we are clearly taught that the saints will be perfected before the descent of Jesus to the place from which he was taken up, for if they are like him when he appears, and appear with him in glory, it is evident that they must have been resurrected or changed, and their vile bodies fashioned like unto his own glorious body, prior to that appearing. This subject is more clearly presented in 1 Thess. iv. 13, 17, where, after warning them against ignorance, concerning them that sleep in Jesus, the apostle says—"For if we believe that Jesus died-and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him" (Jesus.) Here we have it distinctly stated that when God shall send Jesus, whom the heavens have so long retained, those who now sleep in Jesus will come with him. I am aware that this is in conflict with the generally received opinion respecting the order of events at the coming of Christ; but the apostle proceeds to give an explanation of the matter, and dissipates from my mind every vestige of difficulty and darkness, and opens to my view the way in which every jot and tittle of the "Word" will have its perfect accomplishment. The apostle proceeds to explain—"For the Lord himself shall descend from Heaven (where to?) with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Here, then, the matter is set plainly before us. When the Lord descends from heaven with a shout, &c., it is not to earth; neither is there an intimation that the world see him then, but he descends to where his Saints meet him—in the clouds, thus leaving ample space for the fulfilment of scripture between the resurrection and the appearing with all his Saints on the Mount.

Having suggested the subject to your mind, I now leave it with you to canvass; and by searching the scriptures to see whether there be light in it. To me it is plain that the resurrection does precede the appearing of Jesus, and thus, while I rejoice in the hope of speedy redemption, I can also with you look forward to the time when Christ shall come with all his saints, and find the armies of Gog and Magog [or Russia] gathered against Jerusalem in the land of Judea.

That the interval between the resurrection and that coming will be occupied in part with the return of the Jews is very probable; and that the descent of Jesus at the resurrection will be the time when his sign will be seen by the tribes of the earth, causing them to mourn, but will soon be disregarded, as all the rest of the signs have been, seems also plain; and it may be that the sign of the Son of Man will be the signal for the Jews to turn towards their own land.

Your brother searching after truth.

Cincinnati, Ohio.

The views of Bro. Carver, in the foregoing letter, are the same some Literalists take, both in England and America. We think we have impartially and without prejudice, examined that view of the resurrection of the saints, before the appearing of Christ to others, or what is called "two manifestations;" one to raise the saints and glorify them, and the other his appearance to the world afterwards; and we are compelled to regard the subject in a favorable light, though we are not settled that that is the correct view.—EDITOR.

Br. WILLIAM ONGLEY, Chemung Co., N. Y., writes:

Br. STORRS,—Praise the good Lord, we find many that are steadfast in the doctrines of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone. They seem not to fear the nominal priest or people, who teach fables but not the Bible. Last Lord's day we had a blessed public meeting. After which we retired to Br. Richard House's to spread the Lord's table, to break bread and take the cup free to all that love Jesus Christ. About twenty partook with us, and two or three came out and have made a bold stand for Jesus and his truth. Brethren pray for us, and for those lambs of the flock.

We have sold many copies of your Six Sermons in these parts; to the praise of our God they have been made a great blessing. I wish you to send me some more of them. Yours, waiting for immortality and eternal life.

Br. N. M. CATLIN, Indiana, writes:

Br. STORRS,—Truth is advancing in these parts. There is a great demand for your works on Immortality. I think I could dispose of $10 worth per quarter, if I could raise the means to purchase, but I must do as I can, and I am glad to be able to do a little in circulating the light, for I love truth and its advocates.

Please accept the assurance of my highest regard for yourself, as a brother in Christ.

Br. O. H. HITCHCOCK, Arcade, N. Y., writes:

DEAR BROTHER,—Notwithstanding I cannot see just as you do upon some points, I do think there is interesting and profitable matter enough in each number of the Examiner, to richly pay for all its expense.

We truly live in a very eventful period. Signs I think there is no mistaking, that this world is ripening for destruction, and the greatest event the world ever knew is soon to take place. Judging from my observation in this part of the country, if the Savior should come now but very few would be found ready. May the perilous times in which we live caution us to cling close to the cross of Christ.

Br. S. W. GERRITS, N. H., writes:

Br. STORRS,—I am well pleased with the Examiner as a general thing, though there are some ideas in it I cannot as yet fully understand. It appears to be our lot, in this state, to see through a glass darkly, but God has made it our duty and privilege to study his holy word. The Examiner, I am happy to say, has proved a powerful auxiliary in understanding it. The things referred to above are, the return of the Jews and probation after the advent; but I am willing to read; and if I must be in error, I would as soon have Br. Storrs' as any others. I do not recollect having seen Zech. 14th harmonized with Math. 13: 37 to 43. Will you impart light to us on those Scriptures? Is the city of Zech. and of Rev. 20, the camp of the saints, and that of Rev. 21, which John saw come down from heaven, all one? Will the saying of Peter, 3d chapter, take place at the advent or towards the evening of the day of the Lord? A short article in answer to these inquiries will greatly oblige.

Br. R. L. PARTRIDGE, Ohio, writes:

Br. STORRS,—The cause of Christ is rather progressing here. Though we have had bitter persecution, and have waded through strong opposition, yet it seems as if the foundation of heathen superstition in some minds is shaken. While some acknowledge the supremacy of the advent views, as seen in Scripture light, others (fearing Diana may fall) think that the best way to get along with the "infidel doctrine," is to keep still and say as little about it as possible; among these latter are preachers.

But the brethren are industrious, and the subject of life and death is considerably agitated. One individual who has lately united with the M. E. Church during a recent revival, being in class-meeting said, if there is any reality in religion he wished to know it, (he having been trained in the popular theory of the day, and discovering its non-essentials) said that the great question with him is "If a man die shall he live again?" I thought that if it was light he wanted, I might possibly be instrumental in helping him to a new ray, clear from the horizon of scriptural abundance, and consequently handed him a copy of your Six Sermons, which he is now perusing. We have preaching occasionally by Br. Lyons, regular prayer meetings and monthly meetings.

Br. F. J. MANSFIELD writes from Illinois:

Br. STORRS,—We are with you, out this way, on the destruction of the wicked and the state of the dead. I know of none who believe in the soon coming of our Lord in northern Illinois, but what are with you. It seems to me if men would read without prejudice, they would see such an overwhelming amount of evidence in the case, that they would be constrained to say, It is the truth of God.

Your "Six Sermons," together with "Pinney on the Purpose of God," are doing great good. I wish it was in my power to scatter them through this western country. Many are inquiring on the subject and want light. I know of several who are now deeply interested in the subject of the advent of Christ, whose minds were called up to this subject by the Life and Death question. No one can bring himself to believe that Adam was threatened with hell fire when he died. No, that fable was invented by wicked men who made money out of purgatorial fires. The simple truth is—Had not God made provision for fallen man, he would have gone down to death, and would have been as though he had never been.

IMMORTALITY.

REVIEW No. VIII.

"The common sentiment of mankind."

Gentle reader! I am glad, for your sake, that Mr. Lee has introduced the subject of, and based an argument on, "the common sentiment of mankind!"

He has proved, overwhelmingly and incontestably proved, the PAGAN ORIGIN of the popular doctrine of immortality! He has triumphantly sustained the very position we have long maintained, viz.: That "the immortality of the soul" is pagan in its origin, and was generally believed among pagans.

But, strange to say, while Mr. Lee has sustained the above point, he makes use of it for the purpose of proving the soul immortal! His argument amounts to this:

The ancient Egyptians, Persians, Phenicians, Seythians, Celts, Druids, Assyrians, &c., believed in the immortality of the soul—it was "the common sentiment" of all these nations. Therefore, the soul is immortal!

Or, to state it differently:

That which is "the common sentiment of mankind," is true;

But the immortality of the soul is "the common sentiment of mankind;"

THEREFORE, the immortality of the soul is true!

By this logic Mr. Lee's proposition stands or falls! Mr. Lee says—"If destructionists can prove that the doctrine in question had some other, or if some other sentiment can be named, manifestly false, and equally common in the world, of the origin of which no account can be given, we acknowledge they will evade the force of this argument; but until this is done the argument must prove ruinous to their theory."

1. We are called upon, by the above, to prove that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul had some other origin than the Bible. And, on this point, Mr. Lee, himself, has helped us to a considerable amount of evidence, as we before remarked; but we shall examine the question more closely than he has done. What if the Babylonians, Medes and Persians believed the soul immortal? What if Zoroaster, Pythagoras, Socrates and Plato, taught it? What if the sentiment abounds in Homer, Ovid and Virgil? Do these facts prove the doctrine all divine? If so, the prevalence of other "sentiments," held by these nations and distinguished persons, upon the same principle of reasoning, must also be divine. If Mr. Lee's logic will prove conclusive in one case, it will in another—yes! in all others! If he receive the pagan idea of immortality, he must take along with it the pre-existence of souls—the transmigration of souls—and the rejection of the resurrection of the body! He must not divide the dose, though bitter! but swallow the whole like a man!

The oldest hypotheses of the Oriental World, upon this subject, resolved themselves into the doctrine of emanation and immanation; issuing from the "soul of the universe" at birth, and reabsorbed at death. They regarded the soul as a part of the Deity; thus making him divisible, which is one of Mr. Lee's "essential properties of matter"!

Dr. Good says—"If we turn from Persia, Egypt, and Hindostan to Arabia, to the fragrant groves and learned shades of Dedan and Teman, from which it is certain that Persia, and highly probable that Hindostan, derived its first polite literature, we shall find the entire subject" (of the immortality of the soul), "left in as blank and barren a silence, as the deserts by which they are surrounded; or, if touched upon, only touched upon to betray doubt, and sometimes disbelief. The tradition, indeed, of a future state of retributive justice seems to have reached the schools of this part of the world, and to have been generally, though perhaps not universally, accredited; but THE FUTURE EXISTENCE IT ALLUDES TO IS THAT OF A RESURRECTION OF THE BODY, AND NOT OF A SURVIVAL OF THE SOUL AFTER THE BODY'S DISSOLUTION"! Here, then, is an exception to Mr. Lee's universal "consent of mankind." We have one place—one country—where the popular dogma of immortal-soulism was "blank and barren;" and where the opposite view was "generally" believed. And we find this, too, just where we might expect to find it, viz.: where the light of revelation shed its illuminating beams! That country is Idumea! Here Job, that venerable patriarchal saint, who held communion with the Living God, and not with the Buthos or Demurgus of the Chaldeans, Egyptians, Assyrians, &c.—here, I say, Job lived; and from this quarter we have, as Dr. Good expresses it, "that astonishing and transcendent composition" called "the Book of Job;" "a work," says he—although on Mr. Lee's side of the question—"that ought assuredly to raise the genius of Idumea above that of Greece," &c., and, may I not add, the knowledge of Job far above that of Zoroaster, Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, Dr. Dick and Mr. Lee—all combined!

Dr. Good continues—"Yet in this sublime and magnificent poem, replete with all the learning and wisdom of the age, the doctrine upon the subject before us is merely as I have stated it, a patriarchal or traditional belief of a future state of retributive justice, NOT BY THE NATURAL IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL, BUT BY A RESURRECTION OF THE BODY!"

Dr. Good makes this belief "patriarchal or traditional;" but this is unnecessary, as Job was doubtless an inspired man. Dr. Good's testimony is the more valuable, because he believed in the popular doctrine of immortality.

Whether, therefore, the dogma of natural immortality originated with the old serpent, who said, "Ye shall not surely die;" or whether it originated in Egypt, Persia, Media, Babylonia, or elsewhere, it matters not. One thing is certain, it did not originate from God, else Job would have been in possession of it; and I will put Job's knowledge and wisdom against all the Babylonians, Persians, Medes, Assyrians, Zoroasters, and Platos on earth! Again, this is doubtless the oldest book or document extant, and on that account demands the attention of the sincere inquirer after truth on this subject.

"The Hindoo philosophers," says Dr. Good, "TOTALLY AND UNIVERSALLY denying a resurrection of the body, and supporting the doctrine (of future existence) alone upon the NATURAL IMMORTALITY of the soul, and the Arabian philosophers (among whom was Job) passing over the immortality of the soul, and resting it alone upon a RESURRECTION OF THE BODY."

The Hindoo view of this question, is the legitimate tendency of the modern dogma on the same subject—it leads to a denial of the resurrection.

Mr. Lee, then, is welcome to his Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Assyrian, and Hindoostan associates, and their authority! He is welcome to the company of Zoroaster, Pythagoras, Orpheus, Socrates, Plato, and a host of others! He is in learned!—but superstitious company! But, to be consistent, he should go all the way with them: he should believe in the pre-existence and pre-intelligence of the soul—that it is a part of God—that it may suffer in purgatory—and that it may be transmigrated!

The Grecian philosophy was imported by Pythagoras from India, whose philosophers reprobated the doctrine of a resurrection. So, when Paul preached through Jesus the resurrection of the dead, in the Argora of Athens, the Athenians declared he brought strange things to their ears, and inquired what the new doctrine was.

Here, then, we have the whole subject before us. On one hand we have Mr. Lee's long array of nations, composing "the heathen world, believing in the natural immortality of the soul, with its kindred appendages. On the other hand, we have the light of truth, concerning the resurrection of the body, pouring its steady rays from the days of Job, through the dark ages, down to the present time.

And, now, I shall turn Mr. Lee's argument against him, by affirming that the "common sentiment of mankind" is wrong! Truth has always been in the minority, and it always will be, until the Lord comes and takes the kingdom, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven! Error, in some, or all its forms, is "the common sentiment of mankind." And if Mr. Lee were to carry out his rule, he would be compelled to admit the eternity of matter, although he seems to have such an abhorrence of it, for his "heathen" witnesses depose to its truth! Let us now state this argument in form:

That which is "the common sentiment of mankind" is true;

But error is "the common sentiment of mankind;"

Therefore, error is true!

But why should we take "mankind" as the standard of truth? Why not take a nation? A "heathen" nation, to follow Mr. Lee's example? Why not take Europe? or one of the nations of Europe? Why not take Italy? Why not take the Pope? Why not take the most enlightened nation on earth? Will Mr. Lee submit his faith to such a standard? If he were to submit his faith to the "common sentiment" of any nation on earth, he would be weighed in the balance and found wanting. Go to the "heathen world" to learn the doctrine of immortality! Go to Babylon—to India—to Egypt—to the Eastern Magicians, Soothsayers, Astrologers and Philosophers, to learn the doctrine of eternal life? Place these in the collegiate chair, and let the venerable Job, of the land of Uz, sit at their feet, and learn? Place the wisdom of Zoroaster and his associates, which is "foolishness with God," in opposition to the spirit of wisdom divine? A man must be hard pressed for evidence to sustain his faith, when he leaves the oldest and most venerable document on earth, and seeks to the Vedas of the Brahmans and the Zendavesta of the Parsees for light on the question of immortality!

Here, then, is a fact to which we call special attention, viz.: That the denial of the resurrection of the body was as much "the common sentiment of mankind," as the doctrine of the soul's immortality. Among all Mr. Lee's witnesses, only one—Zoroaster—believed in, or taught, a resurrection. Now, I can find as many exceptions to Mr. Lee's "common consent of mankind," in relation to the immortality of the soul, as he can find on the subject of a non-resurrection. Will Mr. Lee give me the "origin" of this "sentiment?"

Mr. L. says—"If the doctrine of a future existence be an error, it is the most general one that ever entered the world," &c. Mr. Lee here makes a false issue; for it is not the "doctrine of a future existence" that is denied; but it is the predication "of a future existence" on the "natural immortality of the soul," instead of the resurrection of the body.

Mr. Lee says—the doctrine of the immortality of the soul "prevails most where the Scriptures are most known and read." But, alas! for Mr. Lee's cause, his evidence is all on the other side of the question! If he had said—that the doctrine in question "prevails most where the Scriptures are least known and read," he would have spoken the truth; and his statement would have harmonized with his "heathen" testimony! For surely he will not contend that the Scriptures were "most known and read" by the men and nations of whom he has spoken!

Again he says—"The doctrine must have had its origin." Of course, Mr. Lee, it had its origin; but was that origin divine? If it was, you have failed to prove it, for your witnesses are pagans. Taking the non-resurrection of the body as a sentiment running parallel with the doctrine of the soul's immortality—among the nations and tribes referred to, I will adopt Mr. Lee's mode of reasoning, thus: As the NON-RESURRECTION OF THE BODY prevails in the heathen world, "and as no account can be given of its introduction, it follows that it must have sprung from some one of the following sources:—It must be instinct, the result of natural reason, from the light of nature, the impression of God's spirit on the mind, or the principle of revelation contained in the Bible. Now, if it be instinct, it must be from the Creator; if it be the result of natural reason, it cannot be unreasonable; if it be from the light of nature, it is a revelation from God; if it be the impression of God's spirit on the mind, it is no less a divine revelation; and if it be the sentiment of the Bible, none but infidels will deny it!" Thus Mr. Lee's logic will work both ways! It will alike apply to every prevalent sentiment, true or false! It will apply especially to many of the appendages of the immortality of the soul. But Mr. Lee makes a bad use of his own logic; for, will he tell me what sentiment has not sprung from one or the other of the sources he has mentioned? I apprehend he will find that every sentiment extant proceeded from one or the other of those sources. What, then, has Mr. Lee gained by this flourish? Absolutely nothing! What is "natural reason"? If Mr. Lee mean by this unenlightened reason, then I affirm that it has given birth, not only to his favorite doctrine, but a thousand other vagaries and absurdities which revelation repudiates, and enlightened reason scorns!

2. Now, let us look at this subject from another point.

In perfect harmony with what we have said, concerning the origin and prevalence of the popular view, I will remark, that before the Babylonish captivity, and the Macedonian and Roman conquests, the Jews observed the most profound silence upon the state of the dead. They spoke of it as a place of silence, darkness, and inactivity. This fact speaks volumes as to the "heathen" or pagan origin of the doctrine we are calling in question. They knew nothing of natural immortality till they were carried captive to Babylon, and mingled with some of Mr. Lee's witnesses!

Again, "after the Hebrews mingled with the" Babylonians, "Greeks and Romans, they insensibly slid into their use of terms, and adopted some of their ideas on such subjects as those on which their oracles were silent." Hence the peculiar views of the Pharisees, many of whom not only believed in the pre-existence of souls—but, also, their immortality and transmigration. This is the reason why the question was put to our Lord, concerning the man who was born blind. They supposed it possible for the man to have sinned in a previous state, which was the cause of his being born blind. They also thought that Jesus Christ was in possession of the soul of John Baptist, or one of the prophets. Let us now sum up the whole argument:

1. We have seen that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, the pre-existence of the soul, and its transmigration, together with a reprobation of the doctrine of the resurrection of the body, was in its origin pagan or heathenish. Mr. Lee has given us ample proof of this. I have given additional proof.

2. That in Idumea or Arabia—the country of Job, who is the author of the oldest document extant, we find the opposite doctrine prevailing; and a future life predicated on the resurrection of the body.

3. That the prevalence of a sentiment is no proof of its truth, or correctness; but, if anything, affords presumptive evidence against it. Truth has always been in the minority.

4. That previous to the Babylonish captivity, the Jews were silent on the state of the dead, regarding it as a state of silence and darkness.

5. But that after the Hebrews mingled with the Babylonians, Greeks and Romans, they adopted their ideas on such subjects as those on which their oracles—the Old Testament—was silent. (See Appendix to New Version.)

6. And that reason unenlightened, has given birth to a thousand vagaries, and among them the dogma of "natural immortality."

But, we are not done with this subject yet; we wish to place it where the hand of mortal disinterment can never reach it! And I now affirm, that revelation has placed the seal of condemnation on the oriental science, of a part of which Mr. Lee is the special advocate.

First, then, in reference to the very nations whom Mr. Lee has convoked as witnesses, Paul says—"Professing to be wise men, they became fools; for they changed the glory of the immortal God into the likeness of an image of mortal man, of fowls, of four-footed beasts, and of reptiles." This will apply to Mr. Lee's Egyptian, Babylonian, Persian, Greek and Roman witnesses. Idolatry was as current among them as the idea of the soul's immortality; so that even in Athens, at that time the most enlightened city of the oriental world, they had thirty thousand gods, and held the natural immortality of the soul; but rejected the resurrection of the body. In the above quotation I have not followed the common version, though I have no objection to it; but have given a better rendering of the language, which is sanctioned by Campbell and McKnight. Here is another: "For this doctrine (the preaching of Christ) is, indeed, foolishness to the destroyed; but to us, who are saved, it is the power of God. Therefore, it is written, 'I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to naught the knowledge of the prudent. Where is the wise man? Where the Scribe? Where the disputers of this world? Has not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?' Again, Paul says—"The world by wisdom knew not God." The Greeks sought after wisdom—the wisdom of the Platonic school, and consequently, the preaching of life and immortality, through Jesus Christ, by a resurrection from the dead, was foolishness to them. Paul did not teach "the wisdom of this world"—he did not speak the theological dialect of Greece and Rome. And here we are reminded of an important fact, that, although the words and ideas, concerning natural immortality, are found scattered through the works of pagan philosophers, we have neither the one nor the other in all the revelations of God! Why this singular omission, if it be the doctrine of the Bible? "O!" says Mr. Lee, "it is taken for granted." Taken for granted, indeed! This is a mere evasion of the argument. There is not a particle of truth in it. The Bible does not take one doctrine "for granted," and then teach an opposite one!

"The theological dialect of the oriental and occidental schools is a compound of foolish words and phrases, which make a foolish language," the product of confusion, mythology and ignorance. They taught "a vain philosophy;" the philosophy of Greece and Rome, which Paul justly avers is "falsely so called." Hymeneus and Philetus appear to have been professors of this oriental science. What this science is, we have already seen; and I would here only remind you, that the dogma of a translation to heaven or hell at death, is one item of that profane science by which they overthrew the faith of some in the resurrection. It was upon this hypothesis that "some" among the Corinthians said there was "no resurrection;" and this, I repeat, is the legitimate tendency of the philosophy and theology of my friend Mr. Lee.

In concluding this long review of Mr. Lee's, No. 10, I will, without arguing them, present the legitimate tendencies of the view we are opposing. It is furnished to my hand by an intelligent living author.

1. The dogma of "immortal souls" contravenes the Mosaic account of the Fall.
2. It reduces the Mosaic account to an absurdity.
3. It necessitates a change of the words of the Spirit from their proper to a figurative signification.
4. It is subversive of the resurrection and the judgment.
5. The pagan tradition of the soul's immortality, not only renders null and void the resurrection to life and judgment, BUT IS EQUALLY SUBVERSIVE OF THE PERSONAL APPEARANCE OF MESSIAH ON EARTH AGAIN.
6. THE HYMENEAN GNOSIS of immortal soul-ism, and ethereal translation at death, abrogates the reign of Messiah on David's throne for a season and a time.

I pledge myself to make good every item in the above indictment, when it is demanded by counter-evidence.

THE ENGLISH DISCUSSION.

"ATHANASIA: OR, FOUR BOOKS ON IMMORTALITY. By John Howard Hinton, A. M."—Such is the title of a book that we have received from England, and of which Dr. Lees, of Leeds, speaks in his letter found in the Examiner for March last. We sent for this book immediately on the receipt of Dr. Lees' letter, but it has been delayed in coming to hand. For the contents of it we refer our readers to Dr. Lees' letter above referred to. We have had time only to glance over that part of the work which relates to his remarks "On the argument as conducted by Rev. George Storrs." If we must be converted back again into the old theory, we should like to be so by such a writer as Mr. Hinton. His manner is kind, christian-like, and well calculated to win our esteem and affection: we certainly feel that he has a brotherly heart, and that, to us, gives great weight to his argument. He is far removed from the narrow bigotry which characterizes most who defend the same side of the question. From the hasty examination we have been able to give his remarks on our "Six Sermons"—for that is evidently all he has seen of our writings—we are much pleased, and may probably be led to modify some of our expressions, while at the same time we are greatly strengthened in the truth of our general position of the sinner's final doom. On a remark of ours in Six Sermons, page 75, that men in the days of our Lord "were not looking for eternal happiness merely, or an escape from eternal misery, but simply for eternal life," Mr. Hinton, quoting the words which we have italicised, says: "Now the author here affixes the idea of conscious being to the word life, as its literal or primary meaning, and so insists upon it. To this I reply, that this is not the primary meaning of the term. Life is a word having primary reference to organized substances in which its organic functions are maintained." p. 364. We let this definition pass for the present. And then it follows that Death is a word having primary reference to disorganized substances in which the organic functions are destroyed; and this, in fact, Mr. Hinton admits, for he says, p. 363: "The primary meaning of the word death is the cessation of the functions of an organized substance; and when we speak of the death of a man, we mean to denote the fact, and nothing more, that the functions of the organized substance which entered into his constitution have ceased."

This definition we will not now object to; and think in the issue it will help us greatly to fortify the general position of our Six Sermons. Our friend—for we truly feel that he is such—has given us a firm foot-hold; but we have neither time nor space to notice him further this month.

The foregoing was written just as the Examiner for August was going to press, and intended to have been inserted in that number, but we were compelled to leave it out. Since that, we have had time to examine the work generally, and commence giving our readers some notes upon it in this number of the Examiner, which are designed to be continued.

NOTES ON HINTON'S "ATHANASIA."—No. I.

The first thing we notice is Mr. Hinton's definition of immortality. He says—"The idea conveyed by this word in relation to man is that he is adapted to live for ever, or that he is not liable to the cessation of conscious being from any natural cause;" pp. 8 and 9. Again, p. 72, he says—"I take the proper immortality of a creature to be his non-liability to death (here understanding the term death of a cessation of its proper being) by natural causes, or by causes proper to itself." On the same page he says of the orthodox party—"Among the evangelical dissenters of the present day I know of no evidence that they, or any considerable number of them, conceive man to be immortal in the sense that he 'positively shall live for ever.'" for, we conclude, even Mr. H. will not and cannot deny but the popular orthodox sense of immortality has been, before "the present day," that all men "positively shall live for ever;" and if that is not the sense in which all the orthodox party in America use the term in the present day, except so far as they have been compelled to modify it in the controversy now going on, then we acknowledge that we ourselves preached twenty years, and was in constant intercourse with ministers, without ever once hearing or suspecting but that they held the definition of immortality to be, in relation to man, that all "positively shall live for ever." But it seems a new era has dawned in England, and we hail it with joy, and hope it may spread its light on the pagan land this side the Atlantic. 'The point, in the present day,' in England, that they use immortality to signify that man "positively shall live for ever," is given up.

We are glad to hear Mr. Hinton affirm this, and hope he is not mistaken in it; because, if true, it shows that orthodoxy, at least in England, has undergone a radical change in "the present day."

This is a great advance towards the truth: and as immortality, according to Mr. H. and his coadjutors, in relation to man, is only an "adaptation to live for ever, or a non-liability to death by natural causes, or causes proper to" himself, we may fairly conclude that man may not live for ever if some cause foreign to himself shall intervene to bring about his death, or to cause the "cessation of" his "proper being." This Mr. Hinton's theory will not allow him to deny: hence we think he and his coadjutors in England, if they do not stop in their search after truth, will be brought to see, that though man has an adaptation to live for ever, yet he "positively shall" not "live for ever" irrespective of moral character; and that is precisely the ground we occupy. Why is this shrinking, in England, from admitting that immortality has the sense of positive endless continuance in being? Is it not clearly because the truth, from some quarter, whether by the operations of their own minds or otherwise, has pressed upon them, that the orthodox, or popular theory, which till "the present day" has given the sense of positive, eternal, uninterrupted existence to the phrase immortality, is a ground untenable and without foundation in the revelation of God? We believe that is the fact; and the abandonment of such a position in "the present day" shows advance, which gives us much pleasure.

But we now proceed with Mr. Hinton's definition of immortality "in relation to man." We suppose, of course, that it is universal in its application to man. From this word, then, he cannot show that any man, whatever his moral character is, "positively shall live for ever;" all he can do from it is to show that when the righteous put on immortality by a resurrection from the dead, they put on an "adaptation to live for ever," or a "non-liability to death by natural causes;" that is all that can be gained from the word; they stand in the same position that Adam stood prior to his sin. That we are correct in this view of Mr. Hinton's theory, we infer from pages 89 and 90 of his work, where he says—"I speak of man antecedently to sin, and of the adaptation of his nature as a creature of God. I affirm that according to his nature man is immortal * * * that, but for sin, man's existence would never have ceased."

That man by creation was "adapted" to live for ever—that is, the circumstances in which he was created were adapted to perpetuate his existence without end, we as fully believe as Mr. Hinton.

But what were those circumstances? Were they in his nature? They must be, if Mr. H.'s definition of immortality be correct. But we deny that such was the fact. The perpetuation of his existence depended upon the circumstances with which he was surrounded; and hence "lest he put forth his hand and take of the tree of life and eat and live for ever" he is removed from those circumstances upon which his continued existence depended. This certainly does not look as though man by creation was endowed with "non-liability to death by natural causes, or causes proper to" himself. So far from it, it seems as if the natural cause of death was in himself, which could only be stayed or averted by circumstantial causes, and when he was removed from them he naturally fell back again to the dust from whence he came.

If we are correct in these views, Mr. Hinton's definition of immortality, though it may convey his meaning, does not convey the scripture sense; or if it does, we can derive no comfort from Paul's declaration that "this mortal shall put on immortality;" as that, according to Mr. H., necessarily implies nothing more than Adam possessed before he sinned; and hence, for all that phrase teaches, saints may after the resurrection meet with a like disaster to that of Adam, and experience another death. From the phrase immortality, according to Mr. Hinton, we cannot show that man "shall positively live for ever" after the resurrection. Where then shall we look for this assurance? Can we find it in the phrase life?

MR. HINTON'S DEFINITION OF THE WORD LIFE.

He maintains that "Life is a word primarily used to express the active or living condition of organic substances; and it is not," he says, "in its strict or literal sense, applicable to any thing but organic substances, vegetable or animal. When applied to any other objects," he adds, "it is on the ground of some analogy or resemblance; that is, consequently, not literally, but figuratively." pp. 28, 29. Here is some truth and some error. It would be true with regard to created things if we were to amend his definition by saying—"Life is a word primarily used to express the active or living condition of the organic substances of sensitive creatures, whose general condition is one of consciousness; and it is not, in its strict or literal sense, applicable to any thing else." The italic words are our corrections of Mr. Hinton's definition. His definition is an assumed one; but the law and the testimony shall settle ours. We have no need to travel far to sustain our position; the first chapters of Genesis will suffice to give us the primary use of the word life. In the account of creation life is not predicated merely of the "living condition of organic substances." It is not affirmed of the earth after its organization—it is not affirmed of the waters, nor of the grass, nor of the herb, nor of the fruit trees, nor of any of the trees which the Lord God made: no, nor of the sun, moon, stars, or any of the lights of heaven. This fact is fatal to Mr. Hinton's theory. But it is affirmed of all the sensitive creatures, whose general state is that of consciousness. Thus—"God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, and fowl that may fly above the earth," &c. "And God created great whales, and every living creature that moveth," &c.; chap. 1: 20, 21. God said to man—"have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every LIVING thing that moveth upon the earth:" v. 28. Again, to-man, "God said, Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed, to you it shall be for meat: and to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is life," &c. Here, we must think, is abundant evidence of the primary use of the word life: and though the trees, herbs, &c., were an "active or living condition of organic substances," the "strict or literal sense" of the word is not applied to them at all; and hence we may safely conclude it was not "applicable to any" of them, except "on the ground of some analogy or resemblance, that is, consequently not literally, but figuratively."

That the primary sense of the word life, in the Bible, is not applicable to organic substances without sensation, or without the capacity of consciousness, is further evident from the account of the flood, in which the phrase "every living substance" is employed, and is immediately explained to signify "both man, and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of heaven," while nothing is said of "vegetable life," or of vegetables having life. The Lord said, "the end of all flesh is come before me—I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth; both man and beast, and the creeping things, and the fowls of the air—I do bring a flood of waters upon the earth to destroy all flesh wherein is the breath of life—every thing that is in the earth shall die." The Lord then gave Noah the following direction—"Of every living thing of all flesh, two of every sort shalt thou bring into the ark, to keep them alive with thee: they shall be male and female—fowls—cattle—creeping thing—two of every sort—to keep them alive—and they went in unto Noah into the ark two and two of all flesh wherein is the breath of life"—that is, clearly, all sensitive or conscious creatures. Then it is added of those out of the ark—"All flesh men that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing—and every man; all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land died—Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark."

Thus we see, that "life is a word primarily used to express" the "active condition of" creatures, and of those only, who have sensation, or are endowed with senses, which distinguish them from the "active condition of" mere "organic substances," or "living vegetables." When the word is applied to vegetable organization it is used in a figurative or analogical sense, not in its primary.

The creation of man is equally in point in proof of the position we take on this subject; but we think we do not need to press that point on Mr. Hinton's attention: he cannot fail to see that the word life in the Scriptures has its primary application, not merely to the "active or living condition of organic substances," but "is a word primarily used to express" created things whose peculiar characteristic is, in general, consciousness, or sensation. Whatever may be its definition in the schools of "philosophy," we think it clear we have the Scripture definition, as given by the Creator himself: and we cannot but think, from the general candour of Mr. Hinton in his work, that on reviewing this point he will be led to acknowledge his mistake. It is true, such an acknowledgment is fatal to his whole argument against us, which can only be maintained by saying that the term life primarily does not express a creature whose peculiar characteristic is, in general, conscious existence. If we are right in the definition we have presented, of the primary meaning of the word, Mr. Hinton cannot claim its uniform application in a figurative sense when spoken of the reward of the righteous. It is not, as he maintains, "a choice between two analogical significations" of the word life, but a choice between its literal, i. e. its primary sense and a figurative or analogical one. We maintain that the word life, in the Bible, has its primary and literal sense, generally; if there are exceptions, and we freely admit there are, it is to be shown that the text, context, or other Scriptures require the exception; and we think it not difficult to determine when that is the case. Mr. Hinton, therefore, nor any one else, is to assume that when life is promised and proclaimed, as it is throughout the Scriptures, that the word is used figuratively; that is, for "happiness." We do not admit it. We consider such a view, however undesigned in its advocates, as subversive of the very ground work of faith, and as launching us into the regions of fancy. Life is one thing, and distinct by itself; happiness is another and different matter. As, however, there could be no happiness without life, life is the first and great gospel promise and proclamation—life, ETERNAL LIFE. Such a life must inevitably draw after it happiness: all misery imports decay, and unless arrested must sooner or later result in the extinction of life. That point, however, we shall not argue now.

Page 95 Mr. H. says—"Since the only value of animated, or conscious existence, lies in the happiness derivable from it, life comes in some cases to denote happiness." Again he says—"Life is an expression for the benefits of Christ's death, that is for the whole of them." p. 33. In a qualified sense we may admit, that it is thus used sometimes: that is, none of all the other benefits could be possessed without life, and therefore to give eternal life is to bestow all other benefits communicated by Christ—they all follow in the train as a necessary result. But if life is by nature, and not one of the benefits, yea, the primary one, upon which all the others depend, then the phrase life must signify, when applied to the benefits by Christ, happiness, as Mr. H. contends. If so, then by a substitution of the term happiness for life we shall have the sense of the word. Mr. H. thus substitutes it in 2 Tim. 1: 1, "The promise of life in Christ Jesus;" and reads it—"The promise of happiness in Christ Jesus;" and says—"I do not see why this should not afford satisfaction in all cases in which life is used to express the benefits of Christ's death, inasmuch as these are all of the general nature of happiness, and readily conceived of as included in the term:" p. 32.

If the term life is to be understood as another phrase for happiness, in relation to benefits received by Christ, it cannot be relied upon to prove future life at all, save by inference: that is, its proper meaning in this relation is happiness, and we infer that to be happy we must be alive. The term, then, according to Mr. Hinton, cannot be urged as direct proof of future life. Then the matter stands thus—To say that man is immortal signifies only that he has an adaptation to live forever, though it does not prove that he "positively shall live for ever." To say that God has promised us life in Christ Jesus, does not prove that we positively shall consciously exist for ever, or that we shall live at all, only by implication; it only proves that we shall be happy: so that neither of these phrases assure us certainly that our conscious existence shall be "perpetuated without end. And if the phrase eternal is brought in to help out of this difficulty, it gives no relief; for that phrase has an "analogical" meaning as well as life; and as life is used in its analogical sense in the case before us, according to Mr. H., it is but reasonable to conclude eternal is also, and therefore signifies only while the subject to which it is applied continues; while the saint continues to be conscious he shall continue to be happy: but, for all the phrase "eternal life" proves, God may at any time blot him out of life proper, provided it only be done without unhappiness; and all evidence from either the phrase immortality or eternal life, that we "positively shall live for ever," is given up and lost, if Mr. Hinton's view is the true one.

Having virtually given up all dependence upon the phrases immortality and eternal life in proof that any one "positively shall live for ever," or even live at all hereafter, Mr. H. must find some other mode of argument to establish those points. Indeed, he has not only virtually given up this point, but has plainly done it so far as it relates to endless conscious existence being a gift of Christ. His words are—"There are no texts that teach never-ending existence to be the gift of Christ to his followers." p. 123. Surely, that is true, if he defines the phrases immortality and eternal life correctly. He adds—"The phrase everlasting life is unquestionably used to express the entire felicity of the redeemed; and it cannot, therefore, when so used, be understood according to a different analogy, that is, of never-ending existence." p. 123. On the previous page he says—"The phrase, eternal life, ought to be taken for one idea—happiness." Hence we repeat it—that all dependence on this phrase to prove that the righteous "positively shall live for ever" is abandoned. We must keep this position in view as we proceed in our examination of Mr. Hinton's theory; and at another stage of our notes, we shall see on what ground, if any, he can establish the eternal conscious existence of men.

"BEARING THE CROSS."

Much is said, among professed Christians, about "bearing the cross;" but we fear little is understood or really practiced in this matter. Some seem to think speaking in meeting is the cross they must bear; and when they have done that they think little more about the cross. We apprehend that is a very small item in bearing the cross. Men are all naturally in love with this present world. To this world we must become crucified. Crucifixion is a hard death; but few persons are willing to die such a death; there is, however, no other way of entering into the kingdom of God. We must be "crucified unto the world, and the world unto" us. Most professed Christians, it is to be feared, have made a covenant with the world, not to part with it; and the tempter satisfies them if they speak in meeting some times, and give something to support the gospel, they may keep their covenant with the world: but, "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." 1 John 2: 15.

How then are we to be separated from the love of the world, and be crucified unto it? First—By a believing view of the Lord Jesus Christ, who became poor—was despised of men—a man of sorrow, acquainted with grief—endured reproach—resisted temptation, though he "suffered being tempted"—when he was reviled, reviled not again—murmured not, though wounded, bruised, put to grief, and his soul made an offering for sin, scourged, spit upon, his hands and feet pierced with nails, his soul in agony—all this he bore, and no lisp of impatience ever escaped him. Would you be crucified unto the world, go learn of him: contemplate his poverty—his life—his sufferings—his resignation—his patience—his loving and forgiving spirit, till the whole mind is humbled within you: and then realize this truth—"If so be we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." Rom. 8: 17. Do you ask what it is to suffer with him? We answer—To suffer with the same meek, patient, forgiving, resigned spirit that he had. This leads us to say—

Second—If you would bear your cross and be crucified unto the world, REMEMBER, every trial of your life—whether temporal or spiritual, personal or family, from friends or enemies, direct or indirect, great or small, of short continuance or long, or whatever be the nature or character of it, is by the appointment or permission of that God who willeth not the death of the sinner, but who is seeking by all these trials to crucify you unto the world, and fit you to be glorified with His Son Jesus Christ. How shall this design of our heavenly Father be accomplished? It cannot be, unless you "bear your cross." Do you ask again—What is it to bear my cross? We answer—it is to suffer all the trials of which we have spoken, patiently. You are not to quarrel with the instrumentality God may employ, nor indulge in restlessness under it. If you do, you do not "bear the cross." And though you should speak like an angel in meeting, yet if you fret and complain under any of the trials of life, by which God is seeking to crucify you unto the world, it is hypocrisy for you to talk about your "bearing the cross"—you are but deceiving your own soul. God has assured us, "all things work together for good to them that love him." Rom. 8: 28; yet, you can murmur, fret, and complain at those things which God has permitted or appointed!! Alas, alas! Do not dream you are ripening for the kingdom of God while this is the case. No, you are ripening for death—for perdition. Saith our Saviour—"In your PATIENCE possess ye your souls." We shall learn soon, or when it is too late, that those words are words of solemn and awful import. If you indulge in murmuring, complaining, or impatience at any trials, insults, sufferings, or injuries, from whatever instrumentality they may come, and that spirit is increasing upon you, you are just as surely traveling in the road to perdition as God has said—"The soul that sinneth it shall die." We speak not now of one "overtaken in a fault," to which all are liable in the hour of temptation, but we speak of him upon whom this spirit is not abating but increasing—and it is increasing, except we bear our cross daily: for every day will bring some cross, in some form. Happy the soul who is constantly looking to God for grace to bear every cross. We may pray to have the cross removed; but we may not pray for it only in submission to the will of God. "If it be possible let this cup pass from me; nevertheless not my will but thine be done." That is our example; and we cannot safely follow any other. "My grace is sufficient for thee," will often be the answer; and did we know now what we shall know hereafter, we should praise God for every trial and every cross we have to bear: yea, a living faith will praise God even now, that he does not leave us to our own way, lest we should be like the children of Israel, whose impatient murmurings were answered by giving them "flesh," but "leanness" was "sent into their souls." "Be patient in all things," that is bearing thy cross; then, when Christ appears you shall have a CROWN.

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, SEPTEMBER, 1849.

ENDLESS LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

"He that hath the Son hath life: he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5: 12.

BIBLE EXAMINER.—When our paper went to press for August, we had exhausted all our funds, and were about ten dollars in arrears. Through the generosity of a few of our friends, that is cleared off and the present number nearly paid for also; though we are two weeks behind our regular time of issue. We have not asked donations, but they are none the less acceptable on that account. It would, however, be more agreeable to us to receive the amount necessary to complete this volume from new subscribers. We shall put the October number to press immediately on the receipt of funds sufficient to pay for its issue. However the Examiner may be delayed in appearing, our enemies need not exult, nor our friends despair, for it is not dead nor unconscious.

LETTERS OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

FROM ELON EVERTS.

VERGENNES Vt., August 5, 1849.

DEAR BRO. STORRS:—I wish that my anxiety for your prosperity, in all the blessings of our heavenly Father commensurate with the stand you have taken on the side of truth, was transmissible. I would quickly diffuse it among the brethren, and incline them to do what is necessary to sustain you in publishing the "Examiner."

I deeply feel the necessity of such a paper, that fearlessly, independently of consequences, diffuses such a broad ray of light, while the popular mass are with all their sophistry trying to darken counsel, preaching fables and deceiving the innocent.

Dear brethren: I will ask you, as I often ask myself,—where were you, some six year ago? How came you to embrace such a clear light of revelation? Did your salaried preachers teach it to you? Did your sectarian creeds guide to your present faith? Did you, of your own selves, dare to think of the Bible truths as you now do? Do you not often exclaim, Oh! how great was my darkness; how traditionized I was? Did you not try your utmost to prove your former theory to be the truth? Yea, did you not wish, that, Brother Storrs would keep such doctrines to himself? O! may the Lord forgive us.

Brethren, seeing what you now see, what would tempt you to wrap that old heathen fable about you again? What would induce you to have the "Examiner" stopped?

I will ask one question more. Are you willing that Brothers Storrs and Walsh, should willingly for OUR sakes, put their time, talents, reputation, living and all, upon the altar of our faith, and be sacrificed there, by suffering the opposition and prejudice of the popular religionists, and poverty and want? Their families need common comforts, as much as ours. Brethren, will you take this into candid consideration? While our brethren may feel it duty to preach the gospel, may it not be ours to sustain them? So reasons Paul.

I have repeatedly said, I would not, for $50,00 be deprived of the "Examiner." Not, that I can see everything as clear as our brethren that edit it: but, in it, we get a free discussion on both sides, of very important bible doctrines, and by the best talents, of Europe and America, so that the honest enquirer is readily assisted to judge.

Brethren, a word to the wise is sufficient. Are there not enough, of a willing mind, to contribute a small amount each to disembarass the "Examiner," that it may speak to our comfort, and to lead others to the truth? Oh! how great may our responsibility be.

Are there not fifty, who will give five dollars each, and as many more, who will give less, and then have more than the "poor widow?"

[Brother Everts letter contained five dollars, thus giving works as well as words.—Ed. Ex.]

FROM BR. "W. F. F."

PITTSBURG, August 12th, 1849.

DEAR BRO. STORRS:—I was very sorry to see by the last Examiner, a prospect of it not being continued regularly monthly, when it should be published every week, or at least once in two weeks. I trust the friends of "truth" have spoken out "substantially" before this time, and that we may be greeted by its bright beams on the 1st of next month and every month, until it shall come oftener.

A friend of mine (an Old School presbyterian) loaned me a few weeks ago "Dick on future punishment." I had said a few words to him on the subject of the destruction of the wicked which he received as though tending toward infidelity. I read Dick, and returned it to him with Dobney: he read Dobney and is reading it again, and says he can scarcely believe his own senses, that his eyes have been so long closed to that truth—that there shall be "NO PLACE" found for the wicked after their judgment: that they shall be "burned up root and branch;" nothing of them left—be as a thing that "was" and "is not;" HE can love his God better, and see a glory in his justice and holiness which before he could not see. I enclose you a trifle [$2.00 Ed. Ex.] to support the Examiner and only regret that it is not in my power to do more.

FROM BR. WM. P. LEMMON.

BALTIMORE, August 15th, 1849.

BROTHER STORRS:—I note with regret your want of means to carry on the Examiner, as stated in the last number, and hope the friends of truth will sustain you as they ought. I don't agree with you in all you write, but I think the spirit of candor and kindness that characterises the Bible Examiner, is eminently fitted to correct your errors or mine, as the case may be; and, moreover, I think your paper is intrinsically worth double, at least, what you receive for it; I hope, therefore, that many, if not all your subscribers will agree, not only to double their subscriptions for the coming year but for the present, say one dollar in lieu of fifty cents per annum. Enclosed I hand you ten dollars with my best wishes for the truth's sake.

FROM BR. HENRY E. CARVER.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 23d, 1849.

BRO. STORRS,—Some of your friends here were pained to observe by the August number of the "Examiner" that you had become embarrassed in your efforts to disseminate light by want of funds to pay the printer.

Now for one I have been conscious for some time past that the price of the paper, as it is, is too low, and am willing to pay the advanced price, even with no alteration in the issue. It would be a source of much regret to me to see the Examiner discontinued; for I regard it as the medium of communicating to the world one of the most important, grand and glorious truths ever presented to the mind of man.

The enclosed five dollars is hereby sent by Bro. Royce, Bro. Wibel, and myself. In return, you will please send three copies of "Dobney." The balance of the money you will consider a free-will offering to aid in finishing the present volume. We consider that we have received full benefit for all we have invested in such a paper as the "Examiner."

Your brother in hope of Immortality.

FROM BR. A. A. JAYNE.

NEW YORK, Aug. 20th, 1849.

BROTHER STORRS,—On opening the Examiner, I learned that, for want of funds, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to issue the paper for the balance of the year. I at once determined to cast my vote for its continuance; and for this purpose I enclose five dollars. If the following numbers of the paper are never issued, I shall not feel that you are indebted to me (or to any of your subscribers) one farthing; for the light which you have been instrumental in shedding upon my mind, on many disputed doctrines of the Bible, is abundantly more precious than the small sacrifice I have made in obtaining it. I read the paper for August with great satisfaction. I think almost every unprejudiced mind would accord to Bro. Walsh the best of the argument, even if they hesitated to admit that he stands firmest upon the rock of truth. The article upon the "Signs of the Times" deeply interested me. I trust you will be enabled to send the following Nos. in due season.

Yours, looking for glory, honor, immortality, eternal life, only through Jesus Christ, our Lord.

BACK NUMBERS.—We can furnish the Bible Examiner to any who wish, from January, 1848, but no further back. We cannot break volumes, except to supply subscribers who have failed to receive their papers. Any such we will supply if they will give us notice of the number or numbers missing. As we shall make no charge for supplying missing numbers to subscribers, they will send us word free of postage.

DEFINITE TIME OF THE ADVENT.—If the author of an article on this topic, recently sent us, will read our editorial remarks on that subject, in the Examiner for June, he will see our reasons for not publishing his calculation. We cannot give currency to views on that subject which we are sure will result in no good, and can only add to the number of disappointments calculated to shake confidence in the reality of the advent itself; which we believe to be a glorious truth, and an event nigh at hand. Blessed is the man that watcheth and keepeth himself unspotted from the world, "for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

FALLEN ASLEEP.—Sister Sarah Blynn, daughter of Br. James Blynn, of this city, fell asleep in Jesus, July 18, aged 25. For nine years, she endured the most intense suffering from a spine affection. Her spasms were almost unremitted. In '44 and '45, she had a temporary relief, and was enabled to walk a little by the aid of crutches. We felt to praise God for this truly wonderful mercy; but it was of short continuance. Her sufferings since have been indescribable. For near three months before her death, she was unable to speak at all, or scarcely to be moved; and, though sensible, did not open her eyes. From the first year of her sickness to the last hour of life she was never known to murmur or complain; nor did she in any way manifest impatience. She was a firm believer in the second advent of Christ, of eternal life through him by a resurrection from the dead, and of the non-immortality of the wicked. A few moments before she fell asleep in death, she opened her eyes, and with a smile on her countenance, seemed to say farewell to her father and mother, who had watched by her bed side day and night. Unable to utter a word, she could only by signs say: "all is well." Then she fell asleep without a struggle or a sigh, and in glorious hope of a "resurrection at the last day." We might add more, but our limits forbid. We have said this much in praise of that grace which sustained her to the last, and for the information of the many christian friends and ministers who have seen and visited her during her long sickness. She rests from her sufferings, and will soon, we trust, enter into life eternal according to her faith.

EDITORIAL GENEROSITY.

The following communication, with the "Editorial Notes," we copy from the "True Wesleyan," of August 18th. We thank Br. Lee for his "editorial courtesy," and are glad to find that he "always calculates to be a little more generous than some of" his "neighbors." We will assure him, however, that he shall not outdo us in that respect; and we will be most happy to receive a like letter from him, at any time, in answer to inquiries, and it shall find place in the Examiner, if we are so fortunate as to be able to continue our paper, which we feared we should not at the time we wrote the following letter to Br. Lee; this fact is our apology, if we need one, for sending our answer to him. That's not all; we will beat him in "generosity" if he will send us an answer to our inquiries to his article "No. II." on Immortality, in the Examiner for May last. We will exceed him in generosity by letting him finish his article without interrupting him by filling it with notes: we will say all we have to say after he has done speaking. We do not complain that Br. Lee placed his figures from "1" to "12" in our article, thereby interrupting us; if that is his taste he has a right to it; we practiced in that way once ourselves till we came to the conclusion that it was bad taste, to say nothing more. Try the principle in a public oral debate and see who would tolerate it. We say again, we will exceed Br. Lee in generosity, at least in this respect, if he will try us with a reply to our queries in the Examiner for May. And we claim that we have already exceeded him in generosity, for we have copied two of his articles, entire, from the True Wesleyan, on Immortality, while he has copied none of the articles from the Examiner in reply to his, nor noticed that any replies were being made to him by our Associate Editor.

Br. Lee, it will be seen, finishes his notes on our letter "by repeating the questions which," he says, "we insist have not been answered." We are perfectly willing, the readers of the Wesleyan and Examiner should judge whether we have answered the questions or not; and there we shall leave that point after a few words at the close.

"ANNIHILATION"—"DEATH."

BRO. LEE:—Under the above head, in the Wesleyan of the 4th instant, you have noticed some remarks of mine, relating to my objection to the use of the term "annihilation" in the immortality discussion. You conclude with the following questions: "Will Brother Storrs tell us, what he understands by the word death, and by the word annihilation, and what, in his view, is the difference between them?"

By this inquiry, I presume you wish me to give my answer through the Wesleyan, which I will cheerfully do. (1.)

In your article, to which this is a reply, you said—"we mean by annihilation, what is expressed by the words, 'cease to exist,' or 'a state of non-existence.'" and you inquire—"Does Mr. Storrs mean the same thing by death?"

My answer to this inquiry, turns on what definition you give to the term "exist." (2.) For it seems that you, as well as others, have your own definition of terms. (3.) Mr. Hinton, an English writer on the same side of the immortality question with yourself, in a late mighty effort against the view I advocate, says that "death involves no cessation of existence either body or soul;" p. 449. (4.) It is manifest, however, that the "body" becomes entirely unconscious: (5.) that is "death;" when the term is used in relation to the cessation of the life of sensitive beings; but it is not "annihilation;" for, as Mr. Hinton affirms, it "involves no cessation of existence" of the "body." (6.) It is for you, Mr. Hinton, and others, on your side of the question to prove that a man only half dies. (7.) I agree with Mr. Hinton, that in man's death there is "no cessation of existence in either body or soul;" [using the term soul in your sense, of a distinct entity, without adopting that sense;] (8.) Hence, your question is answered, according to the language you employ in defining what you mean by annihilation, viz.—"ceasing to exist, or a state of non-existence;" neither body nor soul "cease to exist" either in the first or second death: (9.) and it is perfectly in "the power of God" to call them up to conscious existence after the first or second death, if he will: the only difference in this respect is, God wills to call all men back from the first death, but he wills not to call any back from "the second death;" yet neither the bodies nor the souls of the wicked "cease to exist" in the second death: but they do sink into a state of eternal unconsciousness by the will of God. (10.) But, be it remembered, not beyond His power to awaken them if he chose—such a state would be "annihilation"—their living again all turns on His will. Lest you should think I have given you a new definition in answering your questions, I beg to be permitted to give the following remarks, which I published in the Bible Examiner, June, 1844; and they may close what I have to say to you in reply at this time:

"The term annihilation, as usually understood by common people, means an absolute reducing to nothing. Now, in that sense I am no believer in annihilation, and I never use that term in speaking of the end of the wicked. (11.) I think there is a clear 'distinction' between total unconsciousness and annihilation. It is evident to all, that the body is totally unconscious at the first death; but, it is very far from being annihilated. It returns to, and mingles with its mother earth. In the second death the entire man is reduced to his original elements, whatever they were; but the elements to which he is reduced are not annihilated; and God could call him back to consciousness again if he chose. Hence I reject the term, because it makes a false impression. I maintain that when the second death takes place there is a final and eternal unconsciousness of the wicked; or as it is expressed in the 37th Psalm, 20th v.—'The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume: into smoke, shall they consume away.' Call that 'annihilation' if you will; I reject the term in this controversy. It has nothing to do with it." (12.)

Yours in hope of eternal life, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ,

GEORGE STORRS.

Philadelphia, August 6th, 1849.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

(1.) It may have been a very natural and very modest presumption, but still we intended no such thing. The article was not written for our columns. Bro. Storrs wrote about us in his own paper, and we replied in ours, and asked of him an explanation, which we supposed he would give through the same medium through which he had made the attack upon us. Had not Bro. Storrs been an editor, and had we called on him for an explanation, we should have expected to have loaned him the use of our columns, but as he commenced the attack upon us in his own columns, we supposed it most reasonable to look for the explanation to reach us through the same source, as we specified no other channel. The view Bro. Storrs takes of the subject is this: when one editor attacks another, and the assailed party replies and asks an explanation, he invites his assailant to overlook his own columns, and occupy his whom he assailed. We have not so learned editorial courtesy. Nevertheless, we publish the article, as we always calculate to be a little more generous than some of our neighbors.

(2.) Bro. Storrs knows what definition we put upon the word exist, when we speak of the human mind; there was no occasion for his creating fog where there is none. For a soul to cease to exist, is to cease to be a soul.—With us to cease to think is to cease to be a soul, for we know little about the human soul, more than what we gather from its thinking operations; with us a thought is the mind thinking, and this Bro. Storrs knows, if he has read what he found fault with. A body ceases to exist when it ceases to be a body—when it ceases to be an organism. Throw a human body into the fire and consume it, and the organism ceases to exist, but there will be the ashes left, and the fluid will exist some where, but they are not the body or the organism. But in relation to the soul, whose very existence is thought, which is never known to exist only in connection with thought, and is known to exist only from its thoughts, we know nothing of the ashes or vapor left when it ceases to be a soul, or ceases to think.

(3.) We always use terms in their commonly received sense, unless we give notice to the contrary. We introduced the word annihilation into our articles on the immortality of the soul, with such explanations as preclude almost the possibility of being misunderstood, and what we asked of Bro. Storrs, was to give a like explanation of the sense in which he uses the word death. Had he been disposed to give a frank answer, he could have so answered as not to had his meaning depend upon our definition of words, but upon his own definitions, which he might have appended.

(4.) We did not ask Bro. S. what Mr. Hinton believes concerning death, but what he, Rev. George Storrs, believes; why could he not have answered? We are not responsible for Mr. Hinton's views, nor do we hold Bro. Storrs responsible for them, but only for his own, if we shall succeed in finding out what they are.

(5.) This implies that the body is conscious, for unless it be conscious, how can it become "unconscious?" This is new doctrine; we maintain that consciousness does not pertain to the body. The body is never conscious, and Bro. Storrs is the first philosopher we ever heard talk about the consciousness of the body. Consciousness is purely an operation of the mind.

(6.) We differ from Mr. Hinton and Mr. Storrs both. When we speak of the human body, we speak of it as an organism, and when it is decomposed, we maintain that the body, the organism ceases to exist. The solid part may be blown about by the wind, and the fluid may ascend in vapor and fall in dew, or be lost in the ocean of waters, but we deny that these are the body, a human body; the body has ceased to exist, the organism is annihilated, though the elements of which it was composed may exist somewhere in wide nature.

(7.) We did not ask Mr. Hinton to prove anything; we only asked Mr. Storrs what in his opinion is the difference between annihilation and death, and our readers will not fail to see how he talks about Mr. Hinton to get rid of answering.

(8.) We did not wish Bro. Storrs to answer on the ground of our understanding of the soul, "without adopting that sense," but we wished him to answer in view of his own understanding of the soul.

(9.) For the soul to exist in our sense of the soul, is to be conscious, for with us the soul is a living consciousness, and when it ceases to be conscious, it will cease to be a soul. Bro. Storrs believes the soul dies, and yet continues to be a soul if we understand him.—Do the souls of Adam and Abel still exist? and are they human souls still? and have they maintained a distinct existence separate from all other souls that have existed since? We would like to have Bro. Storrs answer this, yea or nay. He claims to have answered our question, but we do not consider it an answer, but an evasion.

(10.) What does Bro. Storrs understand by the soul of a man? What is it? Is it a spirit, breath, life, bone, flesh, blood, solid or fluid? If it be life, as some affirm, does life die, and still exist after it is dead, so that there is such a thing as dead life? These are queries which his pretended answer naturally suggests.

(11.) Bro. Storrs knew that we did not use the term in this sense, when he complained of us for employing it. If a soul "sink into a state of eternal unconsciousness," it will be annihilated in the sense in which every one must know we used the term, who has read our articles.—Why then did he complain of us?

(12.) This whole extract is a mere declamation, and proves no part of any answer to our questions. If Bro. Storrs really thinks it proves his point by the text which says, "into smoke shall they consume away," he must understand it literally. If so, human souls are converted into smoke, and still they are souls in the shape of smoke. When the smoke settles down in our annual Indian summer, who can say that it is not the return of the souls of martyrs, according to this theory. We have no more idea that the text literally describes the end of human souls, than we believe the end of God's people is literally described, when it is said, "they eat up my people as they eat bread."

We close our remarks by repeating the questions, which we insist have not been answered. They are as follows: "Will Bro. Storrs tell us what he understands by the word death, and by the word annihilation, and what, in his view, is the difference between them?"

The question is, "what is his opinion," &c." No matter what other people believe; they will take care of their own opinions.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR OF THE EXAMINER.

Br. Lee, in his note "2" says—"With us to cease to think is to cease to be a soul, for we know little about the human soul, more than what we gather from its thinking operations; with us a thought is the mind thinking," &c.

Men "cease to think" when sound asleep: then the soul "ceases to be a soul." Men have been in a state of total insensibility for days, months, and, in some instances, for years; for these periods, longer or shorter, according to Br. Lee, the soul "ceases to be a soul." Suppose then this "ceasing to think" should last from the death of Abel to the resurrection at the last day; of course, as Br. L. will have it, the soul has "ceased to be a soul;" but the power of God has not "ceased" to be omnipotent; and he can as easily revive the soul in the last case as those previously noticed. "With us," says Br. Lee, "a thought is the mind thinking." But in each of the foregoing cases there is no "thinking;" then Br. Lee "knows little about the human soul," as it has no "thinking operations." He has said in his articles on immortality, that "the soul is a simple essence, immaterial, uncompounded and indivisible;" that seemed to imply that he knew a great deal "about" it; but now he "knows little about" it "more than what" he "gathers from its thinking operations." There are times when it does not think, and we judge that Br. Lee is now approaching the truth, viz., that theologians, on his side of the question "know little about the human soul," the soul, according to them, is, after all, only thought: a glorious soul indeed; and it "ceases to be a soul" generally, once in every twenty-four hours. Br. Lee says expressly, in note "2," "the soul, whose very existence is thought," and he adds—"which is never known to exist only in connection with thought, and is known to exist only from its thoughts." We will not call this "creating fog," for we think foggy as it is, it is pretty clear: THE SOUL IS THOUGHT, according to this definition. We are almost ready to say Amen. Perhaps Br. Lee would accept it as an answer to his inquiries in note "10." But he says, note "9," "For the soul to exist in our sense of the soul, is to be conscious, for with us the soul is a living consciousness, and when it ceases to be conscious it will cease to be a soul." Br. Lee has, doubtless, seen persons perfectly unconscious under the influence of chloroform, and their "thought" ceased; hence, according to him, the soul "ceased to be a soul;" there was not a "living consciousness;" cut and mangle the body as you would, there was no consciousness; and the lack of consciousness was not in the body; for Br. Lee says, note "5"—"Consciousness does not pertain to the body. The body," he adds, "is never conscious;" and concludes by affirming, "Consciousness is purely an operation of the mind." This authority, of course, is good in this argument. The matter then stands thus:—

"When the soul ceases to be conscious it will cease to be a soul:"—

But the soul ceases to be conscious by the use of chloroform:—

THEREFORE it then "ceases to be a soul."

But again, note "2," Br. Lee says—"For a soul to cease to exist, is to cease to be a soul." Suppose we put this together with the foregoing, thus:

To cease to exist is to cease to be a soul:—

But, under the influence of chloroform the soul ceases to be a soul, inasmuch as it "ceases to be conscious:"—

THEREFORE, it "ceases to exist" at such times.

In regard to Br. Lee's affirmation, at the close of his "notes," that his "questions have not been answered," we will put our answer together as may be found in our letter. It is as follows:—

"Death involves no cessation of existence in either body or soul; it is manifest, however, that the body becomes entirely unconscious: THAT is death, where the term is used in relation to the cessation of the life of sensitive beings, but it is not annihilation: it involves no cessation of existence of the body: it is for you to prove that a man only half dies. Neither body nor soul cease to exist either in the first or second death: and it is perfectly in the power of God to call them up to conscious existence after the first or second death if he will. God wills to call all men back from the first death, but he will not to call any back from the second death—they sink into a state of eternal* unconsciousness by the will of God. But not beyond his power to awaken them if he chose—such a state would be annihilation."

The reader can now judge whether we did not answer Br. Lee's questions distinctly. We think we clearly stated what we understood by death, what by annihilation, and the difference between them; and if Br. Lee had not put "(5.)" in our mouth before we were suffered to finish the sentence, it seems to us he must have seen, and his readers too, that we did expressly answer his first question, viz.: "What do you understand by the word death?" In our letter, which we sent him, our words were made emphatic as in the quotation above; but he chose to remove the emphasis: of that we do not complain, for the reader would not have been likely to stumble without it, if the "(5.)" had not called off his attention before we finished the sentence, so that after reading the "note" he would not be likely to observe our reference in the expression "THAT is death," &c.; especially as the emphasis was removed from it.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

No. II.

We expressed the opinion, in our previous article, that the scarlet colored beast, Rev. 17th, is a symbol of the Papal civil power just prior to its final destruction; or, the last form of that power; and that which it took after it recovered from the "deadly wound" received, by which it was sent into the bottomless pit for a time. Having ascended out of that condition, it is presented in the 17th chap., under the seventh vial, just as the judgment is to be executed upon its rider, or the power that had managed it. The rider of this beast is described as a corrupt woman, distinctly named, "BABYLON THE GREAT," &c., and marked as a power that had shed the blood of the saints, and martyred the followers of Jesus. She is described, at verse 18, as being "that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth." It is manifest, however, that the walls, streets, bricks, and mortar which go to make up a city, never reigned over any body. When it is said, therefore, that the woman is that great city that reigneth over the kings of the earth, it is clear the meaning is, the power symbolized by this corrupt woman has its seat in that great city, or in Rome. This power is, mystically, Babylon; and takes its name from Babylon of the Old Testament. In order fully to understand this prophecy, we must compare it with the prophecies of the Old Testament concerning Babylon.

Here we wish to state a principle which we believe will be found true of many of the prophecies of the previous dispensation. It is this—That those prophecies frequently embrace events which in their fulfilment are at a distance from each other; or, a part of the prophecy has its accomplishment in events near, and another part at a more distant period; perhaps centuries after. Or, we would distinguish them thus—near and remote events, yet combined in one prophecy without, perhaps, any notice of this distinction; leaving the developments to settle that point. None can doubt but this is the case in those prophecies relating to Messiah's sufferings and reign, or the first and second advents. Nor had the Jews, or Disciples, at first, any idea that Messiah must have two advents to accomplish all that was written of him. It is easy to illustrate this point by several prophecies which have had a partial fulfilment, but we do not deem it necessary now to go into the evidence further.

In examining the prophecy concerning Babylon in Rev., we shall need constantly to refer to the prophecies of Babylon in the Old Testament, which will be found to contain parts which either never have had a fulfilment at all, or only a partial one, and that mainly as a "figure of that which was to come." If this fact is kept before our minds it will help us much in understanding Revelation.

We will, before going on directly, make a more minute enquiry as to what power is symbolized by Babylon, designated as a corrupt woman. We begin with Rev. chap. 17: 1. It is there called "the great whore." The original word is, pornees, which signifies one that prostitutes herself for gain, —an idolatress—figuratively, a corrupt and idolatrous church. It is used frequently in the Old Testament in reference to the departures of the Jewish church from God, her husband, by her idolatries. The very first idea, therefore, in the Revelation, is that of a corrupt and idolatrous church, prostituting herself for gain; a "great" church worshipping idols, and multiplying gods, for the sake of gaining money and power. Again, in verse 5, she is called "the mother of harlots." She is therefore the chief church—"the great" church. There is but one such church to be found on the earth; and it seems almost useless to argue the case. No church can answer to the description except the "Roman Catholic Church." She has multiplied gods, from the virgin Mary down through the whole catalogue of real and imaginary saints, and worshipped them, or prayed to them who are dead, and "know not anything;" and hence is just as guilty of idolatry as if she had done homage to wood or stone. She has also multiplied "images" innumerable, and thus shows herself the prostitute church designated "the great whore." She is indeed "the mother church"—but she is "the mother of harlots"—pornon—unchaste females, prostituting themselves and the gospel for gain. It is not difficult to see who are the daughters. If you see money-loving churches, conforming to the world for gain or popularity, you cannot fail to know they are of the mother of harlots. But our object being now to speak of the "judgment of the great whore," or mother, we shall not, at present, dwell upon her daughters. She is first described as a corrupt woman—then as the mother of other corrupt women—then riding and managing a corrupt civil power, symbolized by a scarlet colored beast, full of the names of blasphemy, with which she is in union. Next she is shown as a bloody persecutor; drunken—intoxicated with the blood of saints, &c. She is then presented as conducting herself in such manner, when God's words are about to be fulfilled upon her in judgment, that she is hated by the horns, or civil powers who had given their strength and power to the beast with which she was in league, and which had "carried her," (verse 7), and they "eat her flesh and burn her with fire," i. e. destroy her. The 18th chapter gives a detailed account of the judgment upon her, the reasons for it, some of the means by which it is inflicted, and the feelings of those interested in her continuance, and who had enriched themselves by her. All this is done under the symbol of a great and prosperous city suddenly destroyed, and the consternation and terror of such an event. A great part of the scenery here is drapery, thrown in to heighten the effect of the picture, but not to be understood as literally taking place; we speak of that part particularly from the 9th verse onward, which describes the feelings and sayings of those in the interest of this corrupt church, or Babylon.

In the 17th chapter, John was shown the beast, that this woman rode, in such circumstances as called for the "intervention" of the "power" of the horns, or governments, that were under the woman power, or ecclesiastical influence of this corrupt church. It was the woman that "reigneth over the kings" or governments "of the earth," or old Roman Empire, that invoked those governments to interfere to sustain the scarlet colored beast, or civil government the woman had ridden and controlled, and which had "carried" her in all her bloody course. After noticing that "intervention," by which the horns "agreed and gave their power and strength to the beast," it is said, "these shall make war upon the Lamb," &c.; thus intimating that this combination with the beast, at the bidding of the woman, was to constitute one of those agencies that should be specially engaged in "the battle of the great day of God Almighty." Having thrown out this hint, at verse 14, the prophecy, before proceeding directly to an account of the battle, stops to take a particular notice of the judgment on the woman, or Babylon, which is briefly noted, verse 16, but given in detail, chapter 18; though that chapter, chronologically, we think, synchronizes with the 20th verse of the 19th chap.; but being an event of such vast importance, a particular description is given of it by itself, and of the rejoicing at its fall, before arriving at the general account at the close of chap. 19. Here also we may as well remark, we think in the order of events the narrative, Rev. 19: 1-10, of the rejoicing at Babylon's destruction, follows Rev. 20: 3, and forms the introduction to Rev. 20: 4, and onward.

We are now prepared to proceed to notice the particular account of the judgment on Babylon. It is introduced as a special and separate scene, and therefore an angel is represented to come down from heaven, to open it and declare the reasons for this terrible judgment. He first announces that Babylon is fallen—epesen—one sense of the Greek word is, to fall in judgment. She had been tried and condemned, and the sentence is now about to be executed. This judgment is righteous, or just; she has "become a habitation"—a place of, a dwelling of—devils—daimonion—deities, idols, or "knowing ones," the character of whom is next spoken of, viz., "foul spirit"—pneumatos—"foul" tempers, dispositions, feelings, affections, inclinations; all these were the result of her idolatries; as the worship and sincere service of the true God is productive of holy tempers, dispositions, feelings, affections, and inclinations, so Babylon's worship of images, dead saints, &c., had made her "a hold"—phulake—a den "of every foul," impure temper, disposition, &c.; "and a cage of every unclean and hateful," detestable, loathsome "bird"—birds that feed on carrion, putrid flesh. What a description! But answering exactly to Roman Catholic Christendom. We preached on this subject a few weeks ago in this city; a secular paper here, without any knowledge of what we had said, had an article the next morning on "THE CURSES OF EUROPE," in which it said, "Most of Europe, especially the Catholic portion, is demoralized. Jesuitism, Fourierism, fanaticism of all kinds, have made it a moral chaos . . . distracted by extremes, either of superstition or infidelity; despotism or anarchy." It added, speaking of the various causes—"All, operating together, have converted all Europe into Pandemonium. This Greek word signifies All the Devils, or The Place of all the Devils." When we read this, we were half inclined to think the editor of that paper had been listening to our sermon the day previous; or at least been looking at the prophecy; but the former we presume he never does, and the latter we think not often, for he is still dreaming of the ultimate triumph of republicanism in Europe. Even politicians can see that "Catholic Europe" is the "Place of all Devils," but they do not see its doom.

A further reason announced by the angel for the judgment to be executed on Babylon is—"For all nations have drank of the wine of the wrath of her fornication"—she has spread her corrupt and idolatrous religion every where; and hence if she is not soon destroyed she will make "all nations" as corrupt as "Catholic Europe." "And the kings of the earth"—tees gees—the land, i. e. where she holds sway, or the old Roman empire, otherwise, "Catholic Europe"—"have committed fornication with her"—have joined in her idolatries and sought her protection; thus casting off reliance upon God, and becoming as black in idolatry as herself; hence we shall find in the sequel, chap. 19: 19-21, that they are destroyed with her, though the description of her fate is separately and at large presented in this 18th chapter; we shall find, however, that those countries that have been under her power will be prominent actors in her destruction, as represented chap. 17: 16, which work they will do in "the battle" as set forth chap. 19: 20, corresponding with chap. 17: 16, those two verses synchronizing together.

We may as well say, in this place, that we regard "the battle of the great day of God Almighty" as now going on; and as having commenced with the seventh vial of the seven last plagues, which we think began either with the French revolution of 1848, or within a few years previous to that time. That battle is made up of a series of events, passing over several years; we pretend not to say how many—time will reveal that. We are not to look for that battle in one event, but in a protracted conflict, made up of various events, or conflicts both of principles and of physical force, which we cannot doubt are now in progress. The scenery of that battle in chap. 19 we regard as all symbolical; and have no idea that "the kings of the earth, the beast, and the false prophet," &c., in that battle are to see Christ or his army, or will know that they are fighting against him, any more than the Jews knew they were "crucifying the Lord of glory." But let us not be mistaken in these remarks; we do believe that battle is to be followed with the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth, and the personal reign of Christ on the throne of his father David, with his dominion over all the earth.

Let us not then be bewildering our minds about a battle literally to correspond with the symbolical representation in Rev. 19. As we presume no one supposes that a literal "sword out of Christ's mouth" is to be employed in that battle, so let us not blind our eyes to the truth—solemn, awful truth—that we are now actually living in the time when that battle has begun, even "the battle of THAT GREAT DAY of God Almighty," which is to close up this age, and bring in the age of Messiah's personal reign. But the children of God who expect that reign may have need of patience; for most likely it will be several years before the battle will terminate; for aught we can tell, however, God may take up his saints to meet Christ "in the air" before the battle is over; we are inclined to the opinion that he will, yet we have no positive assurance of it. If not so, then there may be several years of trial still awaiting them here; and they will need to heed their Lord's admonition—"In your patience possess ye your souls."

We shall say more of the battle, chap. 19, when we come to explain that part of the prophecy; and give our reasons for the suggestion we have thrown out, that the armies and powers engaged in it, opposed to Christ, will be ignorant of what they are doing.

The next thing we notice in the account of Babylon's destruction is the cry—"Come out of her, my people, that ye receive not of her plagues." We remark, in the first place, that Babylon has territory as well as power and seat. It is therefore to be surveyed as a whole; the judgment falls off her and on those occupying the territory over which she has held ecclesiastical sway, as all together go to make up Babylon. The people here called to come out of her reside on the territory under her sway, but are not as a body of her religion—they are clearly a distinct people, though some of them, from various causes, may have been ecclesiastically connected with her. Again we remark, it is a people that have been oppressed by her, and suffered severely from her; for they are directed to "reward her even as she rewarded" them, &c., verse 6. To find out who are this people, we must have reference to the unfulfilled part of the prophecy concerning Babylon in the Old Testament; or those prophecies that had only a partial accomplishment in events relating to Babylon in Chaldea. "For Israel hath not been forsaken, nor JUDAH of his God, of the Lord of hosts; though their land was filled with sin against the Holy One of Israel: FLEE OUT OF THE MIDST OF BABYLON and deliver every man his soul; be not cut off in her iniquity; for this is the time of the Lord's vengeance; he will render unto her a recompense," Jer. 51: 5, 6. The facts here presented, and the exhortation given do not correspond with the facts of the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, nor with any events prior to the Christian era. This truth is so obvious that it does seem really unnecessary to spend time to prove it. The most that could be claimed with any show of truth is, that there was a partial fulfilment. But the first proclamation in favor of the Jews, at that time, was by Cyrus king of Persia; and they left the seat of their captivity not to escape judgment coming on Babylon, or to escape her plagues. Here then is a part of the prophecy that is to be carried forward for its full accomplishment to the time of the New Testament Babylon, or the Babylon of Rev. 18. Again, Jer. 51: 41—45, it is said—"How is Sheshack [a mystic name for Babylon] taken! and how is the praise of the whole earth surprised! how is Babylon become an astonishment among the nations! the sea is come up upon Babylon; she is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof." [that is, with the waters where the whole sitteth," which "are peoples, multitudes, nations and tongues"] . . . "My people, go ye out of the midst of her, and deliver ye every man his soul from the fierce anger of the Lord." Here is an exact correspondence with the language, Rev. 18: 4, and which had no correspondence in any facts relating to the return of the Jews from their captivity in Babylon of Chaldea. We cannot but think, therefore, that the people called out of Babylon, Rev. 18, is that people so long oppressed and crushed by the idolatrous Mother of Harlots who has heaped upon the offspring of JUDAH such untold wrongs and sufferings. We are the more inclined to this view from the prophecy of Isa. 61, where we have the following language—"Awake, awake, stand up, O Jerusalem, which hast drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury; thou hast drunken the dregs of the cup of trembling, and wrung them out. . . . Thus saith thy Lord, the LORD and thy God that pleadeth the cause of his people, Behold, I have taken out of thy hand the cup of trembling, even the dregs of the cup of my fury; thou shalt no more drink of it AGAIN; but I will put it into the hand of them that afflict thee," &c., verse 17—23. That this prophecy relates to the posterity of Jacob none, surely, ought to deny; and it shows that a time should come after a long season of cruel oppression when the hand that had crushed them should be taken off, and the cup should NO MORE AGAIN be put to their lips, but their oppressors shall drink it. What do we see in these days? The Catholic nations of Europe have been and are removing their hands from off this long oppressed people, and at the same time judgments fall thick and fast on those nations; indicating that the hour of Mystical Babylon's judgment has come; and that the people so long oppressed by her are called by the "voice" of Providence "from heaven" to "come out of her; that ye receive not of her plagues." Before leaving the territory and dominion of mystic Babylon, however, they will try to sustain the Catholic nations where they reside, denominated by Jeremiah an effort to "heal" her; but this effort will prove abortive. It is thus expressed by the prophet, Jer. 31: 8, 9, "Take balm for her pain, if so be she may be healed. We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed;" which effort being unsuccessful, it is added—"forsake her, and let us go every one into his own country, for her judgment reacheth unto heaven," &c. At this very hour the Jews are trying to heal the Catholic nations of Europe, or to prevent their utter ruin, by fighting in her battles, and loaning large sums of money to the governments to save them from bankruptcy and ruin. True, all this may be but a selfish principle in them, that they may save the millions of dollars before loaned to those governments, and which must probably be a total loss if those governments crumble to pieces. Hence the effort to heal Babylon; but she will not be healed; and when the monied Jews clearly see this, the next effort will be to seek a refuge elsewhere before they wreck all in the useless effort to sustain that falling power. Such a discovery will be to them as "a voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her my people;" and it will be obeyed. This constitutes, in our opinion, one of the events of the battle of the great day of God Almighty; and will be one of the most mighty engines in breaking Babylon and all Catholic Europe in pieces—producing entire bankruptcy, and annihilating their power, bringing in a state of anarchy, fitly described by "doubling unto her double according to her works; in the cup which she hath filled fill to her double"—producing "torment and sorrow" in all her borders. So the prophecy of Jeremiah, Jer. 51: 20, says—"Thou art my battle-axe and weapons of war; for with thee will I break in pieces the nations, and with thee will I destroy kingdoms." The removal of that people out of Catholic Europe, with what wealth is yet in their power, would be indeed the death blow to Babylon and her adherents; literally "breaking in pieces the nations, and destroying kingdoms." These things happen immediately after a time that Babylon had exultingly said—"I sit as a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow;" the exact state of that power two years ago, when almost all the world were ready to extol the head of Babylon to heaven, and her praises were in every land; but already the hisses of hated to the whole begin to be heard on every side, and indications increase that the period is just at hand when her flesh will be eaten, and she burned with fire. Then will the wailing described in the remainder of Rev. 18, be heard from those who have been in her interests, and who have enriched themselves by her idolatries and corruptions. The joy of the saints at that event, chap. 19: 1-9, we shall consider in another article.

LETTERS.

Sister C. C. WILLIAMS, Beaver Dam, N. Y., writes:

BR. STORRS:—I know not how it is with others, but for myself I can say it is a great satisfaction as well as pleasure to be able to do a little towards disenthraling the mind of the mass, which the Man of Sin has so long kept enchained. I rejoice that his hour seems near, and his destruction certain. The invincible sword, the Word of God, I feel will triumph. Truth will and must prevail. Man will find out what he is, and what he needs, and those who learn that, cannot but adore the Being who planned and executed such a work as has been wrought for them, to secure to them something worthy of being brought into being, and for undergoing here a course of trial—viz.: eternal life. I love to think, talk or write upon it; yes, and work too, to spread the light abroad. I think it must be truth, it looks so light. Error does not thus, but blinds, looks mysterious; and the more one tries to extricate themselves the more entangled they become. But this, to me, seems a potent way of combating self-styled Orthodoxy; and is cheap, too: to put these works on immortality into the hands of all who will read them. And I think they can hardly fail of exciting a spirit of inquiry to know whether or not these things are so. I wish more would feel the importance of doing so, as well as the comfort of it, and we should soon see the battle raging and volunteers enlisting; either on the side of Truth or Error, a stand would be taken. I desire to see the work go on.—[§3 enclosed.—Ed. Ex.]

BR. PARKER SAWYER, Hampton, N. Y., writes:

BR. STORRS:—It gives me pleasure to be instrumental in extending the circulation of the Examiner, Dobney and the Six Sermons, for I believe they are and will be productive of great good, founded, as I firmly believe, upon the Eternal truth of God, as revealed in his word. They are full of life and comfort to the Christian, and contain a rational appeal to the sincere Universalist, who, on new ground to him, is met and refuted; whilst the Infidel listens with almost profound silence. I am with you with all my heart, now and ever in the fearless defense of Gospel truth, though foes may deride and friends forsake. Yours truly.

BR. J. B. TYLER, Lackawack, N. Y., writes:

BR. STORRS:—By the smiles of a good Providence, two months past I have had comfortable health, after a tedious afflictive five months under a chronic inflammation of the bronchia. I have enjoyed the monthly visits of the Examiner, and often think how little the earthly compensation you have for the care and responsibility of its publication. Will you send me eight or ten copies of your Six Sermons, quarto? I think to circulate them among my neighbors. Enclosed is one dollar for subscription and sermons; I wish it were $10 for the same; or that I could help you in your labor more. I hope to help you more in future. From your well-wishing and praying brother.

BR. GEO. W. BURNHAM, N. Y., writes:

DEAR BR. STORRS:—Your works are in considerable demand, the people will investigate the question—the Bible question of their final destiny. "Behold, I come quickly and my reward is with me," says Christ. The question arises who is to be rewarded, and what is that reward. God has spoken who shall not fear? We are interested in the investigation of this subject.

Our late tent meetings have been the means of good to the people. New ones and men of influence, have stepped into our thinned ranks. Present movements among the nations are rousing up the lovers of the Bible to inquire what of the night? what do these things indicate? Our faith is unwavering in the speedy advent of Zion's Deliverer.

May God preserve you, and the Saints with you and us, in the truth, until that day. Yours, in the hope of Eternal Life in the Kingdom of God.

BR. JAMES DONALDSON, Detroit, writes:—

BR. STORRS:—May grace, mercy and peace be with you and all the Israel of God. Amen.

I was sorry on receiving Examiner No. 5, to hear that you were embarrassed with your paper. I sorrow to think that you should be devoted to the dissemination of truth, and in return be encumbered with debt. This must not be; no, no. I hope your readers will comply at once with your request, to furnish new subscribers, and thus relieve you from embarrassment. Not only so; but express their readiness to pay one dollar or two per year. I hope a determined effort will be made to secure the weekly or semi-monthly publication of the Examiner. I am glad you have noticed objections to the Examiner. Many of your readers, so far as I am acquainted, say, we are with Br. Storrs on the immortality question, but want more on the advent: we wish to hear more from Brs. Storrs and Walsh on the Kingdom, and don't agree with you that the advent papers make up what is wanted. We desire an exposition of the Prophets, to enlighten the heads and warm the hearts of those watching for Christ from Heaven. My prayer is, that you may be abundantly blessed in your labors for truth. Yours, in hope of eternal life.—[§2 enclosed.—Ed. Ex.]

BOOKS.—D. Roberts, P. M., Tremont, Ill., sent us a letter dated Aug. 18th, stating that there is a package of nine copies of our Six Sermons in the Post Office at that place, addressed to "J. G. Yariok, Bloomington, Ill." He says, "We know of no place of that name in this State," &c.; and states they will be retained at Tremont until he hears from us. We have no knowledge of sending the above named "package," and presume it must have been sent from Rochester, N. Y., or from some of our friends in Michigan. We give this notice, hoping that whoever forwarded the package will attend to it, and write to the Post Master of Tremont on the subject. Mr. Roberts will please accept our thanks for his attention to the matter.

IMMORTALITY.

REVIEW No. IX.

Mr. Lee's article, No. 11, is devoted to "the well known opinions of the Jews," in reference to the state of the dead.

In the opening sentence of this article, Mr. Lee says—"The Jews have ALWAYS believed in the conscious existence of the soul after the death of the body, and in its immortality."

This is not a fact—it is not true—and his evidence has failed to prove it, as we shall see.

1. We have before shown that, before the Babylonish captivity, the Jews observed the most profound silence in relation to the dead; and spoke of their state as one of darkness, silence and inactivity.

2. That after the Babylonish captivity, and the Macedonian and Roman conquests, they adopted their language and ideas, on such subjects as those upon which their oracles were silent. Let these facts be remembered, for they disprove the assertion of Mr. Lee, that "the Jews have always believed in the conscious existence" of the dead, and the "immortality" of the soul. Let the reader, also, notice, that Mr. Lee's testimony does not extend back to much less beyond this period. He has failed, then, to prove his first point.

Mr. Lee quotes from Josephus; and here let me state a principle in giving testimony. A witness, in deposing to a fact or truth, is required and expected to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Josephus tells us what the Jews believed in his day; but he does not tell us they "always" so believed. He gives us to understand that they believed in the immortality of the soul, in a restricted sense; but he does not stop there, and, if his testimony upon the subject is to be received as evidence of the truth of the doctrine, we must receive it all or none. Josephus says—"the Pharisees believe that souls have an immortal vigor in them, and that under the earth there will be rewards and punishments." This was the great "national doctrine," to use Mr. Lee's words. Let Mr. Lee, then, be a Pharisee in all this, as the doctrine was not specially condemned by our Lord! This testimony proves too much, and what proves too much, proves nothing. This is all in harmony with Mr. Lee's pagan witnesses. They also proved too much for Mr. Lee's cause.

While it is admitted then, that the mass of the Jews believed in the pagan doctrine of immortality, Mr. Lee gains nothing from the admission; because we have seen from whence they derived these ideas—ideas upon which their oracles were silent. And the fact, that they placed "rewards and punishments UNDER THE EARTH," clearly enough indicates their pagan origin.

According to the testimony of Josephus, the Pharisees did not believe in the resurrection of pagans: for he says "they believe that souls have an immortal vigor in them; and that under the earth there will be rewards or punishments, according as they have lived virtuously or viciously in this life: and the vicious are to be detained in an everlasting prison, but that the virtuous shall have power to revive and live again." Antiq. B. xviii. C. 1. 3. In another place he says—"they say that all the souls are incorruptible, but that the souls of good men only are removed into other bodies"—that is, they are transmigrated. In a word, from all the testimony of Josephus, we come to the following conclusions: 1. They believed the heathen would not be raised from the dead. 2. That the righteous children of Abraham only would rise. 3. That his unrighteous children would not rise, but be detained in the prison house of the dead forever. 4. That the souls of good men passed into other bodies, or were transmigrated. So that Josephus' testimony proves more than Mr. Lee desires; and, if it be good on one point, it should certainly be received on collateral points. But the Lord has put the seal of condemnation upon the doctrines of both Sadducees and Pharisees. He said to his disciples—"BEWARE OF THE DOCTRINE OF THE PHARISEES AND OF THE SADDUCEES." They were both wrong; the Sadducees occupied one extreme, and the Pharisees another. And, as we have before seen, these views were Babylonish in their origin; and are not supported by the Jewish Scriptures.

Mr. Lee refers to the "Jews' Service Book," and in reference to this I will only quote the language of Christ—"In vain do ye worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." And again—"Ye make void the law through your traditions."

Mr. Lee also goes into the Apocrypha; and for what purpose does he go there? To prove that "the Jews always believed in the immortality of the soul?" If so, his evidence fails, because the Apocrypha, according to his admission, was "written before the Christian era;" but not before the Babylonish captivity! But, were I disposed, I could show from the very passages Mr. Lee has quoted from Esdras and the wisdom of Solomon, that he totally misapprehends and misapplies all the quotations he makes. But I do not deem the document of sufficient importance to do so. I will, however, proceed to show that the most authoritative parts of the Apocrypha, those bearing the names of some of the authors of some of the books composing the Bible, teach a very different doctrine from Mr. Lee's.

First, then, as a specimen, read 2 Esdras vii. 31, "And after seven days the world, that yet waketh not, shall be raised up, and that shall die that is corrupt." If this refer to the resurrection, which it appears to do, from the context, then it proves the "second death" of the "corrupt," which Mr. Lee denies. Again, at the 15th verse—"Now therefore, why disquietest thou thyself, seeing thou art but a CORRUPTIBLE MAN? and why art thou moved, whereas thou art but MORTAL?"

But let us examine the "Wisdom of Solomon," which has a much higher claim than the Book of Esdras, and see what he says on the question of death and immortality. Chapter i. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16—"Seek not death in the error of your life: and pull not upon yourselves destruction with the works of your hands." For God made not death: neither hath he pleasure in the destruction of the living. For he created all things that they might have their being: and the generations of the world were healthful; and there is no poison of destruction in them, nor the kingdom of death upon the earth: (FOR RIGHTEOUSNESS IS IMMORTAL;) but ungodly men with their works and words called it to them: for when they thought to have it their friend, they consumed to naught, and made a covenant with it, because they are worthy to take part with it." This certainly does not teach the natural immortality of the soul. Again, in the 2d chapter, "For God created man to be IMMORTAL, and made him to be an image of his own eternity; nevertheless," notwithstanding this purpose on the part of God, "through envy of the devil came death into the world; and they that do hold of his side do FIND IT." Here it is clearly taught, that God, when he created man, designed his immortality—his eternal life, but that through the envy of the devil, death came into the world, and those who hold of his side, find death their portion. The passage Mr. Lee quotes from the 3d chapter, he totally misapplies. "In the sight of the unwise they seemed to die," in the Sadducean sense of not living again, "but they are in peace." "This hope is full of immortality," which it could not be, if they already possessed it, for "hope" relates to the future—"the time of their visitation," which is spoken of in the 7th and 8th verses. The reader is requested to turn to the 7th chapter of the Wisdom of Solomon, and read the five first verses, and compare it with what we have already quoted here; and, also, what we have elsewhere said on the nature of man.

I will quote one passage more from the Apocrypha; it is found in Ecclesiasticus xvii. 27-32. "Who shall praise the most high in the grave, instead of them which live and give thanks? Thanksgiving PERISHETH FROM THE DEAD, AS FROM ONE THAT IS NOT: the living and sound in heart shall praise the Lord. For all things cannot be in men, because the son of man is NOT IMMORTAL." Again, he says—"All men are but earth and ashes." The Wisdom of Solomon was doubtless written before the Babylonish Captivity, and Ecclesiasticus appears to have been written about, or a little after that time. Thus we have proved, first, that the Jews did not "always" believe in the immortality of the soul; and, secondly, that, even after their return from Babylon, one of their principal writers, the author of Ecclesiasticus, did not teach it; all of which is in harmony with the Bible. Mr. Lee's cause has gained nothing; I apprehend, by going into the Apocrypha!

He next appeals to the Bible; but, alas! for his theory, he crucifies it afresh, and puts it to public shame! He quotes Mark. xiv. 26; and Luke xxiv. 36-39, Mark vi. 49.

In Matthew and Mark the original word is phantasma, a phantom; and such is also the marginal reading in Luke. In the cases recorded by Matthew and Mark, the disciples thought they saw a phantom, but they were mistaken, as all other persons have been ever since. Let the reader notice, then, that in the only cases recorded, where the disciples supposed they saw a phantom—ghost, they were deceived; and that there is not a case differing from this on record!

In the case referred to by Luke, we have the subject presented in all its power and force. The Lord Jesus had arisen from the dead; his Father "had shown him the path of life," and "demonstrated him as his son, by his resurrection from the dead"—"death" now "had no more dominion over him,"—he was immortal—and as such he appears in their midst! "They were terrified and affrighted and supposed they had seen a spirit—a phantasma, or phantom—ghost. And now he proceeds to correct their ideas of such things by asking, "Why are ye troubled? and why do thoughts arise in your hearts? Behold my hands and my feet; that it is I, myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit—a phantasma—hath not flesh and bones, as you see me have. And when he had thus spoken, he showed them his hands and his feet." Thus correcting their errors on the subject of spirit, or phantoms, and, at the same time, demonstrating the MATERIALITY OF SPIRITUAL BODIES!

Here is "a quickening spirit," as Paul says, with "flesh and bones, hands and feet." Here we have a glorious specimen of a spiritual, immortal body—not "immaterial" but material—real—tangible; something which could be "handled" and "seen!" What becomes of Mr. Lee's "immaterial soul" in the light of this fact? His theory is exploded! his foundation demolished! his superstructure crumbled into dust, and his theology a thing of nought! the ignis fatuus of a day! This fact, I repeat it, sweeps away Mr. Lee's whole theory of "immateriality," demolishes Mr. Drew's logic, and nullifies all the rhetoric of Pythagoras, Plato, Socrates, and Zoroaster. It eclipses all the philosophy of Babylon, Egypt, Media, Persia, Greece and Rome! It swallows up all the traditions of the Jewish Service Book, Josephus, and the Apocrypha! It casts into the shade all the learning of Pharisees and Sadducees, ancient or modern! because it is LIFE AND IMMORTALITY BROUGHT TO LIGHT!!

Mr. Lee refers to Acts xxiii. 8. Mr. Brewster made a better use of this than Mr. Lee has done; and as we have fully responded to his arguments on this point, we must refer the reader to our discussion with Rev. Wm. H. Brewster. Mr. Lee's logical reputation is greater than his philosophical and scriptural strength. Truth is mighty above all things, and will prevail! J. r. w.

IMMATERIALITY.

The following communication is from a Methodist Minister; who, though not with us on all points, says, in a private note,—“On the great question—‘What will be the doom of the wicked? I am fully with you; and intend ere long to give public utterance to the truth of God on this awful subject.’” He adds—“I feel thankful to God that I have seen your Sermons and Dobney’s book. For years my mind has been painfully perplexed with the doctrine of interminable suffering; I have thought and read of hell as a world of immortal woe, where countless millions curse themselves, each other, and the Almighty, until I have been confounded: but I have done with the doctrine and all its perplexities. The wicked shall be burnt up with unquenchable fire; and afterwards every creature in heaven and on earth shall ascribe blessing, &c., to Him that sitteth on the throne and to the Lamb for ever.”

The name of the author of this communication has never appeared in the Examiner: he is therefore a new accession to this side of the question: but he alone is responsible for the sentiments of his article. We hope to hear from him again.

If the Human Soul be Immaterial, how can we account for the origin of its existence?

BR. STORRS:—I have recently been much interested in this question. The following article is submitted to your consideration, which you may print if you think proper to do so, and if not, you may return it at my expense.

Admitting the human soul to be immaterial, there are four ways, in any one of which we may suppose it to have originated. 1st. We can suppose it to have been created out of previously existing immaterial substance. 2d. We can suppose it to have been created out of the immaterial substance of one or of both the parents who were the means of its existence. 3d. We can suppose it created out of the Divine substance. 4th. We can suppose it to have been created out of nothing. These include every possible mode of accounting for the origin of the soul, if the soul be an immaterial essence. Assuming this view of the nature of the soul, I propose to show that it could not in any of the above ways come into being, and therefore there is no such immaterial soul in existence.

I. Did God create the soul out of previously existing immaterial substance? I answer, 1st. The existence of such substance is hypothetical. I do not know of any immaterialist of the present day, who maintains such an opinion respecting the origin of the soul. 2d. If such immaterial substance did exist previous to the creation of our immaterial soul, it either possessed the essential properties of spirit, or it did not. If it did not, then immaterial substance is not necessarily spirit. Suppose then this substance did possess the essential properties of spirit. In this case, according to immaterialists, it must have had thought, consciousness, and all the elements of personality. In other words, it must have been an intelligent, spiritual being; essentially one and the same; immutably and eternally incapable of multiplication or division. Immaterialists themselves being the judges, our immaterial soul could not be created out of the essence of such a being.

Let us suppose this immaterial substance to have been impersonal, unconscious, and unintelligent. Still it must have been essentially one, or it must have been multifarious. If essentially one, then it is plain it could become the subject of only one consciousness and personality. No more than one soul could be created out of it. If there were different kinds of such substance, then each kind might become one soul, and only one. There must then have been as many different immaterial substances as there have been human souls in existence. Such a notion is surely too absurd to be maintained by the advocates of immaterialism.

If, however, any should incline to adopt this method of accounting for the origin of the soul, we have other difficulties to suggest to them. How came this previously existing immaterial substance into being? How could immaterial substance exist, and yet be utterly destitute of moral and intellectual properties? How could an unconscious and unintelligent substance be rendered conscious, intelligent, and the subject of personality? Immaterialists tell us that what is not matter is spirit, and that spirit is essentially conscious, intelligent, and active. Of course, if this be so, there could not be any unconscious, unintelligent, immaterial substance, out of which human souls were created.

II. Does God create the souls of children out of the immaterial substance of one or both of their parents?

Suppose the soul of a child to be created out of the immaterial substance of its father. But here we are in difficulty again. The soul of the father, we are told, is essentially an unit; it is indivisible. It cannot, then, be divided. It cannot furnish from its own essence the elements of a new existence. Passing over this difficulty, we will still suppose the soul of the child created from the soul of its father, and another difficulty is presented as formidable as the last. The father having parted with a portion of his immaterial essence, no longer has a soul, whole and entire. The second child of the same father must be supposed to receive another portion of his spirit, and so of all the succeeding children. Thus the father, after communicating, at different times, portions of his own essence to a score of children, can hardly be supposed to have any soul left. It is also evident, that before he became a father he must have had twenty times more immaterial substance, or soul, than any one of his children. Thus souls are diminishing in quantity, or amount of essence, every generation. In the course of ages, souls may become as small as immaterialists affirm them to be,—without extent, having no size, in other words, they exist nowhere.

The idea that the soul of a child is created out of the soul of his father, is evidently absurd, and must be abandoned. And if we suppose the soul of the infant to be created out of the immaterial essences of both parents, absurdities are increased and multiplied. In this, as in the former case, we have indivisible spirits divided, which is a contradiction. Neither father nor mother has a complete soul after the production of the child. And as the child is supposed to have a soul, which is compounded of the substance of two immaterial, conscious, and immortal spirits, he must have in himself a double life, a double consciousness, a double identity; he must be the subject of a two-fold immortal existence. Such are the contradictions and impossibilities in which we are involved, by supposing the soul of a child to be created out of the immaterial substance, of one, or both of its parents.

III. Does God create souls out of his own essence?

This cannot be, according to immaterialists, for they tell us God is one, and indivisible for ever. But if souls be created out of the divine essence, God is divided into as many parts as there are human souls in existence.

"If the human soul be a part of the essence of God, it must be a partaker of the attributes of God. The attributes of God inhere, essentially and eternally, in the divine substance. If, then, human souls are portions of the divine essence, they must share in the divine perfections, many of which are said to be incommunicable. In reality, God is the only intelligent Being. Every human mind is a ray of the infinite light; a drop of the eternal ocean. In the language of Pope:

"All are but parts of one stupendous whole, Whose body nature is, and God the soul."

It either follows, then, that whatever is, is right, or if there be such a thing as moral evil, the Divine Being, in his innumerable individualizations, is the only transgressor of moral law. Every false opinion; every evil passion, every wrong action, is thus charged upon that great and glorious Being who is Light and Love, and in whom there is no darkness at all. Now, no immaterialist will contend for such absurdities. We are thus forced to the conclusion, that God does not create human souls of his own essence.

IV. Does God create human souls out of nothing?

I formerly entertained the common opinion of the origin of the Universe, that it was produced out of nothing. But I have been compelled to abandon that idea, as involving an absolute impossibility. None will pretend that finite immaterial minds can create something out of nothing; while many do maintain that the Almighty did, from nonentity, call all things into being. Let me ever speak of God with the deepest reverence. I believe he can do whatever in the nature of things is possible; but there are some things which are beyond the limits of omnipotence. God cannot annihilate his own being. He could not create a being equal to himself. I doubt whether God could compress all the matter in the Universe, so that it would occupy no more space than a grain of sand. According to immaterialists, God cannot divide a soul into parts, nor destroy a soul by the action of matter upon it. I do not accuse them of irreverence for holding such opinion, nor shall I be rashly censured by candid men, when I assign the following reasons for not believing in the production of something out of nothing.

1st. I cannot find that the Bible anywhere teaches the creation of anything out of nothing.

2d. If something was produced out of nothing, it must have been so produced by the action of Deity. But action necessarily implies two things: 1st, an actor; 2d, an object acted upon. The actor may act upon himself, or upon something which is not himself. Let us try both cases.

1st. Does God produce immaterial souls by acting on himself?

This brings us to view the subject again, very nearly in the light in which it is presented in our third supposition. Now, if we answer the question just proposed in the affirmative, we must maintain that God has divided his indivisible essence into parts, and of these parts constituted human souls. Here we have a contradiction and an absurdity,—a contradiction, because an indivisible essence cannot be divided; and an absurdity, because, according to this view, every human soul, and every devil, is a part of God.

Again: These separate parts of the divine substance, which are supposed to be individualized in different souls, either have their original properties, or they have not. If they have, then the consciousness of every soul is the consciousness of God; the will of every soul is the will of God; and the errors of every soul are the errors of God. This will not be maintained by immaterialists. Let us, then, suppose that these portions of the divine substance have not their original properties. Here are two difficulties: 1st. These parts of the divine essence could not exist for a moment, after being deprived of their essential properties. 2d. New properties in the abstract could not be created and made to inhere in these parts of the divine nature. It is therefore impossible for human souls to be created out of the essence of God, by the action of God upon himself.

I may here remark, that if God could produce souls by acting on his own nature, these souls would not be created out of nothing, which is the point now under consideration.

Does God, then, create souls by acting on something which is not himself?

This could not be, according to most immaterialists, for they tell us there was a period when only God existed. Besides himself, there was neither matter nor spirit. Of course, then, out of himself there was no object to act upon. Now, as an exercise of power necessarily implies an object to be acted upon, it follows, that if there ever was a period when nothing besides God existed, nothing but God could have existed to all eternity.

All will admit that the creation of something out of nothing is an impossibility with finite beings; but many will maintain that such a creation is possible with God because he is omnipotent. I believe in the divine omnipotence; but what can omnipotence do without materials to work upon? What can it effect when set in operation (if this were possible) on boundless nonentity? In the arithmetic of mortals, a thousand times nothing amounts to nothing, and this is an absolute and immutable truth in the multiplication table of God Almighty. The fact that our power is limited, and God's power is infinite, does not touch the question. No being, finite nor infinite, can think without a subject of thought. No being can exercise desire or love without some object to be desired or loved. None will pretend that God could exercise his benevolence upon nonentity. So neither can power act upon nonentity. Hence the production of souls out of nothing is an infinite and eternal impossibility.

I am thus led to the conclusion that an immaterial soul could not be created out of previously existing immaterial substance, nor out of the souls of parents, nor out of the divine essence, nor out of nothing. And as an immaterial soul could not be produced in any other way, I am compelled to believe there is no such thing in existence.

As my sheet is not full, I will suggest whether the notion, that the soul was created by God out of nothing, is not utterly inconsistent with the doctrine of man's constitutional depravity. Here let me quote Wesley, who represents the thoughts of millions on this subject. "In Adam all died, all human kind, all the children of men who were then in Adam's loins. The natural consequence of this is, that every one descended from him comes into the world spiritually dead; dead to God, wholly dead in sin; entirely devoid of the life of God, void of the image of God, of all that righteousness and holiness wherein Adam was created. Instead of this, every man born into the world now bears the image of the devil, in pride and self-will; the image of the beast, in sensual appetites and desires. This, then, is the foundation of the New Birth,—the entire corruption of our nature." Such is said to be the state of a human being "when he comes into the world." This is affirmed of the immaterial soul, and of it only; for immaterialists tell us the body possesses no quality of an intellectual or moral nature: every such quality belongs to the soul. Now, if the soul be made out of nothing, a human father can have no more to do with the production of the souls of his children, than with the creation of so many worlds. How, then, can a father's acts affect the moral nature and condition of the souls of his children; and the relation of these souls to God? To me this seems impossible. If the soul alone develops thought and volition, and if it be created by God out of nothing, then we must refer the first moral state of the soul to God, and not to Adam. If the soul is naturally destitute of holiness, God made it so. If the soul has in itself the germs of pride, malice, envy, bitterness and blasphemy, God put these germs into it. If the soul go astray from the womb, speaking lies, God interwove a principle of falsehood in its constitution. Whatever is natural to the soul must be referred to the being who gave the soul its nature, and not to the beings who were merely the instruments of providing for it a house of clay, in which it might pass a short term of existence.

DR. I. F. LEE, AND THE BAPTISTS.

TO THE BAPTISTS scattered throughout the bounds of the Moriah Association, and elsewhere, greeting:—

Whereas the Meadow Branch Baptist Church has charged the undersigned with the promulgation of sentiments heretical, and subversive of the Christian system, thereby justifying themselves in his exclusion from their body, hoping that no church will receive the letter of dismission granted him upwards of two years ago, and which they are led to think he still retains, contrary to the wish of said church: Be it known unto you, 1st. That the sentiments, which the undersigned has promulgated, are not contrary to Scripture. 2d. They are not therefore either heretical, or subversive of the Christian system. 3d. As to the letter of dismission, he neither retains it still, nor holds it contrary to the wish of the Church, and therefore cannot present it to any other church whatever. The letter then of the Meadow Branch Baptist Church is a misrepresentation from beginning to end. The undersigned might, in strict propriety, let the matter here rest, and demand the proof of their assertions, but he prefers an exposure of the misrepresentation, believing it will be acceptable to his friends, serviceable to his enemies; and instead of subverting the Christian system, establish the truth of those sentiments, and prove hermeneutically that they are the Revelation of the Almighty, and not the inventions of man.

The Meadow Branch Baptist Church was apprised of the fact, that he was not a member of their church at the time (Feb. 1849,) nor for upwards of twelve months previous; that he had disposed of the letter of dismission in the summer of 1847. What then, dear brethren, can you think of a church who willfully, and deliberately publish that which they know is a misrepresentation? What could have prompted them to such an act? It has been said that it was slavish, servile fear—the fear of man—the fear of the Moriah Baptist Association! That if they did not exclude Dr. Lee, the Association would exclude them!! That is, if they did not exclude an individual who was not a member of their church at the time—an impossibility—aye, if they did not commit an impossibility, the Moriah Association would sever them from her sisterhood!! And this egregious folly was premeditated by a very few, (it is feared, not some of that few who are saved,) while the majority, an overwhelming majority, of the Association knew nothing of the plot. How strange! to bear false testimony against a neighbor, to indulge in wilful misrepresentations, to take fiction for fact, and fact for fiction; to take Scripture for heresy, and Bible sentiment as subversive of the Bible; and call all this orthodoxy! Strange as it may seem, it is nothing more than the Meadow Branch Baptist Church has done, under the penal law of the Moriah Baptist Association. Two or three very active agents in the plot believe that the soul of man is the essence of God! And that the wicked will be raised incorruptible, immortal—spiritual bodies, Glorious! For, saith one of these essencees of Deity, Paul, in the 15th chapter of 1st Corinthians, is speaking of the resurrection of the wicked as well as the saints! Is this orthodoxy? It may be the Moriah Baptist Association's sentiments, but not surely the declaration of God. But what are these sentiments which the Meadow Branch Baptist Church, in coram with the Association, of which she is a beloved and pliant sister, believe to be heretical and subversive of the Christian system, and a renunciation of which would be a great recommendation to an ordained minister of the glorious gospel of Jesus Christ? Let us look into that gospel, and examine and see if it contains such sentiments as Dr. Lee has openly promulgated. And if, after impartial and thorough examination according to the sacred canon, we find sentiments verbally, hermeneutically such as Dr. Lee believes and has promulgated, it must necessarily follow that they are scriptural, not heretical; and instead of subverting Christianity, they are in verity a part of that Divine system itself, how subversive soever of the sentiments of those who reject the word of God, and prefer the blasphemous idea that the soul of the wicked is the essence of Deity, and therefore is undying, and must live forever!

To the law and the testimony. 1st. Dr. Lee believes and has promulgated the following sentiments, which the Meadow Branch Church pronounces heretical and subversive of the Christian system.

Gen. 3: 22: 'And now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever: Therefore,' &c. 23. The sentence of death is passed, and, in mercy, God expels Adam and Eve from Paradise, or the garden of Eden; for he did not wish them to live for ever in a state so wretched. The penalty of mortality was not remitted, for "dust thou art," &c., and the penalty of the law, death, eternal death, were it not for the interposition of mercy, through a Saviour, would have been inflicted on Adam and Eve.

* Ezekiel 18: 40. 'The soul that sinneth, it shall die.' Rom. 6: 23. 'For the wages of sin is death.' 21. 'The end of those things is death.' 2: 12. 'For as many as have sinned without law, shall also perish without law'—16—"in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel." 1: 32. 'Who, knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death.' This, then, is the judgment of God, that the wicked are worthy of death—that they shall perish in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel. What doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul, his life? Or what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul—his own life?

Job 21: 30. "The wicked is reserved unto the day of destruction—they shall be brought forth to day of wrath"—death—eternal death. Ezk. 18: 18, 24, 31, 32, 26. 33: 9 13, 18. Matt. 3: 10, 12. 5: 29, 30. 7: 13, 16, 19. 10: 28. 13: 40, 50, 16: 25, 28. 18: 8, 9. Acts 3: 23. 8: 20 2 Peter 2: 1, 17. Here it is declared that the wicked shall be destroyed—shall lose their life—be burnt up—shall perish—utterly perish. Again, John 3: 36. 'he that believeth not the Son shall not see life.' And again, Malachi 4: 1. 'For, behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.' From the foregoing passages it is evident that the final destiny of the wicked is destruction, everlasting destruction, death, eternal death. And we think we have the mind of the Lord when we say, that eternal death, and not eternal life in misery, is the judgment of God against the wicked. This we believe from the force of testimony more numerous and overwhelming, in one sense of the word, than that in favor of baptism being immersion. We have one solitary word to prove immersion, i. e. baptizo. This, with the phrase, going down into the water, &c., in Jordan, and buried with him in baptism, &c., constitutes all the proof we have, and all that we require. Let us now return to the future punishment of the wicked, and what hermeneutically is the testimony in its favor, and who is the author of that testimony or evidence by which we believe? Consume, devour, destroy, destruction, perdition, die, death, perish, utterly perish, everlasting destruction, eternal death, are the words chiefly employed, when speaking of the future and final punishment of the wicked, &c. We would request then that you study them hermeneutically, and consult a Latin Dictionary. Look carefully and critically at the words, consumo, destruo, devoro, destructio, pereio (from per and eo literally, to depart wholly,) perditio (from perdo, entire loss, utter destruction,) and then turn to Webster's large, and enlarged Dictionary, last published, 1848—and say whether these sentiments are heretical and subversive of the Christian system? But the public mind, says Mr. Forcible Feeble, is against the doctrine, aye, and the overwhelming prejudices of the churches. Yea, verily, adus Deacon S.; and then how are we to alarm sinners, if we take away the fear of undying torture in eternal and devouring fire? Alas! the man who will yield to public opinion or the prejudices of the whole religious world, when that opinion and prejudice is contrary to the word of God, is not fit for the Church of God, and is a dishonor to the ministry. We know we have the mind of the Lord when we say, that it is not the fear of undying torture, but the goodness of God, that leadeth man to repentance.

All the classic Greek writers, all Lexicons, have been sifted and examined, minutely, thoroughly, to prove what? That baptizo means to dip, plunge, immerse. Must a man, then, renounce his reason, his knowledge of other words besides baptise—deny the import and meaning of the words used in speaking of the punishment of the wicked—declare that the judgment of God relative to the wicked is heresy! and that the doctrine contained in the word of God is contrary to the word of God; and that God, therefore, does not mean what he says;—must a man do all this before he can be received again into full-fellowship and fellow feeling with the Meadow Branch Baptist Church? The import of words must first be changed; all Dictionaries and Lexicons altered essentially—nay, even then the judgment of God remains immutably the same. Think you, brethren, that all the proofs in favor of the punishment of the wicked being that of utter destruction and not eternal life in misery, have been enumerated? Throughout the whole Bible there is not one passage, not one solitary phrase, that favors the common notion of immortality in sin, or eternal life to the wicked. No, not one text to show the soul is in its present condition undying or immortal. True, that immortality is promised to those who, by patient continuance in well-doing, are seeking for honor and glory and immortality, eternal life. These great and glorious blessings are promised to the saints, through Jesus Christ. They are not inherent in man—not even in the righteous, much less in the wicked. Nor are they conferred on mortals, before the resurrection. Corruption must put on incorruption—mortality, immortality; the natural body must be raised a spiritual body. When does this take place? At death? Nay, but in the resurrection.

Christ was manifested in the flesh, that he might destroy the works of the devil. This the devil himself believes: Art thou come to destroy us before the time? The belief of the Meadow Branch Church, then, is not so correct on this point as that of the devil. He knows the truth in this respect, believes it, and trembles. But the Meadow Branch Baptist Church denies the truth of God, and neither fears nor trembles, but unblushingly publishes to the world that the truth of God is heresy! Would to God that they had the wisdom of the serpent, and the harmlessness of the dove.

LETTER FROM BR. J. B. FRISBIE.

The writer of the following letter has been a minister, and traveling elder, we believe, in the Protestant Methodist Church, for a number of years. Some months ago our Six Sermons were put into his hands, if we recollect right, by Br. Catlin of Kingsbury, Ind., which he has examined with Dobney on Future Punishment, comparing them with the Scriptures, the result of which will be learned from his letter. Our Br. Catlin and other brethren in the west are doing their work faithfully in scattering the doctrine of immortality only through Christ, and that by a resurrection from the dead; thus showing the importance of the "second advent," as our only hope for a future life. We trust they will abide in this good work and not compromise it to please men.

SYLVAN, MICH., Sept. 7th, 1849.

BROTHER STORRS,—It is with pleasure I now inform you that I have closely examined your Six Sermons, and also Mr. Dobney on Future Punishment: able works, the truth of which nothing but prejudice, and a blind zeal for creeds, sects, and parties, can gainsay or resist. With much interest I have perused your valuable paper, and have been delighted with the discussions therein, and have faithfully compared them all with the Bible.

About seven years since I was fully convinced that the idea of the natural immortality of the soul was a heathen doctrine; but have believed that immortality was in Christ, by virtue of the atonement, for all, but am now ready to acknowledge that the Bible does not teach the immortality and eternal life (which I consider synonymous) for any but those, "who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." It appears that Christ, by his obedience and death, abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel: 2 Tim. 1: 10. It is strange, that some should labor to prove that life and immortality should be brought to light through the light of the impress of the heathens, or reason, or the light of nature. To "put on immortality," (1 Cor. 15: 53, 54), does not look much like an immortal soul's putting on an immortal body, or a mortal body's putting on an immortal soul, but "this mortal shall put on immortality," in the resurrection. Under this I will place, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Ezek. 18: 4 and 20. Also, "Let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death." James 5: 20, does teach that a sinner's soul may die. Solomon says, "Man hath no pre-eminence above a beast" at death: Eccl. 3: 19. "The dead know not anything." David says, man without redemption is "like the beasts that perish." Ps. 49. "While I live I will praise the Lord—while I have any being"—"his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."

Ps. 146: 2 and 4. I am not so clear on the intermediate state as I could wish. One reason why, I suppose, is, I had imbibed the notion that demons were the spirits of the wicked dead, according to Josephus, W. B. 7, sec. 6.

As to the destruction of the wicked after death, I feel very well satisfied on that point, at present. As sure as eternal life means future and endless life, so sure the opposite must be future and endless death, perish, and destruction, which are the common terms in contrast with life, eternal life, &c. Nowhere can I find that the wicked are to have eternal life, or that they are immortal, or are to put on immortality in the resurrection. For this is spoken only of brethren or Christians, who have sought immortality: Rom. 2: 7; they put on immortality in the resurrection. 1 Cor. 15: 50—54: "He that hath sown to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption." Now this I see is not the first death that we inherited in Adam. For, this is for our own deeds, and contrasted with life everlasting, which places it in the future, viz., the second death—"Death unto death"—"Utterly perish"—"End destruction"—"Destroy both soul and body in hell"—"punished with everlasting destruction." A word as to the resurrection, then I close this article. I came to the firm conclusion that if I could find proof in the scriptures that the wicked might rise mortal, that assuredly they would die again. No sooner had I come to this conclusion than this text came to my mind, satisfactory to the point—"Women received their dead raised to life again: and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance that they might obtain a better resurrection." Heb. 11: 35. The contrast is between the women's children raised by the prophet back to this mortal life, and the better, or immortal resurrection. If these worthies had accepted deliverance, it appears they would never had a better resurrection than a mortal one, and die again. This is in exact agreement with the text, "He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world, shall keep it unto life eternal." Here the contrast is between the life in this world and life eternal; which makes its loss one with death eternal. See Mat. 10: 39, Mar. 8: 35. Yours in the hope of immortality.

"INFANTS—SOUL AND BODY."

Under this caption, the True Wesleyan, for Sept. 1, takes exceptions to a sentiment of some of its exchanges, which is this, "the body of the infant is corrupt or fallen, and depraved. This depravity is hereditary; but the soul is a new creation of God, not derived from the earthly parent." The Wesleyan uses up this notion very handsomely, and says, "The Bible affirms that God is the Maker of the body as clearly as it does that he is the Maker of the soul." It adds, "Abraham begat Isaac, and Isaac begat Jacob." But if souls are not begotten as well as bodies, Abraham did not begot Isaac, or else the term Isaac does not include a soul. If men are not begotten, then souls are no part of men."

The Wesleyan overthrows its exchange in the argument, but demolishes itself along with it, for the doctrine of the Wesleyan is, that the soul is "immaterial, uncompounded, and indivisible."

Now if it is "immaterial," how does the action of matter, in generation, communicate it? And if it is indivisible, how could Abraham give or communicate a soul to Isaac? It could not be an offshoot from his own, for that would make his soul divisible, and the Wesleyan says it is "indivisible." We cannot see, if Abraham communicated Isaac's soul to him, but what it must still have been Abraham's soul in Isaac, if the soul is not divisible; and then we do not see how there can be more than one soul for the whole human family; and as that is "indivisible," it is a family soul: hence it follows that the action of any one man must be the action of the family soul; so if one man sins, it is a family sin, or if one man acts virtuously it is a family virtue. Again, as the soul is "indivisible," all men must have the same common destiny: say, for example, that if Abraham should be lost, Isaac must be lost, for the soul can't be divided; and so, whatever is the fate of the first man, Adam, must be the fate of all the men of his race, or else the soul must be divisible; and then, what would become of the Wesleyan's theory of its indivisibility? Happy for man, however, we have the assurance that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are saved, and that proves Adam and Eve were, and that all their posterity must inevitably be so too—for "the soul is indivisible." Truly the Wesleyan has helped our opponents to a short and certain route to universal salvation. Can you get out of that dilemma, Br. Wesleyan, without abandoning your theory? The Examiner is open for your answer, and we will show you how we can equal you in "courtesy."

We see Br. Lee's difficulty. It all grows out of the assumption that the soul is an entity—a real being or existence—and not an attribute. The soul of man is an attribute of man, an inherent quality, that which pertains to man as man, as an organism. To use one of Br. Lee's own expressions, "The soul, whose very existence is thought." Never did a theologian better define the soul than he has done, fatal as it is to his entire theory, which he has labored to sustain in "22" articles in the True Wesleyan.

The question between the Wesleyan and its "exchange" stands thus: Are the souls [thoughts] of men, or of infants, a new creation of God, or are they propagated by generation from father to child?

According to Br. Lee, (see last Examiner) the soul is a "living consciousness," and "is known to exist only from its thoughts," now, how little "living consciousness" does an "infant" manifest? and as the soul "is known to exist only from its thoughts," how will Br. Lee prove that "infants" have any souls at all? Does he know anything of their thoughts? He has said that "animals do not think;" that what appears to be the result of thought in them is only instinct. There are very few animals but what are quite equal in this respect to infants just born. After all, then, Br. Wesleyan, may it not be, according to your theory, that infants have no souls at all? So that you and your exchange may both be wrong.

The matter now seems to stand thus:—

The soul is thought, and can be known only by its thoughts:

But the infant is not known to think:

Therefore, the infant has no soul, so far as known. Is this position true? And if not, how will our Br. Wesleyan disprove it, without abandoning some of his main arguments? Again, we say, the Examiner is open for Br. Lee's answer, with this proviso, viz., if we can possibly get funds to continue our paper. Now is a chance to prove our generosity.

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER, 1849.

ENDLESS LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

"He that hath the Son hath life: he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5: 12.

BIBLE EXAMINER.—The present number of our paper has been delayed from two causes; first, absence of funds; second, our own absence from the city. Since our last we have visited New-England, and conversed with numbers of our friends, all of whom express the desire that we should continue to issue the Examiner; and are unanimous that the subscription price ought to be increased to one dollar per year; they assure us they will cheerfully pay that sum. Several persons have pledged themselves to be responsible for subscribers to the amount of the following sums for the coming year; viz:—

Adam Warthman, Philadelphia,	$15.00
Jacob Johnson, Millville, N. J.,	10.00
P. Dickinson, Boston, Mass.,	10.00
R. E. Ladd, Springfield, Mass.,	25.00

Br. Wm. Swinbue, Patterson N. J., writes, that we may calculate upon six or eight subscribers there for next year, where there were only four the present. Here is a good and encouraging beginning. Let us now hear from all our friends at once; because, we wish to be able to determine how many papers we shall print monthly before we commence the new volume. To print more than are called for is a loss to us, and not printing enough we shall fail to supply new subscribers. Cannot our friends say at once for how many dollars they will be responsible during the coming year? They need not remit to us only as they obtain subscribers, but let us know how much we may certainly depend upon from you to help us through the next volume. A monthly issue is all we can promise at present. We have no funds on hand for the November and December numbers of the Examiner, yet we shall issue them during those months in full faith that the expense will be met.

THE TERMS of the Examiner hereafter will be one dollar per year. For five dollars six copies will be given; and for ten dollars thirteen. Having made this arrangement it is thought advisable to withdraw the offer of a "premium" made in the August number. The back numbers for 1848 and '49 will be furnished at the same price as heretofore. All communications and remittances relating to the Examiner should be directed "Geo. Storrs, Philadelphia, Pa."

THE NEW HYMN BOOK.—We invite the attention of our friends to this work. We believe it to be at least equal to any other: modesty perhaps forbids us to say more; but, we should be glad to have it compared in the matter it contains and its neatness of execution with any other. It is free from sectarianism, and we believe can be used by "all christians." It contains 205 choice Psalms and Hymns, selected, but altered and abridged, of such character, we think, as are fitting to be sung in public assemblies. Lighter hymns may be used at other times; and a plenty such can be found in every place without our contributing to multiply them. Several congregations besides ours in Philadelphia have procured our "Christian Psalmody." For price see last page.

MORE ENCOURAGEMENT.

FROM BR. W. M. SWINBUE.

PATTERSON, Sept. 10, 1849.

BR. STORRS.—Enclosed you will find $2 from Br. Isaac Van Blarcom and myself, to be appropriated for the continuance of the Bible Examiner, to aid you through the present year. We think your valuable paper is worth one dollar a year, and we would prefer giving $2 per annum if the paper could be issued weekly or semi-monthly. We think some six or eight subscribers could be obtained here another year, at $1 monthly or $2 published oftener. Your article in the last number, on the "signs of the times" was rich, and well worth attention. We should like to hear more on the same subject. My own opinion is, that the sons of Judah will not wait for the land of their fathers until after the first resurrection. I feel fully satisfied that the battle of the great day has already commenced.

FROM EDWARD TURNER.

BLACKWOODTOWN, N. J., Sept. 21, 1849.

MR. STORRS:—Dear Sir.—Enclosed I send you $1 to be added to what I paid for the 'Examiner' the present year, being satisfied all the while you were publishing too low by one half or more. I should be sorry not to have the pleasure of reading the 'Examiner,' at even four times its present cost, and think a large majority of your subscribers would be of the same opinion.

I, therefore, would suggest, that you should at once make an estimate of the cost for publishing the 'Examiner,' together with a sufficient sum to pay all labor, expenses, &c. Then make a division of the deficiency amongst your subscribers, and I think there would not be one who would be dissatisfied with the amount extra they would have to pay, and would most gladly do so, rather than have the paper discontinued.

IMMORTALITY.

A REVIEW OF REV. LUTHER LEE.

This work is now being stereotyped, and will make about 120 pages. The subject of immortality is philosophically and scripturally discussed. The work discusses the immortality of the soul, the consciousness of the dead, and the destiny of the wicked. It will be ready for delivery about the first of November, at 25 cts. per copy, or five copies for a dollar in paper covers, and mailable. About one half the matter has appeared in the "Bible Examiner," but the remainder will not be published in the paper as that course would very much delay the appearance of the book. Persons desiring the work will please address their orders immediately to JOHN T. WALSH, 63 Ogden street, Philadelphia, Pa.

J. T. W.

ALBANY AND UTICA, N. Y.—The Editor of the Examiner designs to spend Lord's day, the 21st inst., in Albany, and remain there till the latter part of that week; then go to Utica to spend Lord's day, the 28th, and continue there a few days. He will be glad to meet in either place those who desire to see him.

NOTES ON "ATHANASIA."

No. II.

Mr. Hinton uses Luke 20: 36, "Neither can they die any more," as a positive declaration of the immortality of all men. He makes the question our Lord answers to be one about the "future life," excluding its exclusive application to the resurrection. If so, the text does not prove a resurrection at all on his own principles, elsewhere laid down, that a word cannot have its literal and analogical meaning at the same time. Hence this text is fairly given up by him as proof of the resurrection, the term being used analogically for "future life," [see p. 427.] there may be no resurrection of the dead at all for all this text proves. Again, as the term "die" has an analogical signification, it may be, for all Mr. H. can prove from the text or context, on his theory, used to signify misery, or unhappiness. Then the text means, "Neither can they be unhappy any more;" and as he supposes he has proved its applicability to all men, or all the human race, has he not proved all a universalist could desire? Thus all men shall be possessed of a future life—then they cannot be unhappy any more, "but are as the angels of God in heaven;" Matthew. This expression of Matthew, Mr. H. endeavors to avoid by saying it does not relate to their moral character or holiness; p. 437. If it has no relation to a resemblance in holiness, it has the appearance of excluding wicked angels from the possession of that which these men possess, or there would have been no need to say angels of God in heaven. But Mr. H. says, p. 436, "The point of similarity intended . . . is only that they will 'neither marry nor be given in marriage since they cannot die any more.'" Still we ask—Why contrast good and bad men with the angels in heaven? If all men are included, as Mr. H. contends, irrespective of character, why not all angels be the pattern without selecting the good only?

By Adam came death, by Christ came the resurrection from the dead: hence it follows—if the death of Adam was literal, the resurrection is literal; "not die any more" refers to a like death, and Mr. H. admits die in this text has "the sense of extinction;" p. 479: then the first death must have been "extinction;" for the text plainly has reference to the first death by the words "any more." Further: if resurrection in this text is to be understood only as a "future life," as Mr. H. contends, and the soul does not die at all with the body, then the phrase neither can they die any more is without any obvious sense or force; for the words "any more" import that those of whom they are spoken had died once; but according to Mr. H., their souls had not died at all. Then these words are a redundance; and to prove Mr. H.'s view should have been omitted. But if they had been, it would still make the expression quite useless; for, it might as well be said of men in this state they CANNOT DIE, as the future; for death cannot touch the soul now according to his theory. There would have been much more force in the words, if Mr. H. is correct in his theory, to have predicated that future existence itself upon the deathless nature of the soul now; but as our Lord did base his argument for a future life on resurrection, as is evident from his adding the words "any more" to the expression, we are safe in concluding that Mr. H.'s exposition of the text is erroneous. Nor will Mr. H.'s definition of death help him here. Let us look at it. "Death," he says, "in its strict and primary import, signifies nothing more than that condition of an organized substance in which the organic functions have ceased;" p. 38. This then cannot be the death of which our Lord speaks, if Mr. H.'s theory be the true one, for the soul is necessarily spoken of according to him; and yet he admits that our Lord uses the term die, in this text in "the sense of extinction." Yet, he says, p. 448-9, "A dead man" is "a man in whom the functions of the animal organization are no longer performed . . . but the man still exists . . . nothing has occurred but the stoppage of certain organic functions, entailing a change in the condition, or mode of existence, of the being concerned. This is death," he adds. Such a death surely, Mr. H. will not pretend our Lord spoke of if he was talking of the future life before the resurrection, as he maintains; and yet it is most evident our Lord speaks of a like death to one previously experienced, when he adds the words "any more." Let us take still another amplification of the meaning of death. Mr. H. says, "In the case of man, the cessation of the animal functions terminates his connection with this world, because it reduces him to a mode of existence to which this world is not adapted; but it involves no cessation of existence in either body or soul;" p. 479. Such a death as this then our Lord did not speak of Lk. 20: 36; for Mr. H. has admitted that the term "die," there, is used in "the sense of extinction." In Mr. H.'s expression that the "cessation of the animal functions" in death "involves no cessation of existence in either body or soul," he makes an admission which will put him to the proof that the soul does not become equally unconscious as the body. Thus the body exists, though the animal functions have ceased: the soul also exists, but where is the evidence of its consciousness?

Again, Mr. H. says, "Death is a change in the mode of human existence, affected by the cessation of the organic functions, but one not interrupting the conscious being of the individual;" p. 136. Then we remark once more, that our Lord could not have been speaking of the future state prior to the resurrection, Lk. 20: 36, when he said "Neither can they die any more;" because, if the soul has any organism, it has not died once, if Mr. H.'s theory be true; hence, the expression "neither can they die any more" is inapplicable to the soul; therefore our Lord was not speaking of a "future state" prior to the resurrection. If Mr. H. chooses to take the ground that the soul has no organism, it does not help the matter; for that which has no organism is without beginning—is eternal—uncreated; consequently cannot be spoken of as though it was not "any more" subject to death, because it never did die, never was subject to death; and hence it would be useless to say neither can it die any more. Thus, whatever view we take of the subject, we are irresistibly led to the conclusion that our Lord spoke of the dead subsequently to the resurrection, and not prior to it; and therefore our friend Mr. Hinton loses all countenance from this text, that the dead are conscious, though they "exist"—and we readily grant that both soul and body exist after death—and he also fails to establish that all men will live for ever; or, to use his borrowed pagan sentiment, he has failed to prove that "Those who die are immortal, since they will not die any more." From this sentiment we appeal to the Scriptures, and especially to Luke 20, that it is the children of God, in the restricted sense of the phrase, and they only—and that after the resurrection—that cannot die any more, and therefore are immortal. For God calls himself "the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob," as quoted by our Lord, Lk. 20: 37, we apprehend, in the same sense that Paul uses it when speaking of the faith of ancient worthies, Heb. 11: 16, and says—"Wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them a city." In this connection Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are specially mentioned, and Paul evidently refers to the same passage in Moses' writings as does our Lord in Lk. 20. Here is certain evidence from Paul that God called himself the God of these patriarchs in special reference to their faith and obedience. Did not our Lord assert the same truth? If so, the point is settled that he did not speak of all men. Luke 20.

Mr. Hinton says, p. 425-6, "The question framed by the Sadducees must, in all propriety, be held to relate generally to the subject of a future life, rather than the fact of the resurrection of the body." And he adds—"This view is not at all inconsistent with either the etymology or the use of the term anastasis, which, when it relates to a future state, is by our translators uniformly, but sometimes unhappily, rendered resurrection."

We cheerfully admit that "our translators" have "unhappily, uniformly rendered anastasis resurrection." But "unhappily" for whom? Why, of course, for all who hold that "soul and body both exist" after death, and that the soul has a conscious existence. Truly our translators have done an unhappy thing for them; and left them no ground for the pagan notion before spoken of, that, "Those who die are immortal, since they will not die any more." That "the question framed by the Sadducees must be held to relate to the subject of a future life" BY A RESURRECTION from the dead, we trust is now sufficiently manifest; yet, lastly, we call attention to the fact that the question of the Sadducees expressly binds down the "future life" about which they inquired to the resurrection state. The question is thus stated by Mark 12: 23. "In the resurrection, therefore, when they shall rise, whose wife shall she be of them?" Now, if Mr. Hinton's theory be correct, this language certainly does not favor it; and of this it seems he must have been aware, as he takes no notice of it.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES—NO. III.

"THE BATTLE OF THAT GREAT DAY OF GOD ALMIGHTY."

It will be our object in this article to bring together the points in Revelation relating to that battle, with some remarks upon the events introduced. The first place where it is alluded to is in chap. 11, under the sounding of the seventh trumpet. That trumpet in our opinion commenced about 1789, at that convulsion in France which was followed by the career of Napoleon Bonaparte, and has continued to the present time. It contained the seven last plagues, which constituted it a "woe" trumpet. The last verse of the 11th chapter has these words, under this trumpet—"The temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament: and there were lightnings, and voices and thunderings, and an earthquake, and a great hail." This subject though interrupted by the three following chapters, is resumed distinctly in the 15th chapter 5th verse, in these words, which show the connection.—"I looked, and behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened." Then the seven angels are seen coming "out of the temple, having the seven last plagues," &c. These plagues were to "fill up the wrath of God" on the anti-christian powers; or, to "destroy them which destroy [corrupt] the earth," or land: that is, the inhabitants of those countries where the anti-christian powers, now to be destroyed, had carried on their abominations. Under the seventh trumpet, and during the time of the pouring out of the seven vials, "the nations were angry." This we regard as the first intimation of the battle of the great day. The next direct presentation of it is in chapter 16: 13—16, or the work of the unclean spirits which go forth to gather the kings of the earth to the battle; and it is said they are gathered together to a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon. Here we may as well remark on the place before we pass to the other connecting points in the prophecy.

"Armageddon"—the mountain of Mageddon; or Mageddo, a city situated in a great plain at the foot of mount Carmel. Here king Josiah was slain in battle, (see 2 Chron. 35: 22—25;) here Barak and Deborah overcame Sisera and his great army, (Judges 5: 19.) It was a noted place for scenes of carnage; and hence is used, Rev. 16, symbolically for the place of the battle of that great day of God Almighty. Europe and western Asia have been the places where the blood of Jews and Christians has been shed like water. Europe especially has been the Papal slaughter-house. Europe then is the place symbolized by Armageddon—that is the valley of slaughter and judgment.

Having now connected two points concerning this battle, as presented in chapters 11 and 16, we are again interrupted by a view of the judgment of the great whore on the scarlet colored beast; but in that description, chap. 17, we are once more presented with some of the elements that go to make up the army of anti-Christ; viz., The ten horns—or kingdoms under Papal influence—which give their power and strength unto the beast, or papal civil power for a time; "These," all combined, "shall make war on the Lamb," &c., v. 14. Then our direct view of the battle is again interrupted by a presentation in a separate form of the judgment of Babylon, or the great whore, and with the joy that arises to the holy ones at her fall. Passing all this we come once more to an open view of the gathering and battle field with its result.

The scene opens at chap. 19: 11, and continues to chap. 20: 3. The whole is a symbolical representation. Let none forget this fact. From verse 11 to 15, is a representation of "The Word of God;" or, in other words, Christ. We have in a previous article expressed the belief that the armies opposed to Christ do not actually see him, or know that they are really fighting against him. Here we call attention again to chapter 16, where it is expressly said—"Behold I come as a thief." Come to what? Evidently, to the battle of that great day. Look at that text again in its connection. A description is given of the working of the unclean spirits, preparing the kings of the earth for that conflict. At this point the language, "behold I come as a thief," &c. is uttered; showing that it is something connected with the battle, and is accompanied by a caution to saints not to be drawn into the corrupting influences which will be everywhere in operation to turn off men's minds from a constant preparation for the final result. They are to keep their garments—keep far removed from the war spirit that will go forth from nation to nation, so that whoever shall allow themselves to fall into its current will become defiled and be stripped of those garments of meekness which characterize a christian; and thus stripped, his shame will appear; because he will be manifested to be destitute of the peaceable spirit of Christ, and thus demonstrated not to belong to him. "Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments" pure from the spirit of war, and the love of the world.

We now ask, how does a thief come? Not openly, but secretly; unseen and unsuspected by those who are to be the victims visited. So Christ will come to that battle, and cause these angry nations to be gathered to the terrible conflict which is to result in their overthrow and ruin. "In righteousness does he judge and make war." These anti-Christian powers have "made war on the saints" and on the truth for centuries; and done it in a most unrighteous manner: but the Lamb, now "King of kings," maketh war on them in righteousness, and in just judgment for their violence to his truth and his people. He now "treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God;" a full description of which had been prophesied of in Isa. 63: 1 to 6, and now the time has come; but Christ comes to it as a thief—unseen—unknown by his enemies, while they will be made the instruments one upon another of executing the wrath. We may illustrate this secret presence of Christ in this battle by the case recorded in 2 Kings, 6: 15—17. The king of Syria had sent an army to seize Elisha the prophet. They came, "horses and chariots, and a great host, by night and encompassed the city about." And when the servant of the man of God was risen early, and gone forth, behold, an host compassed the city, both with horses and chariots: and his servant said unto him, alas, my master! how shall we do? And he answered, fear not; for they that be with us are more than they that be with them. And Elisha prayed, and said, Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man: and he saw, and behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha."

Here we see a great army from heaven, "even more for" Elisha than they were against him; but they were there "as a thief"—invisible to the opposing army—exerting an invincible power which made the victory sure. Thus we apprehend it will be in the battle of that great day. Christ, with "the armies of heaven" will be there, though invisible; but the war so far as physical power is brought into the conflict, will be that of the hand of every man "against his neighbor;" or, one nation will be the instrument in executing judgment against another; and so in turn destroying each other. The scenery of calling the fowls of heaven to "the supper of the great God" indicates the greatness of the slaughter of that awful period. Then the fact is stated of the actual gathering of the kings of the earth and their armies to make war against Christ and his army. Next the "beast was taken;" by which we understand the scarlet colored beast, which we regard also as the "image to the beast which had the wound by the sword," chap. 13; being as we have said in a previous article, only another aspect of the same beast; or, the aspect given it a short time before it goes "into perdition;" and with him is taken "the false prophet which wrought miracles" or wonders—"before"—or in the presence of—the beast.

Before proceeding, it will be necessary to inquire, what power is symbolized by the false prophet? A false prophet is one who speaks in the name of the Lord when God has not commissioned him; see Deut. 18: 20-22. The character of a false prophet is accurately described in Acts 13th chap., in the case of "Elymas the sorcerer." He is "full of all subtlety"—withstands the truth—seeks to turn men from the truth—full of all mischief—an enemy to all righteousness—a perverter of the right ways of the Lord, consequently a "child of the devil." See Acts 13: 6—10. This power corresponds well to the "two horned beast," Rev. 13: 11—18. We regard this two horned beast and the false prophet as identically the same power under two aspects. They both wrought miracles or wonders, before the beast. We are of the opinion that the Pope and Cardinals in the exercise of civil power are, or constitute the beast with its two horns like a lamb—a mild, Christ-like power, by profession, but speaking with its mouth like a dragon. The time was when the clergy generally had a voice in the choice of the Popes; and the emperors confirmed the choice; but some where in the twelfth or thirteenth centuries the Cardinals assumed the sole power to elect and constitute the Pope, and have held that power to the present time, or over 600 years, how near 666 we do not know. This dragon-lamb—the Pope and Cardinal beast, has "exercised all the power of the beast before him;" and has had all the characteristics of the false prophet described Acts 13th. This power, we think, is the false prophet taken with the beast, in "the battle of that great day of God Almighty;" and these both are cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone, "corresponding with" "eating her flesh and burning her with fire," chap. 17, and denotes their utter and irrevocable destruction, so that they shall never recover; it is a final overthrow of that anti-Christian power with all its abominable delusions and superstitions; and then it follows that "the remnant," viz. "the kings of the earth," &c., "were slain with the sword," &c. These were made instruments, first, through hatred to the whore, of destroying her with all her appendages, and then are the sword or agents in one another's destruction, till both the Papal power is rained, and those nations overthrown, and their governments destroyed, who had been corrupted by her sorceries and abominations.

Having thus briefly noticed the fate of some of the powers engaged in the battle of that day, we must not pass by an other power concerned in the same conflict. This is liable to be done by separating the 19th and 20th chapters, which should be regarded as inseparable. The dragon power is most assuredly engaged in that war, though not mentioned in chap. 19; yet the 16th chap. clearly shows the dragon as a principal actor in the scenes of that day. It was out of his mouth one of the unclean spirits came that was to gather to the battle. We may depend, therefore, that that power will not be overlooked. The account of the battle in Rev. 19th should be read to the close of the 3d verse of the 20th chap. without interruption; thus we shall get the fate of all the powers engaged in the conflict.

We are now, then, to inquire what power is symbolized by the dragon; after which we will notice its fate. In introducing this power, chap. 20, it is called "The Dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil and Satan." The whole description here we consider symbolical; and not designed at all to represent a personal being usually denominated "the devil." This remark, however, is not to be construed into a denial of the existence of such a personal being: we only say, that in this text he is not the power spoken of. Dr. Eadie, in his Biblical Cyclopaedia, a new English work, on the word "Dragon," says: "In the Apocalypse it seems to be a symbol of the dark, malignant spirit of Evil, either in himself or in those human influences, which he inspires or employs. On the "serpent," the same author remarks: "In Egypt and other nations the serpent was a common symbol of power. Idolators regarded it as a personification of all evil." Kierke, in his "Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature," another English work of great merit and reputation, says: "They anciently represented all great destructive agents under the form of a Dragon, or monster serpent." He further remarks that there were temples built to Dragons, some of which were several miles in length, and built in a serpentine form.

As a sign of power, Moses seems to have used it when sent to Pharaoh, see Exodus 7: 2, where the Lord told Moses his rod should become a serpent—a dragon—before Pharaoh. The word here translated serpent is the same that is rendered dragon, Isa. 27: 1. It was the sign of Moses' power, received from God, to deliver Israel. The words devil and satan are the Greek and Hebrew words expressing the same thing; and literally signify "adversary," leaving the connection to determine what particular adversary is spoken of. The expression, "the dragon that old serpent, which is the devil and satan," therefore, signifies a dark, malignant power, which is to act a prominent part in the transactions of "that great day of God Almighty," and which is to be the last disposed of in the conflict, and is not to be utterly destroyed at that time, but reserved for another period, hereafter to be spoken of. The question now returns—What power is it? We have said that the symbols by which it is represented only signify a malignant and destructive power. We now add that we are not to suppose, because we find these symbols employed in regard to one destructive power, that that is the power always intended. If this were the case, we should have to confine its application wholly to the Imperial power of Egypt; for, in Ezekiel 29, the Lord expressly calls Pharaoh king of Egypt, the great dragon. This passage goes to confirm the position that it is a symbol to denote an extraordinarily malignant or destructive power, and a power too that has specially been an oppressor of Jacob's posterity. Such was the Imperial power of Egypt; such was the Imperial power of Rome, and hence symbolized by a dragon, Rev. 12th; but in Rev. 10th and 20th we have come to a period where the symbol cannot apply to Rome Imperial, nor to Rome Papal; the latter is described by other symbols, and the former had passed away. The Dragon, then, in chapters 16 and 20 is another power. To find this power, we shall again have to revert to the prophecies of the old Testament; we shall there find more in detail, a description of a part of this same battle of the great day of God. We turn then to Ezekiel 38 and 39. Let us examine some of the powers here introduced.

The 38th chapter commences thus—"Son of man, set thy face against Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of [Rosh] Meshech and Tubal." We have inserted "Rosh" on the authority of the Septuagint. The 6th verse speaks of "Gomer, and all his bands; the house of Togarmah of the north quarters," &c. These powers are among those that are found in the conflict described in that prophecy. These are all descendants of Japheth, as may be learned from Genesis 10: 1-5.

They peopled Asia Minor and nearly all Europe, called "The Isle of the Gentiles," in the time of Moses: see Gen. 10: 5. "Gog," then, is to be found some where in Europe, and the Septuagint gives us the clue to the power intended, viz. "Rosh," or Russia. Gog was in ancient times the name of the king of the northern country, as Pharaoh was the common name of the kings of Egypt. Hence Gog is the name of a Dynasty of kings or emperors; and, if the Septuagint can be relied upon, it seems it is the Russian Dynasty. Russia has been a great oppressor of the Jews, and is still their greatest scourge; and, in this respect, is entitled to the appellation of "the great Dragon." Whether that power is literally to invade the land of Israel, as indicated, Ezek. 38 and 39, or whether the scenery is laid there only, because the legal inheritors of that land are the subjects of Gog's malignant operations, we need not now decide—time will soon determine that point—but that Gog, the chief prince of Rosh, or Russia, is one of the most active, and malignant powers engaged in the terrible conflict immediately to precede the establishment of the reign of Christ on the throne of his father David, is clearly evident. It is not our design now to give an exposition of this prophecy in Ezekiel, but only to introduce it so far as to identify the power with that denominated the Dragon, Rev. 16 and 20. In further confirmation of this view, we have in Rev. 20, the fact that when this power is loosed at the end of the 1000 years, the same powers are introduced into the scene as in Ezekiel, viz. "Gog and Magog." We are led, then, to the conclusion that the Dynasty of Russian Emperors is symbolized by "the Dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil and satan." The Russian Imperial power began to assume its present importance and form under Peter the Great, in the commencement of the last century. It has steadily marched on to its present greatness, and its dark, malignant character; and most unquestionably has a part to act in the battle of the great day of God Almighty, which is not to be passed over under the general name of "the kings of the earth,"—tes gees—of the land, or Roman Catholic earth, or territory, where that Romish power had held sway. Russia is not, and never was, of that land; but is, and always has been, a separate and distinct power, and also is of the Greek religion, which is hostile to the Papal authority and religion. The difference between the two religious systems may be seen by consulting the "Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge," but we have not space to note it now.

If we are correct, then, in fixing upon the Russian Imperial power as the Dragon power, we are now prepared to contemplate its fate. The other powers, let it be remembered, are utterly destroyed in the battle; and the symbols employed denote a destruction from which there is no revival—their destruction as organized powers is final. Not so with the Dragon power; and this forms a sufficient reason for introducing its fate in a distant scene as found at the commencement of chap. 20. An angel is represented as coming down from heaven. By this expression, however, we are to understand nothing more than that the angel is a symbol of the agency that God shall choose to employ in accomplishing the work to be done. It is quite useless to speculate as to what agency precisely it is, that is symbolized by the angel, or that God will employ—time alone can certainly determine that. This power is represented as being commissioned to bind and imprison the dragon—that is, to cut off and curtail his power so that it can perform no organised work of evil for a specified period: but the dragon is not to be destroyed now as the other powers are; and it will have a revival, after which comes its final doom.

The work now to be accomplished is represented by symbols easy to be understood. The dragon is bound—i. e. deprived of all his power; then he is shut up; i. e. kept securely: in the “bottomless pit”—abussos. This Greek word occurs only twice out of Revelation, and seven times in that book. It may be proper here to inquire as to the meaning of it. One thing is certain, it never means hell, in the popular sense of that term. The first place where it occurs is in Lk. 8: 31; and is there translated “the deep.” Dr. Eadie, on this word, in his Cyclopedia, says—“Rendered in our version sometimes DEEP, and uniformly BOTTOMLESS PIT, either by itself or in connection with another term, in the book of Revelation. A deep without a bottom—a very deep pit, referring often to that vast body of water which in Jewish opinion was laid up in some cavernous receptacle within the earth. It refers sometimes to the dark sepulchres of the east, which, hewn out in the rock, and descending far beneath the surface, formed a kind of under world. In the Apocalypse, it symbolises the abode and the doom of those powers which are hostile to Christ and his Church.”

This definition may help us in further examining this point. In Rom. 10: 7, Paul uses the word thus, in speaking of our Lord—“Who shall descend into the deep?”—abussos? “That is,” says the apostle, “to bring up Christ again from the dead.” Here the word is used for the sepulchre—the tomb—the state of the dead. The other places where it occurs are in Rev. 9: 1, 2, 11; and 11: 17: and 17: 8; and 20: 1, 2. In the last place, which we are at this time considering, it is used to indicate, that as in a state of death a man is deprived of all power to accomplish anything, so the Dragon should be placed in such circumstances that he can accomplish nothing against those who had previously suffered from his malignity; and the world, under the reign of Christ and his associates in government, will remain unmolested till the end of the period specified; after which the Dragon power will revive for a short period, and then share the same fate that the beast and false prophet had done at the battle of the great day: which is symbolized by being cast into the lake of fire, and being tormented day and night for ever and ever; which language implies no more than the awful nature of the destruction of that power, and the perpetuity of its overthrow. Whether there be a personal devil, yea or nay, this text and context has nothing to do with his final destiny. It is an anti-Christian organism, national in its character, whose fate is here brought to view. In another article we may say more of the signs that “the battle of that great day of God Almighty” is now going on.

RESPONSE TO B. B. JACKMAN.

BR. STORRS.—I noticed in the Examiner of July an answer from B. B. Jackman to my question in the number for May. As it is clearly seen that he has failed to prove when and how Christ is to accomplish the great object of his coming into the world, that is to destroy the devil and his works, I consider the question unanswered.

Friend Jackman, according to his article, believes that devils and sinners, or they that are filthy, will exist in a conscious state as long as God exists. Now he will not deny but that as long as these beings exist, the works of the devil remain also. He may say that the devil would be destroyed if confined. But, would that destroy his works while sinners were eternally sinning? Certainly not. John the Baptist speaks thus concerning the workers of iniquity, Mat. 3: 12, “Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor and gather his wheat into his garner, but the chaff (filth) he will burn up with unquenchable fire.” And St. John says, 1 John 3: 8, “For this cause the Son of God was made manifest that he might destroy the works of the devil.”

He also speaks of the meaning of the words eternal and everlasting, and seems to believe that they are to be understood strictly literal throughout the bible; but if he will turn to Gen. 17: 8, and chap. 49: 26, he will find there, and in other places, that they are applied to things that have an end: and to make it still plainer to his mind you will please send him a copy of your Six Sermons, and charge to my account; which I think he will gladly and with much profit peruse. Yours for the truth,

E. W. KNIGHT.

ON THE COMING OF THE LORD.—Too little, alas! are we affected by the anticipation of the glorious appearing of our Redeemer and of our participation in that glory. Where is the praise, the gratitude, the joy, the holiness, that this anticipation ought to inspire?

Where the grateful praise to our Father for his wondrous love to sinners who deserved everlasting destruction, in making us “joint-heirs” with his best beloved Son to such an inheritance? Expecting soon the thrilling welcome to enter through the gates into the city, how should the incense of praise to the Rock of our Salvation ascend perpetually from the altar of our hearts! Hoping so soon to enter into the joy of our Lord; to see him as he is and be like him forever; why are our acknowledgements of obligation to him who has loved us and given himself for us, so cold and infrequent?

Where is the joy which the assurance of awaking from the dust, in the perfect image of our Saviour, to reign with him in the everlasting kingdom, is so well adapted to excite? Do not the felicities of the Holy City eclipse all the glory of this present world? Why then are we so much affected by the things which are seen and temporal and so little enraptured by those which are eternal? Can we not reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us? Why then are we so cast down in the hour of affliction and adversity? Why do we not rejoice in tribulation also?

Where is the holiness; the victory over the carnal influences of this world, and the powerful examples of holy living becoming the candidates for immortality in the presence of God and the Lamb? “What manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness” who expect soon to inhabit the city where nothing that defileth can enter?

H. GREW.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST.

Christ's cross is the sweetest burden that ever I bare; it is such a burden as wings are to a bird, or sails to a ship, to carry me forward to my harbor.

Hold fast Christ, but take his cross and himself cheerfully; Christ and his cross are not separable in this life, however they part at Heaven's door.

To be crucified to the world is not so highly accounted of by us as it should be; how heavenly a thing it is to be deaf and dead to this world's sweetest music!

Make others to see Christ in you, moving, doing, speaking and thinking; your actions will speak of him, if he be in you.

Go where you will, your soul will find no rest but in Christ's bosom: Inquire for him, come to him, and rest you on Christ the Son of God; I sought him, and I found in him all I can wish of want.

Lose not sight of Christ in this cloudy and dark day; learn not from the world to serve Christ, but ask himself the way; the world is a false copy, and a deceitful guide to follow.

All come not home at night who suppose they have set their faces heaven-ward: it is a woful thing to die, and miss heaven; how many a mere professor's candle is blown out, and never lighted again. Many, now, take Christ by-guess; therefore, I say, be sure you take Christ himself; his sweet working in the soul will not lie, it will soon tell whether it be Christ indeed whom you have met with.

The day of the Lord is at hand, when all men shall appear as they are: there shall be no borrowed colors in that day; men borrow the lustre of Christianity, but how many counterfeit masks will be burned in the day of God.

I wish our thoughts were, more frequently than they are, upon our country! heaven caseth a sweet perfume afar off to those who have spiritual senses.

Go on in the strength of the Lord, and put Christ's love to the trial, and put upon it burdens, and then it will appear love indeed; we employ not his love, and therefore we know it not.

More I can neither wish, nor pray, nor desire for you than Christ, singled and chosen out from all things, even though wearing a crown of thorns. I am sure the saints are at best but strangers to the weight and worth of the incomparable excellence of Christ. We know not half of what we love when we love Christ.

I would not have believed that there is so much in Jesus as there is. It is little to see him in a book; but to draw nigh to Christ is another thing.

That Christ and a sinner should be one, and share heaven between them, is the wonder of salvation; what more could love do?—Rutherford's Letters.

SINNERS AND THE ATONEMENT.

We find the sermon preached by Rev. B. I. Lane, of Cambridge, before the Massachusetts Conference of Baptist Mini-ters, in the Evangelical preacher. It deserves well the place it there occupies. Though we gave at the time an outline of this discourse, the following extract on pointing sinners to the atonement, will interest the reader.—Reflector.

Threatening may awaken fear and force submission, but it cannot beget love—it cannot reconcile the heart to that from which it has been estranged.

It is not in its nature to do so. We repeat, that we are not speaking against alarming the sinner, and pointing him to the coming wrath. It is important that we do so. The doctrine of the resurrection from the dead, and the final judgment, together with other great truths, must be often and carefully insisted upon. But we must go further. And, the point on which we are insisting, does not, it appears to us, hold that prominent place in the ministry of most preachers, that it does in the Bible. It may be coldly stated, and a few passages of scripture in relation to it indifferently repeated; but it is not earnestly and affectingly dwelt upon in its place. When the sinner stands trembling upon the brink of woe, when he is appalled in view of the fearful miseries that await the wicked, it is not the time to point him to Sinai's lightning, or to a burning hell; but, the love and compassion of God in the atonement should be exhibited, as the arm of God stretched over the pit of ruin to catch the helpless penitent. This is the top-stone of the spiritual temple, 'brought forth with shouting, crying grace! grace unto it!' This truth, clearly stated, understood and embraced, will complete the work of truth, and reconcile the sinner to God. He may be awakened, he may be convicted, but he will not, he cannot be converted—the affections of his heart cannot be won to the love of God by any other means than the melting tenderness of the gospel. 'God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them;' this is the word of reconciliation committed to us. In this word, illustrated and enforced in ten thousand ways, we have the grand instrument of genuine revivals. With this word, you may successfully assail the citadel of the 'strong man armed.'

When, my brethren, everything else fails to change the affections of sinners, and bring them to a cordial love and obedience of the gospel; when the ordinance of reason fails to make an impression; when the weapons of terror fall upon sinners' hearts as pebbles upon the shield of Achilles; when the battery of a coming wrath fails to bring one sinner upon his face, then, in 'burning thought and breathing words,' charge upon them from the humiliation of Bethlehem, the groans of Gethsemane and the deeper agonies of Calvary. Let that 'God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them,' and you shall presently see the mighty effect of it in the inquiry, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?"

LETTERS.

FROM DR. FIELD.

JEFFERSONVILLE, Ind., Sept. 6, 1849.

BR. STORRS:—I have had a desire for some time to hear from you, but have had so little time for writing, that I have hitherto neglected to open a correspondence with you. If you are publishing a paper I wish to become a subscriber, and would be glad to have one of your books containing your Six Sermons, and some small essays on immortality.

Would it be possible to induce you to come west on a missionary tour, and spend some time with me? I am exceedingly anxious to have the aid and co-operation of brethren who hold my views. Perhaps you know that I have been forced to constitute a new church here, on free and independent principles, which has been in existence now two years, and is in a prosperous condition. We number about one hundred. What say you to a tour West? If you cannot come, can you send a young man of good talents and character, to aid me in my labors? I need assistance very much. A preacher or two West, of bold and persevering character, could be sustained.

Yours, in the hope of immortality,
N. FIELD.

If the Lord permit, we will endeavor to visit you and others, in the West, before many months. It has been on our mind to do so, if health and pecuniary circumstances would allow. We hope to answer the calls of old friends there before long.—
Ed. Ex.

FROM BR. WILLIAM ONGLEY.

TOWN OF THORALD, C. W. Sept. 22, 1849.

DEAR BR. STORRS:—My wife joins with me in love to you and your family, praying the God of all grace to keep and preserve you all in perfect peace and blameless, unto his coming kingdom; we hope you will be made a blessing in preaching the word to the people in these last days. The subject of Life and Death, it seems to me, is the last truth to stir up the people; get them to see this, and they are ready to hear on the second advent of our Lord, and other Bible truths. It appears to me it was the first preached to Adam in the garden, by God himself, and it will be the last, connected with other truths. Myself and wife are holding meetings in Canada West, for the present, and are expecting our King before 1850 runs out. I suppose you think we shall be disappointed; if we should, we will continue to wait, but with earnest expectation, and would say come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly. Amen.

I remain yours, waiting for eternal life, when Jesus comes, to change these mortal bodies, and make them like unto his most glorious body.

FROM BR. ANSON WALKER.

NEW YORK, Oct. 1849.

BR. STORRS:—I read the welcome Examiner with interest and profit; and was pained to learn that there was any probability that it might be discontinued. I need not express my satisfaction as to its spirit, and the "exceeding great and precious promises" and blessings it is bringing to light from the darkness of sectarianism, together with the fearless and able manner they are set forth and defended; and it must, I think, carry conviction to every unprejudiced mind who will carefully read it. What but the spreading power and force of truth, the glory and consistency of the doctrines advocated in the Examiner, and their influence on the minds of men, has called out the True Wesleyan into the field against you? Others, less capable than the Editor of the Wesleyan, and more firmly bound in sectarianism, seem unwilling to lend a helping hand to sustain the downward tendency of immortal-soulism, but seem to choose to let it quietly wreck, as the "orthodox" of England have done, by assuming that immortal does not mean "positively shall live forever." From what I see here, I judge that the arguments of the Examiner are too conclusive to allow of many venturing into the field against you, lest they meet the fate of others who have made the trial; for surely the Examiner is conducted with ability enough to merit the attention of wise men.

TRIALS OF THE WORLD.

"This world is full of suffering; along the mournful air

The notes of sad complaining are ringing every where. Love shieldeth not its idols from death's unsparring darts,

And the whole wide earth is teeming with crushed and broken hearts.

Yet were no clouds of sorrow along our pathway driven,

This world would be a Paradise we scarce would change for Heaven.

"This life is full of trial, yet we know that One above Looks ever down upon us with a sympathizing love, And pitieth our infirmities, though others may deride, For the heart hath not a sorrow with which He was not tried.

Oh let us then be patient, be meek and murmur not, Though clouds and gloom and shadows surround our earthly lot;

And when the heart repineth, think of that Holy One Who meekly bore and suffered to win for us a crown.

Then let us place the anchor of our confidence and trust

On the might of the Creator, the Omnipotent and Just,

Whose will we may not question, nor His hidden motives tell,

Yet rest in His assurance that 'He doeth all things well.'"

On the three last named works one-third discount will be made to those who buy to sell again: and we will make a still further discount of twenty per cent. to those who send us twenty dollars, current money, at one time. This offer is designed to enable those who may wish it, to keep a depository of these works, and to cover their expense for transportation. The names of such we will place in the list of depositories, in the Examiner.

We cannot make the "twenty per cent." discount unless our terms are strictly complied with; as we are subjected to an additional charge to our printer if we have credit for his work; and a less sum than $20 would not help us much in obtaining discount with him.

FUTURE STATES.

By REV. REGINALD COURTNEY, A. M.

ON THE INTERMEDIATE STATE.

St. Paul's declaration that "we are come to the New Jerusalem, to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first-born, and to the spirits of just men made perfect," has sometimes been held to indicate an intermediate consciousness. Thus Dr. Watts argues in his "World to Come," "The Gospel or the Christian state brings good men into a nearer union and communion with the heavenly world and the inhabitants thereof, than the Jewish state could do. The inhabitants of this upper world, this heavenly Jerusalem, are here reckoned up: God as the prime Lord or Head; Jesus the Mediator as the King of his Church; the innumerable company of angels as ministers of his kingdom; the general assembly of God's favorites or children, who are called the first-born;—which may perhaps refer in general to all the saints of all ages past, and to come, whose names are written in the Book of Life in heaven; and particularly to the spirits of just men who are departed from this world, and are made perfect in the heavenly state."

"It has been objected," continues Dr. Watts, "that the spirits of the just are not yet made perfect in heaven, because the apostle says, 'These all, &c. the saints of the Old Testament,' having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promises; God having provided some better things for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." Now these had been dead for many generations, yet they received not the promises, nor were made perfect. Thus saith the objection. But the evident meaning is, that they lived and died in the faith of many promises, some of which were to be fulfilled, after their days, here on earth, but were not fulfilled in their lifetime: they did not enjoy Gospel blessings in that perfect manner in which we do, since the Messiah has come, and, by offering himself, 'perfected for ever them that are satisfied.'"

If the sense which Dr. Watts has here given to the word, just men now on earth are as truly "perfected" as those spirits which he imagines to be so in an intermediate state. When it is said that they who are sanctified are "perfected," it is plainly meant that (though they are still required to go on unto a further "perfection,") yet in as far as their redemption depends on, or rather consists in, the shedding of the blood of Christ, it is a work perfectly accomplished. But in general they are said to be "perfected" who have received their "perfect consummation and bliss, both in body and soul, in God's eternal and everlasting glory," who have obtained all that God has promised to bestow. In this sense, as the context proves, the spirits of the just will be found to be perfected, when we, who are now emulating them on earth, are admitted, at the Last Day, into their joyful society. For the promises, which they are not to receive without us, are as yet future; are not to be realised, as Dr. Watts maintains, either on earth, by those who live under the gospel dispensation, or by disembodied spirits in the intermediate state; but by the saints of the old, not without those of the new dispensation, in heaven itself, after the Great Judgement-day. For St. Paul is plainly referring to that rest, (in the heavenly Canaan, the New Jerusalem,) which yet "remaineth for the people of God;" a rest, promised to the Jews, but to them in common with the whole Christian community of believing children of Abraham. In this view he says, shortly after, "Ye have need of patience, that after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." We then who are now living by faith under the Gospel dispensation, have not received the promises, nor are as yet made perfect, nor shall be perfected until Christ comes.

It is indeed abundantly plain that the "promises" spoken of in the epistle to the Hebrews are all to be realized at the resurrection. The thing promised is "a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." And this city does not mean, as Dr. Watts supposes, that Christian Church, or that Gospel dispensation, which was established by the Messiah at his first advent. For they who died in faith, not having received the promises, sought (not merely spiritual privileges such as might be enjoyed in common by just men made perfect in earth, with just men made perfect in heaven, but) emphatically, a "heavenly country." Their hope was "to obtain a happy resurrection;" to enter and enjoy "a kingdom which cannot be moved" after the removal of the present heavens and earth. Here they had not, nor have we, any continuing city; but we are still to seek, even as they sought, one which is "to come."

In the same view said St. Paul, I sacrifice all things, "if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead. Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfected." But he pressed forward, that he might obtain the prize, even that crown of righteousness which the Last Day should bring him.

We are come to the spirits of the just made perfect, and to the other concomitant blessings, in this sense—that we are invited now to realise faith by and hope, as far as we may, the blessedness to be experienced in the future world. Even now we are to act as if in the visible presence of our Judge, and of the myriads of attendant angels; as if the heavenly Jerusalem had already come down from God; as if in the society of all those blessed spirits who shall by regeneration receive their perfect consummation and bliss. In the same sense also are we come to Jesus the Mediator, and to the blood of sprinkling. The benefits of his mediation and atonement are as yet received by us only in part, as far as we may receive them by faith and hope; for we have not yet obtained our promised joint inheritance; our “crown of righteousness” is as yet laid up; our “kingdom that cannot be moved” still awaits the promised shaking of the earth.

It is remarkable that St. Paul mentions both the church of the first-born, and the spirits of the just made perfect. He appears to be viewing the same persons under two conditions, first, as members of the invisible church on earth* in all ages; and secondly, as perfected in heaven. To the former we are already come in part; our communion with the latter is reserved for another world.

“To this end,” says St. Paul, “Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living.” Hence Calvin argues, that the dead must be in a state of consciousness;—“for he cannot be Lord except of those who are in being.” But God is not the God of the dead; and St. Paul’s words point rather to the resurrection. Christ is Lord of the dead, just as He is Lord of Death. He has the keys of Hades and Death, but has not yet unlocked their dark gates, nor disenthralled the souls in bondage to their power. “All power is given unto Him in heaven and earth;” but He has not yet “taken unto Himself His great power and reigned.” We must not judge our brethren, says the apostle; seeing that we are to live and die unto the Lord alone, before whose judgment seat both quick and dead shall stand.

“A testimony against them [who hold the sleep of the soul] is borne,” says Calvin, “in heaven, before God and His angels, by the souls of the martyrs, who with a loud voice cry from under the altar, ‘How long, O Lord, dost Thou not avenge our blood on the inhabitants of the earth. And white robes were given unto them; and it was said unto them that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren that should be killed as they were, were fulfilled.’ What, O slumbering spirits, are white robes to you? Are they cushions on which you may repose in sleep? The white robes suit not sleep. They must needs be awake who are clothed thus. Doubtless the white robes signify the commencement of that glory which Divine Goodness confers on the martyrs, while they await the judgment-day.”

Probably Calvin is perfectly right in this. And these martyrs are the same with “those that came out of great tribulation, and had washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb; and the same as “the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus and for the word of God; * * who sat on thrones, and had judgment given unto them, and lived, and reigned with Christ a thousand years.” And Calvin is probably correct also in his opinion, that St. John “sets forth a twofold resurrection; one of the soul, before judgment, the other when the body is raised.” For it is expressly said that “the souls of them which were beheaded, etc, lived and reigned with Christ;” and that “the rest of the dead” (souls surely?) “lived not until the thousand years were finished.” And what is a resurrection of the soul before judgment, or a soul’s living with Christ while the rest of the dead live not, but a restoration to life and consciousness?

Some have maintained that “the first resurrection” is corporeal: but even admitting this, it cannot be admitted, that when souls are said to live, it is meant that bodies only are restored to life, and that the souls were alive before: and also that, when it is said, “the rest of the dead lived not,” corpses only are intended. But in order to obtain from the above passages a proof of intermediate consciousness, continuing from the time of death, we must further believe that the first resurrection includes all the dead, who die in the Lord: whereas the Scripture speaks of martyrs alone.* They will live, i. e. their souls will live for a thousand years before the rest of the dead are restored to life: but there is no ground for supposing that the souls and bodies of all the redeemed will enjoy a millennial reign; supervening upon an indefinite period of hopeful consciousness. It is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment;—not two protracted states of intermediate life. The martyrs indeed shall be in a state to cry unto God, and receive white robes, for a little season before that judgment on their persecutors; on which, as it appears, the millennial reign of Christ shall ensue. But we need not expand this little season even in their case, much less that of others, into untold thousands of years.

Strange it is, seeing that death and judgment are in Scripture brought so near each other, that there are many who have familiarized their minds to the belief that two states must be passed through, and each of great length, before the deceased Christian encounters the final judgment seat, to “receive the things done in the body, whether they be good or bad.” Many expect to be in great bliss and glory, emancipated from the bondage of the flesh, and with Christ, immediately on their departure from this world; and hope to exchange this wholly spiritual state for a Millennial reign with Christ upon the present earth, before the second resurrection. And this their millennial state, in which the body is, as they suppose, re-united to the soul, is of course expected to confer on them an addition of happiness and glory. But let them consider well, what further bliss they reserve, in their imaginations, for their fourth state, after the judgment, when heaven and earth have passed away. In truth, they practically reserve none: but appropriate to themselves, in their second or third state, every particular form of blessing which God has * Else why does St. Paul say that their names are enrolled in,—or, as it were, booked-for—heaven?

* It has been observed that to those that were slain for the witness of Jesus are added those “which had not worshipped the Beast:” or as many as (οἰκίαις) had not worshipped. But these also are martyrs; for “as many as would not worship the image of the Beast were killed.” Rev. xiii. 15.

promised to confer at, and not before that time when the "blessed of the Father," having been finally judged, "inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world." Nay, in too many instances, they actually, apply to their supposed third state all the magnificent language in which the closing chapters of the Apocalypse describe the new post-millennial heavens and earth! * * *

There yet remains one important passage, which is commonly held to convey the most direct proof, not of consciousness merely, but of peculiar happiness and glory, during the intermediate state. To the believing robber on the cross, who prayed, "Lord, remember me when thou comest in thy kingdom," our Saviour replied, "To-day thou shalt be with me in Paradise." Beyond dispute, the reward promised was not one that might be conferred at the general resurrection; for thus Jesus would merely be remembering the suppliant "when he came in his kingdom;" though in what it actually consisted is less evident. But be it what it may, nothing can be more presumptuous and unwarrantable, than to expect the same reward, or even any reward like it, for all believers in Christ. As well,—nay, less presumptuously—might we expect that all who "walked with God" should be translated with Enoch and Elijah, and never see death. For as far as we can judge, the faith of the penitent robber exceeding theirs; as it exceeded that of the apostles, and probably of every follower of our Lord. When the enemies of Jesus, to all appearance, prevailed, when he submitted to stripes, insults, and finally the most ignominious death, the triumph of the unbelievers was complete; and the last hopes of his followers seem to have faded away. One of them had betrayed him, another repeatedly denied him, the rest forsook him and fled. His enemies exulted in the proof, which, to their minds, his degrading death afforded, that he could not be the anointed of God; saying, If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross and we will believe; that he should save himself was the only way they could imagine of his making good his pretensions. And accordingly one of his fellow sufferers reviled him in the same terms, "If thou be the Son of God, save thyself and us." Then it was that the other malefactor not only rebuked his companion, and bore testimony to the innocence of Jesus, but acknowledged him as a triumphant sovereign about to enter upon his kingdom.

* * His faith stood a trial before which that of all the other disciples was shaken. Having once, on good and sufficient grounds believed on Jesus as the Christ, he remained unshaken in his trust, even at the moment when the enemies of the crucified King were filled with triumph, and his disciples with doubt or despair. * * Whether any of us does actually possess faith equal with this man can be known only to the All-wise God. But we may be sure that none of us can display equal faith with his, because the circumstances are such as can never occur again. To those therefore, who do not claim for all Christians a faith equal to that of the penitent robber, it must be a matter of comparatively small moment to attempt to determine what is meant, by being with Christ in Paradise.

In all probability however the Paradise intended is the same as is mentioned elsewhere in the New Testament. "To him that overcometh," our Lord declared by St. John, "I will give to eat of the tree of life, that groweth in the midst of the Paradise of God." This is evidently a promise of a reward after the general resurrection, when the redeemed shall be permitted to eat of the precious fruit mentioned in the last chapter of the Apocalypse.

The same place of bias was beheld in vision by St. Paul, who was "caught up into Paradise," and there heard unutterable words. Into the same place the believing robber was probably admitted as soon as Jesus himself entered it. But notwithstanding the weight due to the expression "to-day," it may be questioned whether our Lord entered Paradise before his ascension, or at the earliest, before his resurrection. For was he in the place to which St. Paul was "caught up,"—in a region belonging to those new heavens which are eventually to "come down from God,"—at the very time of his descent into Hades? Was he,—was his human soul,—at once above earth and below it, of whom St. Paul says that he who ascended "first descended into the lower parts of the earth?" This seems improbable; and therefore, if a strict interpretation of the expression "to-day" be contended for, there is no alternative but to place Paradise below, in that Hades, into which our Lord's human soul most certainly descended. But this alternative would probably be found no less inconvenient: for it is hard to believe that our Lord's human soul was in Paradise both when he was in Hades, and also when he left it; or to place it in the Hades which shall eventually be "cast in the lake of fire." Paradise is probably above, and was entered by our Lord at his ascension. The question is certainly obscure; but whatever may be understood by Paradise, it can never be shown, that Christians in general have a better claim to be admitted to the privileges of the robber, than they have to be translated or transfigured with Enoch, Elijah, and Moses.

Questions may perhaps be raised,—whether the condition of souls in Hades was not changed for the better by the first advent of Christ? or whether the partial victory over death, obtained through His death and resurrection, operated before the event, so as to render the conquest of death, over the souls of those who died before our Lord's coming, less complete than it would otherwise have been? Both inquiries are important in reference to the question of an intermediate consciousness. If such consciousness be, as has been maintained above, altogether anticipatory of resurrection, not necessarily or naturally consequent on death, they who died before Christ's coming must have been unconscious, (at least until His coming,) unless His resurrection operated by way of anticipation. And that it did so operate is more than can be proved from Scripture. To Adam was given the promise "Thy seed shall bruise the serpent's heel." The victory was ordained, but not accomplished; the Old Serpent Satan did not immediately feel his deadly wound. The liberation of the souls which were to pass into Hades was also ordained; but it does not follow that the power of the grave was then impaired, and "the gates of hell" shaken, and that the fetters forged by Death for souls yet unborn were then wrested from his hands.

And if Christ's resurrection did not operate before the event, neither did it immediately after wards.* "The whole creation," says St. Paul, "groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now:" that is, "up to this present time," long after the ascension of the Lord. It groaneth thus, every creature groaneth, waiting for the "manifestation of the sons of God," at the resurrection. "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive, Christ the first fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." Certainly this passage is unfavorable to the belief, that the death originally introduced through Adam is in any wise removed, through Christ, excepting at his second coming, at which the "dead men shall live."

Again it deserves to be considered, that since our blessed Lord himself, as has been argued above, "tasted death for every man, and through death overcame him that had the power of death," he must, as it appears, from the very nature of the case, have partaken of the full unmitigated penalty of death;—tasted of death, such as, but for His coming, it would have been to the soul of every child of Adam. If this be so, it follows that death is, to the soul of every Christian, what it would have been, but for Christ, to the souls of all men; unless we prefer to believe that the faithful followers of our Lord have, as we are nowhere informed, a better passage through the dark valley than their Lord himself!

But rejecting this supposition, we must needs conclude that death is now both such as it ever has been, and such as (allowing the supposition) it would have been, but for the Advent of Christ: not being changed as yet, in any degree, either in its nature or power, by his first coming, either at the time of his resurrection, or before that event: but still reigning over every deceased soul, forbidding it,—since the God in whom we live and move, and have our being, is not the God of the dead,—to live, to move, or to be.

BAPTISM.

The following communication was received too late, last year, to be inserted in the December number, where we thought best to terminate a discussion which we had reason to think our readers did not care to have continued. Br. Magruder, however, thought it due to him that we should publish his "final" reply to Br. Grew. We have concluded to let them both speak once more, which will be considered the end of that controversy in our columns, for the present. All will understand, that these brethren are equally strong in the belief of immersion being essential to baptism: they differ only as to its necessity to salvation.

ESSENTIALITY OF BAPTISM DEFENDED.

REPLY TO MR. GREW. No. II.

In the hope that the reader will keep in view the question in debate between myself and Mr.

* Except perhaps in the case of the comparatively few "saints which slept," who arose and came out of their graves after Christ's resurrection, manifesting thus, (and not by any mere change in their disembodied souls,) His power who now held the keys of Hades: and who, as there is reason to conjecture, never returned to the tomb.

Grew, I proceed to offer some reply to his "Response" (in the October number of the Examiner) to my first article.

It is not advisable to expend time and space in combating minor arguments, and seeking small advantages, in such a discussion as this. If triumph, instead of truth, were the object of our pursuit, such acts might subserve the purpose, but as I hope and believe the discovery of truth—that "pearl of great price"—and the vindication of God's ways to man, to be the great object of both, I shall not be tempted to turn aside from the plain and direct path before me. What, then, is the simple issue before us?

I maintain that the baptism or immersion of a believing and penitent subject, is one of the conditions of salvation from sins—pardon—regeneration—remission of sins—adoption as a child of God, &c. This Mr. Grew denies. Holding the affirmative, of course, the burden of proof devolves on me, and I accept the task, and appeal to the only infallible standard—the word of God—either directly expressed, or clearly implied. Here there can be no mistake. What, then, saith the Scripture? "How readest thou?" I cite the following passages from the sacred record, reserving comment for the present.

1. Mark xvi. 16. "Preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

2. John iii. 5. "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

3. Acts ii. 38. "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of the Lord Jesus, for the remission of sins."

4. Acts xi. 13, 14, in connection with Acts x. 43, 47, 48. The angel said to Cornelius, Peter "shall tell thee words whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved." And Peter said, in fulfilment of this promise, the "words"—"to him give all the prophets witness that, through his name, whosoever believeth on him shall receive remission of sins;" adding, (when he witnessed the descent of the Holy Spirit on these Gentiles) "Can any man forbid water that these should not be baptized?" . . . . and commanding "them, to be baptized in the name of the Lord;" by all which "words" or commands (baptism included) he and "all his house" were saved, as promised in the 14th verse of the 11th chapter.

5. 1 Cor. xv. 2, in connection with Acts xviii. 8. "The gospel I preached unto you—by which also ye are saved," &c. Read 1 Cor. xv. with Acts xviii. 8: "Many of the Corinthians hearing believed and were baptized." Thus, they were "saved" by belief and baptism.

6. Acts xxii. 16. Ananias to Saul, "And now, why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."

So far the testimony of the "Gospels" and "Acts," the historical records of the sayings and acts of our Lord and his apostles in the progress of their proclamation of the gospel "for the obedience of faith among all nations." I shall now cite the testimony derived from another part of the same record, addressed to persons differently situated, viz: that contained in the "Epistles," which, we know, were letters addressed to those who were already Christians. I shall show, from this authority, that these were addressed as those who had been baptized, and were thus recognized as "saved," "washed," "regenerated," "renewed," become "the children of God," &c., with direct, plain, and undeniable citations and allusions to baptism as one of the means by which they had changed their state before God. "To the law and to the testimony" again!

1. Rom. vi. 2—5. "How shall we (Christians) that are dead to sin, live any longer therein? Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so, we also should walk in newness of life;" i. e. after baptism the "newness of life" begins, and not before.

2. 1 Cor. vi. 10, 11. "The unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God—nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, &c. &c. And such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus," &c. Now these very Corinthians, we have seen, were "saved" by belief and baptism, according to 1 Cor. xv. 1, 2, and Acts xviii. 8.

3. Gal. iii. 27. "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." How, then, of those who have not been baptized into Christ? Have they "put on" Christ? Mr. Grew will hardly say so, I think. If not, then baptism is an essential condition of putting on Christ.

4. Ephesians v. 25, 26. "Husbands love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word." A plain allusion to baptism as a means of sanctification.

5. Coloss. ii. 12. "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him," to that "newness of life" spoken of, under the same figure, in Rom. vi.

6. Titus iii. 5. "According to his mercy he saved us,"—(How? I ask,)—"by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost," &c.

Is not the "washing of regeneration" baptism? If not, what is it? Will Mr. Grew accept the learned Dr. McKnight's rendering—"According to his own mercy, through the bath of regeneration" (adding in a note, i. e. "THROUGH BAPTISM!") "he saved us," &c.

7. Hebrews x. 22, 23. "Let us draw nigh with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." Is not here an allusion to that preparation—baptism being a part of the process—which is essential to acceptable worship, "in the full assurance of faith?"

8. 1 Peter iii. 18—22. "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit: by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison, which sometime were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ."

I pause here, and I submit it to Mr. Grew and the candor of the reader, if this testimony from Holy Writ does not establish the position, beyond doubt or question, that baptism is essential to salvation? Peter declares above, that Noah was "saved by water,"—and immediately adds, so, too, baptism, of which the flood was the type, "doth also now save us." Yet Mr. Grew insists it does not save us. That we are saved without it. Well, I only reply again, Mr. Grew and Peter are directly at issue, and it is vain to escape this dilemma by his reply, "the question is, is Mr. Magruder's construction of the passage correct?" for it is not a question of construction. I offer no construction. I cite Peter's plain and positive declaration, "baptism doth also now save us;" and it is that Mr. Grew combats and denies. I hope he will candidly acknowledge the error, and not impeach the apostle's veracity. In any other than an unkind spirit, I beg my respected and intelligent correspondent to remember the solemn injunction in Romans iii. 4.

It would require more space than the "Examiner" can spare, to present a commentary on the several passages of scripture which have been cited above; I regret that the time fails me to show how they all, when fairly and intelligently construed, harmonize, and sustain the general conclusion.

In religions, as well as in all other controversy, extremes are apt to beget each other. Thus has it been with baptism. The Roman Catholics, the earliest apostates and corrupters of the truth—by administering the rite to infants and idiots—by the absurd practice of clinical baptism, and similar nummeries, drove the Reformers to the opposite error of undervaluing the ordinance, and denying its essential efficacy, even when properly administered to a fit subject; so that while the Romanist yet upholds its necessity, and even superstitiously magnifies its virtue, the Protestant, concluding the very opposite must be right, argues that it is wholly unimportant, and therefore either neglects it altogether, like the Quaker, or contents himself with the Paidobaptist apology of SPRINKLING, whilst the Baptist sectary, afraid of his orthodoxy, invents a compromise, by holding it important enough to be made a test of fellowship at the Lord's table, but not so essential as to interpose a barrier to fraternal relations in any other respects. This last, with strange inconsistency, rejects those whom the Lord has received; for if Christians, though unbaptized, and on that account denied his fellowship, is it not clear that, in his zeal for his sectarian badge, he has been driven to the exclusion of those who (being in Christ, as he allows,) have been recognized and adopted by the Master! Such are the consequences of a blind adherence to sectarian tenets, rather than the "word of the truth of the gospel."

Mr. Grew will pardon me, I trust, for presuming to say, in conclusion, that I think I discern the source of his error in regard to the subject in debate. It is of easy discovery, and belongs to all that class of disputants whose minds have reached a foregone conclusion, and, instead of following out the testimony to its legitimate results, look around for authority to support an opinion already embraced. He argues that baptism cannot be essential, because salvation is so often associated with faith as its instrumental cause. This is granted. But it is not thence to be inferred that baptism is excluded, any more than repentance, holiness, the love of God, the blood of Christ, good works, &c. The truth is, that all these together, and no one or two alone, are so many means to an end. In the scriptures, we are said to be saved by faith, by grace, by hope, by baptism, by works, by the blood of Christ, by holiness, by the word, by the spirit, &c. Now, while Mr. Grew would exclude some of these—baptism, for example—I would insist on all as essential to the grand consummation. What God has joined together, I would not put asunder. To quote passages to show that salvation is by faith, and thus argue that baptism was a non-essential, would be as wise and pertinent as to cite authority from a work on architecture to prove that a foundation was a necessary part of a house, and therefore the walls and the roof were non-essentials.

A. B. MAGRUDER.

H. GREW'S REPLY.

By reference to my former articles, my friend will find my arguments to disprove his construction of some of the texts he has adduced in the present communication. I shall not repeat all these arguments. I submit it to his intelligent consideration, whether or not, as "an ally" to Dr. Thomas, he ought to show, if he can, the fallacy of my arguments, instead of re-quoting the texts and repeating the objectionable constructions. Other passages, however, are now quoted, which demand our impartial consideration. Far be it, that any of us should seek "triumph instead of truth." I desire to bring every theological opinion to the test of that word which abideth for ever: even the opinion, which consigns thousands of the holiest and most devoted servants of the Lord Jesus, since the days of the apostles, to the lake which burneth with brimstone and with fire, which is the second death! We must not shrink from the scriptural investigation of a tenet, although it clearly implies that such men as Martin Luther, Philip Melancthon, John Knox, George Whitefield, Philip Doddridge, and a host of holy men, who have willingly gone to the stake for the truth of the Lord Jesus, because they did not understand their duty to be immersed in water, will be "punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power!"

Mark 16: 16, and John 3: 5, I have already considered.

Before commenting on other passages, I beg leave to call attention to a scriptural fact which may aid us in coming to the knowledge of the truth on the question at issue. We find two classes of passages in the holy volume. One class teaching us all Christian duties, and another teaching us what will certainly exclude us from the kingdom of God. These must not be confounded. Our Lord makes this distinction, Mark 16: 16, between faith and baptism. Many true Christians "suffer loss" by their prejudices against, and misapprehension of, some truths; yet they shall be saved. A man suffers inconveniences and delay, by not choosing the very best road to the place of his destination. This, however, is no proof that he will never arrive there.

Acts 2: 38 connects repentance and baptism with "the remission of sins." In the case of Paul, washing away of sin (in some sense) was connected with baptism. Col. 2: 12, rising with Christ is connected with it. Peter, 1 Epis 3: 21, connects it with salvation. Are we not, by other passages relative to the subject, to ascertain in what sense baptism is to be understood in these texts? Now it is a remarkable fact, that in every one, baptism is connected with something else, without which it would be worthless? In one it is connected with faith, in another with repentance, in another with "calling on the Name of the Lord," and in another, with "the faith of the operation of God." Yea, in the only passage which declares that the figure of baptism saves us, the inspired apostle precludes the idea of this "figure" saving us, in any other sense than figuratively, by saying, "not the putting away the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God." Were Simon Magus, Ananias and Saphira, Demas, &c., saved by immersion in water, in any other sense than figuratively or professedly? I ask my opponents whether a "figure" (1 Peter 3: 21) saves really or figuratively? Mr. Magruder's comments and inferences on this passage are as unworthy of his good sense as of his christian charity. He remarks, "Mr. Grew and Peter are directly at issue." What does Mr. Grew say? I say that baptism is a figure of our salvation, and that it does not really save us, nor is it absolutely essential to real and eternal salvation. What does Peter say? He says that baptism is a "figure," and saves us, but that it is "not the putting away the filth of the flesh (i. e. by water) which saves us, but the answer of a good conscience towards God." My friend objects to my question, "Is Mr. Magruder's construction of the passage correct?" adding, "I offer no construction." Is it no "construction," to say that the passage imports the essentiality of immersion to eternal salvation? Does Peter say this, or any thing which necessarily implies it? Let every candid reader judge. Mr. M. further remarks, "I cite Peter's plain and positive declaration, 'baptism both also now save us,' " and it is that Mr. Grew combats and denies." Mr. G. does not deny this. I admit it in the sense which Peter explains it in the entire passage. Mr. M.'s citation is partial. Why did he not fairly quote the whole of it? I deny my friend's inference that the passage implies that no man can be saved without immersion in water. For this he is pleased to represent that I "impeach the apostle's veracity!" Suppose that I misapprehend the apostle, in understanding him that the "figure" of baptism saves us only figuratively; is this impeaching his veracity? I ask, with christian meekness, that Mr. M. would consider the fact, that, on a mutilated passage, withholding that part which supports my view, he bases, not only the above serious charge, but implicitly (by referring me to Rom. 3: 4) the more awful one, of being a liar against God! "Judge not that ye be not judged," &c.

Acts 2: 38. The plain and numerous promises of pardon to penitent believers in the scriptures refute my opponents' construction of this passage. I have examined their reply to this declaration, and endeavored to show the fallacy of it. It remains for them to prove that I have not done so.

Acts 11: 13, 14, in connection with 10: 43, 47, 48. Peter "shall tell thee words whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved." What words? "To Him (i. e. Jesus Christ) give all the prophets witness that through his Name, whosoever believeth on him shall receive remission of sins." Thus do "all the prophets witness" against my opponents, who teach that there are thousands who believe on the Savior, who never "receive remission of sins." The apostle indeed "commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." May we justly infer from this that no man can be saved without baptism? What are the premises from which this inference must fairly flow? That the knowledge of, and obedience to, ALL the commandments of the Lord is essential to salvation. This is a false principle, for it is in manifest contradiction to scriptural precept and to scriptural fact. It is opposed to the imperative requisition to receive the "weak" (or ignorant) who are "in the faith" of the Lord Jesus. Rom. 14: 1, 3. It is opposed to the fact of the believer being recognized as a christian by the apostle who, like modern trinitarians, had not a correct knowledge of the divine unity, (1 Cor. 8 chap.) a subject of much more importance than a correct knowledge of the figurative ordinance of immersion. The argument proves too much, and, consequently, proves nothing. You may as well quote Acts 2: 42, to prove that the christian, who conscientiously declines the literal breaking of bread in commemoration of the death of Jesus Christ, understanding it (erroneously) merely in a spiritual sense, cannot be saved. On the same principle we must make the correct knowledge and practice of all things pertaining to the order of the christian church essential to salvation.

1 Cor. 15: 20, in connection with Acts 18: 8, proves that we are saved by the truth of the Gospel. The declaration that the Corinthians "hearing, believed and were baptized," certainly does not necessarily imply that baptism is essential to salvation. Indeed if the declaration was, that they were saved by hearing, believing and being baptized, it would no more necessarily imply that they could not be saved without baptism, than the declaration that A. was saved from drowning by B. C. and D. necessarily implies that he could not have been saved without D.

Acts 22: 16, must be understood figuratively. The sins of Simon Magus were not really washed away by baptism. To have our sins cancelled or washed away and to be justified, are synonymous expressions. We are justified by faith, which precedes baptism.

Rom. 6: 2—5. It is preposterous to understand this passage otherwise than figuratively. The allusion is indeed to our literal baptism, but were we literally "baptized into his (Christ's) death?" Our immersion in water is figurative of our holy change, we die to sin and rise to "newness of life." So far from the figurative ordinance being essential to this holy "newness of life," it is an undeniable fact that among real christians, we find some unimmersed more holy in their habitual walk than some of the immersed.

1 Cor. 6: 10, 11. Here are the persons enumerated who shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Alas! for our opponents, the unbaptized are not among them. It is well for the penitent believing thief and many others of the godly. It is for Mr. M. to inform us the reason of this important omission from this and every similar passage in the oracles of truth.

Gal. 3: 27. The question, "Have they (who have not been baptized) put on Christ?" I not only answer in the affirmative, but affirm that some of this class do so, more than some real christians who are immersed. They are indeed in fault, neglecting, through ignorance, to put on Christ in the ordinance of immersion. I ask my friend if he will deny, that those put on Christ, who "put off the old man" and "put on the new;" who "put on, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing one another and forgiving one another?" I pray that he may put on Christ by forbearing his weak brother.

Eph. 5: 25, 26. I admit that baptism is, to believers, "a means of sanctification." This, however, is no proof that all other means, without this, are inadequate to that sanctification which is essential to salvation.

Col. 2: 12, I have answered.

Titus 3: 5. I have no objection to McKnight's rendering. "The bath of regeneration." I admit the allusion to be to immersion. But I ask, was their immersion real "regeneration," or was it a figure or profession of their previous renewal? Was Demas really regenerated by baptism? No man is qualified for baptism who is not previously regenerated.

Heb. 10: 22, 23, admits of a similar answer. Baptism is an important part of that worship which is "acceptable" to God; but this is not proof that it is so important that no worship can be acceptable without it.

1 Peter 3: 18—22, is answered.

You think that the Romanist "superstitiously magnifies (the) virtue" of baptism. Surely he may say, "Physician heal thyself."

I cordially unite with you in your charge of inconsistency against those baptists who make immersion "a test of fellowship at the Lord's table," but not "to fraternal relations in any other respect."

In my remarks on the term "born of water," B. Ex., Vol. III., page 116, you will find a reply to some of your closing remarks. You should have proved the fallacy of this reply, if you can. "I would insist" on obedience to all the holy principles, and also to all the ordinances of the Gospel, as essential to the perfect christian. Blessed be God, he does not reject, or allow his children to reject, the "weak in the faith," because they are not thus perfect. You say, "what God has joined together, I would not put asunder." To this my inmost mind responds. The question is, Has God joined together, faith in his Son, &c., and baptism, not only as duties, but as duties essential to salvation? What is the fact? What has Jesus Christ done in relation to this matter? In the great Commission, when he sent forth his disciples for the salvation of a lost world, he joined faith and baptism as duties, and separated them as essential to salvation, reeking final and eternal condemnation on unbelief only. Mark 16: 16. You therefore, I think, join what Christ has separated, which is no less objectionable than to put asunder what he has joined.

I hold that God's promise of salvation to the believer in Jesus excludes every thing, as essential to salvation, but what is essential to faith in his Son. If not, his promise fails. Faith and love, i. e. obedience to all his known commands, are inseparably connected. Baptism is not so connected. This is an important truth, overlooked in your argumentation. The pertinency of your final illustration depends altogether on the question, whether or not baptism is as essential to salvation, as the walls and roof of the house are to the existence of the house? "To quote passages" which show that baptism is a duty and essential to a perfect christian, and argue that without it no man can be saved, "would be as wise and pertinent, as to cite authority from a work on architecture, to prove that" a variety of things are necessary to a perfect house, and then conclude that if one of these is lacking, it is no house at all.

In the commencement of his article, my friend expresses his "hope," that "the discovery of truth" is "the object of both." I regret to perceive that, in the close, his charity takes wings. He sits in judgment on my motives, and traces my supposed error to a disposition "to support an opinion already embraced," instead of "following out the testimony to its legitimate results." I pray the Lord to grant us both a single eye to his holy truth.

HENRY GREW.

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, NOVEMBER, 1849.

ENDLESS LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

"He that hath the Son hath life: he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5: 12.

BIBLE EXAMINER.—Our absence has prevented the appearance of the Examiner sooner this month; and now we have not half funds enough to pay the printer. Still we will redeem our pledge to issue the November and December numbers to complete this volume, trusting that the expense will be met. So far as we have conversed with the readers of the Examiner, there has been but one expression in regard to its continuance, and their willingness to pay one dollar per year for it, just as cheerfully as they have paid fifty cents heretofore. We expect to be able to interest our readers the coming year not less than the present, but of that they will be able to judge as we proceed. The greatly increasing interest on the immortality question in England will furnish us, we expect, with much matter of instruction.

Terms of the Examiner, for 1850, one dollar. For $5 six copies will be sent, and for $10 thirteen, to any address that may be ordered.

All communications and remittances designed for the Examiner, should be addressed, "GEORGE STORRS, Philadelphia, Pa."

LATE VISIT NORTH.—Since the last Examiner was issued we have visited Albany and Utica, N. Y. We spent about one week in each place, and had good and attentive congregations. Albany is where we originally preached our "Six Sermons." In our visit there, now, we dwelt mainly on the prophecies. At Utica we had never preached on the question of immortality. We were residing at that place in 1837, when our attention was, for the first time, drawn to contemplate the possibility that wicked men might utterly perish, though we did not become settled in that view till 1840, some two years after we removed from there. We now felt a satisfaction in visiting that place; and the reception we met with from some of our old friends was truly comforting and refreshing. We know not when we have passed a few days with so much satisfaction. For the first time, in that city, we opened our mouth on immortality, eternal life, as no part of man's inheritance by creation or generation; but only a gift bestowed by God through Jesus Christ on those who by patient continuance in well doing seek for it. Truly, never did we realize more of the presence and blessing of God, for a few days, than in our ministrations at Utica; and we cannot but believe that the word spoken will prove a savor of life unto life to some who heard it. Two evenings, after our discourses, we gave full liberty for any who chose to question us; and about half or three-quarters of an hour was thus occupied each of those evenings, which, we trust, gave satisfaction to all, and tended much to give interest to the subject, as many questions were asked and answered.

VOLUMES OF THE EXAMINER BOUND.—We shall have the volumes for '48 and '49 bound in one immediately after the next number is issued. Those who may wish the work must send their orders soon, as it is only a limited number that we can now furnish for both years. The price will be $1.25 single copy, or five copies for $5.00.

"WHO WILL LIVE FOREVER?"—We have just received "A Reply to the Rev. John Howard Hinton's Criticism on Luke xx: 36, with an Appendix on the Signification of the terms Life and Death. By Edward White, Minister of the Church of Christ at Hereford," England. We presume we are indebted to the author, or Dr. Lees, Leeds, for the favor. Whichever it may be, he will please accept our thanks. We shall give a part if not the whole of it in future numbers of the Examiner.

We have yet much matter by the English writers on the immortality question, which has been necessarily crowded out this year, that may be expected in our next volume, and new matter is multiplying by the discussion in England.

TO THE READERS OF THE EXAMINER.—Two years ago I became associated in the editorial department of the Bible Examiner. I have now deemed it best to withdraw my connection, and, in doing so, I desire to bid a kind farewell to all its readers. It is not necessary to enumerate the reasons of my dissolving this connection; and I will therefore detain you no longer, but most devoutly pray, that "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit may ever be with you." ## NOTES ON "ATHANASIA."

NO. III.

Mr. Hinton maintains that "There are no texts that teach never ending existence to be the gift of Christ to his followers." "The phrase everlasting life," he says, "is unquestionably used to express the entire felicity of the redeemed; and it cannot, therefore, when so used, be understood according to a different analogy, that is, of never-ending existence." p. 123.

The question is not whether the phrase is sometimes used to express the entire felicity of the redeemed; but—Is that its general or uniform use? We maintain that it is not; and that it is not its primary use. And we appeal to Mr. Hinton, himself, whether that phrase could alone, or by itself, without other texts of Scripture, prove the happiness of the redeemed at all? and whether we are not dependant upon more explicit declarations as to the happiness of saints beyond this state? The saints live now, but they are far from being always happy. Eternal life, then, for all that phrase alone can determine, may not be always happy. To quote a solitary text, in which Paul says, "Now we live if ye stand fast in the faith," to prove the phrase life is sometimes used analogically to signify happiness, and then come to the conclusion that "The phrase everlasting life is unquestionably used to express the entire felicity of the redeemed," is truly a summary way of coming to the conclusion that in the multiplied times in which the phrase occurs, it does not mean "never-ending existence." But to do Mr. H. justice, we say, his language is very guarded here; yet to us it seems strangely contradictory. He says, "the phrase is used to express the entire felicity of the redeemed, and when so used, cannot be understood of never-ending existence;" which language implies an admission that it is not always "so used." Pray, then, what does it mean when not so used? for he says—"There are no texts that teach never ending existence to be the gift of Christ to his followers;" yet the phrase eternal or everlasting life is either directly or indirectly used uniformly to teach something that is the gift of Christ, or the gift of God through Christ, to his followers. Pray what is it, if not never-ending existence, when not used for happiness? On this point Mr. H. has left us in the dark, and we must wait for light.

We now join issue with Mr. Hinton on his assumption that "There are no texts that teach never-ending existence to be the gift of Christ to his followers." We begin with Rom. 5. Here the apostle "is unquestionably" speaking of death in the primary sense of the term. And for the sake of meeting Mr. H. fairly, we will let him have his own definition of the term. "Death," he says, "in its strict and primary import, signifies nothing more than that condition of an organized substance in which the organic functions have ceased;" p. 38, Rom. 5: 12.—The apostle says—"By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men: * * * * Death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression: * * * If by one man's offence death reigned by one; MUCH MORE they which receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness [followers of Christ] shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ: * * * as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation [to death—"dust thou art unto dust shalt thou return:" see Gen. 3: 19, the only condemnation Paul could have referred to:] even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life; [the exact opposite of what came upon all by Adam's sin, viz. a resurrection from the dead:] as sin hath reigned unto death, [in the primary sense,] even so might grace reign through righteousness unto ETERNAL LIFE by Jesus Christ our Lord."

Here is plainly life and death contrasted. That the word death is here used in its primary sense, we presume Mr. Hinton will not call in question: life, then, must also be used in its primary sense. Let Mr. H. have its primary sense according to his liking, viz: "the active or living condition of organic substances;" and then it follows that the future active or living condition of the organic substances entering into the resurrection organism of the followers of Christ is a free "gift," bestowed "by Jesus Christ;" and that organism is said to be "eternal" to such as "receive" the grace of God, and the "righteousness," or holiness which is essential to ensure the ETERNAL life promised. Here then, to our mind, nothing can be plainer than that the phrase "eternal life" is used to signify "never-ending existence" in a conscious state. If this were the only text to prove this point we should think we have fairly shown that Mr. H. is mistaken in his assumption: or, at least, it forms an exception to the uniform use of the phrase in the sense of "happiness," and leaves us at full liberty to use it generally, yea, uniformly, to denote eternal conscious existence, unless it can be shown that there are exceptions, and then these particular cases will not affect the general use of the term to express "never ending existence."

Thus far we have proceeded on the ground that Mr. Hinton's definition of the primary sense of the words life and death is the correct one, and have met him on his own ground: but we dissent entirely from him in the definition of those words. Our previous articles give our reasons for doing so on the word life; and as he, after defining what is the primary sense of the term death, p. 38, says,—"Life is no doubt its opposite," we do not judge it necessary to spend labor to show what is the primary meaning of the word death. We have attempted to show, in our first article, what is the primary meaning of the word life; if we were successful in that attempt, as he has admitted death and life are opposites, we have equally established the point that his view of the primary meaning of the word death is erroneous: it is not merely the disorganization of organic substances, but the cessation of conscious existence. This being lost by the first death, is restored to men by Christ through a resurrection, but is eternal only to those who have become righteous under whatever dispensation they may have lived. Though they have never heard of Christ, their future life, by a resurrection from the dead, comes through and by him; and whether that life shall be eternal, depends upon whether they have "feared God and worked righteousness" according to the light they had. Christ came that men "might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly:" even an ETERNAL LIFE. See John 10: 10.

THE "TRUE WESLEYAN" AGAIN.

The editor of that paper, in his article which we copied into the August number of the Examiner, says:—

"If the soul is not immortal in its own nature, it must cease to exist by the operation of the laws of its being, just as the body does, and can need no destruction from the Almighty, any more than the body, to cause it to cease to exist. To argue that God can destroy the soul, as Mr. Storrs does, implies that it will not die of itself, without the direct exertion of Almighty Power to do it. The body is mortal, is a compound, an organism, and by the operation of the laws of its elemental and organic nature, must wear itself out and cease to exist, without being destroyed by the direct operation of external force, as is implied when Mr. Storrs affirms that God can destroy the soul. On the other hand, if the soul is a simple spiritual essence, immaterial, uncompounded, and indivisible, it must be immortal in itself, and must exist forever, unless actually destroyed by the Almighty Power that gave it existence."

There are several points here to which we wish to call attention. Br. Lee admits the body is not "immortal in its own nature;" and that "by the operation of the laws of its elemental and organic nature, must wear itself out and cease to exist, [be "annihilated"?] without being destroyed by the direct operation of external force," &c. Br. Lee here affirms too much. What is it but a plain declaration that the "body" "must cease to exist"—be "annihilated"—whether man had sinned or not! So Br. Lee fully gives up the natural immortality of man's body; for, the body would "die of itself, without the exertion of Almighty Power to do it," he says. According to this logic, "death" did not "enter the world by sin," as Paul tells us it did; for our logician plainly affirms that "the body must cease to exist [be "annihilated"] by the operation of the laws of its being." So it turns out that Paul was mistaken, and man's body would have died—"ceased to exist"—been "annihilated"—if sin had not entered into the world. Thus, after all, man was only half immortal at creation; then our opponents admit half we contend for; that's something gained in the argument, though we do not hold ourselves responsible for the position on that point Br. Lee has assumed. But as man naturally was only half immortal, let us see how Br. Lee disposes of the other half, viz., the soul.

He says—"The soul is a simple spiritual essence, immaterial, uncompounded, and indivisible." We ask, where is the proof of this assertion? Of course it is in his logic, for it is not in the Bible. He says the soul is an "essence." What does he mean by "essence?" The essence of a thing is "the nature of a thing." Sometimes it signifies "existence." We do not know in which sense he uses the term; nor does it matter. He admits that the soul is created. If it is created, it is something that has "organism;" for the very idea of creation is organism: if it has organism it must be compounded; if it is compounded it is divisible, and Br. Lee's assumption falls to the ground. There is no way that we can see to avoid this conclusion but to deny that the soul is created; and we hope for the honor of Christianity he will not assume that pagan fable. We state the matter thus—If the soul is created it is an organism; if it is an organism it is compounded: if it is compounded it is divisible: if it is divisible it is not in itself immortal. And, if Br. Lee's reasoning is correct about the body, it follows that the soul will "die of itself—wear itself out and cease to exist," unless causes out of itself prevent it.

But, says Br. Lee in another part of his argument, if the soul dies with the body there can be no resurrection—it must be a new creation—it is another man. But we ask him to stop and look at his statement that the "body must cease to exist [be "annihilated"] by the laws of its being." Then at death, according to his own theory, and to use still his own phraseology, the body is "annihilated." If so, then on his theory, its resurrection is impossible—it must be a new creation—another body which the soul had never seen before, and for aught its own consciousness could determine might be entirely a new one; and thus his theory is as fatal to the resurrection of the body as he would try to make it appear ours is to the resurrection of the man.

But his entire blast so far as aimed at us, or our Six Sermons, to use a phrase of brother Hinton, was "discharged into a sand bank." In other words—a creature of his own imagining. Br. Lee says—"Mr. Storrs affirms that God can destroy the soul by the direct operation of external force." His reasoning against us is all based on this expression, which he says, "is implied" in our position. If he had quoted us a little further his argument might have been saved. We add—"God can, if he will, destroy, or cause to cease to have existence the souls he has made." Now God can "cause to cease" from conscious existence any creature he has made by a direct act of power, or by withholding that power by which he upholds living beings. Does Br. Lee doubt this? We presume not. Our argument which he quotes, and labors to destroy the force of, had reference to only one point, viz. the assumed position of our opponents that "Nothing can be destroyed;" i. e., "no power can destroy any thing, and especially the soul." Without stopping at first to reason out the case that every created thing would go to destruction of itself if not upheld by its Creator, we dashed at once in the face of our opposers the power of God. "He is ABLE to destroy both soul and body." Remember it is what our Lord "affirms," not "Mr. Storrs" only, as Br. L. insinuates. This blast, it seems, near put Br. Lee's eyes out; for to the end of his chapter, on that topic, he could see nothing but the power of God must be used to destroy the sinner, if destroyed at all; which we did not "affirm." But we can excuse Br. Lee for not seeing it: the first bolt we threw from the Bible against the favorite theory he was trying to prop up, closed his eyes to all that followed.

But Br. Lee says:—

"If God should annihilate the human soul, it would require a simple withdrawal of that Almighty Power which he put forth when he created it, and which not only sustains every human soul, but the universe of both matter and mind. This mode of annihilation forms no part of the creed of destructionists; they argue their doctrine from the Scriptures, which threaten and describe the punishment of the wicked; and represent the loss of existence as a part of, and end of this punishment, and as the result of: positive infliction and suffering; and hence, they rely upon the words, destroy, burned up, consumed, and other like expressions."

Without going into a labored argument, we will show the inconclusiveness of the remarks by supposing Abraham to have said concerning Sodom and Gomorrah—"If God should destroy those cities it would require a simple withdrawal of that Almighty Power which he put forth when he created them—therefore it is folly to talk of their destruction as the result of positive infliction and suffering." Because "it would require a simple withdrawal of Almighty Power" to destroy Sodom and Gomorrah, must God therefore have his hands tied so that he cannot bring about their destruction by "positive infliction and suffering?" Is this our brother's logic? If so, it is not ours. We believe as fully as he can, that "it would require"—necessarily—only "a simple withdrawal of Almighty Power" to affect the destruction of the sinner; neither would it have required any more to destroy Sodom, or the inhabitants of the old world; but is God shut up to this method to destroy men? or, may he do it with open marks of his abhorrence of sin by effecting the destruction of the ungodly by "positive infliction and suffering?" And if he has said he will do it in this latter way, shall our opponents say he "cannot do it?" Shall Br. Lee, or any one else, say—"God cannot annihilate [destroy] in this way?" But adds Br. Lee—"If God himself has made the soul immaterial, he cannot destroy it by bringing material agents to act upon it." Suppose we were to admit that, would that prove that He who "made" it could not "act upon it" to destroy as well as to "make?" But we reply again, as in our previous remarks, to talk of immateriality being "made" is talking a palpable contradiction. Br. Lee further says—"God cannot dissolve that which is uncompounded, or divide that which is indivisible." In this we are agreed. But the soul [using the term soul in Br. Lee's sense of a distinct entity] being "made" is neither uncompounded nor indivisible.

Again he says:—

"The reader is requested to bear in mind that the question at this point, is not—would the soul fall back into non-existence, should God withdraw his creating and sustaining power? but—can the soul be burned up, or be annihilated by the exertion of power upon it?"

Thus he seems to admit that "the soul would fall back into non-existence should God withdraw his creating and sustaining power." Power then brought the soul into existence, by its "exertion;" but he affirms that God its Creator "by the exertion of power upon it" cannot send it back to "non-existence." Has Br. Lee learned in the schools of immortal-soulism to limit the Power of the Almighty! Or, did the dreadful text we shot in our Six Sermons—"God is able to destroy both soul and body"—so completely bewilder him that he knew not what he was doing? But we will not press him any further now, "lest he should be swallowed up with over much sorrow;" for sure we are he has made a fearful plunge towards Atheism in his attempt to save immortal-soulism, and has denied what he at first seemed to admit; for he said in the first quoted paragraph the soul "must exist forever, unless actually destroyed by the Almighty Power that gave it existence."

* SIGNS OF THE TIMES.—NO. IV.

LUKE 21: 23 to 36 CONSIDERED.

In this portion of Scripture our Lord speaks of things future relating to the Jews—their city—the Gentiles—signs to be witnessed—his own second coming—the redemption of his people, and concludes with solemn admonitions and cautions. To these things we "do well to take heed." A large portion of what our Lord here utters in prophecy, has since become history. The fulfilment of so large a part makes it certain, that whatever may remain unfulfilled will assuredly come to pass. This prophecy, in the part accomplished, is demonstration of the truth and divinity of our Lord's claim to be the Messiah, and establishes the truth of revelation beyond any attempt to overthrow it; and infidelity is as powerless for evil, to a sincere inquirer after truth, as the foaming waves dashing against the rocks of Gibraltar. Said the Saviour; "There shall be great distress in the land and wrath upon this people"—the Jews. Did it not happen exactly as prophesied? Will any one pretend to deny but that unparalleled distress fell upon that people? Let them read the history of the Jews, particularly from the time Jerusalem was "compassed about with armies," in A. D. 67, to the siege and fall of the fortress of Masada, A. D. 74.

Luke 21: 21, "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down by the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

"They," the Jews, "shall fall by the edge of the sword;" that is, in war, many of them; not all. Hundreds of thousands of them did thus fall. The remainder of them were "led away captive into all nations;" thus the prophecy has had an exact fulfilment; and the Jews are a standing and perpetual monument, that Jesus, whom their nation abhorred and rejected, is in truth the Messiah of whom Moses and the Prophets spake. They bear an unwilling testimony to this great gospel declaration, that Jesus of Nazareth was approved of God, and is the anointed Saviour. But the prophecy goes on to say,—"Jerusalem shall be trodden down, [i. e. be made subject to, or be under the government] of the Gentiles, [i. e. other nations, as distinguished from the Jews,] until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." So it has come to pass. From the days of the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, no Jew has held power or authority there, and much of the time has not been permitted even to approach the city; or, if there at all, only in the most abject condition. "The times of the Gentiles," of course, is an appointed time, indicated in some other prophecy; most likely in the book of Daniel; but of that we shall not now inquire; it is sufficient for us to know, that the time of Gentile rule over Jerusalem has its bounds beyond which it cannot pass. Our Lord next proceeds to give signs which were to indicate to the watchful and sincerely inquiring mind, that this treading under foot was about to terminate. These are as follows:

Luke 21: 25, 26, "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring. Men's hearts failing them, for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of Heaven shall be shaken."

The signs in the sun, called in other places the sun being darkened, are supposed by some to have had a fulfilment in the dark day of 1780. We cannot, with present light, assent to that view. The darkening of the sun on that day was not on the prophetic land at all. It was confined mostly, if not wholly, to the United States, and was witnessed only by a small part even of these. The phenomenon, or signs, according to the analogy of prophecy, must appear in the prophetic earth, or land. This, at most, embraced only the old Roman empire, which was in its imperial glory when this prophecy was uttered. If then, these signs in the sun and moon are to be witnessed in those literal orbs, we are compelled to the belief that they are future. We suggest, however, a different interpretation; which, if not correct, is at least very remarkable.

We learn from Genesis 1: 14—18, that the lights in the firmament of heaven were not only to divide the day from the night, but "for signs;" and that the sun was "to rule the day," and the moon and stars "to rule the night." Hence, in very early times, the people of God used them as signs of authority and dominion. Thus, we find Jacob interpreting Joseph's dream of the sun, moon and eleven stars, making obeisance to him, as an indication that the father, mother, and his other sons were to do him homage, or become subjects to Joseph. Whence this conclusion, but from the well known fact, that these heavenly bodies were signs of power and authority? The sun was the sign, or symbol of the highest authority; which, in the case before us, pointed out Jacob the head and supreme ruler of his house, or tribe. The moon denoted the next in authority, viz. the mother of the family; then came the stars—the sons, or rulers of an inferior class. This use of the sun, moon, and stars is seen throughout the Jewish prophets, and we may therefore conclude such was the design of our Lord in the text before us, Luke 21.

We now proceed to an inquiry as to what ruling powers are denoted by these luminaries in this prophecy. We conclude we are to look for them in the Roman empire; and that which most naturally presents itself, as symbolised by the sun, is the imperial power of Rome, which was holding its sway at the time the prophecy before us was uttered. That the sun is used as a symbol of that power, by the "faithful and true witness," Rev. 8: 12, is admitted, so far as we know, by all commentators! This point established, then, in symbolical language, the darkening of the sun, or signs in the sun, will signify signs of its decay and ex-tingtion. Centuries ago there were signs of the decay of the imperial power of Rome, but its extinction did not occur till the present century. That power was removed by Constantine to Constantinople. There it continued till 1453; when, in the eastern empire, it gave place to the moon power, of which we shall soon speak. Before the imperial power was displaced in the east it had been restored in the west by Charlemagne, A. D. 800. In the western Roman empire it continued down to the days of Napoleon Bonaparte. The earliest date that can be given to its extinction is 1806, when Bonaparte overthrew the Emperor of Germany, or Austria, in whom resided this power at that time. It may, however, be doubted whether that time is the proper point at which to date its extinction, as Napoleon claimed and exercised this power as the "successor of the Cæsars." If then, it was continued in him, as seems most likely, it was not finally extinguished till the battle of Waterloo, 1815, which sealed the fate of Bonaparte, and put an end, as we believe, forever to the imperial Roman power. If this view of the subject be the true one, we have the first and most prominent sign of the times of the Gentiles being about to end directly before us, and in our generation. Let it not be forgotten, that the signs given us in this prophecy were to be marks of the end of Jerusalem's bondage to other nations, and the signal of the near approach and reign of David's son on David's throne.

We now proceed to inquire after the power symbolised by the moon. Let it be remembered it must be found in the old Roman earth, or land; and it must be second in magnitude to the Imperial. Thus situated, we are at no loss to designate the power, viz. the Mohammedan. It is remarkable, that the "Crescent"—the increasing moon, is the standard of that power. And further, that this power has held possession of Jerusalem ever since A. D. 636, with the exception of about one century that it was in the hands of the Crusaders. This power waxed stronger and stronger for a long period; but within the last century it has given "signs" of waning—and what is remarkable, in about six years after the extinction of the Roman imperial power, in 1815, the Mohammedan, or Ottoman power began to wane and fall with a rapidity that made even her enemies afraid. From the commencement of the Greek revolution, 1821, a series of calamities fell upon this moon power, that marked her certain and speedy downfall. She now gives "signs" of soon being turned to blood, or, of having her light, as a ruling power, extinguished. Here, then, is another sign of the end of "the times of the Gentiles," and of the establishment of the kingdom of God.

Having thus prepared the way, we can have no hesitation in saying, that the various monarchies of Europe are the powers symbolized by "the stars." Just prior to the times of the Gentiles ending, and the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth, under the reign of David's son, on the throne of his father, there would be "signs in the stars"—or indications of these lesser monarchies being extinguished. Here we need hardly enter into any details. The late convulsions in Europe, though they seem at times to be at an end, proclaim, with a trumpet tongue, that this part of the prophecy is being fulfilled before our eyes, which leaves us in no doubt as to the point in earth's history which we now occupy. Every throne in Europe has been shaken within the past two years in a manner that indicates they are soon to fall, like stars from heaven, to rise no more; but more on this point as we proceed.

"And upon the earth, [epi tes ges—in the land—same words used in verse 23—signifying same territory ruled by sun, moon, and stars,] distress of nations, with perplexity." This prophecy is being fulfilled in the history of the nations occupying the old Roman Empire. The cause and effect of those things is next spoken of. "The sea and the waves roaring." We have no idea that this language has any reference, as a sign, to any literal commotion of the ocean; but, like the sun, moon, and stars, is a symbol which we will try to search out and apply. By turning to Isa. 17: 12, we read thus: "Wo to the multitude of many people, which make a noise like the noise of the sea; and to the rushing of nations that make a rushing like the rushing of mighty waters!" [That is, "the waves" of the sea.] "The nations shall rush like the rushing of many waters." So the destruction of Babylon is represented by the figure of the sea coming up upon her; see Jer. 51: 42. So also of Tyrus, Ezek. 26: 3, see Psa. 93: 3, 4; and particularly Rev. 17: 15, where "many waters" are expressly declared to signify "peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues."

Thus then, "the sea and the waves roaring" is a symbol of an uprising of the people, who have long been the victims of lordly, kingly, and imperial misrule and oppression. When they rise up like the waves of the sea, lashed to fury by winds, their despotic rulers will find themselves, like a time worn and dilapidated ship, unable to stand the storm; yet there may be, for a short time, a calm, but the storm will gather strength. If we cast our eyes over Europe and mark the events of the past two years, have we not beheld a rising up of the people—the multitudes? And, what has been the cry of this rising mass? Has it not been republicanism! Self-government? No more despots? Down with thrones! And, what is the effect of this uprising of the masses? "Men's hearts failing them for fear," &c. What men's hearts are these? Not all men's; but a specified class, viz: The great men—kings, nobles, lords, despots of every class. This is evident from what follows, which is the reason assigned for the fear, viz: "For [gar—a causative conjunction—because,] the powers of heaven [the sun, moon, and stars,] are shaken." The sea and wave-like convulsions of the people shake down those symbolic powers, and overturn them, carrying consternation and horrible fear among the tyrannical dynasties of Europe, who have revolved in their political heavens so long as to think the people only lived for them, and not they for the people. And while they found the political heavens so convulsed that their power seemed ready to come to end, their hearts failed them for fear. At this moment they are far from feeling assurance of quiet: they "are like the troubled sea."

We now ask our readers, whether the signs in the sun, moon, and stars, the sea and waves roaring, are not being manifested before our eyes? And may we not know with certainty, that the times of the Gentiles are ending? Ought we not to enquire what is to come next? Or, what is before us? This, however, will be the subject of future remarks.

TRUTH ALWAYS IN HARMONY.

When our Lord stood before Pilate he made this glorious declaration: "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness UNTO THE TRUTH. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice."

Truth is always in harmony; men's opinions are often discordant. That view of revelation which makes harmony must be the correct one; and the correct view of revelation will equally harmonize with the known works of God as manifested to the understanding, or reason of man. If this were not the case it would not be revelation, but the very reverse—darkness—mystery—secret.

To harmonize the Scriptures we should always remember, that there are two agencies—God's and man's—or God's free grace, or favor, and man's free will. In all that pertains to our deliverance from sin, and ultimate salvation, God's free favor lays the foundation, without which there could be no deliverance from sin and death. That foundation being laid, men must build thereon, or their free will must co-operate, else they will fail to attain unto the salvation offered. In the common affairs of life all men see and acknowledge these truths: all understand, if God had not given soil, the sun, rain, and suitable seasons, no effort of man could fill store-houses and barns: and they are equally sensible, that with these gifts of the God of providence there would still be a failure if men refuse to co-operate with God in bringing forth the fruits of the earth. The works of God and man in the common affairs of life have their counterpart in the work of salvation, or deliverance from sin, and the attaining unto eternal life: and he who does not bear this in mind will be ever erring in regard to what is truth, and may err fatally. There is a Covenant of Grace. God is one, and the primary party; but, in order to the full establishment of that covenant, man must become the other or second party. Each has a part to act: both are essential to the full accomplishment of salvation.

Dividing truth, and magnifying one part to the neglect or denial of the other, is injurious, if not fatal. This has always been the policy of the adversary. "Cast thyself down; for it is written, [a truth,] He shall give his angels charge concerning thee; and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone." Here is an artful attempt to magnify God's faithfulness and care, so as to cover up the obligation, of the confiding party, to be always found in the ways of obedience. This promise of protection could only be claimed in the path of obedience to God, or in the performance of that part he has assigned us to act—in other words, God's grace and man's agency are essential and inseparable; and he that does not understand this and practice upon it will never attain deliverance from sin, nor gain eternal life.

We may contemplate this subject in relation to the remission of sins. The Scriptures represent, that we have remission of sins through the blood of Christ: Eph. 1: 7. "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. And other texts of like import; particularly Revelations 1: 5 —"Unto him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood." Baptism, also, is represented as being "for the remission of sins;" see Luke 3: 3 Acts 2: 38, &c. Some men exalt one of these truths to the neglect or denial of the other: at least, they so magnify one, or the other, as to obscure the opposite, and thus "divide the living child," by not understanding the object either of Christ's blood or our baptism.

By not understanding the object of Christ's "shed blood," they magnify it into the "paying our debts," or "dying in our room and stead;" and by not understanding the design of baptism, it is made the point on which hangs all our salvation, and as the only means by which to wash away our sins. The blood of Christ and baptism are both important; but, we apprehend, for a very different reason from that assigned by the magnified views attached to them by those partisans of whom we are speaking. They are both important, because they are both seals; one on God's part, the other on our part, of the Covenant of Grace; one of the promises of which, is "remission of sins." Does any one ask, for what did Christ come into the world? And for what did he shed his blood? The answer is—"To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should BEAR WITNESS UNTO THE TRUTH." And again, "Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision, FOR THE TRUTH OF GOD, TO CONFIRM THE PROMISES made unto the fathers;" Rom. 15: 8—that is—to confirm, on God's part, the Covenant of Grace; for the promises made unto the fathers, referred to, were gospel promises, and circumcision was the seal, on the part of the fathers, of this gospel covenant; this, however, we shall not attempt to show particularly now; but we will here refer to the language of Peter, Acts 3: 25, 26. "Ye [Jews.] are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant [singular, i. e. one] which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed;" [surely that is the Gospel Covenant]—"unto you, [Jews] God having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities." Here, then, it is plain what covenant and what "truth of God," Christ came to confirm. Christ died, or shed his blood, to confirm that covenant that was made with Abraham, in its now still more ample development. Thus, the Saviour saith, Mat. 26: 28, "This is my blood of the new testament, [covenant] which is shed for many, [all the families of the earth] for the remission of sins." This blood sealed, on God's part, the new covenant—the covenant of grace—which contained the promise of "remission of sins." This was one of the grand objects of Christ's coming into the world: other objects we may notice at another time. When we are baptised we set our seal to that covenant, and confirm our faith in the truth of all the promises God has made in that covenant; one of the first of which is, "I will be merciful unto their unrighteousness: their sins and iniquities will I remember no more," Heb. 8: 12.

Another grand object of Christ's advent is expressed in the text we have quoted from Acts 3: 26, "God having raised up [brought into the world, or raised up unto David, see Chron. 17: 11; raised up to manhood] his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities." God sends his Son to do what? "Pay our debts!" Is that the way he was to "bless" men? Was he sent to bless men by dying in their "room and stead?" No. How then, did God send him to bless men? By turning them away from their iniquities. That is the only way in which God can bless any man permanently. Sin is a curse—the way of sin is the way of "death" by an unchangeable law of nature's God. Sin is violence done to the order infinite wisdom, goodness, and love has established; and must necessarily result in death. No sober, reflecting man doubts this, so far as his physical nature is concerned. A constant violation of our physical constitution tends certainly to dissolution, or death. The repeated and continued violation of the law of our moral nature tends to its insensibility—to brutalizing it—consequently, to its extinction, or death. We can only be blessed by being turned away from our iniquities.

What is iniquity? Every thing that is contrary to love: "God is LOVE;" the opposite to love is opposition to God, or, is iniquity. The love which is the fulfilment of the law, relates to God and our neighbor, or fellow men. Jesus Christ is the great example of both. Every departure from his example is a departure from love, and hence a departure from God, who is love; and it is iniquity. Our Lord, Jesus Christ, not only taught love to God and man by precept, but example; and we are taught to "walk even as he also walked," 1 John, 2: 6.

Any violation of the principle of love—the God-like principle—tends to death or extinction of being. Do you ask how? We answer; by benumbing or deadening our moral sensibilities and searing the conscience, till the man sinks down to the state of a mere brute; governed by no other law than that of the flesh, or animal nature, which has now so completely mastered him, that, like a brute he lives; his moral nature having become so near extinct that it has no control over his animal nature, and he is "carnal, sold under sin," which, "when finished, bringeth forth death," or extinction of being—he shall "be as though he had not been," Obediah, 16:—or, "be destroyed forever," Psa. 92: 7.

On the other hand, if our moral nature predominates, and we "keep our bodies under," [See 1 Cor. 9: 27.] by patterning after the example of love set us by Christ—or, learning of him who was meek and lowly in heart—our moral nature rises—becomes the all controlling power of our being; and thus we are brought to life eternal, by being turned away from our iniquity. But this life eternal is not of debt; it is "the gift of God through Jesus Christ, our Lord."

AN INQUIRY.

Jeffersonville, Ind. Oct. 8, 1849.

BROTHER STORRS,—How do you reconcile Matthew 25: 31—41, with your views of probation after the advent? I am an inquirer after truth, and am desirous of more light on this subject.

N. FIELD.

REPLY TO BR. FIELD.

If our theory, that the age of Messiah's reign, to follow the present order of things, is inconsistent with the text of which you speak, the theory of the non-resurrection of the wicked, till the end of that age, is equally irreconcilable with it. But, in our mind, Mat. 25: 31—41 indicates the entire period of Messiah's judging or ruling the world on "the throne of his glory" till he has finished the work of judgment, by a demonstration of the equality of his government, in the reward of his followers and the destruction of his enemies; which will not be accomplished in a day or year; nor, probably, in a "thousand years." One of two things is certain to our understanding," viz: Either there is to be a state of trial to those "left of the nations" after the advent, or the second advent will not occur for a very long while to come. The latter we do not believe, and therefore we are shut up to the former: and if that point is not capable of demonstration, we confess we despair of demonstrating any truth of the Bible—to us nothing is clearer.

"GOG AND MAGOG."

DEAR BR. STORRS.—I have for some time had in my possession a manuscript copied from the "Hebrew Archives," which I had intended sending you for publication some time since, but neglected it until now. I have had it re-copied, thinking at this particular juncture of affairs in Europe, it would prove highly interesting to your readers, especially so as coming from a Jewish source.

Respectfully,

Philada., Oct. 25, 1849.

Translated from the French.

THE EMPEROR OF ALL THE RUSSIAS—GOG AND MAGOG.

Extract from a discourse delivered by Rabbi Carrillon, of the Reformed Synagogue of Spanishtown, in the Island of Jamaica.

"There is but little ground for debate, but that the prophecy of Ezekiel, relating to Israel's last enemy, points conclusively to Russia, unless a radical change, from which may God preserve us, takes place in the mind and in the political constitutions of Europe, we need not fear that any other nation than Russia will oppress the Hebrews. On the contrary, indeed, the Hebrews are continually making new advances in the esteem and friendship of all other people, both Christian and Mahomedan. Gog is pictured to us as a man filled with the ambition of subduing the whole world, and we do not know, in the existing state of affairs, any nation of Asia or Africa which conceives a project so bold. America is out of the question, and the power is equally balanced among the other nations of Europe, the majority of them friends of peace, they hold in horror every species of warfare and of conquests; even those who are not actuated by religion, public opinion and the arts and sciences. Russia is the single empire which has the disposition, and can command the means of undertaking a like campaign; and it is worthy of remark, that a prophecy is in vogue in Russia, its origin I know not, predicting that at a certain future period the Russians will become Lords of the Universe. True or false, this prophecy has a tendency to fortify them with courage, and of itself already bears witness into what extremities they are inclined to plunge in this gigantic struggle. In addition to these, there are several other reasons which induce us to believe that Russia is the empire predicted by Ezekiel, and the chief reason is drawn from the description of the country itself. In the tenth of Genesis we find the children of Japheth to have been Gomar, Magog and Madai—Javan, Tubal, Mesech and Tiras; and the sons of Gomar, Ashkenas, and Riphth and Togarmah—from them the Japhethical nations are descended, that is to say, the Chinese, Tartars, Greeks and Persians; the Germans of the North, Muscovites and other Slavonian races; and these are the very people whom Ezekiel names as forming the sources, or as being the tributaries from whence Gog is to issue. In chapter 39th the Prophet says, 'turn thy face towards Gog, of the country of Magog, the prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal.' The general name of the country in Scripture is Magog, and the name of its prince is Gog; but the country itself is divided into three principalities, Rosh, Meshech and Tubal. The Prophet afterwards tells us that the prince described will be accompanied with a powerful army, composed of divers nations, of the same names as those which are mentioned in Genesis, as being descendants of Japheth and Gomar; and the most of these nations the subjects, or allies of the prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal, are represented to us as coming from Northern countries. We remark that the name of Rosh is not to be met with anywhere among the sons of Japheth. We know, however, that the first Czar of Great Muscovie was called Rosh, and that it was from him the empire derived the name it now bears. We know also that in former times Russia was divided into three independent States—Russia proper, or, according to some authors, Muscovie in Europe—Muscovy proper, or Russia eastern and southern—and Tobolsk, or northern Russia. The three States were finally united under the common name of Russia, and they held in subjection several nations of the Tartar and Slavonian origin. Persia itself may be considered as a dependency of Russia, or the Emperor of these three States united of Roshy, Muscovy and Tobolsky, this being the true pronunciation, and of the tributary and independent countries, is called in Scripture Gog, and his empire Magog. It is very probable this name has been given to the State because the population descends in a great measure from Magog, and Gog seems to be an abbreviation of the name of Magog, and is applicable to the chiefs of this empire. The names of the three States that compose this empire are mentioned in Scripture word for word—'Son of man, turn thy face towards Gog, of the country of Magog, the Prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal;' Rosh is Russia—Meshech Muscovy—and Tubal Tobolsky. Another combining circumstance is, that no other country is made up of so many different nations. The prophet further tells us that these diverse nations which will march under the colors of Russia, will be armed after the fashion of the ancients, with shields, bows and arrows, and with javelins and lances, for as we are aware, notwithstanding her wide extent, Russia cannot raise an army exceeding 5 or 600,000 men in number, who are drilled according to the tactics of modern warfare, while the great mass of her troops still use arms of various kinds of darts, which were only in use among the ancients. Under still another aspect, the prophecy may be applied to Russia. It is, moreover, foretold, that of a sudden such revolts will burst forth from the numberless army of Gog, that, using the expression of the prophet, every man's hand will be raised against his brother. This portion of the prophecy is eminently applicable to Russia; for it is almost certain that Russia, engaged in a universal war, on the first reverse will witness Poland and all the portions she holds under the yoke turning their arrows against her. It is thus almost established by evidence, that Russia is the country of Magog, and that Nicholas or one of his successors is the Gog announced by the prophet, and that there is reason to believe that the latter days are not far off; let us, therefore, be on the watch and in continual prayer, that we may not be overwhelmed by a torrent of events, as a thief taken in the night!<sup>12</sup>

LETTERS.

BR. R. L. PATRIDGE writes:—

Marysville, Ohio, Oct. 9th, 1849.

BRO. STORRS.—For the edification of ourselves and the furtherance of the cause of Christ, we trouble you again for books. Our brethren in the distance have persuaded us out of those volumes of Dobney that we received, even before we had read them, and consequently we now send for more. I am very sorry that my present circumstances will not permit me to make a donation to the Examiner; but you may look for a subscription from me and some others for the next volume at $1.

BR. JOHN HUTCHINSON writes:—

Oshkosh, Wis., Oct. 7th, 1849.

BRO. STORRS.—I would say for your encouragement, that through your Six Sermons and Dobney on Future Punishment one Congregational Minister, John Ingersal, in Milwaukee, has been brought into the truth. He has preached two sermons on "No immortality out of Christ." Truth is at work on this great and important subject in this region. I believe, with you, in the return of the Jews and probation after Christ sets up his everlasting kingdom. To me these truths are as clear as the sun at noon-day.

HENRI ST. CLAER writes:—

Lafayette, Ia., Oct. 8th, 1849.

MR. STORRS.—Dear Sir:—Enclosed you will find two dollars, the amount due you for one copy of "Dobney," five copies of Six Sermons, and Bible Examiner for 1848 and '49. I am very much pleased with the Examiner. It has thrown a light on some passages of the Bible, and altogether strengthened my belief and faith. Myself and wife have been believers in the doctrines [of the Bible] as taught by you for more than three years;—not without opposition you may well believe;—we have read the Examiner faithfully, and I trust with some profit. I have circulated your Sermons, since I received them, to the best of my ability, and I think the truth is spreading; people are investigating the subject. You may count on me for the subscription for three copies of the Examiner from the beginning of volume three. I do sincerely hope that you will be able to sustain the paper.

BR. N. BOND writes:—

Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 7th, 1849.

BRO. STORRS:—I have read the Examiner a part of the time since its first publication; but moving from place to place, I have not seen all you have published—but have read sufficient, comparing it with the word of God, to fully establish the truth to my mind that the great principle you are endeavoring to establish and defend in the Examiner (viz: the doctrine of life and death,) with kindred doctrines are second to none taught in the word of God, and show to my mind most clearly the wisdom, benevolence and justice of God. The personal reign of Christ with his Saints on the earth is a doctrine which stands out very prominent and clear in the word of God. I have been a confirmed believer since 1840 that the Kingdom of God was near, even at the door. The great battle I believe is commenced; and events will thicken and hasten until no doubt will be left. As a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the earth.

DR. N. FIELD writes:—

Jeffersonville, Ind., Oct. 8, 1849.

BRO. STORRS:—We are much pleased with the Examiner, and wish you success in its publication. I hope it will be liberally patronized and that it will become the organ of a growing and intelligent body of people scattered abroad who are advocating the true doctrine of immortality. ## THE KINGDOM OF GOD.—NO. VII.

THE FIRST RESURRECTION.

The first question that arises, in the consideration of this subject, is, "What do we understand by the "first resurrection"?" and the second question is, "Who will be the subjects of it?"

1. Let us attend to the first question. John, in Revelation, 20th chapter, describes the following scene: "And I saw an Angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand." This "angel," or messenger, we understand to be the Messiah, "the Messenger of the Covenant," who "comes down from heaven" with "power and great glory." The Apostle continues: "And he laid hold on the dragon, that old Serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan; and bound him a thousand years." He bound him during the Future Age, or the continuance of his reign. "And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled; and after that he must be loosed a little season." The nations, then, are now deceived; but then their deception will be removed.

"And I saw thrones," says John, "and they sat upon them, and judgment was given to them." The Apostle saw the thrones of Messiah's Associate Kings, and those who sat upon them; and says that "judgment was given to them." "And I saw," says he, "the souls of them that were beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, and for the word of God, and who had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. THIS IS THE FIRST RESURRECTION. Blessed and holy is he that hath a part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."

Is the "first resurrection" the first in fact, or the first in importance? It certainly is not the first in fact, if we consider the resurrection of Christ as a distinct one; for Jesus was "the first born from the dead"—the first fruits of them that slept."

Besides, there were those who "came out of their graves," after the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ. We repeat, therefore, that, if the resurrection of Christ be considered a separate and distinct one, the resurrection spoken of by the Apostle John, would not be the first in fact. And we do not see how those who hold this view can well dispose of the difficulty. But we do not so regard the resurrection of the Messiah. We look upon his birth from the grave as a part of the "first resurrection;" and we think this view of the subject can be sustained by the testimony of the Scriptures.

Let the reader remember, then, that Jesus is "the first fruits of them that slept;" he is the antitype of the "first ripe sheaf which was waved before the Lord;" the "earnest of the full harvest;" "the first born among many brethren." The "first ripe sheaf" was a part of the general harvest—"the first fruits" of that harvest. The "first born among many brethren," is, nevertheless, a member of the family—a part of it; and without this order there could be no family; for there must necessarily be a "first born." The Apostle Paul, in the 15th chapter 1st Cor., says: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." This is the "order" of the harvest of the dead; Jesus is the "earnest of that harvest"—the "first born from among the dead." He, therefore, stands at the head, and as a part of "the first resurrection."

From this view of the subject, we regard the "first resurrection," of the Apostle John, as the harvest of which the Messiah was "the first fruits"—the "first ripe sheaf."

As it respects those, who "came out of their graves," after the resurrection of Christ, as well as others which might be mentioned, it is very doubtful whether they arose "to die no more;" and, consequently, if they did not, they would not constitute any part of the "harvest." It will be perceived, then, that we regard the "first resurrection" as the first in fact, in the sense in which we have explained it. The "first resurrection," therefore, is not only the first in point of fact, but, also, in importance.

2. The next question is, "Who will be the subjects of the first resurrection?"

This is one of the most important questions that can engage our attention; and the reader will excuse us for enlarging upon it.

Some suppose that, when the Lord comes, all the dead will be raised; but it must be obvious to the most unlearned in the Scriptures, that this view would conflict with the idea of a "first resurrection" at all. There are to be two resurrections: the "first" when the Lord comes, (he being regarded as the "first fruits" of it;) the second "when he shall deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father, that He may be all and in all." All the dead, therefore, will not be raised at the second advent of Messiah.

From the paragraph, quoted from Revelation, we learn that the martyrs, or those that had "been beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, and for the word of God, lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." These, therefore, will be raised from the dead; they will have a part in the "first resurrection."

After speaking of the "sealing" of the hundred and forty-four thousand of the tribes of Israel, John says: "After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and languages, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, saying, salvation to our God who sitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb." Rev. vii. 9, 10. Again, in the 14th verse, these persons are said to have come "out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. THEREFORE they are before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne will dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb who is in the midst of the throne will feed them, and will lead them to living fountains of waters: and God will wipe away all tears from their eyes."

Here we behold an innumerable multitude of Saints, from every nation, kindred, people, and language, standing before the throne. They have come out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. And for this reason, they stand before the Lamb, and all tears are wiped from their eyes. In as much, then, as these are to enjoy "the rest that remains for the people of God," in the Age to come, they will be subjects of the "first resurrection." Moreover, the persons represented by the symbols of the "four beasts," and "four-and-twenty elders," are described as singing "a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals of it: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and language, and people, and nation; and hast made us to our God kings and priests: AND WE SHALL REIGN ON THE EARTH." Ch. v. 9, 10.

The destiny of these persons, thus redeemed by the blood of Christ, is to reign with Messiah on the earth. They will, therefore, have a part in the "first resurrection;" otherwise they could not reign with him.

Again, it is said: "Behold he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also that pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." Ch. i. 7. If those who "pierced him" behold him, as he descends from heaven, they must, also, be raised from the dust of death. But this may only refer to the Jews, as such, because it is written by one of the Prophets—"and they shall look upon him whom they pierced, and mourn for him," &c.

We now state a proposition, which, perhaps, may seem strange, and extort the cry of heresy from others; but, which, nevertheless, we regard as Scriptural; viz: THAT NOT A SINGLE GENTILE WILL BE A SUBJECT OF THE "FIRST RESURRECTION," EXCEPT THE SAINTS FROM AMONG THE GENTILES. We find no evidence in the Scriptures to lead us to believe, that any, from among the Gentiles, will be raised from the dead, at the coming of Christ, EXCEPT THOSE "WHO HAVE WASHED THEIR ROBES, AND MADE THEM WHITE IN THE BLOOD OF THE LAMB."

The "first resurrection" will be eminently Jewish. It will embrace two classes—"the children of Abraham by faith," and his literal descendants. There will not only be two classes, but two "orders;" first the "tares," second, the "wheat." The "tares," although gathered at the "harvest," are not a part of that "harvest." They "grow together until the harvest, and are then gathered to be consumed." They are not of the "first fruits," and consequently are not numbered in the "first resurrection." They do not belong to this class—they are not of this order.

We have said that the "first resurrection" will be Jewish; and now let us hear the testimony of Daniel: "And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince who standeth for the children of thy people: and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Ch. xii. 1, 2.

The point in this prediction to which we wish to direct the special attention of the reader, is, that when Michael the great Prince—the Messiah—stands up for the children of Daniel's people, every one found written in the book shall be delivered; and that many of them (of Daniel's people) that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some (of Daniel's people) to everlasting life, and some (of Daniel's people) to shame and everlasting contempt."

It is evident, apart from the judgment of the nations indicated in the prophecy, that Daniel's people is the subject of this prediction; and that the resurrection spoken of is the resurrection of "his people"—of Jews only, without even the slightest allusion to the Abrahamic seed from among the Gentiles.

We regard this prediction, then, as relating exclusively to two classes among Daniel's people, and as having no reference to the Gentiles, whether Saints or otherwise.

Regarding it then in this light, we find that ALL the Jews will not be raised at the time indicated; for the Prophet says MANY of them that sleep in the dust shall awake." "Many shall awake," not all. This "many" comprises two classes—the "wheat" and the "tares"—the "chaff" and the "wheat." The chaff and the wheat, though gathered at the same time, share not the same destiny; the one is burned—the other is gathered into the garner of the Lord. So, in the case before us, "some arise to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." An objector may say, that the resurrection of two classes at the same time, clashes with the declaration of the Apostle John—"Blessed and holy is he that hath a part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power."

We reply that the "tares" are not considered as a part of the "harvest"—they are not identified with those who constitute the "first resurrection."

Now let us see if the view we have taken of this subject, harmonizes with other testimonies.

Matthew vii. 22, 23: "Many," said Jesus, "will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess to them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." Here we have the awful prediction, that "many" persons, doubtless contemporary Jews, who perhaps, like Judas, may have wrought miracles in the name of Christ, will be raised from the dead, when the Messiah shall be revealed from heaven, and commanded to depart from his presence! This view of the subject is strengthened by the following: "And I say to you, that many (Gentile saints) shall come from the east and the west, and shall sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven. But the children of the kingdom (some of the Jews—the rebellious) shall be cast out into utter darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Chapter viii. 11, 12.

These Israelites, who rejected the Messiah, will be raised from their slumbers in the dust of death, only to behold "Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the Prophets in the Kingdom of God; and themselves thrust out! And then they will be the subjects of 'weeping and gnashing of teeth.'"

This harmonizes with the testimony of Paul in his letter to the Hebrews, when he speaks of a "severer punishment!" as the reward of apostasy. The Hebrews were strongly tempted to this sin, and hence the propriety of the Apostle's warning.

The sum of the whole matter, then, is this "The first resurrection" embraces the Saints of all ages—the true Israel of God—the children of promise. But the wicked and Apostate Jews will also be raised, not to life, but "to shame and everlasting contempt." The rest of the Gentile world will not be raised until the "thousand years are finished." Then the dead, small and great, will come forth; the sea will give up its dead; and death and hell yield up their victims; and all will stand before God!

PHILOSOPHY OF MAN.—NO. IV.

By J. T. WALSH.

THE HUMAN SPIRIT.

We have seen that the term soul, when used in reference to man, signifies: 1. Life. 2. Person. 3. A dead body. 4. Mind. 5. It is used to personify. 6. For being or existence. We are now prepared to examine the term spirit. Solomon says, 'who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth.' Eccle. iii. 21. Although, then, we have said, upon the authority of Scripture, that both beasts and men have spirits, we are not to be understood as saying, that a beast has a human mind; but simply that both have spirits.

1. The term spirit signifies breath. James ii. 26: 'For as the body without the spirit [breath] is dead,' &c. 'God made man of the dust of the earth, and breathed into his nostrils the breath [or spirit] of life, and he became a living soul.'

2. It is used as the vital principle, life. Luke viii. 55: 'And her spirit [her life, her vitality, her breath] came again, and she arose immediately,' &c. Job xxxix. 14: If he [God] should not his heart upon man, if he should gather to himself his spirit [his life] and his breath, all flesh would perish together, and man would turn to dust again.' This text proves that God gathers to himself the breath of man, and enables us to understand the language of Solomon when he says, 'Then shall the spirit [life or breath] return to God who gave it.' 'Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit [of life] shall return to God who gave it.' Eccle. xii. 7. God made man's body, with all its parts, out of the dust, and then endowed it with life. This was from God; and when a man dies, his spirit, or life, returns to God who gave it. Ps. xxxi. 5: 'Into thy hand I commit my spirit; [my life, my being:] thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth.' Christ said, when he was about to expire, 'Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit,' my life. Luke xxiii. 46. Stephen said, 'Lord Jesus receive my spirit,' life. Acts vii. 59. Christ is the Christian's life, and when Christ, who is their life, shall appear they will also appear with him in glory.

3. It is used for the mind of man. Gen. xxvi. 35: 'Who were a bitterness of spirit [of mind] to Isaac and Rebecca.' Their minds were grieved—they were disturbed. Chapter xli. 8: 'And it came to pass in the morning that his spirit [his mind] was troubled.' Chapter xlv. 27: 'The spirit of Jacob their father revived.' His mind, which before was cast down or dejected, now revived and became cheerful. Ex. vi. 9: 'They harkened not to Moses, by reason of anguish of spirit,' of mind. Job xxxiii. 8: 'But there is a spirit, a mind, in man; and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding.' Eccle. iii. 21: 'Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth.' This text is susceptible of two expositions, and we will submit them both, and let you judge of their correctness. 1. It may refer to the mind; and then its meaning will be, who knoweth the mind of man that goeth upward; that is, ascending, towering, exalted, and exalting, and the spirit, or mind, of the beast that goeth downward to the earth; that is, earthly in its nature, and cannot rise above the things of time and sense. But the context favours this view more than the preceding one, who knows the spirit, or life, of man that goeth upward to God, and that will, consequently, be given back to him again; and the spirit, or life, of the beasts that goeth downward to the earth, and, consequently, perishes! This view of the matter would only prove that man would be raised from the dead; but, that the beasts would not. In this exposition we see the force and propriety of the expression, 'the beasts that perish;' that is, are not raised from the dead.

4. It stands for the thoughts, affections, care, temper, frame or disposition of mind. 1 Tim. iv. 12: 'Be thou an example of believers in spirit;' in temper, disposition, &c. Col. ii. 5: 'Though I be absent in the flesh, yet I am with you in spirit.' Ps. li. 10: 'Renew a right spirit within me;' a right disposition, temper, &c. 'If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his.' If any man have not the disposition of Christ, &c.

5. It is used for person. Mark ii. 8: 'When Jesus perceived in his spirit;' in himself, or in his mind. Luke i. 47: 'And my spirit hath rejoiced in God, my Saviour;' I have rejoiced, &c. 2 Thes. ii. 2. 1 John iv. 1: 'Beloved, believe not every spirit; but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets, or spirits, have gone out into the world.' See 2d and 3d verses. 1 Peter iii. 19: 'By which, spirit, also he went and preached to the spirits, or persons, in prison.' These spirits, or persons, were said to be disobedient in the days of Noah. 1 Cor. v. 5: 'To deliver such a one to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit, the person, the man himself, may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.'

6. It is used in reference to men translated to heaven or raised from the dead. Heb. xii. 23: 'To the spirits of just men made perfect, &c., &c.' Alluding to those, perhaps, that were translated to heaven, and to those who were raised from the dead after our Lord arose. Much more could be said on this, and, indeed, on all the above propositions, but this will suffice to give a correct interpretation of the term spirit.

We will conclude this part of our subject by making a few remarks more on spirit. That there is a spiritual essence pervading the whole animal, and particularly the blood and nervous system, carrying vitality, life, and power to every part of the human frame, and evolving thought, and feeling, by means of the brain, which is its grand sensorium, we have already proved. And it is probable that Solomon alludes to this, when he says: 'As thou knowest not what is the way of the spirit, nor the structure of the parts of conception in her that is with child,' &c. Eccle. ii. 5. Recent discoveries in Physiology clearly show, that while the brain is the instrument of thought, of the mind, there is something, whose nature, at least, is semi-spiritual, which operates upon, and moves the brain, and gives life, power, and mental energy. There is an essence which pervades the nervous system, although we cannot see it, or weigh it; although it is not tangible to our senses, yet we are convinced that it is there by actual experiment. And the science of Neurology is bringing to light some astounding facts and truths upon this subject. So, we find no difficulty in admitting and maintaining that man has a spirit. But it is one thing to prove that man has a spirit, and quite another to prove that the spirit is immortal. The evidence of the one is not the evidence of the other. The proof of one is not the proof of the other. The testimony of one is not the testimony of the other. They are two distinct propositions. And if every text in the Bible, in which the term spirit is used in reference to man, means spirit, literal spirit, and nothing else but spirit, the proposition that man has an immortal soul, or an immortal spirit, would not be sustained. It is one thing to prove that man has a spirit, and another to prove that that spirit must necessarily be immortal. If we wish to prove that the existence of God would never terminate, we would not argue this fact upon the hypothesis that he was spiritual, and, therefore, could not cease to be; but we would appeal to the word of God, which says, he is 'immortal,' that he 'alone has immortality.' If we wished to prove that the angels would live forever, we would not predicate by arguments upon their being spirits, but upon some positive declaration of the Holy Scriptures. Let it, then, be distinctly understood, that when our opponents, on the subject of immortality, have proved that man has a spirit, they have not begun to prove that spirit immortal. We hope, therefore, that those Phrenologists who teach that man has an immortal soul, or an immortal spirit, will observe this just, logical, and scriptural distinction; and, hereafter, direct their attention, as well as their testimony, to the proper point, and not confound wisdom by words without knowledge. But, in this discussion, it is taken for granted that because man has a spirit, that spirit cannot die; that it is immortal. Now, we do not ask them to prove that man has a soul and a spirit, but we do ask them to prove that either the one or the other, or both, is immortal. For they do not inform us which is, positively, the immortal part; but, sometimes speak of an 'immortal soul,' and then of a 'deathless spirit.' Has man two immortal principles within?

But, how do religionists attempt to prove that the spirit of man cannot die? 'Why,' say they, 'God is a spirit, and cannot die. This does not come in one thousand leagues of proving it. They first assume that the spirit of man, and the spirit of God are the same in essence, or rather that it is a part and parcel of God himself, and then infer that it cannot die. This is an assumption. The idea itself is blasphemous! It is the offspring of pride. Who has taught man that he has any divinity in him? Pagan Philosophy. Man's spirit is the seat of all his passions, propensities, &c.; No. There is no truth in it. It is a pagan fable. There is not another being in the universe of the same essence of the Deity! Where did this idea originate? Here is its origin: The Greeks and Romans thought they had descended from the gods, and consequently must have some divinity about them. And this idea was dressed up by their ancient poets and philosophers, and handed down to us in the form of an immortal soul. There are various sorts or kinds of spirits. 1. God is a spirit. 2. Angels are spirits. 3. Man has a spirit. 4. Animals have spirits. The scriptures ascribe a soul, spirit, and heart to God; but who would think of teaching that they were of the same essence of the soul, spirit, and heart of man? Who would think of contending that, because the beasts have spirits, they cannot die; that they are immortal? No person, perhaps, but a simpleton; and yet there is as much logic and sound sense in this doctrine as in the other. In a word, we might as well contend that the flesh of birds, beasts, fishes, insects, &c., was the same kind of flesh, including that of man, although the Apostle Paul distinguishes them, as to contend that all spirits were the same.

H. GREW'S RESPONSE TO DR. THOMAS.

Dr. Thomas remarks: "It does not necessarily follow, that if a man be not saved, he is therefore consigned to the lake of fire, which is the second death. It is written 'Whosoever speaketh against the Holy Spirit, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world (aion, age or dispensation) nor in that to come,' Matt. 12: 32. Does not this imply that there are some offences, whether of omission or commission, that will be forgiven in the future age?"

I reply, that the passage, whether it imports that those who commit this sin in the present age, shall not be forgiven in it or the future; or that the sin shall not be forgiven whether committed in this age or the future, (in which, although righteousness shall generally be established, some will die an hundred years old accursed, Isa. 65: 20,) it does not necessarily imply that any thing more than that this sin shall never be forgiven. It is therefore an inadequate basis for the opinion that men dying in impenitence will ever be forgiven. I understand our Lord, John 8: 21, to connect dying in sin with eternal separation from himself,—"yo shall seek me, and shall die in your sins: whither I go, ye cannot come."

Dr. T. asks, "Is there no alternative to the resurrected between possessing the kingdom and being destroyed in the lake of fire?" It appears from the divine testimony that there is not. The names of all the human family are either written or not written in the Book of life. From Rev. 20: 27, we learn that all those whose names are therein written, will enter the kingdom, and from Rev. 20: 15, we learn that all whose names are not written there, will be cast into the lake of fire.

"The scriptures teach the non-resurrection of millions." I ask where? Where, I ask the learned Dr., is his scriptural authority for rejecting the literal import of our Lord's words, John 5: 28. "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth" &c. "There shall be a resurrection both of the just and of the unjust." Rom 2, teaches, that "in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ," he will render to every man according to his deeds, "every soul of man that doeth evil, and every man that worketh good." It is true indeed that "where there is no vision the people perish;" the apostle, however, plainly teaches that those who have sinned without law (i. e. written law) will be judged "in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ," which necessarily implies their resurrection: "It is appointed unto all men once to die, but after this the judgment." Heb. 9: 27. If indeed, we have any plain positive declarations that some of the human family will never be raised from the dead, we must understand these universal terms in a limited sense, but not otherwise.

Will the Dr. favor us with the chapter and verse? On No. 2 and 4 I remark, most cordially do I agree with Mr. T. in respect to the faith of those who "cry 'Lord, Lord,'" who do not "believe his doctrine or obey his voice." Without holiness "no man shall see the Lord." But he affirms that a man "cannot be saved in any sense, unless he also believe the prophetic truths concerning the kingdom of God." He also maintains "that a correct belief of doctrine and facts, with repentance, immersion and holiness, are indivisibly essential to salvation in the kingdom of God." I reply, 1. Dr. T. has not produced any scripture proof that "a correct belief of doctrine and facts," and "prophetic truths," &c., or that immersion is essential to salvation. 2. We have scriptural truth and fact to the contrary. In 1 Cor. 8: we find the person whose views of the unity of God and of idols were incorrect, recognized as a Christian brother, v. 11. Rom. 14: 1, proves that persons may be "in the faith" of the Son of God, and, consequently, be in a state of salvation, and yet be "weak," i. e. erroneous or ignorant in respect to some truths. Being weak is contrasted with having knowledge. 1. Cor. 8: 7, 11. In the various passages which state particularly the characters which have no inheritance in the Kingdom of God, the unimmersed are never mentioned. It is an undeniable fact, although immersion is the duty of every believer, and consequently, he who is immersed is more "acceptable to God," all other things being equal, than he who is not immersed; there are many real Christians who are unimmersed, who, on the whole, are more conformed to Jesus Christ, and, consequently, are more "acceptable to God," than many real Christians who are immersed.

3. If a correct belief of all scripture "doctrine and facts" and "prophetic truth," is essential to salvation; if, as the Dr. affirms, "we must believe the whole truth, or, be dashed to atoms," I ask, "Who then can be saved?" Highly as I esteem the biblical knowledge of Mr. T., I assure him that his opinion should make him tremble for his own safety. Has he a "correct" knowledge and "belief" of all "prophetic truth?" Does he discern accurately all things which all the prophets have foretold concerning the Kingdom of God, and the true periods of their fulfillment? If so, I think he may more truthfully adopt the words, "I only am left," than did the prophet of old. For the sake of poor humanity, however, I rejoice in the assurance that he would be vastly further from the truth, than number one is from "seven thousand." The Editor of the Examiner well observes, "If we believed to constitute a man a real Christian, he must be perfect in knowledge and judgment, we should never hope to find a Christian on earth, till the next age shall come."

In Dr. T.'s No. 3 he remarks, "One error is as fatal to a man's salvation as a multitude of errors believed." This, as a general proposition, is inadmissible. Whether one error is so or not, depends upon the nature of it. It is not the number but the character of a man's errors which determines their consequence in respect to his salvation. To substitute my own merit for the foundation God has laid in Zion for salvation, is "fatal;" but neither "one," or a hundred errors, respecting some "prophetic truths," is so. The word of truth teaches the fatal consequence of the former, but not of the latter.

On No. 6 it is observed that "the gospel is made up of particular truths." The question is asked, "Which of those particular truths have we authority to dispense with as unnecessary to salvation?" I answer, such "of these particular truths," as the bible itself does not make necessary to salvation. It is an undeniable fact that the bible recognizes among the saved, some who are "weak," or in error, respecting some "particular truths." It is equally a fact, that it declares some errors to be fatal to salvation. We may well expect then to find a marked line between these two classes of errors. So it is. Those errors of faith and practice, with those principles, which exclude men from the holy kingdom of God, are plainly declared to be thus fatal. See 1 Cor. 6: 9, 10, Rev. 22: 15. Unbelievers and immoral men are excluded, but the unimmersed and those who have not "a correct belief" of "prophetic truth" are not; consequently, no man has authority to exclude them. It is indeed our duty and privilege to occupy our talents and opportunities in seeking after all the truth of God.

On No. 11, I have only to remark, that the person whom "the apostle John forbid the true believer" to receive, &c., was one of those "who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh," 2 John 7: and not one who believes that he has thus come, and, in the flesh, died for our sins, but does not understand and believe the truth that he actually and really suffered and died in respect to his highest and divine nature.

John Wesley justly remarked: "We may die without the knowledge of many truths, and be carried to Abraham's bosom; but if we die without love, what will knowledge avail us? Just as much as it avails the devil and his angels."

"All seeing God! 'tis thine to know
The springs whence wrong opinions flow!
To judge, from principles within,
When frailty errs, and when we sin."

THE PROPHETIC PERIODS.—NO. VII.

THE TWELVE HUNDRED AND SIXTY DAYS.

By many, who have written on this subject, it has been supposed that the 1260 years of the "little horn," Dan. 7th, must have commenced A. D. 538. It must be confessed that that point, when taken in connection with the events of 1798, seemed, beyond a doubt, the true one; but time has demonstrated it to be an error. Some, we trust, are now prepared calmly to review the whole matter, on this topic, and to follow the truth wherever it shall lead, without allowing previous opinions to control their judgments.

Let us look at Daniel 7th, and see at what point the "time, times, and the dividing of time" ends. Can it be said to end till "the time" comes for "the saints" to possess "the kingdom?" We think not. This horn "made war with the saints and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High, and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom;" verses 21, 22. Now, so long as this horn makes war with the saints, and prevails against them, so long they must be "in his hands;" and this is expressly said to be "until the Ancient of days came—and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." It must be manifest, to the unprejudiced mind, that neither of those events have yet taken place: and as a certain consequence, the "time, times and the dividing of time" is not yet ended, and therefore, could not have commenced at an earlier period than 1260 years ago, or earlier than 588. It is admitted by the same writers, of whom we have been speaking, that the "forty two months," Rev. 13: 5, is the same period, and covering the same ground and subject, as the little horn, Dan. 7th. Now, it is expressly said of the beast, Rev. 13: 5, that—"Power was given him to CONTINUE forty two months." The continuance of a power is the whole period of existence of that power. If it be said, "The marginal reading is to 'make war' forty two months,"—that view will only strengthen my argument, for, in Daniel it is said he shall make war until the Ancient of days comes, &c. In whatever light, then, the subject is viewed, the 1260 years are not yet ended, nor will they end till the fourth beast of Dan. 7th, which bears this little horn, is "slain, and his body destroyed and given to the burning flame." Then the time has come that the saints possess the kingdom. As that time has not yet arrived we are to look for the commencement of the 1260 years some where subsequent to 588.

We wish, after the experience of the past, to speak without positiveness as to any given year in which that period commenced. If, however, we are to look for the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome as the point at which to commence, he could not have had that supremacy as late as 590. "Bower's History of the Popes," printed in "London, 1750, is before us. Bower was "Public Professor of Rhetoric, History, and Philosophy, in the Universities of Rome, Fermo, and Macerata; and in the latter place Counsellor of the Inquisition." Here then we may expect correct information.

Bower informs us, Vol. 2, page 459, that the "Emperor Mauricius" assembled a "Council of the Patriarchs, all the Senators of the Imperial City, and the Metropolitans;" that, "By this great Council was confirmed to John of Constantinople, the Title of Universal Bishop, to be enjoyed by him, and his successors in that See." Bower adds—"I say confirmed, for the Bishop of Constantinople had long before this time a lawful claim to that Title." Here is evidence that the Bishop of Rome was not Universal Bishop up to this period, 588. It is true that this transaction at Constantinople stirred up the rage of the Bishop of Rome, and he called upon the former to "renounce the Title which he had usurped in the pride of his heart, at the instigation of the devil, to the great debasement of the rest of his brethren." Shortly after, the Bishop of Rome died, and was succeeded by "Gregory the Great," in 590. Gregory, at the time of his election, was evidently, for the times in which he lived, a good man, and it was a source of great distress to him to be called to occupy the post of Bishop of Rome.

As late as 596, Pope Gregory declared that the Title of Universal Bishop was "scandalous, profane, blasphemous"—and that "whoever calls himself UNIVERSAL BISHOP, or desires to be so called, in the Pride of his Heart, is the FORERUNNER of Anti-Christ." Bower, Vol. 2, page 515. Could he at the same time, himself, have been a Universal Bishop, or exercising the functions of such an office? I think these facts are sufficient to establish the point, that, up to this time, the Bishop of Rome had neither claimed nor used the prerogative of a Universal Bishop. If others had sometimes called him so, that does not at all affect the question: he clearly never had been such in fact down to 596.

Gregory, like most other men raised to high offices in the church, became corrupted; and towards the last of his life manifested the spirit of devils more than the spirit of Christ, which seemed to characterize him at first: and it is truly painful to see the change that came over him in his controversy with the Bishop of Constantinople.

In the month of November, 601, "The Emperor Mauricius was driven from the throne, and inhumanly murdered, and one Phocas, a Centurion, raised to the Empire in his room." Bower, Vol. 2, page 529. "Mauricius had given no particular provocation to Phocas, who was quite unknown to him, and yet the tyrant, not satisfied with putting him to death, for his greater torment and grief, ordered five of his sons to be first inhumanly murdered before his face. Such a scene of unparalleled cruelty drew sighs and tears from all the spectators, but Mauricius himself, who beheld the death of his children quite undisturbed, without shedding a tear, or betraying the least mark of grief or concern. During the whole time of that tragedy, the most shocking to the eyes of a parent that was ever beheld, he continued, in appearance, quite unaffected, only repeating, as each of his children received the fatal blow—Just art Thou, O Lord, and Righteous are all thy judgments. Mauricius was beheaded last, and their heads were all brought to Constantinople and cast into a heap near the Tribunal, where they lay till they became offensive, then the Tyrant [Phocas] suffered them to be buried." Bower, Vol. 2, page 531.

We have given this extract for two reasons—First, to show the wicked character of Phocas, who is hereafter to establish the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome: and, Second, to show how Gregory the Great had apostatised from the spirit that characterized him at his election. After Phocas had manifested his horrible depravity and cruelty towards Mauricius and his family, Gregory wrote him a letter, in which he says—"We have been hitherto most grievously afflicted; but the Almighty has chosen you, and placed you on the Imperial Throne, to banish, by your merciful disposition, all our afflictions and sorrows. Let the heavens, therefore, rejoice, let the earth leap for joy; let the people return thanks for so happy a change." Bower, Vol. 2, page, 533. In the same letter Gregory says—"May the Holy Ghost that DWELLS IN YOUR BREAST, ever guide and assist you."!!! Phocas commenced seeking the favour of Gregory, Bishop of Rome, because his wickedness did not meet with favour from the Bishop of Constantinople, who opposed his murderous projects against the family of Mauricius. "The Empress Constantina, and her three daughters, had fled for refuge to one of the churches of Constantinople. Phocas ordered them to be taken by force and publicly executed. But they found in the Patriarch Cyriacus, a kind friend and protector, who opposing with great resolution and courage, the execution of the order, would suffer no kind of violence to be offered them in their asylum." Bower, Vol. 2, page 537. From that time Phocas conceived a hatred of the Bishop of Constantinople, which the Bishop of Rome took the advantage of to gratify his own envy and hatred; hence he flattered the blood-thirsty tyrant, Phocas, and extolled him almost to a God. Gregory died in 604, on the 12th of March. If Phocas conferred on him the Title of Universal Bishop, Bower has not recorded it: though it appears that he took every opportunity to oppress the Bishop of Constantinople and exalt the Bishop of Rome. On the 13th of September, the same year that Gregory died, Sabianus was chosen to fill the vacancy of Bishop of Rome. He proved to be a wicked, avaricious, and cruel wretch, and was hated by the Roman people. He died, or was killed, Feb. 22d, 606. He was succeeded by Boniface III. His election, Bower supposes, was not till about one year after the death of Sabianus; yet he says, "no writer accounts for" so long "a vacancy." It is possible that the defect may be in the date of his election; and that it should have been 606 instead of 607.

With respect to Boniface, I shall give a copious extract from Bower, Vol. 2, page 545. "Boniface was a Deacon of the Roman Church; was a native of Rome, and sent by Gregory, in the year 603, to Constantinople, with the character of his Nuncio [Envoy or Messenger] to congratulate, in his name Phocas on his accession to the Imperial Crown. Upon the death of Gregory he returned to Rome: and Sabianus, dying soon after his return, he was chosen to succeed him, as one who was not only well known to Phocas, but greatly favoured both by him and his wife; for by flattering the usurper, as Gregory had done, and conniving at his cruelties, if not applauding him in them, while the rest of mankind exclaimed against him as an outrageous Tyrant, he had so insinuated himself into his good graces, as to become one of his chief favourites, or his only favorite, being the only person in the whole city of Constantinople, who approved, or could so dissemble as to make the tyrant believe that he approved of his conduct. For that merit alone Boniface was chosen; and though he enjoyed his new dignity but a short time, for he did not even live to the end of the year in which he was raised to it, yet it may truly be said, that to him alone the Roman See owes more than to all his predecessors together. For he no sooner found himself vested with the Papal Dignity, than, taking advantage of the partiality and favour of Phocas to him, and of his aversion and hatred to the Patriarch Cyriacus, he not only prevailed on the Tyrant to revoke the Decree, settling the Title of Universal Bishop on the Bishop of Constantinople, but obtained what no man could have believed could have ever come into the thoughts of a successor of Gregory to demand, were it not vouched by all the historians to a man; and obtained a new decree, settling on himself and successors, that very Title, which his immediate Predecessor but one, and all his Predecessors, the best and greatest, had so often condemned in any Bishop whatever, and rejected with the utmost abhorrence, when offered to himself, as vain, proud, profane, impious, execrable, blasphemous, anti-christian, heretical, diabolical. Boniface could not but know that the converted title had been thus stigmatised over and over again, by two of his Predecessors successively, Pelagius II. and Gregory. But so inconceivably great was his ambition, so utterly unbridled was his desire of exalting his See, that rather than let slip the favourable opportunity that now offered of raising it higher than it had ever yet been, or, in the opinion of his predecessors, ought ever to be, he chose to stand condemned, out of their mouths, as a Heretic, a follower of satan—a rival of satan in pride—and the forerunner of anti-Christ. The Edict issued by Phocas on this occasion has not reached our times; but that thereby the Decree of the Council of Constantinople in 588, entailing the Title of Universal Bishop on the Bishop of Constantinople, and his successors was revoked and annulled; that the said Title was transferred from them to Boniface, and his successors, and the Bishop of Rome declared the HEAD OF THE WHOLE CATHOLIC CHURCH, is what all the historians, whom I have quoted above, unanimously vouch. In the Bishop of Constantinople, the Title of Universal Bishop is generally thought to have been no more than a badge of honor, or an honorary title, without any accession of power. And it does not appear, that in virtue of that Title, he ever exercised or claimed any. But Boniface had scarce obtained it when he took upon him to exercise an answerable jurisdiction and power—a jurisdiction to that time [606 or 607] UNKNOWN and UNHEARD OF in the Catholic Church. No sooner was the Imperial Edict, vesting him with the title of Universal Bishop, and declaring him Head of the Church, brought to Rome, than he assembled a Council in the Basilic of St. Peter, consisting of 72 Bishops, 34 Presbyters, and all the Deacons, and Inferior Clergy of that city: he acted there as if he had not been invested with the title alone, but with all the POWER of an Universal Bishop—with all the AUTHORITY of a SUPREME HEAD; or, rather, ABSOLUTE MONARCH of the Church. By a Decree which he issued in that Council, it was pronounced, declared and defined that no election of a Bishop should thenceforth be deemed lawful and good, unless made by the people and clergy, approved by the Prince or Lord of the City, and CONFIRMED BY THE POPE interposing his authority in the following terms:—"WE WILL AND COMMAND." Thus was the power of the Pope, as Universal Bishop—as Head of the Church, or, in other words, the Papal Supremacy, first introduced."

Such appears to be the true history of Papal Supremacy. Whatever may be said of the acts of Justinian in 533 to 541, it is clear no Bishop of Rome claimed or exercised that power till the period brought to view by Bower, as briefly presented in the foregoing extracts. Now, unless the Papal Supremacy can be dated from the decree of the Council at Constantinople, 588, which is not at all probable, there is no point of time short of 604 to 607 for it. From that point 1260 years carry us to 1864 to 1867, as the time when Papacy is to meet the "Judgment" of the "Ancient of days" and "the time" comes "for the saints to possess the kingdom." We repeat what we have before said—the termination of the 1260 years marks the sum total of the existence of the "little horn," Dan. 7th, and not 45 years before. It will be "destroyed," and there ends its "time, times and dividing of time." We are satisfied that those who take any other view of the subject are doomed to be disappointed.

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, MAY, 1848.

ARE THE WICKED IMMORTAL?

"The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Bible.

VISIT TO MILVILLE.—The Editor of the Examiner spent eight days at Milville, New Jersey, during the month of April. He left this city at eight o'clock, A. M., passed down the Delaware Bay by steamboat, some sixty or seventy miles to the mouth of the Cohansey River; thence up that river twenty miles to Bridgeton; then ten miles by stage, arriving at the place of destination at six o'clock, P. M.; preached the same evening, and each successive evening during his stay, and three times on the Sabbath. He was most cordially received and entertained by Brother Jacob Johnson, who was formerly a Methodist Preacher, and much esteemed in the Methodist E. Church in that place, till he embraced the Scripture doctrines of the end of the wicked and sleep of the dead: finding he could not live in peace in that Church, he withdrew from it. His house has ever been a home for Preachers, and no good man, we should think, need feel any otherwise than at home there. Brother Chester, also once an Exhorter in the Methodist E. Church, is of like mind with Brother Johnson. The cry of "Infidel!" &c., was raised against them and others who avowed their faith in the Bible truth—"all the wicked will God destroy"—and that "the dead praise not the Lord." These brethren had desired the Editor of the Examiner to visit them for some months past, and the opposers began to think he would be among the things that are not present; but he came upon them in an hour they were not aware. He had a most candid hearing from those who were not too bigoted to hear; and there were many that did hear. The last evening, by special request, he addressed the "young men of Milville." The house was literally overflowing, and numbers could not get in. The things of the Kingdom of God were presented to their minds, and the high honour God designed to place upon them if they would make those things their first choice. After a discourse of nearly an hour and a half, the Lord's Supper was eaten by such as had a mind thereto, preceded by some remarks on what constituted a church, and by what authority each person partakes of the Supper. This closed up the labours of that campaign. The good effected remains to be seen. If we were to do like some others who describe the glories of their labours by the excitement and appearances at the time of their visits, we might conclude that "the cause" received a powerful impetus at Milville. Some attended the meetings throughout that never visit other places of worship—some who have been skeptical, were led to say they never saw the Bible in this light before. Universalists confessed their foundations were all broken up; and such reading their Bibles, and "searching the Scriptures," it was said, had "not been seen in Milville for twenty years." We are aware, however, that the excitement produced by the presentation of truths which before lay hid from the mind, or by the labours of a minister on an occasional visit, is not evidence that the ultimate results will be what the friends of truth may desire or hope. Herod heard John the Baptist "gladly, and did many things," and yet John's labour was ultimately lost upon him. We are to sow the seed. It will be a savor of life unto life to some, and of death unto death to others; and who is sufficient for these things? At any apparent success that may attend our labours in trying to do good, we have all therefore occasion to "rejoice with trembling." Most earnestly do we pray that those precious souls who gave such candid and earnest attention to the word spoken at Milville, may not have heard in vain, but have reason to rejoice in the day of the Lord that they were called by the truth of God to contemplate both their Maker and themselves in a light they had never before seen.

CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY, or the Constitution of Man in relation to Immortality and Eternal Life," is the title of a series of articles that Brother Walsh will furnish for the Examiner. We regret that the first number of the series came too late for our present number. If Brother Walsh is as interesting in the succeeding numbers as in the one on hand, we can promise our readers that they will get the worth of their year's subscription to the Examiner, in those articles alone. Do try, friends, to scatter our paper more widely, that others may be benefitted as well as yourselves. All new subscribers will have the Examiner sent them from the commencement of the present volume. We cannot consent to take subscribers on any other terms, at present, as we have printed a regular number each month, and do not wish to break a volume; especially, when the whole volume is but fifty cents.

AN ANTI-DESTRUCTIONIST.—We have received from a friend a copy of a truly remarkable document, from the pen of Abraham C. Raysor, which, we are informed, was published in "The Church Advocate," under the caption, "A correspondence between a Storrite and a believer in Bible Truth."

We beg leave to decline publishing it. How much edification our readers will lose by this determination, may be imagined by a specimen we will give of Mr. Raysor's belief and advocacy of "Bible Truth."

BIBLE TRUTH.

"When all the workers of iniquity do flourish, it is that they shall be destroyed forever." Ps. 92: 7.

"Thou castest them down into destruction." Ps. 73: 17.

"Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction." Matt. 7: 13.

"If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy." 1 Cor. 3: 17.

"Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord," &c. 2 Thess. 1: 9.

"Whose end is destruction." Phil. 3: 19. "All the wicked will He (God) destroy." Ps. 145: 20. Rev. 11: 18.

"What if God willing to shew his wrath," &c., "endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction." Rom. 9: 22.

"Fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Matt. 10: 28.

"Whoso despiseth the word shall be destroyed." Prov. 13: 13.

ABRAHAM C. RAYSOR.

"I tell you plainly that there are many things among the Advent believers that I do not believe in, and among others is that doctrine of soul and body resting in the grave, and soul-destroying and diabolical doctrine of destructionism, which I firmly believe had its origin in the infernal pit of hell."

"I tell you plainly, that at the coming of Christ, I would as soon be found a believer in the religion of Mahomet; or a worshipper of the idol Juggernaut, as to be found a believer in that soul-destroying, abominable doctrine of destructionism."

consequence; but his antagonism to that word which abideth forever, as exhibited above, demands his more serious consideration. We pray the merciful Lord to forgive the blasphemous effusions of his intemperate and erroneous zeal. H. C.

"REVOLUTION IN FRANCE."—Our article under that head was written immediately after the reception of the news of that event, but not in time for the last Examiner. The events in Europe since that time, made known by later arrivals, serve to strengthen our convictions that we have taken the true view of that subject; but, after all, time must determine: we dare not speak with too much positiveness: modesty becomes us all in speaking on unfulfilled prophecy, or prophecy that is not fully developed.

"THE BEAST AND IMAGE BEAST."—Br. Alling's "Exposition of the 13th Chapter of Revelation," has been received and read. We are obliged to him for the copy sent us. It is as good as most we have seen on the subject; but, we have never yet seen anything on the two horned beast and its image that has perfectly satisfied us; and confess that we are still learners on that topic. Br. Alling's view is, that "The Holy Alliance" constitutes the two horned beast, with England for one horn and Russia for the other. The number of the beast, 666, is not so easily disposed of. "Let him that hath wisdom" do it. We must confess that we strongly incline to the "Latin Kingdom," as giving anything of a tolerable solution of this point.

"DASH THEM IN PIECES."—Psa. 2: 9.

Who are to be dashed in pieces? Why, say those who believe the world is to be burned and every body but the saints burned up with it at the time of the second advent, "all the heathen are to be dashed to pieces, so that none of them will be left."

We reply, first.—Zechariah positively declares there will be "LEFT OF THE NATIONS" after the advent; and that too of men in the flesh. See Zech. 14: 16, to the end. The above construction, then, put upon the second Psalm, cannot be true. If the dashing of the heathen to pieces is what is spoken of, and breaking them with a rod of iron, then it must import the subjection under which they shall be brought to Christ and his government, as nations; which government it will be as impossible for them successfully to resist as for a potter's vessel to resist and withstand the blows of a rod of iron; so that it shall be true, as saith the prophet Isaiah, chap. 60: 12; "The nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea those nations shall be utterly wasted."

Mr. Raysor's opposition to "Storrites" is of little

But we are inclined to the opinion that the Psalmist is not speaking at all of the people of the nations, in the second Psalm, when he speaks of being broken with a rod of iron and dashed to pieces; but that he had special reference to the "kings, rulers and judges of the earth." They indeed hate to surrender their usurped authority to Christ "the King of kings." But "the decree" has gone forth, and in due time will be executed, and God will "set" or "anoint his king upon his holy hill of Zion," on "David's throne;" and Jesus Christ, the Son of God and the Son of David, will then "be the glory of thy people Israel," also, "a light to enlighten the Gentiles," who shall then especially be given to him for an "inheritance" with the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession; for "ALL NATIONS SHALL SERVE HIM;" Psa. 72: 11; and "He shall rebuke strong nations afar off, and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares," &c. Micah 4: 3.

Against this subjection to Israel's king, on the throne of his father David, "The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against the Lord, and against his ANOINTED;" and the result of their consultation is, that they will not submit to this new government. But, "the Lord shall have them in derision" for their pride and folly. "Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displeasure." His decree shall stand.—His Son shall have the kingdom under the whole heaven; and he shall "break them [viz. the opposing kings, rulers, and judges] with a rod of iron; he shall dash them to pieces like a potter's vessel."

That this is the true meaning of the Psalmist is evident from what immediately follows, viz: "Be wise now, therefore, O ye kings, be instructed, ye judges of the earth; serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling; kiss the Son, [submit to him] lest he be angry and ye perish," &c. Thus it appears, it is the kings, rulers and judges, of the earth who conspire against the purpose of God that his Son shall be King, and that all nations shall serve him, who are to be broken with the rod of iron and dashed in pieces, if they do not heed the counsel to submit themselves to the government of the king on David's throne. We look upon the 7th and 8th verses of the second Psalm as a parenthesis which includes the decree that aroused the kings and rulers of the earth to resistance; but, they are informed that their rage is vain, and that unless they peaceably submit to the Son of David, the king on the holy hill of Zion will destroy them. This being the case, there is nothing in this Psalm to counterbalance the notion that all men, except the saints, are to be cut off from the earth at the time of the second advent; and that notion is a most palpable contradiction of many of the most explicit and plain prophecies in the Bible.

THE REVOLUTION IN FRANCE.

We approach this subject with views and feelings different from many of our contemporaries. We look at it in the light of prophecy, and believe it may be the commencement of the fulfilment of several. Two in particular will engage our attention at this time. The first is Daniel 2: 31—45. The second is Rev. 16th. In Dan. 2d, we have described what may be called four universal monarchies, or kingdoms—the head of gold; which is Babylon: the breast and arms of silver; or the Medo-Persian kingdom: the belly and sides of brass; or Grecian kingdom: the legs of iron, or the Roman kingdom: then, the feet and toes; or the Roman kingdom in its divided state, which divisions occurred in the fifth and sixth centuries, and have since that time increased to a multitude of lesser divisions. In this divided state of the fourth, or Roman Kingdom; when there are many divisions into kingdoms, and when though "they mingle with the seed of men," by the various Sovereigns inter-marrying with each other's families, but cannot for all that "cleave one to another," then, in those days "shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom," or the fifth universal Monarchy, which is to "fill the earth and stand forever." To prepare the way for this last Monarchy, or Kingdom, "a stone rent from a mountain [so the Septuagint reads] without hands" is to smite the feet and toes of the image, "which were of iron and potter's clay, and at last break them to pieces." The smiting process is first, but "at last" [Septuagint] the breaking takes place; and after those monarchies are destroyed, the kingdom and empire of God will be fully developed and fill the whole earth. The stone, we think, represents principles which were to act upon the thrones of despots by a continuous smiting, till under the power thereof the whole system of despotic governments, whether civil or ecclesiastical, shall be broken to pieces and be carried away like the dust of the summer's threshing floor: then those principles are to have a final embodiment in the establishment of the Kingdom of God, that is to succeed the present monarchies of the eastern world. The stone was rent from a mountain without hands; indicating that it was a work dependant more upon God, than any agency he might employ. It was rent from the mountain not in the time of either of the universal monarchies, but in the divided state of the fourth: it was at that point in the prophecy the stone was seen rent from its lofty height. We are compelled to the conclusion, from present light, that the stone represents the principles of man's individual responsibility to God—his right to think, and to speak the convictions of his own mind untrammelled by civil or ecclesiastical despots. A long night of darkness had hung over the world on this subject: so deep was it that in the 12th, 13th and 14th centuries it was death to read the Scriptures in the language of the people. The great principle of man's right to read, think, and speak, responsible to God alone, was "rent" out by Martin Luther and the Reformers, as God's instruments to smite the image upon what was at that time, and still is, its feet. Those principles are a living, active, unyielding, and mighty engine, in the providence of God, to smite every species of despotism, till "at last" the image shall be destroyed and no place found for it. Those principles after struggling long in Europe for a resting place, took refuge in America, and here had a partial embodiment in the "Declaration of Independence," a noble instrument, and though disgraced and belied by the practice of this nation, yet it has stood as a continual rebuke to tyrants here and elsewhere. It has acted with such power on the European Despotisms as to shake every throne in the old Roman Empire; all of which are as certainly to crumble to dust by this operation as that prophecy cannot fail. All men see that those monarchies are falling: but few see that prophecy foretold that it should be so; nor do they see what is to follow their fall: they think it is to be Republicanism; but prophecy will develop another destiny for Europe and the world.

We now turn to Rev. 16th. There we find at the pouring out of the seventh vial, of the seven last plagues, which fill up the wrath of God, on the fourth, or divided kingdom, that there is "a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon earth, so mightily an earthquake and so great." Earthquake, in symbolical prophecy, denotes Revolution. As this revolution is to exceed all that has gone before it, we think we may safely conclude that it is the same as that denoted in Dan. 2d, by the breaking of the image, or the entire and final overthrow of European monarchies, and the shaking of all civil and ecclesiastical despotism to pieces. The present French Revolution may be the first shock of that "great earthquake," under the seventh and last vial. We do not affirm that it is, we wait for further developments before we decide.

The question will here arise—Why should the present revolution be considered the commencement of the "great earthquake" more than the revolution of 1789 or 1830, seeing the transactions of the former far exceeded in their calamities those of 1848? To this we answer: The French Revolution of 1789, was indeed an earthquake, but it was not, and, in the order of prophecy, could not be the great one spoken of as taking place under the seventh vial; because, at that time, the sixth vial, which was to "dry up the great river Euphrates"—the Ottoman or Mohammedan power, was not then poured out, nor did it begin to be till the Greek revolution, or about 1821. The French revolution of 1830, was still too early, as the effects of the sixth vial were not then so far developed as to make it certain what were to be its effects on Mohammedanism; but that is now settled: the Ottoman power is broken, never to recover. Under the sixth vial was also to come up a spirit of jealousy and rivalry among "the kings of the earth," or old Roman Empire: see Rev. 16: 13, 14. Under the sixth vial there was likewise to be a note of warning—"Behold I come as a thief," &c., which note of warning, it is evident, from what follows in the prophecy, would be generally disregarded: that note of warning has been given, in Europe first, and then in America. In the mean time great preparations have been making for war, either offensive or defensive; and the nations are all ready for the conflict; each dreading it, and yet all fearing it, particularly in Europe. We must then be very near the pouring out of the Seventh Vial if it has not actually commenced. Whether the present French revolution is the first shock of that great earthquake to be under this vial, or whether like the two previous ones only the fore-runners of the final shock, a few months will enable us to determine.

As to the results of the Revolution to take place in Europe, when all the monarchies there are to be broken to pieces, we are of opinion, that whatever efforts may be made to mould new governments, after the model of the United States, they will prove abortions; and that the whole continent of Europe will be in such a state of anarchy as will make all the people desire a deliverer from some quarter; but none who disregard prophecy can tell from what quarter deliverance will come. Here we call attention to the prophecy of Haggai, chap. 2: 21, 22: "I will shake the heavens and the earth; And I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathens: and I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them: and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother." Now see verses 6 and 7: "For thus saith the Lord of hosts, Yet, once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land. And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come."

Here the state, both ecclesiastically and civilly, of the nations is described: shaken to pieces—knowing what to do with themselves—desiring a deliverer—but, ignorant where he is to come from, and yet he appears. Paul, in his Epistle to the Hebrews, applies this prophecy to the time of the establishment of the immovable kingdom of God; Heb. 12: 26—28; or, in other words—to the second advent of Christ, when the kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdom of our God and his Christ, whose "reign" is to be "forever and ever."

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

In the last Examiner we gave an article from the Sunday Dispatch, relating to the Rothschilds having purchased Palestine, or its being under mortgage to them. As the Rothschilds are Jews, and as they had, and are likely to have, much to do with the events that close up the present age, we have thought our readers might be as much interested with the following account of this remarkable house as we have been.

"In the year 1740, in a little Jewish settlement in 'Frankfort-on-the-Maine,' dwelt a family of poor but respectable Jew Pedlars, and in that year they were blessed with a son whom they called Mayer Anselm Rothschild. They gave him what education their small means would permit, but, dying when he was at the age of eleven, left him to his own resources. He then earned a scanty living by writing, which he soon abandoned for a trade. But his ambition was to be a priest of his religion. Fortunately for tottering dynasties of the present day, this was not accomplished. His trade required him to travel; and after some years he returned to his native place and established a small business. He soon, however, gained considerable notoriety as a collector of old and curious coins, which brought him much in contact with persons of rank, among whom it was fashionable to make such collections; and finally he went to Hanover, as a clerk in a large house. Subsequently, with a few years' savings, he returned to Frankfort, married, and commenced a little exchange business. His great sagacity, strict punctuality and rectitude of conduct, pushed him rapidly forward, and towards the close of the century the Frankfort banking house had become famous and the profits large. The banker in the meantime had brought up ten children, of whom five sons were 'after his own heart,' and when he died left them vast wealth and extensive business, with the injunction to dwell in strict and unbroken unity. And the injunction then bestowed has been faithfully carried out. The five sons conducted as many banking houses at the leading capitals of Europe. They were as follows: The eldest, Anselm, was born in 1773, and was the most substantial citizen of Frankfort, and, representing the father, was the head of the whole operations of the house. The second, Solomon, born in 1774, became a citizen of Vienna, where he is held in high estimation as a man, as well as a member of the most stupendous banking house in the world. The fourth son, Charles, was born in 1788, and has, since 1821, conducted the house at Naples, where his popularity is equal to any of his brothers. The youngest son, Jacob, was born in 1792, and is the banker for Paris, where he maintains a splendor that eclipses most of the princes of Europe. The third son we have yet to mention. Nathan, who was born in 1777, and became the head of the London house in 1798, and was in every intellectual respect a giant. It was observed of him that should he share in the chase it could only be to hunt elephants.

These five houses, combining all the financial resources of Europe in their movements, which are always simultaneous, have exercised for fifty years a power unseen, but overwhelming. Nearly all the government debts of Europe are of their contracting. Through the wars of Bonaparte their information was always correct, and always in advance of the British government, which was often a dependent upon them for information, as well as for means of action. Although their residences were always widely separated, each controlling all means of information, no important transaction was entered into without consultation and strict harmony of opinion among them all. Commercial exchanges and all movements of business were often known to and controlled by the old Jew in Frankfort, who could in the exercise of his great power, look with contempt upon feeble despots crying to him for help; and the aid asked depended on the assent of the five brothers. Accordingly they were courted in every possible way. In 1813 they were made private commercial counsellors to the Hessian government; also the Austrian Emperor, who conferred on them the rank of Barons. In 1836 Nathan died, leaving £63,000,000, and seven children, of whom four were sons. The eldest, Lionel, who had been made Knight of Isabella by the Catholics at Madrid, and who is a Baron of Austria, in right of his father, appeared in 1836, on the London Change in the place his father had occupied for thirty-eight years.

Such is a brief history of this remarkable family. But we have not yet done with our remarks upon the Rothschilds. Lionel, the last mentioned in the foregoing account, was recently elected a member of Parliament; and a change in the British Constitution was necessary to admit a Jew to Legislative honours and privileges: the amendment was made. What next? Recently, the English were compelled to yield the legal restrictions on the issue of the Bank of England, because the Baron Rothschild threatened to withdraw his deposits unless the Ministry changed the law; and again the Saxon was compelled to yield to the Jew. Then what? Why—the Jewish civil disabilities must be removed in England, that they may arise there to all the rights and privileges of other men; and it is done. They are no longer to be “trodden under foot” in England.

The prosperity of the Rothschilds in the present employment of their immense wealth, depends upon the stability of the thrones of Europe: and a short time before the fall of Louis Philippe, the House of Rothschilds loaned the King of the French the money supposed to be sufficient to keep him on his throne; but that throne has fallen, and the other thrones of Europe tremble ready to fall. The Rothschilds cannot fail of seeing that those governments will be but poor security for the immense loans they have made them. Will that House look on and see these Monarchies sink, and allow their riches to be lost by the crumbling dynasties, and make no move to put their wealth in a place of safety? We cannot believe it. But, where shall they invest their immense substance? Their eyes must be turned to Palestine; and the re-establishing of a Government of their own; and the gathering of their own people, the Jews, must, in the natural course of things, become a favorite project with the Rothschilds. Their wealth and political power fully prepares them for such an undertaking. That movement, of itself, would hasten the downfall of European thrones, from the fact that the withdrawal of their funds from those governments would produce a financial crisis that must overthrow the Monarchies of Europe.

Since the above was written, we have clipped the following items from different papers relating to the Rothschilds.

“There is no money to form a coalition against France, and the Jews will lend none—nay more, the Jews have none to lend; for who can tell where the Messrs. Rothschilds are going, if they continue to identify their fortunes with the success of royalty? * * * * Without a Jew, Metternich and Nesselrode are but rusty wheels in a worn out machinery. In vain are the promises of Emperors and Kings, if not endorsed by a Jew, and hundreds of thousands of bayonets cannot raise a dollar.”—Wash. Cor. Ledger.

“Three months since, the house of Rothschilds took the French loan, of about ten millions sterling at 75*fr.*, 25*cs.*; 47*fr.* was the price at Paris on the 8th of March.”—Liverpool Cor. N. Y. Herald.

“Baron Rothschilds was notified yesterday to leave Paris, which he declined to do; but he immediately sent the new government twenty-five million francs, which will, perhaps, cause the order to be modified or withdrawn.”—Paris Cor. N. Y. Herald, “Feb. 26.”

“Baron Rothschild was not ordered, but advised by the timid, to leave the city; but he did not enter into their fears, and has made himself useful since to the government and people.”—Ibid, Paris, Feb. 28.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

The Extracts of Letters in our March number pleased some of our friends, in Philadelphia, so well, that they have specially requested us to give them more. To gratify such, we have prepared another selection for this number, larger than before.

A HARD CASE: Br. C. Morley writes:—“I was somewhat amused the other morning at the manner in which the head of the family where I board—a member of the Dutch Reformed Church—read the 37th Psalm at family worship. He read to the 20th verse, to the clause—“The enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of Lambs,” and there he stopped in the middle of the verse. Of course, he considered the remaining part of the verse—“they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away,” rank heresy, dangerous for his family to hear read! What a heretic David must have been! And what a heretical book the Bible must be, as it does not conform to that superior authority—the man-made creeds! What is the remedy? For “great” are the creeds of the sects! Why, either all the bibles in Christendom must be expurgated or burned, or the creed-idols must fall, if time rolls on a few years in the present dispensation.”

It was said, some years ago, in our native town, that a Universalist there had actually erased from his bible, all the threatenings against the wicked: so that, when any one quoted those threatenings his answer was—“That is not in my Bible.” The opponents of the doctrine—“The dead praise not the Lord,” and “all the wicked will God destroy,”—“they shall be as though they had not been,” may as well begin to follow in the footsteps of the aforesaid Universalist; for they will find it just as difficult, from God's Bible, to maintain the endless misery doctrine, as he did to prove Universalism, till he manufactured that book into my Bible. Creeds of men may prove the soul's natural immortality—God's Book never can: they might just as well try to make it read, “God so hated the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever did not believe in him should have everlasting life:” and add—“It is written”—“Ye shall not surely die.”

Dr. A. DOOLITTLE, New York, writes:—

When you sent me the first lecture on the destruction of the wicked, from Albany, [1842,] I read but a little of it. I was grieved to think you had run into so great an error. I laid it down, and did not take it up again until you sent me the second lecture, I looked at it, and behold these words, in large letters, stared me full in the face: “ARE THE WICKED IMMORTAL?” I thought, what does this mean? I had never heard the question before. I read it through, and then hunted up the first, and read that through. I was surprised. Let me tell you, if it had not been for these large capitals arresting my attention, I do not know when I should have seen the truth; and many more have been arrested by the same. Can you not place them on your paper where they may be seen? They will do good; they strike one's mind with great force.

I praise the Lord that you were made an instrument in his hand, of leading my mind to embrace this truth; to Him be all the glory, Amen. It was a good while before I could believe that when a man dies, if he was a Christian, but what he was alive for evermore. But, I soon found, that man had no life but in Christ; for He is the resurrection and the life—that the dead know not anything—in the very day he dies his thoughts perish; but, praise the Lord, when he who is our life shall appear, we shall appear with him in glory; and not before. The pernicious doctrine, that when a Christian dies he goes to heaven and receives his reward, is doing great damage to souls. “Get ready for death!” Why, death, as a consideration for repentance to sinners, is not to be found in the Bible. We have great cause to be thankful that the Lord has caused us to see the truth.

I think the coming of the Lord is very near. I will refer to Luke, 21st chapter. “On the earth distress of nations, with perplexity, the seas and waves roaring;” or, as some say, “the seas and inland waters agitated,” and men's hearts failing them for fear, and looking after those things that are coming on the earth, for, or because, “the powers of the heavens should be shaken.” Now, is it not the shaking of the power of the heavens that produces the effects on men here spoken of? And if I am correct, is not the coming of the Son of man the next event? And may we not look for it daily? I want to understand the truth, for nothing else can do us good; may the Lord guide us into the truth, and prepare us for the great event, Amen.

In accordance with Brother Doolittle's suggestion, we have inserted the question “ARE THE WICKED IMMORTAL?” at the head of our editorial department, with the Bible answer, there to remain, for opposers to reply to or scoff at, as is most agreeable to them.

Br. THOS. P. HEDRICK, Laurel, Indiana, writes:—

If God has called us to the work of proclaiming the second advent of His Son, he has also put it into our hearts to exhibit the state of the dead and the end of the wicked, which important doctrines show the necessity of his coming, for man is dependant on the second coming of Christ and the resurrection for all future existence after death; and if there be no resurrection of the dead, then they that have fallen asleep in Christ are perished. I am glad you have associated with you, in the editorial of the Examiner, Brother Walsh, as it will enable you to publish more largely, and present a variety of matter upon those valuable subjects. “Dig deep,” brethren, for the truth: it is the truth alone which sanctifies us, and glorifies our heavenly Father. The Examiner is just what the reading community want; and how thankful we ought to feel that we have been conducted after God's way into this glorious light; God is light, and in him is no darkness at all; and while I can approach this light, and enjoy such sweet intercourse with its divine source, I fear not the charge of Infidelity, neither do I regard it; but as I have freely received of the Lord, I will endeavour to do something to roll on the glad tidings of the coming of our Redeemer, and the destruction of all his enemies, and the restitution of those things spoken of by the Holy Prophets.

Will you, in some future number of the Exam-her, take up this subject, the restitution spoken of by the Prophets, and show us what you consider is to be restored—cite us to the prophecies which speak of it, and go into it fully? It is a subject very much needed at this time, in order to correct the mistakes into which the churches have all fallen.

BR. R. E. LADD, Cabotville, Mass., writes:—

BROTHER STORRS: I am greatly edified by the Examiner. My heart sympathizes with its general character better than with any other paper extant. May God bless you in your efforts to spread Scriptural Truth. I rejoice that you are so much encouraged; and that a better feeling is prevailing among Christians towards the Truth of God. We are still holding on our way, and occasionally having additions to our ranks. Several have been converted to God and to the whole truth (or to a readiness to receive it,) within a short time past.

Accompanying the above, Brother Ladd sent us eleven new subscribers; which, with the twenty he became responsible for previously, makes thirty-one he has furnished us since the commencement of the present volume. Who will go and do likewise? Several others have done nobly also; for which they have our thanks.

BR. DANIEL BEACH, Chelton, N. Y., writes:—

BROTHER STORRS: I feel very thankful to you for the Examiner. I always read it with a great interest. When it comes I do not know how to lay it down until I have read it through. When I first got hold of the "Six Sermons," I was strongly prejudiced against your views; and my wife was so afraid that I should be led astray, she hid them for some time; but before I had got through reading them, my prejudice was all gone; and now my wife and myself are both as firm believers in the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked as any part of the Bible; and also the unconscious state of the dead. How many passages in the Bible teach us that the dead know not any thing; but, O, that tradition in which we have been trained: how much it has done to keep us in the dark, and blind our minds from the truth of the Bible.

BR. EZRA CROWELL, Bowdoinham, Me., writes:—

BROTHER STORRS: The Examiner is received. It's just the thing we need at this time. It is indeed to me like cold water to a thirsty soul. It is solid meat upon which one can feed for weeks. I rejoice that the time has come that you can publish regularly. This is what I have long desired. I have no doubt you will soon be able to present us with an enlarged semi-monthly. Your paper needs only to be known, to be appreciated by the lovers of Bible truth. This cause has suffered some in this region for the want of able advocates; but, I rejoice that so many able pens and voices are being raised up to promulgate and defend the truth.

BR. BENJAMIN TILLEY, Bristol, R. I., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—I have received your paper, and have been highly gratified in perusing the contents. I find those subjects discussed in an able manner that I consider of vital importance, and they have long occupied much of my study and reflection; and I have been for some time trying, according to my best ability, to defend them; and I think we have arrived at a point when we can see clearly the force of our Saviour's admonition, "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life."

BR. SAM'L BROWN, Milwaukee, Wis., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—It is with pleasure that I receive monthly the Examiner. Whilst I have the satisfaction of reading it, I wish to aid in publishing it. There are a few of us here, that are not tied to any sect nor paper; but, we love our Bibles and love to receive light from any and all that can give it, without being prejudiced against any. You will excuse me for not writing in terms of praise of you or your paper, for I have seen so much of such writing that it disgusts me. I think the best way a brother can show his approbation of a paper is to send the money to sustain it. We are trying to live, with our lamps trimmed and burning, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ.

BR. HENRY SMITH, Addison, Vt., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—Ever since I became a subscriber for the Bible Examiner, I have received it regularly every month; have read and examined it candidly and prayerfully, I hope, and it has been the means of inducing me to read and search the scriptures more than I have ever done before, in the same length of time, and I must say, as an honest man, that I am strongly inclined to believe the doctrine of the unconscious state of the dead, and the final destruction of the wicked, (at the second death,) to be a Bible doctrine; and the interest I have heretofore had in reading the Examiner and comparing it with the bible, has by no means abated.

BR. TRUMAN GRANDT, Vergennes, Vt., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—I have received the three first Nos. of the present volume of the Bible Examiner, for which I feel grateful. I have read those through with much interest.

How glorious does the doctrine of the resurrection appear, when we can see that "they who have fallen asleep in Christ are perished" without it? Which doctrine cannot be true; and Paul was greatly in error; and they who have fallen asleep in Christ are "not perished," if indeed (as orthodox theology (?) teaches us,) they have gone home to Heaven and happiness at death, or, when they fall asleep. O! how we have been spoiled, through "philosophy and vain deceit." How long received for "doctrines" the "commandments of men." Yours, in hope of Eternal Life.

BR. R. L. PARTINER, Mayville, Ohio, writes:—

BR. STORRS:—I am heartily thankful for the Examiner, and think that I have gained much light from it. To give you a little of my experience I will say—that I was awakened up to the subject of the sleep of the dead by the word let fall in a sermon, which was some four years ago; and since that time I have been examining the Bible on that subject and others, and became convinced that the dead must sleep; but I did not discover the relationship existing between that doctrine, and that of life and death, yet I had discovered that orthodox preachers treated the subject in such a commingled light, that it amounted to utter confusion. On the depths of the prejudice of education. I did not know half its strength. The orthodox cry here is "Infidelity;" &c. Some speak not knowing any better, others not wishing to know better. But there are some that will read and listen. Oh that men would let their common understandings bear on this matter, and not listen so much to the clergy; for it is so plain that "he that runs may read," if the mind is not previously cramped by a theory.

The cause here looks brighter every day. Many are willing to listen to arguments and the simple truths of the Book. We have preaching on the subject of the Kingdom once in two weeks, and a prayer meeting weekly. The preaching is by Bro. Lyons, who labours here and through the adjacent country; and we can say, as one Bro. in the last Examiner said, if we have not changed the profession of some, "we have changed their prayers."

BRS. Z. SMITH and WM. MOSS, Elberton, Ga., write:

BR. STORRS:—Continue to us the Bible Examiner. We do not wish them stopped, as we like them well, and think the doctrine they contain the best we ever read. We think the Examiner is opening the eyes of some here, and we expect to get you more subscribers shortly.

BR. D. B. ELDRED, Homer, Mich., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—I am glad to hear that ministers are coming to the truth on the state of the dead and end of the wicked. One in this State, Br. Manings Curry, has lately embraced the truth, and is now preaching Life and Death to the people.

BR. J. P. PRITCHARD, Mocksville, N. C., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—I am much pleased with your paper, and shall do all I can to obtain subscribers. The sermons you were pleased to give me last fall, when in the city, I have distributed wherever I thought they would be read and do good. I have some on hand yet, and shall hand them out whenever I see they will be read. I am pleased that you have associated with you Br. Walsh.

Had man not have sinned he would not have died, but would have inherited the earth forever; but, in consequence of sin producing death, the resurrection is, in one sense, a doctrine of necessity; for, without it the original design of God would have been frustrated—men would have died—and the earth would have to be peopled by another creation. But, in the resurrection we see both the wisdom and power of Jehovah; it is a glorious truth, and to the child of God that hope that supports him amid all the ills that fall to our lot in this world. Were it not for that, truly, of all men they would be the most miserable.

My brother-in-law has been lately excluded from the Baptist church near this place, for his belief of the truth; and after his exclusion earnestly entreated to give up his views and return to the church, they believing him to be a Christian.

DR. I. F. LEE, Meltonville, N. C., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—I received six copies of the six sermons, and three numbers of the Bible Examiner for the present year. Enclosed are five dollars, which you will place to my credit. Send me six copies more of the six sermons.

I am very busy, professionally, as they say in this country, and have little or no time to spare at this moment.

One preacher of the denomination to which I belong (Baptist,) has been excluded lately for his belief in the doctrine advanced in your sermons. I am well acquainted with him, and know him to be a man of piety and consistency—a Christian to all human appearance. But I will write to you again ere long, and, I trust, shall have something interesting to mention.

BR. A. N. SEYMORE, Plymouth, Mich., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—I have been engaged in proclaiming the glad tidings of the speedy coming of Christ for nearly four years past, and I feel weighed down under the solemn impression of the truth, that it is soon to be witnessed by an astonished world; and my soul cries out, what manner of persons ought we to be who profess to be looking for such momentous events, as the appearing of Christ, the renovation of the earth, the destruction of the wicked, &c. None but the pure in heart can see God in peace; none but those who are willing to sacrifice all for Christ, and his truth will be able to stand before him in peace, without spot and blameless in that day. God grant we may purify our hearts by obeying the truth, for we are sanctified and purified through the truth. There are truths advocated by you, and many of the Advent brethren that have not had their proper influence on my mind till within a few months past. The reason why they have not, are quite numerous, but, I fear, not very weighty. A short time since, my mind became settled relative to the sleep of the saints, and the destruction of the wicked; and while travelling from place to place, to preach the glad tidings of the kingdom nigh at hand, we have placed these truths prominently before our hearers, and many have rejoiced in these righteous sentiments, as well as those concerning the coming of the Lord. After the darkness was past, and my mind became clear on these subjects, I wondered with astonishment, that I cherished the old theory as long as I did. It is utterly impossible for me to believe in the common theory, with the light I now have on this subject. "The righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, much more the sinner and the wicked." Their recompense is to be punished according to the deeds done in the body. "Burnt up root and branch"—"consumed soul and body," and "be as though they had not been." I can reconcile the Bible in this way and no other. My Bible is becoming more and more consistent, more and more beautiful and glorious, praise the Lord. We have just closed a series of meetings, in which some twelve or fifteen have taken a decided stand upon these questions, and many more have been favourably impressed, and have commenced searching the scriptures for a decision. I fear not the result of their investigation. The ministers do all they can to oppose, by crying "Wolf, wolf," "Infidelity," &c. But we take a decided stand, and give them the liberty of meeting us in private or public on those questions. As yet we have not the pleasure of accepting an invitation to discuss these important Bible doctrines. God's truth is mighty and will prevail. Amen.

Yours in hope of speedy immortality and Eternal Life.

BR. N. A. HITCHCOCK, Tyler, Ill., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—I obtained, not long since, a copy of the Bible Examiner, and perused its contents. I became satisfied that the truth, as therein presented, might accomplish much good. I know of several in this place, who have been rescued from Universalism: and had not the plain truth, respecting the state of the dead and the end of the wicked, been set before their minds, they doubtless would have remained still in their sins. You say, "you intend, by the grace of God, to be kept free from that bigotry which thinks no light can be elicited beyond that now enjoyed." I would be glad to always occupy that place myself. I would most ardently pray to be led into all truth. I never felt the necessity more than at the present time, of standing free, believing the true Church is composed of all true believers. There are about twenty in this place, most of whom I have evidence are serving God according to the light they have. We take the word and Spirit as our rule of action, and acknowledge no scriptural name as appropriate to the household of faith.

BR. A. B. MAGRUDER, Charlottesville, Va., writes:—

TO THE EDITORS OF THE BIBLE EXAMINER:—I read your paper with both pleasure and profit, and knew not until your association of Br. Walsh in the editorial department, that the "Examiner" was still published. Several years ago, it fell into my hands, and I derived no little light and instruction from your (Br. Storrs') "Six Sermons." The perusal of these, stimulated me to further inquiry, and resulted in my conviction of the truth of the doctrine of the ultimate destruction of the wicked, a point which, though for years previous a disciple of Christ, I had never thoroughly understood. Since then, being in the midst of infidels and opposers, both "orthodox" and aliens, I have deemed it due to the truth I held, to put forth some defence of its claims. This I did by the publication, last year, of a pamphlet entitled "Truth tested by Scripture."

BR. JOHN T. RICHARDSON, Newburyport, Mass., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—I was informed by a friend last week, that you was publishing a periodical in pamphlet form. I wish you to send me a copy, with the back numbers. I have your "Six Sermons" on the end of the wicked, and the state of the dead.

There is a church of Advent believers in this place, well united and prosperous. Nearly all of them believe with you in the end of the wicked, and the intermediate state of the dead.

THE EDITOR of this paper preaches every Lord's day at COMMISSIONERS' HALL, Third street, below Green, east side; at 10, A. M., and in the evening at 7 o'clock.

THE "SIX SERMONS" on the End of the Wicked, &c., can be had at No. 21 North Sixth street, or of the Author, 18 Chester street, between Race and Vine, 8th and 9th. Price, in Pamphlet 15 cents, or ten copies for $1.00. The pamphlet includes the views of the author on the question, "Have the dead knowledge?" The Sermons advocate the doctrine, that "All the wicked will God destroy," or, cause them to cease from life, after the judgment.

"THE ASPECTS OF PHRENOLOGY ON REVELATION; OF, Materialism, Fatalism, Regeneration, Creeds, Atheism, The operation of the Holy Spirit in the conversion of men, and HUMAN RESPONSIBILITY, Philosophically considered, in a series of Lectures," By J. T. WALSH. Such is the Title of an Octavo pamphlet of 74 page, published by Br. Walsh, Richmond, Va., 1846. For sale at 21 North Sixth street, Philadelphia, Pa. Price 25 cents.

CONSOLATIONS FOR THE LONELY.

BY MARY HOWITT.

There is a land where beauty cannot fade,
Nor sorrow dim the eye,
Where true love shall not droop, nor be dismayed,
And none shall ever die;
Where is that land, O where?
For I would hasten there;
Tell me—I fain would go,
For I am weary with a heavy woe!
The beautiful have left me all alone;
The true, the tender, from my path have gone!
O guide me with thy hand,
If thou dost know that land,
For I am burthened with oppressive care,
And I am weak and fearful with despair;—
Where is it? Tell me where.

Friend, thou must trust in him who trod before
The desolate paths of life;
Must bear in meekness, as he meekly bore,
Sorrow, and pain, and strife!
Think how the Son of God
These thorny paths hath trod;
Think how he longed to go,
Yet tarried off, for thee, the appointed wo.
Think of his weariness in places dim,
Where no man comforted or cared for him!
Think of the blood-like sweat,
With which his brow was wet;
Yet how he prayed unaided and alone,
In that great agony, "Thy will be done!"
Friend do not thou despair;
Christ, from his heaven of heavens, will hear thy prayer.

THE MAGNETIC TELEGRAPH.

BY JAMES GILBORNE LYONS, LL. D.

Along the smooth and slender wires,
The sleepless heralds run,
Fast as the clear and living rays
Go streaming from the sun:
No peals or flashes heard or seen,
Their wondrous flight betray,
And yet their words are plainly felt,
In cities far away.

But faster still than tidings borne
On that electric cord,
Rise the pure thoughts of him who loves
The Christian's life and Lord—
Of him who, taught in smiles and tears,
With fervent lips to pray,
Maintains high converse here on earth
With bright worlds far away.

Ay! though nor outward wish is breathed,
Nor outward answer given,
The sighing of that humble heart
Is known and felt in heaven:
Those long frail wires may bend and break;
Those viewless heralds stray;
But Faith's least word shall reach the throne
Of God, though far away.

CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY;

OR, THE CONSTITUTION OF MAN, IN RELATION TO IMMORTALITY AND ETERNAL LIFE.

No. I.

"What is man?" This question has been variously answered by skeptics, infidels, and theologians. One replies, he is an Angel—a God. Another, that he is a demon. Another, still, that he is the offspring of chance, and that his "death is an eternal sleep." And still another, that he is immortal, destined to live in God's presence in the enjoyment of inexpressible happiness, or to burn in hell through the endless succession of ages!

Thus, "the world by wisdom knew not God." "They became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish hearts were darkened. Professing to be wise, they became fools." The schools of India and Egypt were the prolific sources of "philosophy falsely so called;" and Pythagoras and Plato its great masters. They predicated immortality upon the nature of man, and argued that he was constitutionally in possession of an immaterial, incorruptible essence, which was a part of the Deity; and that its destiny was transmigration, and a final absorption into the "Soul of the Universe." When christianity was popularized, ascended the throne, and was clothed with secular power, this dogma of Paganism was amalgamated with pure christianity, and thus the latter was rendered more acceptable, in the adulterated form, to the stupid and licentious admirers of a "vain philosophy." Since that period, the same dogma has been handed down through the dark ages, being transmitted from sire to son—from priest to people—from school to school, until, like a mighty and deadly stream, its waters have poisoned the hearts and heads of all mankind; corrupted every science, and nullified and stultified the truth of God! This pagan tradition now constitutes the soul—the life and spirit of every sect in christendom. It is preached from every pulpit in the land, taught in every lecture room, inculcated in every school, and distilled into the youthful mind in every family!

Every science is tinged with it. The astronomer contemplates the unnumbered worlds, revolving in the immensity of space, as the abode of his departed spirit; and talks of "gaining worlds beyond the skies." He, vainly thinks, his departed ghost, on some errand of mercy or inquest of knowledge, will pass from world to world, and be lost in the contemplation of the grandeur, sublimity and beauty of Jehovah's works! The physiologist, while he examines the organization of the human machine, imagines that he is contemplating the "clay tenement of an immortal soul." The phrenologist, as he dissects the human brain, and unfolds its beautiful convolutions, in imagination beholds within its anfractuositities evidences of the deathless nature of that "divine essence"—that life imparting and thought-producing spirit that once animated it!

And thus it is, that every Medical School and Theological Seminary, and College of Literature, is made a fountain of corruption, deep and wide, to the human mind. And, not only so, but even the political prints, as they chronicle the demise of some political leader or military chieftain, speak of their exchanging the honors of civil and military life, for the rich honors and evergreen laurels of the paradise of God. For, in their wisdom, they eulogize to heaven the man whose hands have been washed a thousand times in the warm gushing blood, fresh from the heart of his fellow man!

And, not only this, but even the babe upon the knee of its mother, is taught to lisp the delusive doctrine of congenital immortality!

Seeing, then, that in every department of society, in all the streams of social life—in all the ramifications of religious and political systems, this deplorable delusion is taught by pens and unnumbered tongues, are we not justifiable in making one effort to dispel the delusion, and to pour into the minds of our readers the light of christian philosophy? Should we not meet error on its own ground, and, if possible, drive it from the field? Certainly we should! Let us, then, draw the sword, throw the scabbard to the winds, and do battle for the truth. The truth has nothing to fear in any investigation. Truth seeks the light, while error shrouds itself in the gloom of pagan darkness!

This doctrine of "hereditary immortality," is not only proclaimed from the pulpit, and echoed by every press in the country; but it is, also, wafted on the breeze in the melody of song! And here we have a specimen of this Pago-christianized theology:

"Vital spark of heavenly flame,"

Quit, O quit this mortal frame!

Trembling, hoping, ling'ring, flying—

O the pain the bliss of dying!

"Hark, the whisper! angels say,"

'Sister spirit, come away!

What is this absorbs me quite,

Steals my senses, shuts my sight,

Drowns my spirit, draws my breath?

"Tell me, my soul, can this be death!"

"The world recedes, it disappears,"

Heaven opens on my eyes; my ears

With sounds seraphic ring;

Lend, lend your wings—I mount, I fly;

O grave where is thy victory!

"O death where is thy sting!"

Here we have the theology of Plato, in all its sublimity! In this death scene we have the "vital spark," or immortal soul, of "heavenly flame"—of the "divine essence," a part of the deity. Then follows an injunction (from the body of course!) for this "vital spark" to "quit this mortal frame." Then follow the attitudes of the "vital spark"—which is represented as "trembling, hoping, ling'ring, flying;" and exclaiming—"O the pain, the bliss of dying!" This may be good poetry, but it is miserable philosophy, and worse theology. For, if it have any meaning at all, the body is supposed to address the spirit thus: "Vital spark of heavenly flame, quit, O quit this mortal frame." To which the spirit replies: "I am trembling, hoping, ling'ring, flying." And then exclaims—mind—the spirit exclaims—"O the pain, the bliss of dying." According to this, therefore, the spirit trembles, lingers, hopes, flies, and, finally dies! For, it is represented as saying—"O the pain, the bliss of dying!" This, we repeat, is bad philosophy and worse theology; but, then, we suppose we must excuse its advocates, as it was merely a freak of the Poet's imagination.

But, to return, the spirit is then represented as addressing the body thus: "Hark!" did you not hear "the whisper?" "Angels say—sister spirit, come away." The poor body, then, already crumbling to dust, is made to say: "What is this absorbs me quite, steals my senses, shuts my sight, drowns my spirit!" (sad catastrophe!) "draws my breath?" "Tell me, my soul, can this be death?" The spirit "drowns," and the body in "death!" Both dead!! Platonists, teach your poets better, or they will make sad havoc of your theology!

But now comes the crisis—the eventful period; when the soul takes its flight, and "gains kingdoms beyond the skies." The spirit therefore exclaims: "The world recedes, it disappears;" and "heaven opens on my eyes;" and "my ears with sounds seraphic ring." An appeal is then made to the attending angels—"Lend, lend your wings," with the announcement, "I mount, I fly." And as the departed ghost leaves the world, and passes through the trackless ether, it looks back to the grave, where it's "mortal coil" is deposited, and shouts—"O grave where is thy victory? O death where is thy sting?"

Such is the scene before us! And such is a specimen of modern Platonism!!

But when we turn our attention to the word of God—to the testimony of prophets and apostles, we see no such teaching there. That sacred volume points not to the day of one's death, as the time when the song of victory will be sung, but to the period when the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and enter into the Kingdom of God. The apostle Paul fixes the time, when he says—"Christ the first fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." "THEN," but not before, "shall be brought to pass the saying—DEATH IS SWALLOWED UP IN VICTORY—O death where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory?"

Having made these INTRODUCTORY REMARKS, we shall now proceed to the discussion of our subject. We shall invite the reader's attention, first, to the #### LAW OF HEREDITARY DESCENT.

We solicit attention to this point, because it is contended that "immortality" is "hereditary," or congenital. And, if so, the advocates of this hypothesis can certainly point out the law by which such a transmission is effected. If they cannot do this, let them acknowledge it, and abandon the hypothesis as untenable.

Let not the modest world suppose that we are going to disclose any thing calculated to shock the nerves of the most sensitive, or tinge the cheek of the most exquisitely fastidious. We only intend to speak of things—of laws, which God has made; and of which the Holy Spirit has spoken. Let none presume to teach JEHOVAH modesty, or the HOLY SPIRIT refinement!

It is now an established truth, and admitted by all Physiologists, that physical, moral, and intellectual qualities are transmissible. If this were denied, we could present an overwhelming amount of evidence in proof of its truth. But presuming that no man will risk his reputation for learning by calling it in question, we shall proceed to argue from it as an axiomatic truth.

Now the question arises, Why are physical, moral, and mental qualities transmissible? The answer is, that it is a law of generation that like shall produce its like. This law obtains through all animated nature. It is recognized by the Bible; for God commanded the first human pair "to be fruitful, multiply, and replenish the earth." And in accordance with the endowment of his nature, it is added, that he "begot a son in his own image and likeness." There are certain elements, or attributes, entering into the constitution of man, which give character to the race; and these elements are common to all mankind. They are often, perhaps always, modified by external influences, as well as by internal passions and emotions; but still they exist in, and give character to all. It is upon this principle that all mankind resemble each other in form, features, &c. So we find no difficulty in accounting for hereditary traits of a physical character. In the estimation of some, perhaps there might be more doubt as to the laws by which moral and mental qualities are transmitted. But when we know that the moral and mental elements of human nature have their corresponding organs in the brain, all difficulty is at an end. The whole organization is transmitted; every part, every organ, whether purely animal, or whether of a moral or intellectual character, is congenital. Some times diseases are inherited; sometimes a fine elastic constitution, with splendid moral and intellectual faculties, is transmitted. And the reason is obvious, for these MORAL AND MENTAL powers depend, for their very existence, upon the material organization of the brain. And the adult man possesses no constituent element, physical, moral, or mental, which is not possessed by the child in embryo. The powers of the full grown man are in-born, they are hereditary. Education serves to develop, to mature, and to modify the faculties of the mind; but it can never create a single one. Let this never be forgotten. The unborn infant, then, is the future man in every essential particular, except development. The embryo is the miniature man, physically, morally, and mentally, the modifying influences of education excepted.

Now, if man has an immortal soul, mind, or spirit, the unborn infant—the embryo—the germ of human life has, necessarily has, the same. For immortality is not a thing but an attribute of something. If, therefore, it be an attribute of the adult man, it must be an attribute of the same man when in embryo. All the elements, as well as the attributes of man, exist in the original embryonic germ; and by vital magnetism they are evolved, developed, and matured. Consequently, if immortality be hereditary, we must look for its manifestation in the germ of life, as well as in the full grown man! Here, then, we have the astounding physiological hypothesis of the transmission of immortality, from sire to son; and from one generation to another! Thus, it is assumed, "the divine essence"—a "part of the Deity," is handed down, according to the laws of hereditary descent, to the last generation of man! In this case abortions do not alter the case, for they, too, possessed immortal souls! And, then, to cap this climax of absurdity and blasphemy the man of special election and reprobation, comes forward, and, in accordance with the theory of eternal soul-burning, declares, as one did in Virginia, that there are "infants in hell not a span long!" And, still further, as if to mock Jehovah, "who only hath immortality," the devotees of licentiousness, of deep and damnable prostitution, are engaged in the good work of producing immortals, and transmitting the "divine essence" of incorruptibility! And, just here, we must be allowed to say, that, in our estimation, this doctrine of hereditary immortality, which mocks, and nullifies, and stultifies the teaching of the Holy Scriptures, that "God only hath immortality;" and that "eternal life is the gift of God"—this doctrine, we say, is the rankest infidelity of any age! It lies at the foundation of every system of error, with which we are acquainted. It is the basis of "purgatorial purification," "invocation of saints," the "worship of martyrs," and a thousand other fooleries of Catholicism. And last, though not least, it constitutes the grand work of the doctrine of eternal soul-burning in the endless fires of hell! In a word, it is fraught with untold mischief, to the truth of the gospel.

But the doctrine is utterly untrue; we inherit disease, mortality, and death, but immortality and life are attributes of the kingdom of God. Men may inherit the most loathsome diseases, or they may be born idiots; but the boon of incorruptibility can never be transmitted by sinful flesh! That which is born of the flesh, is flesh, and not immortality. And Paul says—"I know that in me, that is in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing." Immortality, if hereditary, dwells "in the flesh," and is certainly a "good thing;" Paul, therefore, had none of it. Job asks the question: "Why did I not from the womb? Why did I not expire at the time of my birth? Why did the knees receive me? or why the breasts that I should be nursed? For now should I have lain still and been quiet, I should have slept: then had I been at rest, or as a hidden untimely birth I had not been, as infants which never saw light."

Again, he says: "Why then hast thou brought me forth from the womb? O that I had expired, and no eye had seen me! I should have been as though I had not been; I should have been carried from the womb to the grave."

How very different is this teaching from that of the moderns, who maintain that immortality is hereditary; and that their children, idiots though they be, are immortal! Immortal idiots!! From such theology may the world soon be delivered! But there is another class of immortal-soulists, who take a position somewhat different from the above.

They yield the doctrine of hereditary immortality so far as to admit that there is no immortality in embryonic life; but that, when the infant emerges from its prison-house, and, for the first time, inhales the atmosphere, then it becomes possessed of an immortal spirit.

This position, though a modification of the former, is not less hypothetical; and, when examined in the light of philosophy and revelation, it will be found equally fallacious.

The atmosphere is composed, chemically speaking, of oxygen and nitrogen, neither of which possesses the attribute of immortality; but, even if they did, they are not possessed of intelligence, which is a radical idea associated with spirit. Besides oxygen and nitrogen, man breathes an aqueous vapour, electricity and light. He lives, moves, and has his being in an immense ocean of magnetism, which fills the universe; and in which all vegetables and animals live, and all world's revolve! The atmosphere contains the "spirit of the breath of life;" that "breath" which was "breathed into the nostrils of Adam," inflated his lungs, and made him "a living soul." The same "breath of life," which God "breathed into the nostrils of Adam," is breathed into the nostrils of every living thing. The unborn infant lives, but does not breathe. The first inspiration of the new born babe, is the inflation of its nostrils and lungs by the "breath of life." But, as we observed before, there is no intelligent spirit in all this: it merely acts upon the wonderful organization of man, and the machinery of life and thought is put in motion. And when the man dies, he yields up his spirit—his breath—"the breath of life" to "God who gave it;" and his organization moulders into dust, in verification of the sentence pronounced upon him: "Dust thou art, and into dust shalt thou return."

Having, then, as we think, sifted the foundation of this subject, we shall follow it still further in its ramifications in our next article, in which we shall speak of the INSTRUMENT OF THOUGHT AND FEELING. And, in conclusion, we will put one question to all those who inquire, by what "LAW THE WICKED ARE TO BE DESTROYED?" Our question is this: "By what law" can immortality be transmitted from sinful flesh, and by a PROCESS NECESSARILY CORRUPTIBLE, to one's OFFSPRING? J. T. W.

WITCHCRAFT, &c.

By HENRY JONES.

In the Feb. No. of the Bible Examiner I noticed an article on the subject of Witchcraft, which seems intended to show that the raising of Samuel the prophet from the dead, by the witch at Endor, was a mere trick of the woman, with so much craftiness of her own, that she made a perfect dupe of King Saul, without being aided by any invisible power to perform any thing supernatural on the occasion. I am aware that this is becoming a very common view of witchcraft in general, and among professed Christians, and I have just been hearing it warmly supported in a public debate on the following question, viz: "IS MESMERISM IDENTICAL WITH WITCHCRAFT?" and particularly on one side the case of the witch of Endor, was considered as only a human imposture, as in the article above mentioned. It is not my design, therefore, to review the arguments of the article, no, of others, of the same theory, though I would present a few things as reasons for believing most sincerely, that the scripture account of "Witchcraft," "Sorcery," "Magic," "Sooth-saying," "Necromancy," "Miracles" of "Spirits of devils," &c., (all the same,) is to be understood as literally as it is given, and as telling us of the real mysterious works or "miracles" of Satan, (frequently combined with human agency,) instead of its telling us of the legerdemain, or deception, practiced by mere human sagacity and power.

Before proceeding any further, it may not be amiss to give a brief extract on this question from a very distinguished human author, intended as a rebuke upon the now very common theory, that there never has been any such thing as "witchcraft" in reality; or "miracles" of "familiar spirits." He says:

"The sixth species of offence against God, or religion, of which our ancient books are full, is a crime of which one knows not well what account to give. I mean the offence of witchcraft, conjurology, enchantments or sorcery. To deny the possibility, yea, actual existence of witchcraft and sorcery, is at once flatly to contradict the revealed word of God, both in the Old and New Testaments. And the thing itself is a truth to which every nation in the world hath, in its turn, borne testimony, either by examples seemingly well attested, or by prohibitory laws, which at least suppose the possibility of commerce with evil spirits."—Blackstone's Com. Book iv. Chapt. iv. Sect. 6th.

And in relation, particularly to the bringing up of Samuel before mentioned, and considered by many as the mere humbug of a woman, on the credulity of Saul, I would say—

1. That it might seem, from the history we have of king Saul, that he was a man of too much sound sense, too much experience, and too much knowledge, particularly of witchcraft, divination, &c., to be thus made the greatest dupe in the nation, by a mere woman, and notorious for her impostures, provided Saul was deceived by her accustomed legerdemain.

2. There is no intimation in the history of Samuel being thus brought up, that there was any human deception or imposture in the transaction, while the whole of it rather reads as though it were an absolute reality, that such a miracle was actually wrought by some invisible power, (1. Sam. 28: 3—20.)

3. It is expressly represented of this woman, by inspiration, that she had a "familiar spirit" (verses 3. 7. 8.) by which it is most clearly intimated that she performed this wonder, rather than by any craft merely human.

4. It is expressly said by the Holy Ghost, here, that the woman actually "saw Samuel," (v. 12.) instead of her pretending to see him, at his coming up.

5. It is also said by the same authority, that Saul "perceived that it was Samuel" (v. 14.) instead of being duped to imagine that it was he.

6. We have, also, the proof of inspiration and of that very same Samuel which was brought up, that it was actually Samuel himself; in the following words of Samuel, on this very point. "And Samuel said to Saul, why hast thou disquieted me to bring me up?" (v. 15.) Samuel is certainly the speaker here, and his own words are very plain, that he has been brought "up" by the instigation of Saul.

7. Samuel himself, then, according to inspiration, proceeded to give a full prophetic communication to Saul, as he had been accustomed to do, before his death, closing his remarks, as follows:—"And tomorrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me [i. e. in death] and the Lord also shall deliver the host of Israel into the land of the Philistines." (v. 19.) If we credit this whole address of Samuel and the prophecy it contains, which was immediately fulfilled just as it was given, how can we consistently say, that Samuel was not there, did not himself speak at all on the occasion, and that a crafty woman, very noted for her impostures, was only deceiving the king to make him believe human falsehoods?

I will not now be more particular on this one very signal instance of witchcraft, nor on the same "craft," as exhibited throughout the holy scriptures; though, according to the best human history, we have on the subject, it has prevailed as spoken of in the scriptures, in all ages of the world, and in all countries more or less, as the work of foul spirits, always standing in the way of faith in God, and directly designed by the arch deceiver to hinder the salvation of mankind. And though too many now are ready to say of it, that if it ever had an existence in the world, it is quite too late to look for any of it in "the 19th century." I would be now permitted to express my humble individual conviction, that there never was before, since the creation, so much of actual "witchcraft," "divination," &c., being practiced throughout the world, as at this very period of "the 19th century," and I shall be understood in this remark, when I say that there is overwhelming proof bearing on my mind, from revelation, from human history, and from what is now every where being witnessed in the world, that all the wonders or phenomena of MESMERISM, so called, are actually the mysteries or wonders of "witchcraft," and performed by the invisible power of "familiar spirits," and that MESMERISM in being called a science, is only "falsely so called." Without designing to write on this latter question, I only throw out my individual conviction concerning it, without asking the editor or any other person to bear any part of the responsibility of its being published. And should I yet be called to defend the position now assumed, I must not be slack in offering solid proof on the subject.

BR. WALSH'S REPLY TO BR. JONES.

1. If Mr. Jones had waited until the articles on "Witchcraft" were all published, he would have been better prepared to answer the argument advanced; or, perhaps, he might have been convinced, and thus saved the necessity of writing at all.

2. All the arguments advanced by friend Jones in the article before us, are fully met in the series of articles, to which we refer.

3. We do not design to enter into an extensive controversy on this subject, especially as other subjects of more importance claim our attention: but we will, nevertheless, introduce one or two arguments, based directly on the authority of inspiration.

4. As Egypt appears to have been the fruitful source of magic and sorcery, we will refer, in the first place, to her destiny as predicted by the Prophet Isaiah. "And the spirit of Egypt shall fail in the midst of her, and I (the Lord) will destroy (or swallow up) her counsel: and they shall seek to the idols, and to the charmers, and to them that have familiar spirits, and to the wizards." Ch. xix. 3d.

Here it is affirmed that the "spirit" of Egypt should fail; that they should, in other words, become dispirited; and that God would destroy or swallow up her counsel, as he did that of Saul; and that, in this state of desperation, they should seek to the idols, the charmers, the wizards, and to those who possessed familiar spirits.

But, will friend Jones, or any other person, contend that these Egyptians obtained from "idols, charmers, familiar spirits, and wizards," the "counsel," wisdom or knowledge, which God had judicially "destroyed," or swallowed up? And did Saul obtain that "counsel" from the witch of Endor, which God had refused to communicate by Priests, Prophets, and dreams?

5. "And when they shall say to you, seek to them that have familiar spirits, and to wizards that peep, and that mutter; should not a people seek to their God? For the living to the dead? To the law and the testimony: IF THEY SPEAK NOT ACCORDING TO THIS WORD, IT IS BECAUSE THERE IS NO LIGHT IN THEM." Isaiah viii. 19, 20.

Here God, by his Prophet, tells the Jews, that, when they should be exhorted by their teachers "to seek to them that" had "familiar spirits;" and to wizards that peep, and that mutter;" two striking features in this kind of imposture—they should reply:—"SHOULD NOT A PEOPLE SEEK TO THEIR GOD?" Will you, "FOR THE LIVING" SEEK "TO THE DEAD?" "To the law" of God, and his "testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

To seek to wizards, witches, and to those who have familiar spirits, then, is to "seek to the dead!" It is to go to the dead for the benefit of the living! It is to consult the dead, who "know nothing," in reference to the welfare of those, who, to say the least of them, know something! It is to go to those who "have no light in them;" and to whom the light is as darkness, for the information of the living sons of men! Is it not preposterous? Is it not absurd? Yes, verily, it is superlatively so! God is the only source of life, wisdom, knowledge, and inspiration; and when He, in wrath, refuses to communicate to his creatures the things which concern their destiny, in vain will they seek to "spirits" of any sort, in Heaven, Earth, or Hades, for an expression or revelation, of his designs. "To the law and the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." And where there is no "light," there is no truth; and who would go to the Prince of darkness—to the "Father of lies," for truth, or information on any subject?

6. Friend Jones will do well to study the character and pretensions of Simon the Sorcerer, who gave out that he was some great person; but in all his tricks "deceived the people," notwithstanding they thought "he was the great power of God," and gave "heed to him from the least to the greatest."

7. Mr. Jones thinks that Saul had too much knowledge and experience to be duped by an old woman! Will he remember that a wiser than Saul, even Solomon, was duped by "outlandish women," and induced to sin.

8. The Apostle Paul classes witchcraft with fornication, anger, wrath, and other works of the flesh. And now permit us to state a principle, which, we believe, is perfectly invulnerable and irrefragible. ALL THE WORKS OF THE FLESH ARE ABUSES OF THE PHYSICAL, ANIMAL, MORAL, OR INTELLECTUAL POWERS OF MAN. The powers of man, of which we speak, are constitutional—they are natural; Witchcraft, therefore, being a work of the flesh, is the abuse, or illegitimate action of some power possessed by the person assuming the character of a sorcerer, wizard, or witch.

9. We agree with Mr. Jones, that there is a vast amount of sorcery and witchcraft in the world. There are hundreds and thousands who profess to hold converse with, and to be guided by the spirits of their departed friends. There are thousands of poor, blind, deluded mortals, who daily pray to the departed ghosts of Prophets, Apostles, Martyrs, and Saints, as they believe. Yes, friend Jones, THE WORLD IS FULL OF WITCHCRAFT! And this embraces Priestcraft, and every other spiritual abomination. But we are not willing to class animal magnetism with witchcraft, nor "philosophy falsely so-called" for we believe that man is magnetically made; and that animal magnetism is a true and sublime science, beautifully unfolding the laws of life. But, we perceive that in New York, and other places, it is made a sort of foundation upon which to build the exploded hypotheses, and foolish vagaries of Swedenborg. We wish to see all these abuses corrected, and these cobweb systems of theology brushed away from the face of Science and Philosophy. Let us not discard truth, because the ignorant and designing abuse it. In conclusion, we would say to Mr. Jones, that we have reserved the strongest testimony, in order, should it be necessary, to make a final raking fire.

THE SON OF GOD—NO. III.

AN EXAMINATION OF THE DIVINE TESTIMONY CONCERNING THE ORIGIN OF THE HIGHEST AND MOST GLORIOUS CHARACTER OF THE SON OF GOD.

By HENRY GREW.

The term "fellow" in Zech. 13: 7, has been supposed to denote perfect equality. Let Heb. 1: 9, be considered. Here the Son of God is said to have been anointed with the oil of gladness above his "fellows." Whether the term here means those "many brethren" of whom he is "the first born," or the angels of heaven, it cannot mean perfect equality, for the Son has "a more excellent name" than either. The primary meaning of the word fellow, is not equal, but companion.

If, then, the blessed God hath been pleased to glorify his only begotten and well beloved Son, and to accomplish his purposes of wisdom and love, by setting him at his own right hand; is it not perfectly consistent with such a design, that Jesus Christ should be distinguished with adequate titles of dignity and glory? If they were called Gods to whom the word of God came; if even a material monument of the Lord's goodness may be called by the name of Jehovah, Exod. 17: 15, are we surprised to find the Son (who is the brightness of the Father's glory, and the very image of the invisible God,) called God, over all God, &c.? These appellations are perfectly appropriate. He is over all Ruler or God. He is Lord of all, for to this pre-eminence "God hath highly exalted him." Phil. 2: 9.

It is the delightful privilege of the redeemed, both in heaven and on earth, to ascribe "glory and dominion forever," "unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood."

Let us examine the divine testimony respecting this holy worship. On what account is it offered to the Lamb? John 5: 23, 22, "For the Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgment unto the Son: that all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father." I think it must be admitted, that no passage can be found which expresses higher honor to the Son than this. And it is very remarkable that this passage which has been so often quoted as proof of the Son's supreme deity, itself contains proof to the contrary. The reason why we are to honor the Son as we do the Father, is here assigned. Is it because he "is the same numerical essence?" No, but because the Father "hath committed all judgment" unto him. Unless then, we say, that we honor the Father, because of authority committed to him, we must acknowledge that this very passage teaches us that we do not honor the Son in all respects as we do the Father.

Phil. 2: 9-11, "Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name, that at (or in) the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth; and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." How evident it is from this text, that the precious truth in its connection; that the Son of God is worshipped, not as supreme Jehovah, but on account of his great humiliation and perfect accomplishment of the mediatorial work; and that this worship is to the glory of God the Father.

Rev. 1: 5, 6, In this passage he is worshipped because he has loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father. Rev. 5: 12, As the Lamb that was slain. Matt. 14: 33, his disciples worshipped him as the Son of God. Rev. 5: 13, and 7: 10, He is worshipped in distinction from him that sitteth on the throne.

Shall we then, set in opposition to the divine testimony, the dictates of fallible reason, and say it is idolatry to worship him in distinction from "the only true God," who sitteth on the throne? Is it then idolatry to worship him to the glory of God the Father, and because the Father commands it? Shall we charge the worshippers in heaven with idolatry? It is remarkable that many Unitarians and Trinitarians, have wandered so far from what appears to be the truth, as to meet at the same point of error. Both refuse to imitate the heavenly worshippers, who worship the Lamb in distinction from the "most high God" who sitteth upon the throne.

The worship of the Son of God has been supposed by some to be inconsistent with the declaration of Jehovah, "My glory will I not give to another." But what is the glory of Jehovah? Is it not the glory of undivided and independent existence? Is it not the glory of possessing in himself infinite perfection; and of being, consequently the Supreme object of the love, confidence, and worship of all intelligences? If, then, the Father, requires us to worship the Son, who is a distinct person, as the self-existent and independent Jehovah, it appears that he has given his glory to another. But if he requires us to honor and worship him on account of all judgment or authority being COMMITTED to him by the Father; and if he requires us to worship the Son "to the glory of the Father," it is evident that he has not given his glory to another.

It is admitted that it would be idolatry to worship two or more distinct persons or beings, considering them as supreme and in all respects equal, for this would be worshipping two or more Supreme Gods. There are many pious Trinitarians who profess to believe the divine unity, who, nevertheless, worship three distinct equal persons. I do humbly and seriously suggest for their solemn and candid consideration, whether this is consistent with their belief of the unity of God? And whether they can find a single precept or example for such worship in the Scriptures of truth? I beseech them to reflect, whether it is possible for them, when they are worshipping, to have an idea of three distinct equal persons, without having an idea of three distinct equal beings? Is it possible for any one to conceive of him "that sitteth on the throne," as supreme God, and of him who is at the right hand of him that sitteth on the throne, as supreme God, without conceiving of two supreme Gods?

The repetition of the term Holy, as in Isa. 6: 3, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of Hosts," has been thought by some to denote the doctrine of the Trinity. It is evident, however, that such repetition is only significant of the importance of the subject. Thus we read in Jer. 22: 29, O earth, earth, earth, &c. And Ezek. 21: 27, I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, &c. Indeed it is the practice of the Hebrews to this day, to say over some of their prayers or praises three times. They have no faith in the doctrine of the Trinity.

The "Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins." Whether this affords proof of supreme deity or not depends upon the question, whether this power was or was not derived from the Father? Acts 5: 31, answers this question. "Him hath God exalted with his right hand, to be a Prince and a Saviour for to give repentance to Israel and forgiveness of sins." Matt. 28: 19—"Baptizing them," &c.

This passage in the Greek does not express the idea by the authority of, as in our translation; it is (eis) into, not (en) in the name of the Father &c.; i. e. into the truth, or in a profession of the truth, of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. What that truth is must be learned from other divine testimony. The passage itself does not declare or necessarily imply, that the three are one God, or that they are three persons, or that they are equal.

It has been often asked, how can Jesus be present with his assembled disciples, according to his promise, Matt. 18: 20, except he is the omnipresent Jehovah? If we consider that the Spirit is given him without measure by the Father, John 3: 34, we may easily conceive of his being spiritually present, not only in all parts of this atom of a world, but in all parts of the created universe. As the Son of God cast out devils by the Spirit of God, Matt. 12: 28, so by the same Spirit he is present with all true worshippers. John 3: 34, however teaches us that he is not infinite in himself, for if he was, he surely could not need anything to be given him by another.

"God is a spirit," the only eternal Spirit. Consistently with this plain truth, we never find the Holy Spirit worshipped in distinction from the Father. If we did, we must either suppose two eternal Spirits, or another spirit inferior to the Father. The following passage expresses an identity of the Father and the Spirit which is totally inconsistent with distinct personality. 1 Cor. 2: 11, For what man knoweth the things of a man except the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the spirit of God. The Apostle indeed prayed, 2 Cor. 13: 14, The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all. Amen. But if this is a proof of the spirit being a distinct person, the prayer of John, Rev. 1: 4, appears to afford equal proof that the Spirit consists of seven distinct persons. In Luke 2: 32, 35, we are taught that Jesus is the Son of the Highest and the Holy Ghost is the power of the Highest.

The expression "pour out," "shed forth," used in reference to the spirit of God, are additional evidences that it is not a distinct person, for such expressions are inapplicable to a person. It is true that these gracious influences proceeding from our Father in heaven, are personified, and the personal pronouns used in the case. So wisdom is personified, Prov. 8th chap. Let us candidly consider whether there can exist an infinite, intelligent, independent and omnipotent person, for the worship of whom there is not a single precept or example in all the Bible?

The pious author of those Trinitarian doxologies, which are now preferred by many Christian assemblies, to the inspired one of Rev. 5: 13, confessed "that there is in Scripture no express precept for addressing such worship to the Spirit, nor any example of it, and that therefore this ought not to be considered as a necessary part of Christian worship; though he thought it lawful because the Spirit or power of God is truly divine." How lawful that worship is, for which we have neither precept or example in the word of truth, may be learned from "the faithful witness." John 4: 24, God is a spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. John 17: 17, Thy word is truth.

Alas! that Christians should sit down to sing God's truth, and then stand up to sing their own tradition! Let us no longer worship according to the "precept of men," but unite in the holy anthem of celestial praise. Rev. 5: 13, Blessing and honor and glory and power, unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

To him that sits upon the throne,
Be honor, praise and glory given;
Lord battelaphsa to the Lamb,
By all on earth, and all in heaven.

THE THREE BATTLES.

The following communication is from Br. C. MORLEY. Though we do not agree with him in some things, particularly in relation to "the seven last plagues" being "after the advent," we let him speak. We are satisfied that six of the seven last plagues are already poured out, and that the seventh is near, if not already commenced.

THE FIRST BATTLE.

It seems clear to my mind, that one of the great events, just preceding the second advent of Christ, will be the restoration of a portion of the tribe of Judah to the land of their fathers; Joel 3d chap, Ezek. 34th to 38th chapter; and the gathering of the nations against them to rob them of their wealth and liberty, Ezek. 38: 12. Zech. 14: 1-2, which will be going on when Christ comes, Joel 3: 16. Ezek. 38: 19-22. Zech. 14: 3-5. Dan. 12: 1. The Gog of Ezekiel will be the leader in this invasion of Palestine, Ezek. 38: 1-4. Gog comes from the north, verses 6, 15, Ezek. 39: 2, which evidently is Russia, and called in Daniel 11: 40, the king of the north. The place of gathering. "The valley of Jehoshaphat," Joel 3: 2; "against Jerusalem," Zech. 14: 2; "mountains of Israel," Ezek. 38: 8; "the glorious land," Dan. 11: 41; hence the testimony is as clear as the light of noon-day, that Palestine will be the place of gathering of the wicked nations to rob the Jews. Two nations, and the merchants of a third, refuse to join them, and charge them with being robbers, i. e., the nations of Sheba and Dedan, and merchants of Tarshish; (probably the merchants of Great Britain are meant.) Ezek. 38: 13. At first this army of nations will have partial success, Zech. 14: 2; 12: 2-8; but their triumph is short, for the Lord comes and fights against those nations, Zech. 14: 3-4. Manner of their destruction: 1, their eyes, and flesh consume while they are standing; 2, they fight each other, Zech. 14: 13; Ezek. 38: 21; 3, "pestilence, blood and great hailstones," Ezek. 38: 22; Isa. 29: 5. Some of them still are left, Zech. 14: 16; Ezek. 39: 2. Christ's kingdom is then set up, Rev. 11: 15; 2 Tim. 4: 1; and the glorified saints are on the sea of glass, Rev. 15: 2-8; the four beasts and twenty-four elders represent the joint kings with Christ, Rev. 4: 4-11; 5: 6-14. One of the four beasts gives unto the seven angels seven golden vials, full of the wrath of God; hence all the seven last plagues are poured out after Christ's coming.

THE SECOND BATTLE.

OR, GATHERING OF THE NATIONS TO BATTLE.

A portion of the nations still on the earth are angry and enraged at Christ's reign, (Rev. 11: 18, 2d Psalm), and at the plagues. Under the sixth vial, the three unclean spirits gather the nations for another battle, Rev. 16: 13-21. OBJECTION; 15th verse, "Behold I come as a thief." ANSWER, after the New Jerusalem is on the new earth, we read Rev. 22: 12, "Behold I come quickly," 20th verse, "Surely I come quickly;" hence the former is used in the same way as the latter. The other gathering of the nations was against the Jews; now it is against Christ, to dethrone him, Rev. 19: 19; Gog was the leader in the first battle; but now the beast, the false prophet, and the kings of the earth lead the nations to the conflict; the glorified saints are with Christ, Rev. 19: 14, Ps. 149: 5-9. All this hostile multitude will be destroyed, Ps. 2: 9, the beast and false prophet will be cast into the lake of fire alive, Rev. 19: 20; and all the remnant will be slain by Christ, 21st verse; hence the manner of their destruction is different from that of the other battle; also a part were left of the former; but none of the latter.

THE THIRD BATTLE.

At the close of Christ's reign of a thousand years on the earth, Satan will be loosed from his prison, and will go out to deceive the nations in probation on the earth, (not the wicked dead, he is not such a stupid fool as to attempt to do that); and he succeeds in rallying a mighty host, against the saints who are in an encampment in, and around the city, not scattered over the earth. The beloved city is not the New Jerusalem, that is not yet on the earth; but the city described by Ezekiel in 40 to 48th chapters; its circumference is 1800 reeds or 36 miles, Ezek. 40: 30-35; it has a temple four miles in circumference, Ezek. 41: 1-26. Satan the general is taken and cast in the same lake of fire, that the leaders in the second battle were cast, Rev. 20: 10, and all his followers are devoured by fire from heaven, verse 9; 2 Pet. 3: 7. The next event is the resurrection of the rest of the leaders and their doom: after which, the new earth is completed, and the New Jerusalem descends and becomes the capital of the new earth.

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, JUNE, 1848.

ARE THE WICKED IMMORTAL?

"The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Bible.

THE RAISING UP OF SAMUEL.—1 Sam. 28: 15. If Samuel was actually raised up, we have no doubt it was done by "the spirits of devils, working miracles." If the view to which Brother Walsh has called attention is not the correct one, and it was not a real deception practised upon Saul, then was the Devil, "who hath the power of death" [see Heb. 2: 14.] the author of his being "brought up." Whether brought up in reality or only in pretence, it does not help, at all, the theorists who believe the dead know more than all the world; when the Scriptures affirm "the dead know not anything"—that "there is no knowledge in the grave," in "sheol," the invisible state of the dead; and, "the dead praise not the Lord."

Samuel was raised from the dead by the witch, or he was not. If he was not, then the whole matter was an illusion—a deception practised upon Saul. We are plainly told, verse 6, "And when Saul inquired of the Lord, the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets." Now, if God would not answer Saul, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets, did he send a prophet from the dead to give him an answer? And did he employ a witch, whom he had said should not be suffered to live, to do this work? It is the same as to say, "God would not answer by a prophet, and yet he did answer by a prophet." But suppose Samuel did actually appear—where did he come from? If he was in a conscious state of bliss in heaven he must have come down from above:—but no, he ascended "out of the earth," see v. 13. And what does he say? "Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring me up?" So, it seems, he was "disquieted," and brought "up," not down by this operation. Now Samuel was in heaven, or in hell, in a state of consciousness, or else he was in the grave in an unconscious state. If he was in heaven, then he gave Saul blessed news; for he told Saul, "to-morrow thou shalt be with me." So, though Saul killed himself, see chap. 31: 4, yet he went immediately to heaven. If Saul did not go to heaven, then Samuel did not tell him the truth, or else Samuel himself was in hell. If neither of these positions are true, then it follows, that Samuel, till called up, was unconscious in the grave; and that there was where he told Saul he would be "to-morrow." This could be true: but it could not be true that Saul went to heaven to be with Samuel; nor could it be true that Samuel was in hell to have Saul with him there.

"SCARLET COLOURED BEAST."

SEVENTH VIAL—FRENCH REVOLUTION.

In the last Examiner we made some remarks on passing events in Europe, as being, probably, the commencement of events under the seventh vial of the seven last plagues of Rev. 16th. The news since our last has not been of the same exciting character as the previous, but still goes to confirm and strengthen the view we then took of the subject, and that there is a strong probability, not certainty, that we have indeed arrived at that point in prophecy which is to develop fully the things contained in the seventh vial of the seven last plagues. We are not of the number, however, who, suppose all those developements will be made in a day, month, or year. We think they will, most likely, occupy several years; but we shall express no positive opinion as to the length of time they may occupy; though we are inclined to the opinion that a very few years, at most, will suffice to accomplish all those events included in Rev. 16: 17, to Rev. 20: 2.

There are some things in the 17th chapter that we are inclined to remark upon at this time, by way of suggestions. Will the reader now please turn and read that chapter. One of the seven angels having the seven last plagues there promises to show John the judgment of the great whore. This is to take place under the seventh vial: That is where the judgment on that power is to be executed. She is presented to John as a woman on a "scarlet coloured beast." Though this beast has some points of resemblance with the dragon, in the 12th chap., and the seven headed beast of the 13th chap., yet it is sufficiently distinct. The dragon has crowns on his heads: the leopard like beast, chap. 13, has crowns on his horns: the scarlet beast, chap. 17, has no crowns at all, and is therefore a distinct and different government from either of the others; and, besides, it occupies, in its main features, an entirely distinct period in prophetic time, though found on the same territory.

It is not so much our object to identify the woman, now, as to find out the beast that carries her; yet, it will naturally be seen what the woman is as we proceed. This beast ascends from the bottomless pit, and is to go into perdition, or be destroyed: it is "full of the names of blasphemy;" "it was—is not" for a time, and then "it is" fully developed under the seventh vial: they that dwell on the earth will wonder, think it a marvellous affair, and that great things are to be accomplished by it for good to the world, except those whose names are in the book of life: these will understand, because watching, the part this beast is to act and its end. Let the reader also observe, that this beast "is the eighth" government, in a certain line, and yet "is of the seven" that constitute the whole line of governments. We must, for the want of room to go into the discussion, at this time, assume some things which we think are capable of being demonstrated with tolerable certainty. First: We assume that the seven kings are the seven forms of government that have occupied the old Roman Empire: five of them had fallen when John had this vision, one was then in existence, namely, the Imperial, which continued in the eastern or western empire of Rome down to the beginning of the present century, when it was overthrown by Napoleon Bonaparte, by the overthrow of the Emperorship of Austria or Germany, which was the legitimate succession to the imperial power of the Cæsars in the west. Here the sixth form of Government fell, and was succeeded by a seventh, viz: an illegitimate Emperorship in the reign of Bonaparte. This seventh form of government was to "continue a short space" only; accordingly, it fell with Napoleon in 1815. The scarlet coloured beast, though the eighth, in fact, was to be "of the seven" that is, it would include within it the seventh, though while the seventh continued it "is not," but "was" before it, and "is," or will be fully developed after the seventh has passed away. We are now prepared for the inquiry—What government or power is signified by the scarlet coloured beast? We give it as our opinion, with present light, that it "was" atheistical France, "full of the names of blasphemy," prior to the Bonaparte government; that it "is not," while the Napoleon Emperorship continued, but in reality "yet is," and shall be fully developed under the seventh plague. Once more the blasphemous character of atheistical France "is" showing itself by one of its first actions, since the late Revolution, that of fixing its elections on the Sabbath. Though we are not one of the superstitious observers of the Sabbath, yet the total disregard of the opinions of the nominal christian world by France, in fixing their first elections on that day, and postponing them from one Sabbath to another, shows that religion has nothing to expect from the French Republic. She comes up with the evidence on her face that she is the beast from the bottomless pit. This atheistical power, or beast, commenced its ascension from the bottomless pit in the French Revolution of 1789—partially developed itself, or "was" for a time, but being interrupted by the seventh form of Roman Government, the Bonaparte government, "is not," for a while, but "yet is" now to be alive and active under the seventh and last plague, and constitutes "the eighth" form of government on the old Roman Empire, but "is of the seven," because it included in its existence, in its dormant state, the seventh, or "short space" Emperorship of Napoleon. This scarlet coloured beast is to be an enemy to all Monarchies—she will have no crowns on her heads or horns—she is to be Republican by profession. The woman does not sit upon the body of this beast, but upon its heads, verse 9; and "the seven heads are seven mountains on which the woman sitteth;" clearly indicating Rome, or Italy, as the position of the heads of this beast. If this be true, and we are under the seventh vial, there will soon be a union or confederacy between France and Italy; for the ten horns are upon the head of the scarlet coloured beast; of course will be found in Italy: these, having united Italy in one confederacy, which is to take place at the same hour, or time with the beast's coming fully into power, will "agree and give their kingdom to the beast"—atheistical France. There are indications, even now, that such a confederacy is to be formed in Italy as shall answer to the prophecy in calling the dominion of the ten horns "their kingdom," or one; which, then, by agreement, is to be given to the beast and will complete its development. We clip the following from one of the items of foreign news.

"The following are the bases of a treaty said to have been concluded between the Pope, the King of Sardinia, and the Grand Duke of Tuscany, for the future organization of Italy. The Italian Peninsula to be divided into six great States. 1. Naples. 2. Sicily. 3. States of the Church. 4. The kingdom of Etruria, for the advantage of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, to consist of the actual Grand Duchy, and the adjoining territories of Pontremoli, Modena, Piertasante, and Lunigiana. 5. Lombardy, under whatever form of Government the Lombards may adopt. 6. Sardinia, with an indemnity to King Charles Albert in case Savoy should be annexed to France. An alliance offensive and defensive between the six States. An Italian confederation well defended by a line of fortresses along the frontiers. A uniform law for weights, measures, and currency. Abolition of internal duties. A Diet at Rome under the presidency of the Pope."

It may be observed that the 4th of these "six States" includes five divisions, which if numbered with the others makes ten in all; thus giving indications that if the "ten horns," or kingdoms, are not already manifest they may soon be developed. When developed, and consolidated in one "confederation," will be the time for them to "agree and give their power, strength and kingdom to the scarlet coloured beast;" then will that beast be fully organized. The ten horns, or different divisions of Italy, from some cause, which will ere long appear, will hate the woman (corrupt church) and make her desolate and naked, and eat her flesh and burn her with fire: strip her of all her power, authority and riches. It may be because that church will not enter fully into their plans. After the coalition of the horns with the beast the atheistical character of this power will be more fully discovered; for it is, when consolidated, to "make war with the Lamb." Hence this beast, in his union with the ten horns, is to continue till the second advent of Christ, unto whom "the Lord God will give the throne of his father David" that "all nations shall serve and obey him." But this atheistical, blasphemous beast, mis-named republican, France and all its confederates, will make war against Christ and dispute his authority to reign over all nations; but the Lamb, or Christ the "King of kings, and Lord of lords," will be the Conqueror; verse 14: and the atheistical beast, with all its adherents, will "go into perdition," or destruction: that is—that blasphemous power will be utterly destroyed.

The saints, or those "whose names were in the book of life," did not "wonder," or marvel, when they saw this beast arise, though others did who dwelt on the earth. The saints had learned from the prophecy that such a beast would arise—and they learned what was to be its end. The appearance of that beast, therefore, was to them a sure token of the soon coming and victory of their long absent Lord.

The foregoing hints are thrown out, not as the matured thoughts of our mind, but as suggestions that seem naturally to arise from passing events; and to induce christians to study carefully prophecy in connection with the history of the times in which we live. Our Lord rebuked the Scribes and Pharisees for "not discerning the signs of the times." Let us beware lest we come under the same censure. How can we tell what part we are to act, unless we see clearly where we are in the fulfilment of prophecy. We are in danger, in these days of excitement, of joining in the attempted glorification of the beast from the bottomless pit. Let us look for our coming Lord, and see to it that we are found under his banner, not with carnal, or political weapons, but with those described by Paul, Eph. 6: 11—18.

"Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood; but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breast-plate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God: Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints."

"FANCY" SKETCHES.

The following fancy sketch we find in several of our exchange papers. Well does the writer say, "I have often fancied," for he has not a particle of Scripture evidence for "faith" in such sublime flights. The article is headed "Friends in Heaven." The writer, it will be seen, speaks of his mother as "the heart enshrined idol of" his "earlier years." In that we cannot doubt he speaks the truth, and that is probably the reason why he makes her a god now that she is dead. But we let him speak for himself. He says:—

"I bless God for the hope I am permitted to entertain that I have a mother—the heart enshrined idol of my earlier years—whose spirit wanders in a cloud of glory, through the aromatic gardens and over the delectable mountains of the blest. She spent here below a life of sorrow—wedded to privations, disappointments and disease; but now she plucks the fragrant flowers and the delicious fruits of paradise; leans her own weary head upon the bosom of Jesus, and slumbers in the beatific vision of the throne of God. I have often fancied, in hours of darkness and despondent gloom, that her glorified spirit lingered around me, whispering words of consolation and hope.

"And to have children in heaven! Are they not golden knobs, which transmit the electric spark of divine love from the throne of the lamb to the burdened and disconsolate soul? Bereaved parents could you now behold the babe which has perished like a blossom from your arms, you would scarcely recognize the sickly infant which demanded your unceasing care and unslumbering watchfulness. It has changed its toys for an angelic lute; its sobs for a song of triumph, and its little grief and acute pains for the sweetness of seraphic joy and the rapture of undying praise. And then, what astonishing advances has it already made in all the elements of knowledge and wisdom and love!

"Glory to God that we have friends in heaven! Parents, husbands, wives, children, brothers, sisters, and associates have gone before us. They have proved by their own experience, that 'life and immortality are brought to light in the gospel.' They await our arrival on those blissful shores."

We also clip from one of the same exchange papers this additional outbreak of fancy:

"There is a glorious world of light,
Above the starry sky;
Where saints departed, clothed in white
Adore the Lord most high.

"And hark!—amid the sacred songs
Those heavenly voices raise,
Ten thousand, thousand infant tongues
Unite in perfect praise.

"Those are the hymns that we shall know,
If Jesus we obey;
That is the place where we shall go,
If found in wisdom's way."

Now, dear reader, are not such very pretty specimens of fancy too good to be spoiled? How very comforting! Away to glory at death! No need of a resurrection—what a useless affair that would be! And then, why make any words about Christ's coming again, seeing "we shall go above the starry sky" when we die, and "wander in a cloud of glory, through the aromatic gardens and over the delectable mountains?" And yet, strange to tell, the same paper that contains these "delectable" morsels, contains an article on the resurrection, in which the writer says: "Without a resurrection all nature is involved in mystery." How true is this remark; and yet how completely irreconcilable with the foregoing fancy sketches. One speaks the language of the Bible—the other the language of Pagan Philosophy.

Let God be true though all men should prove to be mistaken. His word declares:

"The dead praise not the Lord." Psal. 115: 17. "In death there is no remembrance of thee," Psal. 6: 5. "Wilt thou shew wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee? Selah. Shall thy loving kindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction? Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?" Psal. 88: 10—12. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Psal. 146: 4.

"But man dieth, and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and dryeth up: So man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." Job. 14: 10, 12. "The dead know not any thing—also their love, hatred, and envy is now perished." Eccl. 9: 5, 6. "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge in the grave [Hebrew; Sheol]; the state of the dead—the invisible state of dead men] whither thou goest." Eccl. 9: 10. "If the dead rise not—then they which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." 1 Cor. 15: 16, 18. "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words." 1 Thess. 4: 13, 18. "The meek shall inherit the earth." Psal. 37: 11; and Matt. 5: 5.

Here we see the true ground of hope and comfort for our friends who have fallen asleep in Christ. It is in the resurrection, at the coming of Christ—"at the last day." And this hope is as distinctly opposed to the fancy sketches of modern theology as the Bible is opposed to Pagan fables; or as the earth differs from the fancied "world above the starry sky." These fancy sketches declare that the dead, small and great, "unite in perfect praise;" but, the Holy Spirit declares, "The dead praise not the Lord." How long will even good men credit heathen philosophy instead of the explicit testimony of the Scriptures of Truth. We fear they will continue to do it till the sectarian scales fall from their eyes, so that they shall regard the authority of God more than the creeds of men. The whole of this corruption of the words of the Most High grows out of the "immortal soul" theory. Starting wrong with their foundation, it is no wonder they build "wood, hay, and stubble." Let them begin the Book of God with a mind willing to follow the truth wherever it shall lead them, and the first three chapters of Genesis will satisfy them that man is not immortal; and that immortality, if it is ever possessed by man, must be the gift of God's favour through the second Adam. The New Testament clearly settles that point, and assures us if we ever attain unto it, it is by a patient continuance in well doing, seeking for it. See Rom. 2: 7; and 6: 23.

Since the above was written, we find the following additional morsel of sublime Paganism, in one of our daily papers, after the notice of the death of a lady:

"Now in her snow-white shroud she lies,
Her lily lids half veil her eyes,
As if she looked with wild surprise
Up at her soul in Paradise.
Her hands lie folded on her breast,
Crossed like the cross that gave her rest,
She looks as if some heavenly guest
Had told her that her soul was blest."

This is a rare specimen of modern theology, or immortal-soulism. Here soul and body both are made to be conscious in death. The body is looking "up at her soul in Paradise;" but, not being able to trust its eyes, a "Heavenly guest" is sent to talk to the body and tell it "her soul is blest"!!! Most excellent theology! The outbreak of the bosom of some minister of fancy, with which the present age abounds. If the words of God, Most High, are not turned into fables by the teaching of immortal-soulists, at least fables are substituted for His words.

While we are on this subject we will give our readers a fancy sketch that fell from the lips of one of the most eminent and popular ministers in this city not long since. He said:

"There are millions in that world of glory that once lived here. Heaven is made up of little colonies filled with those we loved on earth, looking down on us from above the stars. That mother in heaven when she sees her son, on earth, coming back to God, how her heart swells—she gives a shout of joy in high heaven."

Tremendous! Why had not the preacher told us which "colony" was the largest! And how far "above the stars" they were located! And then, what tremendous eye-sight they must have to see all the way back to earth! "Looking down upon us!" We must look pretty small so far off! Some of the "stars" are supposed to be more than a thousand times larger than this earth; and yet, to us, they are hardly visible; but these immortal souls, up in those "colonies, above the stars," can not only see this earth, but see "us" they have left behind! And then the "mother" had a motherly feeling up there for "sons on earth;" and when they are "coming back to God" she gives a shout of joy in high heaven! Why had not this fancy maker told us what that mother did when she saw another "son" die and sink down in "endless torments?" Did she give a groan "in high heaven?" But, we turn from such disgusting fancies to the sure word of God, where we learn that "The dead praise not the Lord"—that, they "go down to silence"—that, if it were not for the resurrection they are "perished"—that our only hope for those "that have fallen asleep in Christ" is, that their Lord "will raise them up at the last day." Common sense and Scripture truth will sometimes flash out from behind the regions of fancy, like the lightning from a tempest cloud. In the same paper from which we cut the last scrap of poetic fancy, we find, after the notice of the death of a mother, the following effusion of truth:

"Rest, sweet mother, rest in slumber,
Until the resurrection morn;
Then arise and join the number,
Who thy triumph shall adorn."

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.—NO I.

TO ALL WHO LOVE OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST we dedicate the following remarks on Human Creeds and Tests of Christian Fellowship, in hope that you may give them at least one prayerful reading.

I. HUMAN CREEDS LACK AUTHORITY IN THEIR ORIGIN.

It must be admitted by all, that the compilers, or authors of these creeds were not inspired men. If they were not inspired, they were like ourselves, fallible. Where, then, is their authority for imposing upon others, a rule, or test, of Christian character, and deciding that a man is not sound in the faith who dissents from their creed, while his conduct and temper are as Christ-like as their own? Our Heavenly Father, himself, has not claimed assent to His Word without giving us the most astonishing miracles in proof that it is His own truth. Can Creed-makers show any such proofs in favor of the test creeds they have produced? Where is the evidence, except it be found in the fact, that the language of their creeds is discordant? We will not call in question the motives of many who have originated these creeds; they have designed to keep the church pure; but they have shown the weakness of human nature when it undertakes to sit in the place of God.

It will be admitted that our gracious God foresaw all the possible heresies that could afflict His church to the end of the world; and, if He has not done it, He could have provided a creed, infallible in its nature, sufficient for every case of heresy that could occur.

Such a creed, we believe he has provided; viz. the Bible. And He has given no evidence that any man since the days of the apostles, is appointed, by Him, to take a "bird's-eye" view of indispensable truth; and make that a test of our Christian regard. All these human creeds, then, are destitute of authority in their origin; and, for this cause, if for no other, should be rejected.

II. THEY ARE CALCULATED TO DECEIVE AND BEWILDER.

The authors of them do not agree among themselves; hence, the creeds may well be named 'legion,' for they 'be many.' A man in determining which is right, has to hear arguments from all sides. In hearing the various and conflicting sentiments, urged with all the zeal that a bigoted attachment to a particular mode of explanation can inspire, his mind is likely to be bewildered; and it would not be strange if he should come to the conclusion, that the Bible itself is a 'cunningly devised fable,' and no more to be relied upon than these conflicting creeds.

Besides these creeds are not only unlike each other, but they are perpetually undergoing modifications or change. Truth can not change; hence, these creeds were not true before, or they are not true now. They are fashioned, modeled and remodeled, as certain men choose, and are as uncertain guides as the ignis fatuus. The Bible, alone, shines with effulgence and glory like the sun in the midst of these shooting meteors. Follow the clear shining of God's Creed—the Bible—and the path shall be that of the just, shining more and more unto the perfect day: follow human creeds, and it will be next to a miracle if men are not lost in inextricable confusion. Men judge of each other, not by the sure test of love to God and man, but by the creed they have adopted. Hence it often happens, that a real child of God is rejected because he has subscribed to an opposite creed to ours, while, perhaps, a hypocrite is embraced as a dear brother; for, he is of 'our faith and order.' Is this not to be deceived and bewildered?

III. THE REQUIREMENTS OF HUMAN CREEDS ARE UNREASONABLE.

1. They require us to believe without evidence. That is they do not afford evidence in themselves of the truth of what they affirm. They attempt to state what the authors suppose is truth; but, they have nothing in themselves in proof of their positions. To demand assent under such circumstances is unreasonable in the highest degree. It is a demand which God himself has made upon no man.

2. They are unreasonable in their requirements, because, they require all to believe alike on all points stated in them. They make no allowance for weakness of understanding—prejudice of early education, or any other unavoidable circumstances.—The man who has but one talent, is to assent to just as much as a man with five or ten talents; the babe in Christ, to as much, and the same as a father; the weak is to have his mind reined up to pronounce the same 'yea,' on the highest points in theology, as the strongest; and all this too, when, perhaps, they have just passed from death unto life, and at the very outset of that "knowledge" in which the Bible commands them to "grow." Was ever anything more unreasonable? We might as well make it a condition to a newborn babe, of remaining in its family, that it should do the work of a full grown child, or solve the problems of Euclid.

3. Their demands are unreasonable, because, they circumscribe us in the pursuit of knowledge.

They assume that they are correct in themselves, and have the "essential and fundamental" truths of God's Word embodied; and hence, every one who assents to them is constantly hedged in by the creed, and must take care how he looks over his prison walls to examine opposing views, unless he does it with an intention of making war on them; he must not, for a moment, indulge the suspicion, that possibly he may be wrong, and his neighbor right: whatever his convictions may be, he must, if he would maintain his standing, where he is, affirm, our creed is the true one. The Scriptures condemn those who "take away the key of knowledge." Human creeds virtually do this, by assuming that they contain the fundamental and essential truths of the Gospel, and that a man cannot obtain or retain a standing in their community who presumes to overstep their ipse dixit. The creed, then, with the weight of influence accompanying it rests upon the mind like an incubus to prevent its efforts for knowledge, except in the direction and under the control of this human invention.

Inspiration saith, "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." "Not so," answer our creed makers, "we have what is essential and fundamental in our bird's-eye view," and depend upon it, the moral world is "flat," and the man is unworthy our church fellowship that believes "it revolves on its own axis." That is, in plain English, the man that thinks one jot ahead of us is next door to a heretic, and not to be tolerated in the same church with us. Are not, then, their requirements unreasonable? So it appears to us; and had such requirements been yielded to, we might still have been in the darkness of the middle ages, from which we have scarcely yet emerged.

"WHY WILL YE DIE?"

Such is the gracious expostulation of our Father in heaven to his perishing children, who, by transgression have exposed themselves to the penalty of his holy law, which is "DEATH." "The soul that sinneth it shall die." O, let us hearken to the voice of his love! He assures us that he has given his own Son to die for us, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have everlasting life, and kindly asks, "Why will ye die?" "As I live saith the Lord, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but rather that he turn and live. Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?"

O the remorse that will agonize the man that is now preferring the perishing riches, or honours, or pleasures of this transitory state, to all the ravishing glories of Immortality, when he shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the humble followers of the Lamb in the Kingdom of God, and he himself thrust out!

O ye whose god will be as the spider's web, because ye purify not yourselves as Christ is pure; ye who have a name to live and are dead, who have the form of godliness without its power; ye who lay up for yourselves treasures upon earth, and are not rich towards God, be kindly entreated to pause one solemn moment. Is it possible that, with the voice of eternal truth warning you so fearfully, "Except ye repent (reform) ye shall perish;" that you will continue to deprive yourselves of all the inconceivable and interminable joys of God's everlasting kingdom, to be destroyed, "soul and body in hell," for the sake of a momentary gratification in the idolatrous possession of the vanities of the present world! What will it profit a man to gain the whole world and lose his life forever? Who can estimate the gain of losing our present life for Christ's sake, and finding it in life eternal? Why will ye die? H. GAW.

CREED POWER.—The following is from a sermon published by a son of Rev. Dr. Lyman Beecher:—"There is nothing imaginary in the statement that the Creed-Power is now beginning to prohibit the Bible, as really as Rome did, though in a subtler way. During the whole course of seven years' study, the Protestant candidate of the ministry sees before him an unauthorized statement, spiked down and stereotyped, of what he must find in the Bible, or be martyred. And does any one, acquainted with human nature, need be told that he studies under a tremendous pressure of motive? Is that freedom of opinion—the 'liberty wherewith Christ maketh free'—Rome would have given that. Every one of her clergy might have studied the Bible to find the Pontifical Creed, on the pain of Death. Was that liberty?"

"Hence, I say, that liberty of opinion in our Theological Seminaries is a mere form. To say nothing of the thumb-screw of criticism, by which every original mind is tortured into negative propriety, the whole boasted liberty of the student consists in a choice of chains—a choice of handcuffs—whether he will wear the Presbyterian handcuff, or Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal, or other evangelical handcuff. Hence it has now come to pass, that the ministry themselves dare not study their Bible. Large portions thereof are seldom touched. It lies useless lumber; or if they do study and search, they dare not show their people what they find. There is something criminal in saying anything new. It is shocking to utter words that have not the mould of age upon them."

RENOUNCEMENT OF SECTARIANISM.—The body of Christians formerly known as the "Liberty Street Presbyterian Church of Troy, N. Y.," unanimously passed the following resolutions on Sunday, March 5th.

Whereas, Sectarianism is at variance with the spirit and letter of the Gospel, and is the foundation of ecclesiastical oppression, and is a most prolific source of wars and slavery, and many other oppressions that afflict the world; therefore,

Resolved, That the members of Christ's body, heretofore denominated "The Liberty Street Presbyterian Church of Troy, N. Y.," do hereby solemnly repudiate all sectarianism, sincerely regretting before God and man that we ever gave countenance to that destructive device of Satan.

Resolved, That we shall hereafter be known as "The Church in Liberty Street, Troy, N. Y.," and that we shall acknowledge no other creed than the Bible, and no other Head than God and his Son Jesus Christ.

Resolved, That God has but one Church on the earth, and that it is composed of all such as love him and keep his commandments, and that these, in their Church relations, are equal in rights and liberty.

LETTERS.

CHARLES FITCH, ONCE MORE.

The following letter is the first we received from that dear brother after he made up his mind to put shoulder to the yoke with us on the topics therein named. If we published it at the time it was received we have no paper containing it, and now publish it from the original manuscript. We have not seen it for four years past, till a few days since, and accidentally found it among papers we had laid aside. It seemed as though just uttered, and we determined to give it to our readers. It is even to-day like cold water to a thirsty soul. "He being dead yet speaketh."

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Jan. 25, 1844.

Dear Bro. Storrs:—As you have long been fighting the Lord's battles alone, on the subject of the state of the dead, and of the final doom of the wicked, I write this to say that I am at last, after much thought and prayer, and a full conviction of duty to God, prepared to take my stand by your side.

I am thoroughly converted to the Bible truth, that "the dead know not anything," and that all the instances in the Bible in which they are spoken of as though in a conscious state, are instances in which "God who quickeneth the dead, calleth the things which be not as though they were." Particular instances of this are seen in God's reference to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob at the bush; in the Saviour's parable of the rich man and Lazarus; in the case of the saints, as in Revelation, looking forward to the time when they shall reign on the earth, and crying to God from under the altar for vengeance, as the blood of Abel cried to God from the ground. Another instance is found in the 37th chap. of Ezekiel, where the "whole house of Israel, a valley of dry bones, EXCEEDING DRY," are represented as saying, "our bones are dried, our hope is lost." In all these cases, God, who will quicken the dead, has called the things which be not as though they were.

"God hath" also "chosen things which are not, to bring to nought the things which are." That is, the saints who now are not, will be raised at the Lord's coming, and with Christ will execute vengeance upon all the wicked of the earth, and thus bring to nought the things which now are. This will be the stone cut out without hands, to smite the image on its feet, when all these kingdoms will be broken in pieces and consumed. I am also fully satisfied that, "when the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish, it is that they shall be destroyed forever; and that language must mean, what it would mean in any other book, in relation to any other thing—that was to be destroyed. It means that their end is destruction;" "punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of His power." If God's presence fills the universe, and the glory of His power is everywhere to be seen in His works, then, throughout all the presence and works of God, we "may diligently consider" the "place of the wicked and it shall not be." You are right Brother Storrs, we shall have a clean universe. Thanks be to God. You can use this letter in any way, so that it speaks out. I shall not put my light under a bushel. I have preached two sermons here this week on this subject. They have produced a great uproar. Many thought I had a devil before, but now they feel sure of it. But I have no more right, my Brother, to be ashamed of God's truth on this subject than on any other. I have not taken ground on these great truths hastily or waveringly. I have felt every inch of it, and I know it is as firm as God our eternal rock; and I wish all our advent brethren to know where I stand, and all the world besides. I know that our mighty, coming Lord will take his fan, and thoroughly purge his floor, gather the wheat into the garner, and burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire. "Even so, come Lord Jesus."

Lest I be misunderstood—I wish to say, very distinctly, that all the wicked must come forth from their graves to the resurrection of damnation; and have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone which is the second death, and there be "utterly consumed," see 73d Ps.

"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power." Your Brother in the Glorious Hope,

CHARLES FITCH.

THE LEAVEN AT WORK.—A minister of the Gospel, in one of the organised denominations, of high standing among his brethren, writes us, "not for the public eye," but yet we cannot forbear giving an extract, while we withhold his name and residence. He says:—

BR. STORRS:—I have long had it in contemplation to write you a few lines, but have hitherto neglected to do so. You have had the goodness to send me your Bible Examiner, which, I assure you, has been thankfully received, and read with interest. Though it contains some things which I either do not fully understand or cannot endorse, yet, on the whole, I read it with more interest than almost any other paper. I am with you on the literal interpretation of Prophecy, the return of the Jews, Probation after the Advent, &c.

I am much exercised on the final state of the wicked, and the state of the dead. I strongly incline to your views—indeed, I have been shaken in my belief of the popular theory ever since I read your first pamphlet. I confess myself unable to refute your arguments, and yet I have rather shrunk from the full and open admission of the correctness of your views. I am prayerfully investigating, and hope to be led into all truth.

DR. J. F. LEE, Melroseville, N. C., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—I shall endeavor ere long to extend the spread of your "Six Sermons." I intend as some writers say, to flood the country with them. They have already excited no small commotion among a certain class of preachers and deacons, who say that they do not wish to believe the doctrine even if it should be true! Alas! how some seek applause—with what untiring zeal they court popularity, thirsting for the honor that comes from man! The Lord open their eyes, that they may see. But so it is—and so it is written. We certainly must be approaching the end of all things—or in other words, the end of all things must be nigh. What a blessed feeling is that of the Christian who has a lively, living Hope—looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ.

I am a firm believer in the second Advent doctrine as unfolded in the Bible. I am persuaded from the compulsive influence of truth, that the New Heaven and New Earth constitute the Kingdom of God, or the Paradise of God; that unless a man is born again he cannot enter that Kingdom—that the New Birth includes the Redemption of the Body—that it will be completed or perfected in the Resurrection; and I know that Christians love one another—that love is the fulfilling of the law—that without faith it is impossible to please God—that in order to be saved, we must believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and love one another as he gave us commandment—that we love Him because he first loved us.

In 1836 I made a profession of Religion, united with the Baptists—and was ordained in 1837. At present I desire to be at perfect liberty to preach a doctrine which I see clearly revealed in letters of living light. I know I love the truth, and feel assured that, by the grace of God, I am willing to suffer for the sake of Him who is Truth. You may expect to hear from me in the course of a few weeks, when I shall have the pleasure of forwarding to you some subscribers, and money.

BR. L. W. BEACH, Middleburg, Ind., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—Having become, of late, a convert to the doctrine advocated in your Examiner of the sleep of the dead and the final destruction of the wicked, and given up the hope of a heaven "beyond the skies," without latitude or longitude, for the hope of the Gospel, I am endeavoring to "show my faith by my works." I am aware that my talent is but one, and that perhaps small. But as I have received much valuable information from your paper, from the few Nos. I have received since I became a subscriber, by lending those, I am enabled to send you more subscribers.

My Examiners are getting some worn by lending, and perhaps I had better lay claim to your promise to send us new ones for them. I will endeavor to send you more subscribers soon. May the Lord help you to examine and promulgate his truth. Yours, waiting for the Kingdom.

SIST. MARY A. ORDWAY, Uxbridge, Mass., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—I have much to say in favor of your invaluable paper; but, let it suffice to say—it seems to me like green and fertile spots in the midst of a dry and barren desert. I often-times feel that the former is almost as necessary to my future progress, as is the latter to the traveller of the arid deserts of Africa.

Yours, in hope of immortality.

BR. ELON EVERTS, Vergennes, Vt., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—In '44 when you visited Vermont and spoke of the "wages of sin, which are death;" and death was not life; but destruction, decomposition, smoke and ashes, unconsciousness; I had never investigated the subject. I could only quote, "these shall go away, into everlasting punishment;" the "smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever;" "worm dieth not, and fire is not quenched," &c., but understood not by the word of God, what I should have learned by these passages, had I went to the right source in a prayerful, teachable frame of mind. And the brethren in this region were in darkness at that time, as to this subject; and although they were anxious to hear you, on the coming of the Lord, they almost wished that you would consult their feelings as to this soul-thrilling subject.

Now brother, the brethren in this vicinity who are looking for the coming of the Lord, are rejoicing in this truth. Yes, I can say that it affords me comfort to think that God will have a clean Universe; and if through Christ I shall be permitted to enter that Eden-restored land, that I shall not have my peace annoyed by beholding my near friends or neighbors who have slighted and despised all my feeble prayers and tears, the counsels of God's word, and the drawings of his tender spirit, writing in everlasting life of torment and misery. No, God has said that He would not be angry always. Br., you turned my mind to look at what would be done at, and after Christ's second advent, and what would be the condition of the wicked that knew not God, and obeyed not the gospel, and the heathen that shall be left after that time of trouble, spoken of by Dan. 12th, Zeph. 3d, and Zech. 14th chap., and many other scriptures; which has comforted my soul: it has fed me many otherwise doubtful, anxious hours. Yes, Br., during this long halt of the whole line of the expecting children, to pass the land, I have many glorious shouts in searching the land, and eating the grapes of Eschol; and telling the children not to fear; that they are able through their spiritual Joshua to possess the land. The trump will soon sound, and Jericho's walls (the Kingdom of this world) will fall; and the Rahabs (the heathen, they that are left) will be remembered in mercy, Isa. 60: 3, 10; 61: 5, Zech. 14: 16, Zeph. 3: 13, 13.

I am glad to read your paper, to hear of your love for truth, which I doubted not; of your determination to scatter light. May God aid you, and bless you in it. I contravert not with any. I have learned, that to be untraditionized, is a great work. I want to hear, may I have ears to hear. I pray that I may not possess a censorious, but kind spirit, toward all. But, oh, the esteeming one above another, and puffing up one, as I see in the many letters to certain Editors; paying a certain homage; it looks like loving to call, and love to be called master.

BR. DAVID PLUMS, Troy, N. Y., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—All religion is to be embodied in practical life—in maintaining human rights—in promoting human interests. The final and decisive question that will be put to men of all nations, whether nominally Christians, Jews, Mahomedans, or Pagans, will be, "Have you fed the hungry—clothed the naked—visited the sick and imprisoned?" The doing these things, (which summarily comprehend the whole class of duties to our fellow men,) the doing them uniformly, and from the principle of obedience to the great social law—"Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself"—is the end of the "Law and the Prophets," as it is the true expression and fulfilment of the Gospel. The triumph and universal establishment in the kingdom of Christ of the law of brotherhood, from which those merciful acts spring, will constitute the consummation of the Messiah's mission to this world. The expounding and applying that law is, therefore, of paramount consideration—a chief work of preachers and editors, as, indeed, of every Christian; while the meditation is the means by which we are to be restored to that law; and, the Advent—the end of the wicked—and immortality of the righteous, are only so many motive influences to induce us to seek that restoration.

I should be glad to see this practical view of the Gospel more specifically spread out on the pages of the Examiner. If we are ever permitted to enter into the social state under Christ, it must be on condition that we become conformed to the law of that state now; and the proof that we are conformed to it must be found in the fact that we maintain it in all our present relations to our fellow men.

BR. BENJ. TILLEY, JR., Bristol, R. I., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—The ground you have taken upon the Prophetic Periods I consider very important to us who have been looking with so much interest to their ending as the point at which the Christian's hope is to be realized. I must confess that when I have examined the Prophecies relating to the restoration from the Babylonian captivity, and find the person named who should say to his people, "go free," and "to Jerusalem, thou shalt be built," I have been at a loss to find the ground for placing that decree in the reign of Artaxerxes; but, I am not well read enough in the history of those times to decide whether there is sufficient ground for your placing the reign of Cyrus where you have. I am striving to keep myself open to conviction, and ready to receive light from whatever source it may come, without regard to former opinions or prejudices, whether expressed or not.

Yours, in hope of Eternal Life.

BR. WM. OXLEY, Oneonta Co., N. Y., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—We believe we shall soon be delivered, and the saints will take the kingdom, and reign with Jesus for ever, Amen. Thank God, we hear the thrones begin to be cast down; next the Ancient of days will sit. Men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; next we shall see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory; then we that are alive (and remain) shall be changed in a moment, and be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and so ever be with the Lord. Comfort one another with these words. We will praise the Lord, and wait for his appearing from heaven. Last winter and spring myself and wife have been labouring in Chemung and Struben Cos., N. Y., and are about to return. There are many calls to hear the doctrine of the coming kingdom. We are bold to proclaim eternal life for the children of God, and death to the wicked, and that the dead know not anything. I have sold many dozens of your "Six Sermons," and am happy to say the sermons and other works on those subjects, it seems to me, are doing the last work. I have been witness of their happy effects: it is like a two-edged sword, because it is God's word. Myself and wife have to confess in 1843 and '44 we were afraid to look at it and examine that question. Oh, praise the Lord for all His truth; it seems to me almost impossible to preach the Second Advent of our Lord and the resurrection without it; for it harmonizes the whole chain of God's word.

I thought I ought to tell you what God is doing through your Sermons on the End of the Wicked and State of the Dead. My prayer to God is that you may be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord.

I remain your Brother in Christ, waiting for our deliverance and our King from Heaven.

BR. ASA MORSE, Union, Ct., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—We have felt interested mainly in your paper for the truth it contains concerning the state of the dead and destruction of the wicked; and I would say for your encouragement, that almost without exception the Advent brethren and sisters in this region of country are firm believers in the above truths: also concerning the truth that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.

DR. DRAKE'S PANACEA: THE ONLY RADICAL CURE FOR CONSUMPTION. It also removes and permanently cures all diseases arising from an impure state of the blood. The following is but one of the certificates we have received, showing the virtues of this invaluable medicine:

Philadelphia, Dec. 12, 1847.
Dear Sir,—In reply to your question respecting the use of Dr. DRAKE'S PANACEA, I would say, I have used it in two very inveterate cases, pronounced by the attending physicians to be Pulmonary Consumption, and abandoned by them as incurable. One of the persons had been under the treatment of several very able practitioners for a number of years, and they said she had "old fashioned Consumption combined with Scrofula," and that she might linger for some time, but could not be permanently relieved. In both cases the effect of the Panacea has been most gratifying. I will only add that familiar as I am with consumption by inheritance and by extensive observation as a study, and knowing also the injurious effects in nine cases out of ten of tar, bone-set, and other vegetable tonics, as well as many of the expectorants and sedatives, I should never have recommended the use of Drake's Panacea, if I had not been acquainted with the ingredients. Suffice it to say that these are recommended by our most popular and scientific physicians, and in their present combined state form probably the best alternative that has ever been made.

Very respectfully, L. C. GUNN, Corner Chestnut & Fifth St.

Each bottle has the signature of Geo. F. Storrs, and the name, Dr. Drake's Panacea, blown in the glass.

CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY;

OR, THE CONSTITUTION OF MAN IN RELATION TO IMMORTALITY AND ETERNAL LIFE.

By J. T. WALSH.

No. II.

THE INSTRUMENT OF THOUGHT.

Thought has been ascribed to various organs of the body, by different nations, as well as authors. The Hebrews ascribed thought to the "reins" or kidneys; and feeling to the heart. Some authors have located the soul in the spine; others in the heart; others in the bowels; and others, again, in the pineal gland. But the researches of Physiologists have long since exploded these vulgar hypotheses, and established the proposition that the brain is the instrument of thought, feeling, and moral emotion; and, that the other, viscera, are only affected sympathetically.

The simple statement of this proposition is sufficient to convict one of infidelity, in the estimation of the orthodox of this age! Talk to them about the brain being the organ of the mind, and they will shrink from you with holy horror, and exclaim, "infidelity! materialism!!" For, while they deny that the brain is the instrument of thought, they have brains enough to know, that the proposition does not favor immortal-soulism. And, hence, they deny its truth, not because they can disprove it; but because it is opposed to their theory of immortality! And, to sustain this theory, they would sooner deny that man thought by any material instrument, than admit that his brain manifested mind!

Such men, though they may possess brains, do not properly exercise them. They do not think for themselves: they not only "commit the keeping of their souls" to their spiritual leaders; but they, also, "commit the keeping" of their minds and consciences to them. They think not with their own brains, but with the brains of others—by proxy! And, as they do not think with their brains, perhaps they ought to be excused for denying that, the brain is the organ of thought!

There is, however, these thoughtless thinkers to the contrary, notwithstanding, an abundance of evidence in proof of our proposition. The brain is the instrument of the mind. It is the grand sensorium of thought, the fountain of intellect and emotion.

But we shall doubtless be told, that, although the brain may be the instrument of the mind, nevertheless it is not the mind; and that, therefore, our argument fails. This objection introduces another question, What is the mind? The objector replies, "The mind is the spirit, the agent which operates upon the brain, developing thought and reason." Thus the mind is defined to be an independent and separate entity, possessing all the attributes of intelligence; and manifesting all the phenomena of an intellectual and moral character. According to this view of the subject, all the human faculties have their seat in this independent mind or spirit, and merely hold intercourse with external objects, by means of the brain, and its organs. There is, therefore, no intelligence, reason, judgment, or perception apart from this "immaterial spirit," or "soul." Consequently no being, unless possessed of this immortal soul, can manifest mind or intelligence in any degree whatever! A man, then, can think, reason, compare and judge, according to this principle, as well without a brain as with it! And, accordingly it is maintained that dead men think—that dead men are happy in heaven, or miserable in hell!

In this "philosophy" falsely so called," then, we have the following principles:

1st. That the "immortal soul," spirit, or mind, is the seat of all the human faculties; and gives rise to all the evil passions, vile motives, and hellish designs of men.

That this is no misrepresentation is evident, because mind, according to their theory, is not an attribute of the brain—this being merely its instrument. And these various mental functions belong, not to the instrument but to the mind itself.

Here we have a philosophy, then, which makes immortality—"the immortal soul,"—the deep and deadly fountain of every base passion, and every unworthy motive! Well may the advocates of the popular theory talk of "converting the immortal soul," for, if they are as corrupt as this, they ought to be "converted!"

2. The second principle is, that thought, and all the phenomena of intellectual life, can be manifested independent of the brain, thus rendering the existence of that organ unnecessary in the economy of man. For, surely, that mind which can hold intercourse with all worlds, when out of the body, does not require the intervention of the brain, in this life, in order to hold intercourse with external objects! But, in opposition to this "vain philosophy," we affirm, that the brain is as necessary to thought as the eye is to sight, the ear to sound, or the nerves to the sense of feeling. And that it would be just as logical, and just as philosophic to suppose a man could see without the optic nerve, and hear without the auditory apparatus, as it would be to suppose he could think and reason without a brain.

3. A third principle is, that the possession of an "immortal soul" or spirit, that being the mind, is essential to the existence and manifestation of the intellectual faculties. And that, consequently, where there is no "immortal spirit," there is no mind.

Upon this hypothesis the "beasts" possess "immortal spirits," for they certainly think! What will the advocates of the "immortal-soul-system" do with this dilemma? What disposition will they make of this Bruto-immortal-soul? Will they take the position of Mr. Wesley, that the beasts will be raised from the dead?

Here they are certainly in a strait; for they must take one or the other of the following positions:

1st. Either that the possession of an "immortal spirit" is not necessary to the manifestation of mind; or,

2d. That, if it be, the beasts are "immortal."

3d. And that they will be raised from the dead: And,

4th. That they are, also, in as much as they are "immortal," conscious in death.

We hope the advocates of the popular theory will meet these difficulties, and look them folly in the face. For, we feel confident, that they are here stranded, and must either yield to the omnipotence of truth, or maintain a position utterly subversive of revelation, philosophy, and common sense.

Now we put the emphatic question, "Is the possession of an immortal-soul essential to thought?" Will the advocates of the popular view take this position? If they do, we repeat it, they will be forced to the conclusion that, the beasts have immortality. And, if they possess immortality, what disposition will they make of this brutal soul, when the brute dies? Will it not be conscious? And, if conscious, will it be happy or miserable? Let not our opponents evade these questions, for these are the legitimate consequences of the teaching that an immortal soul is essential to the production of mental phenomena. Either answer them, or admit the truth we advocate.

But we are not reduced to this dilemma. We deny, and challenge our opponents to the proof, that an immortal soul or spirit is necessary to thought. The function of an organ depends upon its vital chemical organization. This gives character to the muscles, the tendons, the ligaments, the nerves, brain, and all the various organs and viscera of the body. These organs, thus chemically constituted by that Being who understands every law in his vast universe, being acted on by the positive and negative electro-magnetic forces, develop the peculiar function of each organ. It is thus that the muscles contract and expand; the liver secretes bile; the stomach digests food; and that all the various organs perform their respective functions.

Now, we might as well assume that the function of every living tissue depended on an "immortal principle," as to maintain that immortality is essential to the manifestation of the functions of the brain and nervous system generally. The grand argument of our opponents is, that thought is not an attribute, or function of matter, no matter how organized. This, as we have seen, leads to the conclusion that the beasts possess immortal souls, for they certainly think. We all agree that man thinks, but by what means does he think? Does he think, feel, and reason because he has an immortal soul? Does he not think and reason by means of his brain? Are thought, feeling, and sentiment attributes of immortality only? Then it follows that all animals, not possessed of an immortal mind, are incapable of thought, reason, and sentiment; consequently all the lower animals, as well as all idiots, simpletons, or fools, have no immortality about them; because they are incapable of displaying these mental phenomena! This argument, therefore, proves too much for the advocates of the immortal-soul system. It proves that some men have no immortality! Here the opposition are certainly in a dilemma, from which no rules of logic on earth can deliver them! While it may be, however, that idiots think, their thoughts and sentiments are not such as we should expect from a mind endowed with the principle of immortality and incorruptibility. Does it not follow, then, if some men, such as idiots, &c., display no trace of incorruptibility, that this principle is not congenital? For, if it were congenital, or hereditary, all men would be in possession of it.

Matter, organized, refined, and endowed with life is capable of thought in the ratio of its perfection of organization. That this is true we see demonstrated before our eyes by observing the organization of different genera, species, and varieties in the animal world, from the smallest animalculæ up to man, the noblest work of God. Every link we mark in this great chain of organization, bears upon its face the degree of intelligence it possesses, and establishes the proposition, that intellect, other things being equal, is always in proportion to the perfection of its constitution. Unorganized matter is incapable of thought. Moreover, it is not enough that matter should be organized in order to produce mental phenomena, but it must also be endowed with life, as we have already stated. And to those who deny that organized matter, endowed with life, can think, we will put a few questions. If matter, organized, refined, sublimated, and endowed with life, is incapable of thought, by what means do the beasts think? Thought, you affirm, is not a function of matter, and yet the beasts think! Is thought a function of matter in this case? Again, we would ask, seeing they are all endowed with instinct, if this is an attribute or function of matter? Will you affirm that sight, hearing, tasting, smelling, or feeling are functions of matter, when moulded and fashioned by the hand of God? Is it not preposterous to say that matter can see? That matter can taste? That matter can smell? That matter can feel? And yet you are bound to admit this, or else be driven to the conclusion, THAT EVERY LIVING THING IN THE UNIVERSE OF GOD HAS AN IMMORTAL SOUL! Are you prepared for this? Or do you shrink back from this position? If so, you must admit that your views of the subject are unsound, and consequently untenable. And if all the functions of the five senses are manifested by matter, why may not reason, perception, judgment, and imagination also be developed by matter still more exquisitely organized? If the stomach can digest food, the liver secrete bile, and the heart propel the blood, why may not the brain, acted upon by electro-magnetism, secrete thought? Is there any thing more incompatible in the one case, than in the other? We come, therefore, to this conclusion, that matter, organized as we behold it in man, and endowed with life from God, is capable of manifesting moral and intellectual functions.

We have now shown, that immortality is not essential to thought, reason, &c., or that, if it be, every living thing, possessing the five senses, must be in possession of it: and having made these general remarks, we shall proceed to examine the mind and some of its attributes in detail. And,

1st OF PERSONAL IDENTITY. A great many singular ideas prevail on the subject of Personal Identity. Those who hold the doctrine of "hereditary immortality," suppose that the soul, or spirit of man constitutes his identity. Supposing then, for the sake of argument, that the soul or spirit, in the popular sense, constitutes man's personal identity, what is it that speaks when the language "my soul," "my spirit," "my body," or "my mind" is used? A man speaks of himself, and says he has a mind, a soul, a body, a head and a heart, &c. What is it that possesses all these? Is it not that which is the representative of them all? In other words, is it not that which supplies the I of consciousness—that which gives rise to the sentiment of personal identity? To affirm the contrary would be to represent the soul or spirit as saying my soul, or my spirit. Has the soul possession of another soul? Does the spirit possess a spirit? This view of the case, then, is at once reduced to an absurdity. The scriptures do not thus trifle with the understanding of man. It is utterly beneath the dignity of the spirit of wisdom and knowledge thus to speak. Moreover, if the soul constitute the personal identity of man, what becomes of its immortality when the feeling of self-consciousness is deranged so that the person shall imagine himself to be a very extraordinary personage, a king, an emperor, and even God himself? Can this derangement be affirmed of an immortal soul? Again, as we have organs for the manifestation of all our other feelings and faculties, it is certainly reasonable to suppose that there is an organ, the manifestation of whose function would give rise to the sentiment of I, myself. And when that organ is diseased, its function becomes the subject of that kind of derangement of which we have spoken. While, therefore, it is clear that man has a material organ, whose office it is to create the feeling of personality, or self-consciousness, it is also evident that man is not to be dissected and examined in that state; but that he is to be the subject of a sound, rational, and philosophical analysis, in order to arrive at the truth upon this subject. We would ask one question—in the spirit, mind, or soul, in the popular sense of these words, does everything of a moral and mental nature, by means of material organs, what is left for the man to do? for it is evident that the spirit is not the man! These acts, to which we have referred, should be affirmed of man, as such, in the aggregate, and not of his mind, soul, or spirit. Therefore, when a man (not spirit) sees, he sees by means of the optic nerve; when he hears, it is by means of the ear; when he thinks, reasons, reflects and perceives, it is by means of his brain. And as he has organs by which to operate on the world, and by which external objects operate upon him, so it is fair to conclude that every feeling, every moral sentiment, and every intellectual faculty, has its appropriate organ, or instrument, in the brain; and that of personal identity among the number. There is nothing in personal identity, then, to favor the popular view of immortality. Let us now turn our attention,

2d. TO THE MEMORY. It is said, man has such powers of mind—such vast intellectual faculties—such a comprehensive judgment, and such a prodigious memory, that his mind must be immortal. If this be so, why is it that all men do not possess these noble powers of mind, seeing that they all have immortal souls, if the popular hypothesis be true? Why is it that we have youthful idiots? adult simpletons, and the dotage of the evening of life? Why is it that these incorruptible fires of mind do not kindle, blaze and burn with equal brightness in youth, manhood, and old age, seeing the same immortal genius-inspiring agent breathes its life-giving spirit upon the strings of the exquisitely tuned instrument, at each of these stages alike? If the mind be essentially immortal, why are its fortunes through life so variant? Ah! the answer is, that the instrument is imperfect in childhood, and out of order in old age. So it appears that every thing depends upon the perfection of the instrument at last, and thus the immortal mind, as our opponents will have it, is cast into the shade, and is made only of secondary importance in the manifestation of intellect! But more of this, when we come to speak of mental diseases. We grant that the memory of a cultivated mind is very comprehensive, but, alas! how little is remembered of one's history and of the history of the world! The mind of man is exceedingly treacherous. The most important facts, the most startling truths, and the most overwhelming considerations are soon forgotten, vanished like the baseless fabric of a vision, leaving not a wreck behind! Reason declares that forgetfulness is not an attribute of an incorruptible mind or memory. An incorruptible mind must have an incorruptible memory. The impressions made upon a mind that is mortal or corruptible, will be like those made upon the sand, while those made upon an immortal mind, will be like those engraved upon the solid marble, and will never be effaced. The Angels are not forgetful. There is no forgetfulness in Heaven—this is an attribute of "dull mortality," and not of incorruptibility! Impressions made upon an immortal mind, are stereotyped by Jehovah, and will remain indelible through the eternal ages! Memory, then, affords no proof of man's immortality here, but the reverse. So long as impressions fade from the tablet of his mind, just so long will that mind prove itself corruptible. Besides, it is a remarkable fact, that the memory is more treacherous upon some subjects than upon others. This is incompatible with the notion that memory is an attribute of an incorruptible principle in man; for, in that event, every fact and circumstance would be retained alike.

In concluding this article, we will add a few words on the Love of Life, which, as Plato is made to say, causes "the soul to shrink back on herself, and startle at the idea of destruction." In that popular soliloquy to which we have alluded, we have the following: "It must be so, Plato, thou reasonest well." "It must be" what? Why the soul "must be" immortal. But why "must it be" immortal? Here is the answer—"Else whence this fond desire, this pleasing hope, this longing after immortality?" "Plato, thou reasonest well!" Because man has a "fond desire," a "pleasing hope," and a "longing after immortality," therefore, he is immortal! Because a man "desires," "hopes," and "longs" for a thing, therefore he has that thing! Truly, "Plato, thou reasonest well!" And, then again, if the soul be not immortal, why should "she shrink back on herself," at the approach of death, "and startle at" the very idea of "destruction"? The Platonic answer is, "tis the divinity that stirs within us." The "divinity shrinks back on itself, and startles at destruction!" Cogent reasoning! Profound logic! But although the soul has such a horror of death and destruction, yet, "secure in herself, she smiles at the drawn dagger, and defies its point?" And, though the moon and stars may fade from the heavens, "and the sun himself grow dim," the soul shall flourish in immortal youth, unhurt amid "the wreck of matter and the crush of worlds!" This is pure Platonism, as well as the essence of modern Christianity. But we shall reverse Plato's reasoning, although it is said he "reasoned well." The very truth, that there is in man a "fond desire," a "pleasing hope," and "a longing after immortality," is good evidence that he is not in possession of it. Why should a man desire, hope, and long for an object already in his possession? There is an innate dread of "shrinking into nought," and a longing after life implanted in every man; and no person, unless deranged, will commit suicide. A poet, whose name I have never known, has given a very different description of the soul's exit from the one indicated in the above allusions. Speaking of a death scene, he says: "At that dread moment the soul raves round the walls of her clay tenement; runs to each avenue and shrieks for help, but shrieks in vain! Her very eyes weep blood, and every sigh is big with horror." Here we have the monstrous doctrine of an immortal soul raving round the walls of her clay tenement, running to each avenue and shrieking for help, but shrieking in vain? This immortal soul, too, can weep tears of blood, and utter sighs big with the horror of prospective damnation! And yet, this is the "divinity" that stirs within us, smiles at the drawn dagger, and defies its point! What a libel upon the truth of God!

But let us turn from the contemplation of this damnable heresy, to the glorious truths of the Apostolic proclamation. And let the reader remember, that God will only render eternal life to those, who, by a patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, honor, and incorruptibility.

In our next article, we shall take up the subject of mental diseases.

DR. THOMAS' REJOINDER TO BR. GREW.

"LOVE," OR "CHARITY."

Having been requested to make some remarks on "H. Grew's Response" in No. 5, p. 68, I proceed to observe that friend Grew attributes to me inferentially "an opinion" which I do not entertain, namely, that men dying in impenitence will in some cases be forgiven. On the contrary, I believe, that men dying in impenitence will in no case, and under no circumstances be forgiven. I believe further, that no man's sins will be forgiven, however "pious" he may be, or however "sorry" he may be, if, before he die, he has not believed and obeyed the Gospel of the Kingdom in the name of Jesus, and walked worthy of the high vocation to which he has been called. It is no business of mine to build up a wall of casuistry around this impregnable position, by which to mask its formidable appearance. This frowning fortress of the truth may dismay the timid heart of ignorance and unbelief, and cause it to apostrophize the air with lack-a-daisy exclamations about "love" and "charity"! This is no affair of mine. The truth belongs to God, not to me; and godlike love and charity consists in plain, unvarnished exhibitions of that truth in such unmistakable and intelligible terms, that men may be able to comprehend it, and be saved by it. It is a godlike charity to pluck men like brands from the burning, though you rescue them by violence; it is the cheat of hypocrisy and infidelity—it is to put the poisoned chalice of deceit to their lips, to soften down the asperity and sternness of the truth lest it should hurt the feelings or morbid sensitiveness of the "carnal mind," which is "enmity against God," and rebellion against his law. I have no sympathy with that sort of "love" which leaves men to die in error, which "knowledge" teaches is damnable. John Wesley is no authority with me. He was doubtless a very pious, a very sincere errorist. His system proves him to have been ignorant, and therefore, faithless of the Gospel of the Kingdom; so that his opinion of how many truths we may die in ignorance of, and be saved, weighs not a feather, in my estimation, however potent it may be with others. Knowledge will avail us nothing without that "love" of which Paul speaks; but then, that charity, or love, "rejoiceth in the truth; believeth all things; and hopeth all things;" hence, much as "charity," or "love" are on the lips of men, he who is ignorant of the truth, believeth not and hopeth not in all things of that truth, is utterly destitute of the true love and charity so highly extolled by the Apostle. Men mistake a natural amiability of disposition, decorated after a certain fashion with sectarian piety, for love, for charity, for godliness! But this is a mere substitute for scriptural love, a maudlin, spurious affair. Gospel love is the fulfilling of the law in the faith and disposition of Abraham, the father of the faithful and the friend of God. No, no; he that believeth the Gospel, and is baptized, shall be saved; there is no evading this: "charity," "piety," "penitence," without this, are but the righteousness of filthy rags.

MEN DYING IMPENITENT, NEVER FORGIVEN.

The proposition then before us is, that men dying faithless or impenitent, or both, will never be forgiven. This we believe the scriptures teach. But what has that to do with men of faith, dying in sins "not unto death?" Paul saith, "We must all appear at the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things in body, according to that he hath done, whether good or bad." The "we" referred to in this text, are not all mankind, but all of a class, and that class the aggregate of believers. Now, by way of illustration, let us suppose a case.

One of the Corinthian disciples committed a great crime. Paul, though absent, judged his case from the report laid before him. He commanded the Elders to put in force the sentence he pronounced in the name of the Lord, to wit, that they should deliver the criminal to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, and keep no company with him, nor even eat with him. This sentence they executed and persisted in, until they heard from the apostle again. After a certain time had elapsed he wrote, and sent the offender a pardon; and because the punishment had brought him to a deep conviction of the enormity of his sin, and a sincere contrition for it. This was the object of the chastisement, namely, that when the offender shall appear at the judgment seat of Christ in the day of the Lord Jesus, "the spirit may be saved." To this person it might be said, "in being thus judged, you are chastened of the Lord, that you should not be condemned with the world." If the chastisement had failed to bring him to such a state of mind as the Lord will acknowledge, in the Future Age he would be condemned with the world. But seeing the happy effect produced, the apostle wrote, saying, "sufficient to such a man is this punishment, which is of the many;" forgive him, therefore, and comfort him, lest perhaps he be swallowed up of overmuch sorrow: their forgiveness the apostle recognizes as his, and his own as forgiveness from the Lord; therefore, when he appears in the day of Christ he will no more be called to account for this sin. This is one view of the case before us; let us now look at the other side.

A disciple in the 19th century, as really a disciple in faith as the Corinthian, commits, we suppose, precisely the same offence. A committee of brethren adjudge him to Satan for the destruction of the flesh. They have pronounced their sentence; they no more keep company with him, nor eat with him—turn him out of the Body of Christ they cannot do; this is beyond their ability, no matter how many thunders of excommunication they may hurl against him—but still Satan does not destroy his flesh; and, if he were to become "weak and sickly"—1 Cor. 11: 30—and this painful wasting of his flesh were to bring him to the same penitence as his Corinthian parallel, the committee not having the power of healing and forgiving sins, he might "fall asleep" in utter despair, and Satan get the advantage. Now the offender before us would die unforgiven in this age; the question therefore is, would he be forgiven in the next or Future Age? And as then "we" are to receive in body according to what we have done; and seeing that our modern disciple did not receive in body according to his deed as the Corinthian did, we ask further, will he not in the Future Age receive in like manner for his crime, and afterwards be forgiven, but have no part in the honour and glory of the Kingdom, though he may without dying again live for ever, a saved man upon earth, after the Kingdom is delivered up to the Father? This we think is the scope of the word; but that there are some offences, commisable by believers, which "are unto death," and for which there is no forgiveness in this world, nor in the age to come. For sins unto death, committed by believers, it is no use asking or expecting forgiveness; for it will not be granted; of this class are "speaking against the Holy Spirit," and murder, and "treading under foot the blood of the Son of God," &c. But John says, there are sins not unto death; for these there is forgiveness for the faithful, with chastisement according to the offence, in the age to come. Hence, the necessity of a Future Age to afford scope as to time, place and circumstances, for a recompense appropriate to the viciousness as well as the virtues of those upon whom the name of Christ is named. There is much to be said upon this topic which cannot be said now. The reader must follow out the train of thought suggested for himself.

NON-RESURRECTION OF MILLIONS.

Friend Grew asks, where do the scriptures teach the non-resurrection of millions? This question can be answered in the twinkling of an eye. When "the Lord shall spread forth his hands in the midst of Israel, as he that swimmeth spreadeth forth his hands to swim, * * * in that day shall this song be sung in the Land of Judah." Now in this song the Israelites sing, "O Lord our God, lords beside thee have had dominion over us: by thee only will we make mention of thy name. They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, THEY SHALL NOT RISE: therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish. Isa. 25: 11; 26: 13, 14; From this we learn the non-resurrection of millions of lords, who have tyrannized over Israel—Egyptians, Philistines, Midianites, Assyrians, Chaldeans, Medo-Persians, Macedonians, Romans, Russians, Turks, &c., &c. The text is so striking and emphatic, that no sane man can misunderstand it. Those who are not to live nor rise again once lived; for it styles them "dead" and "deceased," which are only affirmed of the once living. It also teaches us the meaning of "destroyed," to wit, that which shall not live by a resurrection unto life—this is to perish. But, as to the faithful, it says, "thy Dead shall live, as my Dead Body shall they arise;" therefore, "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust; for thy dew (O Sun of Righteousness) is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the (Lord's) dead"—Verse 19.

The foregoing is quite in harmony with "the literal import of John 5: 28." The "all" in this verse is defined in the next. ALL who? "They that have done good" and "they that have done evil." But, this does not include all mankind; for there are multitudes who come into and go out of the world, that do neither good nor evil. "Just" and "unjust" are terms of relation, not absolutes; and are predicable only of those who live under times of knowledge. Sinners are just or unjust relatively to the Gospel of the Kingdom; absolutely, they are "sinners," and "the wicked." It no where teaches in the word that all "sinners" and "all the wicked" shall be raised from the dead; yet it doth teach the resurrection of the just and unjust. "Every man according to his deeds," "every soul of man that doeth evil," and "every man that worketh good," are all phrases of relation, and embraced in the "we" who are to appear before the judgment seat of Christ as limited by the subject of which the apostle treats. He is not speaking about all mankind, but of Jews whom he apostrophizes from Rom. 2: 1—29. As to the Gentiles who had "sinned without law," they perish; while those, both Jews and Gentiles, who are under law, shall be judged by the law in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to Paul's gospel. How would friend Grew judge Cossacks, Hottentots, Caffres, Hindoos, Chinese, &c., by Paul's gospel, or Moses' law, who had never heard of the one or the other! To declare them just or unjust by these, would be as reasonable and fit as to justify or condemn the Irish sedition-mongers by the law of the United States. Cannot the reader see that a Russian is neither just nor unjust, innocent nor guilty, virtuous nor vicious, whatever may be his absolute or real character, according to the law of England or these States? And why? Because there is no relation subsisting between him and these constitutions. He is not under law to Britain, therefore he will perish without that law speaking for or against him. "Where no law is, there is no transgression;" and "without faith it is impossible to please God." These two principles decide the fate of millions. "Where there is no vision the people perish."

That little monosyllable "all," or its ghost, so haunts the lucubrations of our venerable and respected friend, that he sees it dancing before his eyes like a will-o-the-wisp, on whichever side he turns his vision. He quotes Heb. 9: 27, and there he thrusts it in as if the apostle had really placed it there! "It is appointed unto ALL men once to die, but after this the judgment." Paul does not say so; he says, "it is appointed unto men once to die," &c. If he had said what Mr. Grew makes him testify, he would contradict himself; for in another place he saith, "We shall not all sleep," or die, "but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last (seventh) trumpet; for the trumpet shall sound, and the righteous dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we (all) shall be changed." But, we will not press our friend too hard in this place, for he makes an admission immediately after which concedes to us all we demand. "If, indeed," saith he, "we have any plain, positive declarations that some of the human family will never be raised from the dead, we must unders and these universal terms in a limited sense, but not otherwise." "Will the Doctor favour us with the chapter and verse?" Yes; this we have already done.

FAITH IN PROPHETIC TRUTHS NECESSARY.

Mr. Grew doth not like my position, that "a man cannot be saved in any sense, unless he also believe the prophetic truths concerning the Kingdom of God." Now the subject matter of these truths is the Kingdom, and the Kingdom is the subject of the Gospel. NO KINGDOM, NO GOSPEL. My proposition, therefore, is convertible into this: that no man can be saved without faith in the Kingdom. Mr. G. in disputing my position, necessarily affirms the contrary; I call upon him, therefore, as he calls upon me elsewhere, to adduce "chapter and verse" in proof that man or woman, infant or suckling, can be saved in any sense without faith in the prophetic Kingdom.

"TO THE LAW AND THE TESTIMONY, IF THEY SPEAK NOT ACCORDING TO THIS WORD, IT IS BECAUSE THERE IS NO LIGHT IN THEM." It will save time and space to adhere to this exclusively, and not to introduce the Johns of any sect. They are of no value in any question at issue between the searchers after truth in this century. They belong to the darkness of times bygone.

REPENTANCE, IMMERSION, AND HOLINESS, INDIVISIBLE.

"A correct belief of doctrine and facts" is a belief of the truth; an incorrect belief of doctrine and facts is a belief of error. Mr. G. places himself in opposition to the principle, that a belief of the truth with repentance, immersion and holiness, are indivisibly essential to salvation in the Kingdom of God, and affirms, that "we have scriptural truth and fact to the contrary." Now we invite the reader's attention to this, namely, that Mr. Grew cannot adduce a single case from the New Testament of Jew or Gentile being recognized as a Christian after the day of Pentecost (see Acts 2,) who did not believe the Gospel of the Kingdom as promised in the word—the things concerning Jesus—whose repentance was not evinced by turning from a justification by law to that of Christ; and who was not immersed. He has doubtless selected the strongest evidence he could find. Hence he sends us to 1 Cor 8: 11. But this is no case in point. The individual was already in a saved state, and he was put into that state as the rest of his brethren in Corinth were, namely, by "hearing, believing and being baptized." What did they hear? Luke says they heard "THE WORD." What is the Word? "The Law and the Testimony," both of prophets and apostles. Hence Paul reminds them that he preached the Gospel to them, which he styles tis logos, A CERTAIN WORD,

"by which ye are saved if ye keep it in memory." But the man referred to had been long a pagan worshipper. The word preached laid hold of him with such power, that the least approximation to idolatrous observances on the part of any brother, defiled or wounded his sensitive conscience exceedingly. This was a laudable Christian weakness on the right side. He had still what Paul terms "the conscience of the idol," but not an idolatrous conscience. The meat offered to an idol always reminded him of the worship connected with it; and that as an idolater, the eating of such meat was esteemed by him a part of the idol worship. Now, although he knew an idol was nothing, and that all meats were eatable by Christians, save blood and things strangled, yet he could not get rid of the original impressions; so that when he saw a brother eating such meat, the eating would force itself upon his conscience as idolatry, while the eater ate of it with contempt for the idol. The apostle commands the latter to forbear eating, lest it might become an occasion of stumbling to the brother of tender conscience. His "views of the unity of God and of idols were" not "incorrect." "We all have knowledge" on these things, says Paul. It was, as shown, the accuracy of his knowledge which made him so unhappy when he saw brethren too much at home in idol temples and festivals.

NOT WEAK IN FAITH.

We need not repeat here what we have said before about weak in faith, and weak in the faith. He of Rom. 14: 1, was not weak in faith. He was not "erroneous or ignorant in respect to" the word of the truth of the gospel. He was "in the faith," which he could only be by believing the Gospel and being baptized; but he was "weak," or sensitively conscientious, as to eating all things indiscriminately. If he were a Jew, he still had the conscience of the law; or, if a Gentile, he still had the conscience of the idol, in relation to meats and herbs. He was not weak in faith, but strong; for it is not persons of weak faith that brave death in turning from Judaism to Christ, or from dumb idols to serve the living and true God.

BORN OF WATER.

Mr. Grew says: "In the various passages, which state particularly the characters which have no inheritance in the Kingdom of God, the unimmersed are never mentioned." Does Mr. Grew regard Jesus as authority in the case? He says, "except a man be born of water and of spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. Some one may possibly be rash enough to say, that to be 'born of water' is not baptism! Does water mean water here? Some say yes, some no! According to these, water means spirit, which makes nonsense of the passage; 'except a man be born of spirit and of spirit' is a perfect reductio ad absurdum. Such critics are either above reason or below it; and as we claim to be reasonable, we leave them to their vain imaginings. Some have sense enough to admit, that water, in this text, means that compound of oxygen and hydrogen upon which Noah's Ark floated. With these, then, we talk. The metaphor connected with water is a being born. What does being born of any thing consist in? Is it not an emergence from a place in which the subject was previously out of sight? Admitted. If then earth be the matrix of which a thing is born, would not a being born of earth, consist in coming up out of the ground in which the subject had been previously concealed? And doth the substitution of water for earth make any difference in the idea of birth? To be born of water, then, is also to come up out of water in which the person had been deposited, for there can be no emergence without previous immersion. No man who hath any regard for his intellect, will venture to say, that baptism is not a birth of water, and a birth of water baptism. Jesus then saith, that except a man believe the gospel, which is to be begotten of the spirit; and be baptized, or born of water, he cannot be saved, or enter the Kingdom of God. As to "the characters," Mr. G. refers to, the apostle addresses himself to immersed believers, and therefore it would have been superfluous to have told them "the unimmersed should not enter the Kingdom." He had told them that before they became Christians, as we have shown; it was unnecessary to repeat then what nobody in that age, Jew or Pagan, ever dreamed of omitting to do.

Immersion is not "the duty," but a gracious privilege granted to every believer of the things of the Kingdom of God, and the name of the Lord Jesus. Immersion submitted to as a mere duty, is worth nothing. It is a privilege to which no one is intitled who is not a true believer; that is, an Abrahamic believer of the Truth. It is the last thing that ought to be preached; and thousands are preached into the water that are utterly and astoundingly ignorant of "the word of the truth of the gospel." The one thing needful to this generation is faith, without which immersion is a mere form of godliness, devoid of all efficacy and power.

"It is an undeniable fact," says Mr. Grew, "that there are many real Christians who are unimmersed," &c. No doubt the unimmersed will be highly delighted with Mr. Grew's "charity," and proportionally indignant at the man who has hardihood enough to deny Mr. Grew's "undeniable fact." An "unimmersed Christian" in New Testament times, was a phenomenon as extraordinary as a white crow, or a black swan! I have never discovered one yet among all the cases on record in the Scriptures since Pentecost. I have heard of multitudes of such Christians in the dominion of Rome; but I have never yet seen one in the Body of Christ; nor do I expect to see such a one in the Kingdom of God, if the words of Jesus were spoken in the soberness and simplicity of truth.

NECESSITY AND USE OF KNOWLEDGE.

"The eyes of your understanding being enlightened in the hope of the calling, and the riches of the glory of the Inheritance in the Saints," is one thing; and to "discern accurately all things which all the prophets have foretold concerning the Kingdom of God, and the true periods of their fulfilment," is another thing!

I am very far from saying, that such a discernment is necessary to entitle a man to entrance into the Kingdom of God; but I do say, that illumination in the one thing is essential, not as a mere matter of knowledge, but that this knowledge may effect a renewal unto life through a participation in the divine nature. "Grace and peace be multiplied to you through the knowledge of God and of our Lord Jesus Christ, according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain to life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him that hath called us to glory and virtue: whereby are given to us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the Divine Nature." This is the necessity and use of knowledge, without which we are the sport of every wind of doctrine, and vain conceit, and assimilate to the demon of ignorance and superstition, and become an easy prey to the things which are earthly, sensual and devilish. Without supposing that "I only am left," I am deeply penetrated with the conviction, that of this generation, they are few who will find eternal life.

THE UNIMMERSED AND FEARFUL EXCLUDED THE KINGDOM.

"The unimmersed," says Mr. Grew, "are not excluded from the Kingdom of God." Wonder if Mr. Grew believes, that the fearful are excluded? Why doth our venerable friend turn special pleader for the unimmersed, and not extend his labour of "love" and "charity" to the timid? There is a vastly greater number in jeopardy of damnation from their cowardice, than from their non-immersedness. A man may have a correct theory, be duly dipped, and very "pious," but fearful withal; one, of whom it cannot be said, in spirit or fact, that "he overcame by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of his testimony; and loved not his life unto the death." Such an one may deceive himself, but he cannot impose upon God: unless God repeal his law, it is impossible he can be saved. Let then, our venerable friend, beware! An advocate may be "fearful," while he is the apologist for error, ignorance, and disobedience. The Apostle Peter says: "Repent and be baptised, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ;" it is not absolutely necessary, says Mr. Grew, for "the unimmersed are not excluded from the holy kingdom of God." Hence, instead of "every one" doing the command, some conform, and others do not. Such is the effect of Mr. Grew's teaching. Well, if he effect an entrance for himself, let him bear in mind the word, that "whosoever shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach them the same, shall be called great; for I say unto you, that except your righteousness shall exceed that of the Scribes and Pharisees, you shall in no case enter into the Kingdom of God."

JOHN THOMAS

Richmond, Va., May 15, A. M. 5934.

"It is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing."—Gal. 4: 18.

RELIGIOUS ZEAL.—"Zeal, says a celebrated writer, 'is a passionate ardour for any person or cause. There are various kinds of zeal; as, 1. An ignorant zeal, as in Romans 10: 2, 3, where some are said to have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. 2. A persecuting zeal, as in Philipians 3: 6, where Paul recounted his former earnest endeavours to destroy the Church of Christ. There is also a superstitious zeal, a hypocritical zeal, a party zeal, &c. But the zeal which the Lord approves is a genuine zeal in a good cause. Such a zeal as seeks for the Glory of God and the good of man. It is founded in knowledge, faith and perseverance, and will manifest itself in love and constancy toward a good cause, and generally results in final success. Such is the certain result where pure religion is the object it seeks to promote, and wisdom and knowledge its attendant guides."—Selected.

ARE THE WICKED IMMORTAL?

"The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Bible.

TRUTH SEEKERS.

We have no sympathy for that spirit which, having attained a certain point in theology, or any other investigation, requires that all who are recognized as brethren, or fellow-laborers, should refrain from further investigations, or from a calm and fearless expression of the result of their labors in search after truth. All new sects have commenced with professions of liberality and denouncing the illiberality of others for not allowing them to express, among them, new truths, or new light upon old truths, which they believe they have discovered. They avow their determination never to organize a sect; and sometimes declare—"If we ever become a sect we shall be the youngest daughter of the old Mother of Harlots." A few years pass away and the leaders in these movements find persons among them that think they have discovered further light on important subjects, and who dare to give utterance to the convictions of their own free thoughts. Then those, who professed they never would be a sect, find it necessary to take counsel together, and, lest they should be suspected of being tainted with the heresy, they must make a formal declaration of principles; "not a Creed," to be sure; that would be too bare-faced an act for the "youngest daughter" just yet; but, some standard principles, by which, gradually, they can, under the pretence of harmony, persuade most, who have been tainted with the views they wish to suppress, to fall back on the "important point" of their theory, and give up the free expression of other things, even "if they are truth," well knowing if they can only persuade men to "put their light under a bushel" it will go out; or, which is the same thing, it will give light to no one, and so prove harmless. When all things are thus well arranged, then all that do not come into this organization are "disorganizers;" and anything else that will tend to destroy their influence may be said of them; and, in all that, be doing "God service." Then they, the "youngest daughter," must take good care to let it be known that they occupy the true apostolic ground, and are persecuted with the approbrious name "Pope," and as having gone into "Popery." The sect, now, have only to pass resolutions expressing the fullest confidence in every thing their Leaders have done and are doing, and the work is complete—the sect is organized; but they don't "know it" themselves, and are not likely ever to see it; or if they do, it will not do to own it—for the leaders must never "confess," if they do they will be suspected of lacking "infallibility."

It is the intention of the conductors of the Bible Examiner to strive to avoid such a shipwreck; and to exclude no theological subject from their columns merely because it is new, unpopular, or in opposition to their own views or the views of a portion of their patrons. We intend to make the Examiner a medium of thought for all who deal in argument, soberly expressed; and who do not employ personalities. All writers for the Examiner will be responsible for the sentiments they express, and they only. The editors are not to be understood as assuming it, merely because they give place to the article. We choose to give our readers a chance to judge for themselves, without having an editorial veto on every thing that differs from their present views. Our object is to elicit Truth. How is that to be done if no doubt must ever be permitted to arise as to any point we now hold as truth? That is the sin of all the sects: not that they have no truth, but they are determined that no new truth, or light, shall be elicited that might conflict with their stereotyped declaration of principles, or creeds.

We cannot better express our object and aim than in the language of the Editor of "THE TRUTH SEEKER AND CHRISTIAN THINKER," published in Leeds, England, by DR. FREDERICK R. LEES, F. S. A. He says:—

1. "By 'TRUTH-SEEKER,' we do not signify that no truth is found, nor have we reference to our own opinions exclusively. The title is rather intended to express the character of the Work, as an organ for the discussion and discovery of Truth, than the position of any individual writer. In the spirit of the Jewish sage, we exhort all men, everywhere, to 'get wisdom,' and 'get understanding;' not implying thereby that they are destitute of all wisdom and intelligence, but that wisdom is a fountain, and knowledge a stream, of which all men may drink forever—living and inexhaustible waters flowing from the throne of God—upspringing from the INFINITE DEPTHS of His everlasting being. In the words of the same inspired thoughtsman, we say—'Buy the truth and sell it not;—not meaning by these words that we have no truth now, or that in a coming day we shall have acquired all truth, and then cease to be truth-seekers; but, on the contrary, we mean to affirm, that of all commerce, that in wisdom is the richest and noblest; that 'Truth' is a treasure more precious than fine gold, a pearl beyond price—an infinite treasure, the splendor and beauties of which it is the sphere of the infinite ages to unfold to the growing and progressing faculties of man. It must be purchased by toil and thought, and, even then, it will not be revealed, save to its sincere worshippers; it is a sacred treasure forever hidden to the gaze of purblind prejudice.

2. "Truth, we contend, must be to every man subjective—that which to each seems best to express the Facts of Nature and the Truths of God. Whatever may be the sense, the impression, left on any individual soul, by unbiased contact with the word or the works of God—THAT must be his truth, calling for sacred reverence as the revelation of God to him, and for constant or consistent obedience. If party, or passion, or power, or pelf, or fear, or favor, shall urge him to let it go, see that he do it not! Rather, bind it fast round his heart of hearts; it has been bought of God, and is a sacred deposit. 'Sell it not.'

3. "The impression on our God-made intellect is the result of God-made Laws: it is the most sacred law and the highest rule of life. Hence, the great duty of every man to prepare himself conscientiously for the calm reception of that truth by which he must live. This is the primal duty—but how despised! Let us learn, then, to seek God and Truth—let our spirits lie in reverential silence before Him, so that, no disturbing passion or prejudice intervening to refract the rays of truth, we may receive the right impression. Let the soul be daguerreotyped in the sun light of the Eternal. Thus, and thus only, can we worthily worship the Highest in the highest way—in spirit and in truth."

4. "With such opinions we necessarily discard all one-sided views of truth, and insist on each writer standing on his own responsibility. We shall afford to truth-seekers, therefore, a fitting medium for tolerant exposition and unshackled enquiry, apart from all sect or party. The claim of infallibility, by Pope or Protestant, we utterly despise. We stand or fall by these principles—that the duty of truth seeking is paramount to all others—that it is a crime against God and against man to hold out hope or fear, reward or loss, with the view of determining the judgment of men on this side or on that—that it is a vice of the worst kind, leading to spiritual death, to give up the use of your own talent, the exercise of your own reason, to priest or sect—that truth is subjective to every one, and, therefore, that it is the duty of every individual, to put by all who dare presumptuously to step in between the soul and God, and solemnly to determine for himself, according to the value and weight of the evidence before him, what is Truth and what is Error. The Reformed Churches have hitherto equally denied these great principles—they have overlooked the fact, that hope and fear are no instruments of discovery. The only difference is this—that once Rome had a monopoly of infallibility and swayed the sceptre of spiritual despotism over willing slaves and undivided empire, whereas Protestantism is a competition of infallibilities, exhibiting the partial union of sects in conjunction with universal warfare. It is mere fiction to call the Reformed Churches a Republic, as contra-distinguished from the mighty monarchy of the Church of Rome. A Republic involves equality of claim, and negatives all separate, distinct ascendancy. But is it so among the sects? Nearly all claim 'divine right'—not merely to judge for themselves, but for others; each speaks of the rest, not as citizen of citizen, but as prince speaks of pretender. Accordingly, each sect aspires to be Pope—mimics the spiritual policy of the triple-crown, and echoes with its tin trumpets the thunder-voice of the vatican! But it shall not be so amongst 'truth-seekers:' they shall unite in bringing about a wiser and worthier reformation, in enforcing the morality of enquiry, and of achieving the downfall of sectarian intolerance. To this grand object we shall devote our work and consecrate our powers. This Reformation will discard the angry intolerance with which men look upon doubt, and consecrate it as a mental state necessary and natural in passing from a lower to a higher point of intellectual progress. It will affix to all wilful favoritism in the treatment of evidence, a sentiment of stern disapprobation, and direct the feeling of moral responsibility towards keeping the process of enquiry perfectly free from partiality or bias. Really believing in the truth, and that true religion is indeed reasonable—the Logos, or reason of God, which, in the beginning, was with God—men will cease to hoodwink the faculty within them, and fearlessly look truth in the face! He who does not will be branded as coward and criminal—traitor to truth, infidel to faith."

Such sentiments we ardently hope may animate us in our work. We beg our readers to ponder well the extract we have given them; especially the paragraphs 2 and 4. We heard the sound of such a Periodical as the "Truth Seeker" last winter for the first time, and gave our readers an able article; second handed, from that paper in our January and February numbers. We knew not where in England it was published; but we ventured to send two numbers of the Examiner, directed to London, soliciting an exchange. A few days since we received the following letter from Dr. "F. R. Lees," dated

"LEEDS, (England,) May 20th, 1848.

"MY DEAR SIR,—I have this week received, in my London parcel, two copies of the BIBLE EXAMINER, (viz. the numbers for March and April), and shall be glad to exchange with you. * * * I rejoice to see an organ devoted, like my own, to free and fearless discussion, confident as I am, that Truth must prevail; and especially glad to see you so ably demolishing the pernicious absurdity of the natural-immortality-dogma. You will find articles on that subject occasionally in the TRUTH-SEEKER. Please direct to me here, and send me the back numbers, as I should like my set to be complete.

"Wishing you success in your efforts at a Reformation of Thought, and every blessing in Christ Jesus our Lord,

I remain,

Yours, truly,

F. R. LEES."

DR. LEES may be assured his expression of sympathy for us is like "cold water to a thirsty soul." We hope soon to be further enabled to enrich our paper not only by extracts from the Truth Seeker, but by the writings of able men in England, direct for the Examiner.

Now, friends of the Examiner, shall we be sustained in continuing and enlarging this paper? We feel very little doubt we shall be able to accomplish the present volume without any other pecuniary loss than that of our time; though, as yet, we have not funds to complete the year. Shall we continue and enlarge the paper? Let us hear from all our friends soon on this subject. The field of thought and matter widens before us. Shall we have a paper that has room for it?

"NOBILITY OF THE SOUL."—A preacher, not long since, in expatiating upon the "nobility of the soul," said: "It is the Essence of Deity." And he concluded he had "demolished [annihilated!]" Geo. Storrs! No wonder he should think so; for instead of a trinity Deity, his Deity's "name is Legion,"—yea, "Legions;" and as he has thus, to the extent of his power, demolished "the Lord our God," who "is one Lord," it was an easy matter to demolish so small a fragment of him as "George Storrs."

But seriously. The immortal-soulists are hard pressed when they are so manifestly driven back on Paganism to maintain life. Let us see what this theory comes to. First.—If the soul is the essence of Deity, then God is not one and indivisible; but a multitude. Second.—On that theory, either there is no such thing as sin, or a part of God sins; if a part of God sins, then some parts of him are opposed to other parts of him, and thus God is divided against himself; "How, then, shall his kingdom stand?" Third.—As the soul is sometimes unhappy, it follows, on that theory, that a part of God is sometimes unhappy; and if the "endless misery" doctrine be true, then many parts of God will be endlessly miserable. That is not all: as those in endless torment are represented, by the immortal-soul theorists, as eternally cursing God and blaspheming his name, then many parts of the "essence of Deity" will be eternally cursing the other parts of the "essence of Deity!" unless those theorists can make out, some how, that these immortal souls get so wicked that they cease to be of the "essence of the Deity!" But if so, a part of the Deity is annihilated; or, which is the same thing, a part of the essence of Deity is converted into that which is not a part of himself; and so when God swore by himself as "I live," his oath is not to be depended on, because a large part of his "essence" is not to live as his "essence."

The preachers who undertake to show the nobility of the soul, and maintain that it is a part of God, had better remember that our first parents, in seeking to "be as Gods," fell into corruption and death; and there, without repentance, all their posterity will fall, and "perish forever;" the "essence of Deity" though they may think themselves, and say like their father of old,—"I will be as God." This pride of heart will bring them down to the dust of death, and they "shall be no more." Please read 28th chapter of Ezekiel, to the 19th verse.

MORE FANCY SKETCHES.—We have concluded to devote a corner of the Examiner as a refuge for immortal-soulists; where the sayings peculiar to that theory, shall have a resting place. One of our Exchanges gives an account of three deaths in one city. Concerning the first, the correspondent says:

"His removal was felt to be a great loss to the Church; but we would not recall him from the glorious sphere of being and action, to which he has gone."

The Bible declares "there is no work, nor knowledge in sheol whither" men "go" when they die, see Eccl. 9: 12. The next account, or the second death spoken, is that of a sister. The writer says: "She appeared to enjoy perfect victory over death."

Paul supposed the victory over death would be at the resurrection; Cor. 15: 53, 54. But immortal-soulists make the victory over death at the time death conquers. A certain General in Mexico claimed the victory when he was sadly defeated. The soldier and the immortal-soulists are alike—they conquer, but it is by defeat! But the climax is to come; the third death was that of another sister; and of the three together, the writer says:

"Consumption was the AGENT of the KING of TERRORS, employed in each case to sever life's tender ties, to send the body back to dust, and to TRANSLATE THE SOUL TO ITS ETERNAL BLISS." He adds: "It (consumption) is an insidious deception, and mortal foe."

We have placed the emphasis on the words of this writer. A "mortal foe" act as "agent" to send three souls to eternal bliss!! "Employed," too, by the "king of terrors!!" Tremendous! Where are we? Have we gone back to Babel? What "confusion" of language! The king of terrors employ a "mortal foe" to translate the soul to eternal bliss!!! "All the world wondered after the beast," &c. Well they might, if he performed such miracles as is here ascribed to the king of terrors.

The reader will pardon us for inserting the following effusion of an immortal-soulist's poetical fancy. It was composed on the death of a child "three weeks and five days old."

"Farewell, dear babe, a short farewell,
From father and mother;
You have gone with angels to dwell,
When there you will see your grandmother."

PSALM 16: 10—It is argued from this text, "For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption," that there is a distinction in death between the destiny of the soul and body; and that the soul must be conscious when the person is dead. But we ask

Was the body, merely, the "Holy One? Or, did not that expression include the entire being of the person? We think it did. "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell." What is hell, in this expression? Do you say it is not the grave but the invisible state of departed spirits. Well, have it just which way you please; we care not which; and then we will prove the soul was unconscious in that state. What is the Hebrew word here translated hell? It is "Sheol." It is the same word used in Eccl. 9: 10. Now let us put the two texts together. "Thou wilt not leave my soul in sheol," "For there is no work, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in sheol whither thou goest." If we can understand words, then, here is demonstration, strong as the Bible can make it, that while under the power of death the soul has no knowledge; hence there must be a resurrection of the dead, or the person is perished for ever.

A KNOTTY QUESTION.—A man puzzled himself with the following question—"What will be the consequence if an irresistible force should come in contact with an immovable body?" To this question he answered—"I suppose it would knock a hole in it." A wit replied—"Knock a hole in what?—the irresistible force, or the immovable body?" and added—"It is impossible to do such a thing to a force; and if the hole is knocked in the body, some part will give way, which will show it is not immovable."

We could not help thinking that immortal-soulists are puzzling themselves in precisely a similar way. We will state the puzzle for them—"What will be the consequence if an unquenchable and devouring fire should come in contact with an indestructible, or, which is the same thing, an immortal soul?" Would it burn "a hole in it?" or, what would it do? You know "the fire can't go out," and it is a devouring fire; but it can't devour itself, if it did it would "go out;" it can't devour the soul for "that is indestructible;" and if it should produce any effect upon it, that would prove it not immortal, or indestructible! Pray, Mr. Immortal-Soulist, what will you do? Had you not better own the truth, viz:—"The soul that sinneth it shall die." Ezek. 18: 4, 20; and the "fire shall consume both soul and body." Isa. 10: 16, 17; and, therefore, the theory that the soul is immortal, by creation, or inherently so, is a fable!

We have not judged it necessary to give any detailed account of the foreign news in the Examiner, as we presume all our readers have access to those papers which publish it immediately on its arrival. As our issue is but once a month, we can merely find place for such remarks upon events in the east, as we think will serve to illustrate prophecy, and show us the position we occupy in the history of this age, as shadowed forth in the word of truth. We have kept our eyes on the east for the last three years, watching with deep interest all the movements there, and expecting the breaking to pieces of European Monarchies prior to the second advent. We are not of those who say—"Nothing remains now to be done before the advent." We are confident, that unless we greatly mistake the prophecies, there are several things yet to transpire prior to that glorious event. We look for a confederacy between France and Italy; also, for a large emigration of Jews, from various parts of Europe, "to the land wherein their fathers have dwelt," viz: Palestine. We look, after that, that Russia, who is the Gog of Ezek. 38 and 39, and the Emperor thereof, the "king of the north," Dan. 11: 40, and onward, "shall overflow and pass over" Constantinople, Palestine, and Egypt; but, making a stand in Palestine, with his mighty and overwhelming army, will be there overwhelmed and destroyed with all his hosts. Then at that time—while the hosts of Russia are in Palestine, we think the advent will occur. Such are the events we are looking for. Time will soon determine whether we are right; for that we wait.

DEATH THREATENED TO ADAM.

NOT MORAL, NOR SPIRITUAL, BUT LITERAL.

Some contend, that death was a moral death. Such a view involves the greatest absurdity, and confounds language. We shall see this by an examination of those texts in Moses and the Prophets, where the phrase "surely die" occurs. If we find it is never employed by them to signify moral death, but invariably a literal one, then we shall have no right to give Gen. 2: 17, any other interpretation than that of dissolution, or a disorganization of man, so that he shall be resolved into the elements from which he was produced by his Maker. "Ye shall surely die," said the Creator. The next place in which we find this phrase, from the mouth of God, is Gen. 20: 7, in his language to Abimelech, when he commanded him to restore Abraham his wife, and added—"If thou restore her not, know thou that thou shalt surely die, thou and all that are thine." Surely, this was not "a moral death" that was threatened. We next find king Saul using the phrase, 1 Sam'l. 14: 39, 44. He had prohibited the people from eating anything till evening on the day that God had wrought by the hand of Jonathan, a deliverance to Israel, and a discomfiture to the Philistines. Jonathan, not hearing his father's curse, had eaten honey. Saul having suspected that some one had disobeyed his order, declares that even though it should prove to be Jonathan, his son, "he shall surely die." When the lot was cast, Jonathan was taken, and Saul says—"Thou shalt surely die, Jonathan." Was it "a moral death" that Saul threatened? Surely all see that it was no such thing. Again, 1 Sam'l. 22: 16, king Saul told Abimelech, the priest of the Lord—"Thou shalt surely die, thou and all thy father's house." This sentence the wicked Doeg executed, as we learn in the 18th verse, and "slew four score and five persons that did wear a linen ephod." No moral death here. In 1 Kg. 2: 37, king Solomon told Shimei, who had cursed David in his life time, that he should "surely die" if he went out of Jerusalem; but Shimei violated this command; Solomon called him to an account, and questioned him whether he had not stated definitely to him that he should "surely die on the day;" that he should leave Jerusalem to go "any whither;" verse 42. "Benaiah then fell upon Shimei that he died;" verse 46; not "a moral death."

Again, when Jeremiah, in the days of Jehoia-kim, king of Judah, had declared the words of the Lord against Jerusalem, &c., "the priests and prophets and all the people took him, saying, Thou shalt surely die." Were they about to put Jeremiah to "a moral death?" See Jer. 26: 8.

We will now turn to Ezk. 3: 18—"When I say to the wicked, Thou shalt surely die, &c." is that a moral death? If so, it may read thus—When I say to the wicked [that is, to the morally dead] thou shalt surely die a moral death, &c. Is that sense? Are not the wicked already morally dead? Are there two moral deaths? It is undoubtedly a "second death" that is threatened in this text, because the connection shows it is a death from which the wicked man may escape if he will turn from his wickedness. The same language is twice repeated chapter 33: 8, 14; and there it is added, "If he turn from his sin, he shall surely live, he shall not die." Here then, it is evident, it is a literal death that is spoken of, and not a moral one. Also, in chapter 18: 13, the Lord, in speaking of a vile sinner, says—"He shall surely die: his blood shall be upon him." This threatening has nothing to do in inflicting a moral death—it is a literal death—an extinction of life: "he shall not live." Thus far, then, in Moses and the Prophets, we find nothing to give countenance to the notion that the Lord ever used the phrase "Thou shalt surely die," to mean a moral death. But we have not done with the examination.

Numbers, 26: 65. Just before the Israelites entered into Canaan, they were numbered, and "not a man of them whom Moses and Aaron numbered in the wilderness of Sinai" was there, save Joshua and Caleb. "For the Lord had said of them, They shall surely die in the wilderness." Not a moral death, but a literal one, as the event demonstrated. When Manoaah and his wife had seen "the angel of the Lord," and knew he was an angel, Jud. 13: 22, "Manoaah said unto his wife, We shall surely die, because we have seen God." Was it "a moral death" that he spoke of? 1 Saml. 20: 31, king Saul commanded Jonathan to send and fetch David, "for he shall surely die." No moral death in this matter. When David's anger was kindled against the man who had taken his neighbor's ewe lamb, 2 Saml. 12: 5, he said—"As the Lord liveth, the man that hath done this thing shall surely die." The Lord told David on that occasion, verse 14, "the child that is born unto thee shall surely die;" and the child did die, not a moral death, but literally, actually returned to dust. In 2 Kg. 1: 4, the Lord, by Elijah the prophet, told king Ahasiah, "Thou shalt surely die," and repeats the same language to him, verse 16; and it is added, verse 17, "So he died according to the word of the Lord which Elijah had spoken." One more instance and we have every place where the phrase occurs in Moses and the Prophets: 2 Kg. 8: 10, the reply of Elisha the prophet to Hazael, who came to inquire of him about

Ben-hadad, king of Syria, who was sick. The Prophet said—"The Lord hath showed me that he shall surely die." We are not left in doubt as to what this death was, for Hasael smothered Ben-hadad "so that he died."

Thus, then, we see there is not a solitary example from Moses or the Prophets, to give countenance, in the slightest degree, to the notion that the phrase "surely die," means "a moral death," but always and invariably a literal death or disorganization of the man, by which he ceases to live in any condition. The context to Gen. 2: 17, shows conclusively that was the death to be executed on Adam for his sin. "DUST THOU ART, AND UNTO DUST SHALT THOU RETURN."

Those who maintain that moral death was the penalty—"In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," and that the penalty followed in that twenty-four hours, are involved in the necessity of denying that literal death, or the death of the body was any part of the penalty; as the man did not actually die that day. If the penalty did not include the body, or the physical man, its death is an arbitrary act, without any reason, and contrary to all ideas we have of justice; because it was inflicting upon man that of which he had no notice, and did not therefore suspect any such danger. If a law was enacted that a man holding a political office who should act in a certain manner should suffer a political death, I ask if all civilized nations would not cry out against us as a barbarous, wicked, and unprincipled people if we not only removed that man from office, but actually put him to death by hanging or otherwise?

The threatening, Gen. 2: 17, was a plain expression of the purpose of God, in case man sinned, to deprive him of that life he had given him at his creation: the phrase is never used in any other sense, as the Bible plainly shows. We will, however, add one more argument on this point. Compare Gen. 2: 17, "Thou shalt surely die," with the following texts. In Gen. 6: 7, God said to Noah, "I will destroy man whom I have created," &c. Verse 13, "The end of all flesh is come before me—I will destroy them with the earth." Verse 17, "Behold I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven; and every thing that is in the earth shall die." Chap. 7: 4, "Every living substance that I have made will I destroy from off the face of the earth." Then the Lord brought the flood, he had threatened. Was a moral death the result? Read verses 21-23. "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man: all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died. And every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of the heaven; and they were destroyed from the earth: and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark."

Here, then, is God's definition of death. It is to take away, not moral life, but man's "breath of life" out of his "nostrils"—that which he gave at man's creation: [Gen. 2: 7.] it is to "destroy" him, so that he is literally—physically dead. Such is the death the Lord threatened to Adam. Under this death he and all his posterity would forever remain but for the resurrection by the second Adam. Such a death will be the wages of personal sins; or, a second death, to all who will not come to Christ that they may have life. Though recovered from the death experienced through Adam, a "second death," like the first, will be the lot of all impenitent and unbelieving sinners: a death from which there is no resurrection: IT IS ETERNAL.

PROPHETIC PERIODS.—NO. VIII.

We gave our readers in the Examiner for May, our views of the commencement and termination of the 1260 days, or years, of Dan. 7th. If that period commences with the decree establishing the bishop of the city of Rome as "Universal Bishop," then we can see no reason for fixing the commencement earlier than A. D. 604 to 607. We stated the fact, in that article, that "The Emperor Mauricius assembled a Council of the Patriarchs, all the Senators of the Imperial city, [Constantinople] and the Metropolitans," in the year 588, and that, "By this great Council was confirmed to John of Constantinople, the Title of Universal Bishop, to be enjoyed by him and his successors in that See." Bower's History of the Popes, Vol. 2, p. 459, London Edition, 1750. We expressed the opinion, that it was "not probable" that that was the date of the Papal Supremacy. One reason of that doubt was, that we supposed it necessary to look to the city of Rome for its appearance. On further reflection, however, we are not certain but that we are to look to the Imperial City of the Roman Empire for its date. If so, then 588 may be the true date of the Papal Supremacy. It is also true that the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, conferred by Phocas 604 to 607, was but the transfer of the title and authority of Universal Bishop from the Bishop of Constantinople; and hence, possibly, the true date of the Supremacy may be from the act of the Council of the Imperial City. If that is the case, 1848 will witness its final overthrow or destruction. But that settles not the question of the year of the advent; for, a careful examination of the prophecies will show, that the little horn or man of sin is to be destroyed before the "coming" of "the Son of Man in the clouds of heaven;" and its destruction is one of the most prominent signs of that coming, as the departure of darkness is the sign of the approach of the sun in the morning of day. Paul, in 2 Thes. 2: 8, speaking of that wicked man of sin, says—"Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, [the words that I speak unto you,] saith Jesus, 'they are spirit, and they are life,' and shall destroy with [what? his coming?] no—but with] the BRIGHTNESS of his coming." The destruction is before the coming, and the infallible precursor of the advent itself. Then it may as certainly be known that the advent "is nigh, even at the doors," as the light that precedes the sun, scattering the darkness, testifies that the orb of day is about to appear.

The truth, the words, the spirit of Christ's mouth was first to "consume" the man of sin: this has been going on since the Reformation: then, as the time came nearer for the appearing of the Son of Righteousness, "the brightness" of that coming, even before his actual appearance, would "destroy" that power which had so long kept the world in darkness. Even while the judgment was sitting on the fourth beast, Dan. 7: 10, 11, which commenced A. D. 1789, and is still progressing to its conclusion, even during this period, the "little horn," the Papal power, was to be speaking "great words;" but "the beast" was to be "slain;" which slaying took place between 1789 and 1816; then its "body" was to be "destroyed;" which has been going on since 1816, by the spread in Europe of those principles which are destruction to despotism; and only one thing remains relative to that fourth beast, that is, to give its body "to the burning flame;" which is either now going on, or soon to be done, as it is accomplished under the seventh vial of the seven last plagues: with that beast is destroyed the little horn, the man of sin—the Papal power, and all other ecclesiastical despotisms which bear the character of "daughters" of that "Mother of Harlots."

The judgment, Dan. 7th, is not the same as that Rev. 20: 11—15: though some of the language is borrowed from the scenes of the judgment of the great day. In Daniel 7th, there is no mention of the heaven and earth fleeing away, nor of the judgment of dead or living men in their individual capacity: and it is not till after that judgment that one like the Son of Man is seen coming in the clouds of heaven. From the whole chain of prophecy we conclude—the fourth beast, the despotic governments of Europe, which are the horns of that beast, are to be destroyed; and the little horn is to be destroyed at the same time, and at a time, too, when it was expecting to "sit as a Queen and see no sorrow," and be speaking "great words;" and this not by the actual advent of our Lord, but by the increasing light, or "brightness" of his near approach; and is to be the sure and unmistakable "sign of the Son of Man in heaven;" being the completion of that chain of signs, the seven last plagues, which were designed to notify the watchful of the certain approach of their Lord, to take "the kingdom under the whole heaven."

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.—NO. II.

IV. HUMAN CREEDS REND THE TRUE CHURCH OF GOD AND ENSLAVE HIS FREE-BORN CHILDREN.

In illustrating this position, we will suppose, that now, for the first time, the gospel is preached in a city; a great turning to God takes place, and hundreds of souls are born of the Spirit: they are of one heart and of one soul—they all love one another, and thus give the very evidence by which Jesus Christ our Lord said "All men shall know that ye are my disciples." Will any one dare to say, that these loving souls do not constitute the true church of God in that city, and that, too, without any of that human arrangement called "gathering into the church"? We think the position is too plain to need argument.

These persons all continue in this loving communion and fellowship till there come in a Baptist, a Methodist, a Presbyterian, an Episcopalian, &c.—What is the work of these different sects? Not to kindle the flame of love higher; no, it is to gather the converts into their church! "They have not yet united with the church!" So out of kindness, to be sure, each sect sets itself to work to show its creed; or which is the same thing, to prove their peculiar views are right, and all the rest are wrong. Each party salutes the young converts' ears in this way, and is careful to keep up an impression that they are not yet in the "visible church," but that they ought to join somewhere. This process is continued 'till, the first we perceive, the revival stops. What's the matter? The minds of the converts have been diverted from the unity of love to contemplate the discordant doctrines, or creeds, that have been presented, for their consideration, in order to their uniting with some church!—They lose sight of the fact, that they all belong to the church of God; and the question is, whether they shall unite with the Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, or what church they shall join. At first they think they cannot be separated—they must all go together some where. They have no fear of quarrelling because they may not think exactly alike on doctrine; "we must go together," is the spontaneous feeling of every new-born soul. But the strong efforts of the "sectaries" are kept up day and night, 'till some converts begin to lean this way and some that. Now a painful sensation, indescribably painful, is felt; they find they must part; they still resolve, it may be, that they will love one another; but it seems as though their hearts would be rent in pieces. It must be done, however, for they must unite with some visible church.

The work now goes on, and they are gathered hither and thither: this is not all, they must learn the vocabulary of their sect or party, that they may know how to make proselytes. When they meet those who have not gone with them, their conversation is not on the love of Christ to their souls, but the time is spent on these doctrinal points which separate them; and that, not to weigh candidly for information, but to proselyte: to make it appear that our creed is right, and yours wrong. If they fail in making the person a convert to their sect, "evil surmising" creeps into the heart—the person is stupid, or ignorant, or proud, or something else. Thus a death-blow is struck to the "first love," and, most likely, the disappointed person becomes a bigoted sectarian. Thus the Church of God, the true Church, is rent in pieces; brotherly love is broken up; and those who were born free are enslaved by the "doctrines and commandments of men." Now, the speech that is heard, when you meet many of them, is as opposed to the pure language uttered by them, in their first love, as the language of the dark pit is to the language of the New Jerusalem. What has done all this? The introduction of man-made creeds to divide and rend asunder what God had joined together. If this state of things is not perpetual, it is because there are temporary revivals, in which, for a time, all parties keep their creeds, or peculiarities, out of sight; but the leaders begin to grow jealous lest an opposing sect should secure the greatest number of converts; then the revival stops, and the drama is acted over again.

V. HUMAN CREEDS BEGET HATRED INSTEAD OF LOVE, EVEN AMONG THOSE WHO WERE FRIENDS BEFORE THEY PROFESSRED RELIGION.

It is impossible fully to describe the mischievous effects of man-made creeds in this respect. We have, in part, anticipated, under the previous head, the proof of the above proposition. To enter into a full expose of the truth, on this point, would be to write the history of the professed churches for the last fifteen or sixteen hundred years—it would be to give an account of the persecutions, wars, and bloodshed, which have disgraced the name of Christianity; all engaged in, of course, to put down heretics! Or, in other words, to defend human creeds; the work of futility men; who had the arrogance to assume that they had the right to dictate to their fellow-men how they should interpret God's blessed Word.

Who has not before his eye, within his own knowledge, exhibitions of the most unjustifiable hatred and bitterness towards those of a different creed from themselves? A minister, not a thousand miles off, in high standing in one of the largest denominations in the United States, manifested such a hatred to the ministers of another sect, that he would not so much as speak to them when he met them. Multitudes of others, who have shown, to the faces of their opponents kindness, have indulged in the most bitter language behind their backs; and all because their creeds differed. We have known men, Christian men, that spoke with extreme doubt whether one of another denomination could be saved, but finally concluded, that it was possible some of them might be. Why this spirit? Human Creeds had blinded their minds; and this is the natural result of separating the children of God by such tests.

Now look at that neighborhood where harmony and union prevails; yet, none profess religion. God visits them in mercy, and their love and attachment is made stronger by the strong bonds of love to Christ. Presently human creeds are introduced among them—distraction and division follow; shortly there is less brotherly love and good-will than before any of them professed religion: the happiness that was once enjoyed in that community has departed. What has done this deed? Will you say—it was necessary in order to be agreed in some plan of operations! Alas! for that religion, that must divide what God has joined together to carry out its plans.

THE SON OF GOD.—NO. IV.

AN EXAMINATION OF THE DIVINE TESTIMONY RESPECTING THE NATURE AND ORIGIN OF THOSE PERFECTIONS BY WHICH THE SON OF GOD CREATES, GOVERNS, SAVES AND JUDGES THE WORLD.

By HENRY GREW.

We have seen in Col. 2: 9, that in Jesus Christ "dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." A few verses before this, chap. 1: 19, the inspired apostle informs us, "it pleased the Father, that in him should all fulness dwell." Here then the divine testimony teaches us that it is by the pleasure of the Father, that the Son possesses this divine fulness. It ought to be particularly observed, that this last passage is in immediate connection with the 16th and 17th verses, which declare him to have created all things, and to be before all things. This must refer certainly to his highest character. It consequently teaches us, that he possesses his highest and most glorious perfections by the pleasure of the Father. The apostle represents even saints being "filled with all the fulness of God," Eph. 3: 19. This, indeed, must be understood as vastly inferior to the fulness which Christ possesses. The creation of the universe is ascribed to the Son. John 1: 3: Col. 1: 16, &c. But do the Scriptures of truth teach us that he created all things by his own independent power, or that he was the glorious agent of "the only true God?" Eph. 3: 9.—God, who created all things BY Jesus Christ. Heb. 1: 1, 2, God—hath in these last days spoken to us by his Son, BY whom also HE made the worlds.

These passages certainly teach us that it was by the power of the Father, that the Son created the worlds. His creating all things, therefore, affords no proof that he is omnipotent.

In Heb. 1: 3, Jesus Christ is represented as "upholding all things by the word of his power." Certainly this must be in his highest character. Yet the apostle explains this by informing us that he was made so much better than the angels.

In Acts 2: 22, all the miracles which the Savior wrought on earth are ascribed to the power of the Father. "Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles, and wonders, and signs which God did by him in the midst of you. In Matt. 28: 18, and John 17: 2, All power in heaven and in earth is ascribed to Christ. Is not this descriptive of the highest power he possesses? Does he possess it independently? Let us hear and believe "the faithful witness." "All power is given unto me," &c. "As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him." Here we are plainly taught that the whole power, by which the Son of God accomplishes the redemption of his church, is given him by the Father. Shall we then continue to say, that no given power, that nothing less than independent omnipotence can qualify him for such a work? Is not this to say, that the means divine wisdom employs for the redemption of men are inadequate?

Prof. Stuart, of Andover, Mass., remarking on the character of Christ as Judge, observes, "omnipotence and omniscience only can qualify him for the duties of that station." He admits that, "he does indeed act as judge by delegated authority. Let John 17: 2, be again considered. Does not the giving eternal life to the saints, include his judging them and the world? Or, if this should be denied; does it require any more wisdom, or knowledge, or power to judge the world, than it does to give eternal life to his people? Most certainly it does not. Here, then, it obviously appears from the divine testimony, that he is not only appointed to "act as judge, by delegated authority," but that the very qualification by which he acts, not only in the single office of judging the world; but in the arduous and glorious work of giving eternal life to his sheep, is given him by the Father. I do not perceive how Mr. Stuart can reconcile the above observation with the following remark of his, in another work: "I can conceive it possible, that a derived being may have such an unlimited communication of power, and knowledge, and wisdom, that he may govern worlds." He who governs worlds is surely competent to judge them.

We have seen from the words of the Lord, that our divine Redeemer is qualified for the important work appointed him, in respect to wisdom and knowledge. Col. 2: 3, "In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." John 2: 25, He knew what was in man. Rev. 2: 23, I am he which searcheth the reins and hearts.

He is worthy to take the book of the divine counsels, and to unloose the seals thereof. He only reveals to us, and to the powers of the heavenly places, the purposes of Jehovah, unfolding to our admiring view, the works of grace and love and holy vengeance of "the only true God." And how doth he obtain this knowledge of all things? What saith the Scripture? "The Revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave unto him." Rev. 1: 1.

Titus 3: 4—6. But after that the kindness and love of God our Savior toward man appeared, not by works of righteousness, which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost, which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior. This passage, and many others prove that the Son saves us by the appointment and power of the Father. It also proves how erroneous that common idea is, that wherever the word Savior occurs in a text, the Son of God must be intended.

John 8: 26, he that sent me is true, and I speak to the world those things which I have heard of him. John 12: 49, 50, For I have not spoken of myself, but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment what I should say, &c. John 3: 31, 32, He that cometh from heaven is above all, and what he hath seen and heard that he testifieth.

It appears equally evident from "the oracles of God," that Jesus Christ will judge the world, by the power and appointment of the Father. Acts 10: 42, It is he which was ordained of God to be the judge of quick and dead. Rom. 2: 16, God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ. John 5: 22, For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son.

Jer. 23: 6, it is said of the Son of God, "and this is his name whereby he shall be called, the LORD our righteousness." Jer. 23: 16, it is said of Jerusalem, "this is the name wherewith she shall be called, the LORD our righteousness," not because either the Son or people of Jehovah are literally Jehovah, but because, in them, Jehovah is pleased to accomplish his gracious purpose of salvation. "God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself," &c. Even places where God displayed his power and goodness were called by his name, "Jehovah-jireh," "Jehovah-nissi."

When we contemplate the holy Son of God in the endearing character of the "one mediator between God and man," what a glory do we behold encircling him in all his offices!

As our PROPHET, he "spoke as never man spake." His doctrine distilled as the dew. "Grace was poured into his lips." Psa. 45: 2. Blessed teacher! The knowledge thou dost impart is life to our souls. Oh, may we never turn away from "him that speaketh from heaven."

As our PRIEST, how precious is his offering and intercession! We have the "remission of sins through his blood." He "ever liveth to make intercession for us." He is "made higher than the heavens;" "a great high priest, Jesus the Son of God."

As our KING, he is "fairer than the children of men." He is, "King of kings and Lord of lords." By the power of his grace he conquers the hearts of men, and subjects them to his righteous government. O blessed Prince of peace! O precious reign of grace! He will present his redeemed church before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy. He shall triumph over all his foes. Those who will not have him to reign over them he will punish "with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." Then shall he "be glorified in his saints, and admired in them that believe."

Let it, however, be remembered, that it is the Father who is "the only true God," that has exalted him, and upholds him in this high station. Deut. 18: 18, I will raise them up a prophet, &c. As a priest he is "made higher than the heavens." So Christ glorified not himself to be made an high priest; but he that said unto him, thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee. Heb. 5: 5; Psal. 2: 6. Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion.

The case of Joseph, who appears to have been a striking type of Christ, may serve to illustrate, in some manner, the Scriptural representation of the glorious dignity of the Son of God, and also his dependence on the Father for all his authority. Gen. 41: 39-44. And Pharaoh said unto Joseph—thou shalt be over my house, and according to thy word shall all my people be ruled: only in the throne will I be greater than thou. And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, see I have set thee over all the land of Egypt. And Pharaoh took off his ring from his hand and put it on Joseph's hand, and arrayed him in vestures of fine linen, and put a gold chain about his neck. And he made him to ride in the second chariot which he had, and they cried before him, Bow the knee; and he made him ruler over all the land of Egypt. And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I am Pharaoh, and without thee shall no man lift his hand or foot in all the land of Egypt.

Such was the high authority with which Pharaoh invested Joseph: in consequence of which, he was, in a sense, honoured even as they honoured Pharaoh; for it was said to him, "Thou art even as Pharaoh;" Gen. 44: 18. Joseph was exalted to the government of Egypt; and was indeed more actively ruler, than Pharaoh himself. Yet Pharaoh was greater than Joseph. From Pharaoh he derived all his dignity, and on his sovereign will he was dependent for all his authority. Pharaoh governed Egypt by Joseph. Pharaoh saved Egypt during the famine by Joseph. He gave him a name, said to signify a Saviour, and commanded all to bow the knee to Joseph.

So "the eternal Spirit," who is and ever must be the alone God, creates, upholds, governs and saves by his Son, "whom he hath appointed heir of all things;" whom he hath "made better than the angels;" and whom, on account of all judgement being committed to him, he requires us to honor even as we honor the Father. I have no idea that the case of Joseph, or any other, can present to the mind an adequate parallel of the incomparable Immanuel.

"Nor earth, nor seas, nor sun, nor stars,
Nor heaven his full resemblance bears;
His beauties we can never trace,
Till we behold him face to face."

Far be it from us to rob the Saviour of his true glory. Far be it from us to deny his own testimony. Let us not be found uniting with the Jews in charging "the faithful witness" with advancing claims to a character he never assumed: a charge which Jesus himself immediately repelled in the plainest language. John 5: 19. How delusive is the impression, that we are honoring the Son of God while we deny his own testimony?

Let none, however, imagine, that we can have too exalted views of the sinner's friend, that we can adore him too highly, or love him too ardently, while in accordance with the inspired testimony, we behold him as "the image of the invisible God;" and worship him "to the glory of God the Father." Let our minds expand to the utmost stretch of thought in the contemplation of his divine beauty and glorious dignity: still our conceptions of his incomparable excellence will be vastly too limited and inadequate. Let our hearts glow with the most fervent love, and our bosoms heave with the warmest gratitude to his dear name, still we must acknowledge that our affections towards him bear no proportion to his charms or his love. With our highest notes of praise, we must mingle the sigh of lamentation, that we admire and love and praise him no more.

"Had we a thousand lives to give,
A thousand lives should all be thine."

Dr. J. F. Lee, Meltonville, N. C., writes:—

Br. Storrs:—Please send me two hundred copies of your Six Sermons, quarto form. The tone of some has changed already, while others are rabid in their denunciations. "When fortune smiles, distrust her; when she frowns, defy her" is a sentiment uttered by some writer. And while I regret and deplore the insane wisdom of some, instead of ceasing to excite their excitability, by the circulation of the doctrines contained in your six sermons, &c., which to them is so offensive, I intend to spread said doctrine as widely as I possibly can. Engaged in extensive practice, you know that my time is not my own. Necessity as well as duty compel me to attend to the sick, and since I cannot daily preach the word, I will endeavor to distribute your sermons, so that they may sound in the ears of thousands, who, perhaps, might never in any other way hear the truth upon the same subject. What I fail to do in point of preaching, your sermons will more than fulfil.

Walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of his Holy Spirit, I shall fear no evil. I could, if I had time, tell you many interesting and amusing, and at the same time, saddening, if not humiliating circumstances, arising from a misconception of the doctrine in your sermons. A sermonizer, in endeavouring to unfold the Nobility of the soul, said "it is the Essence of Deity." Oh, what an idea! The soul of the wicked is the Essence of Deity!! Into what unmixed blasphemy will error lead men who are esteemed for their piety.

"Dum insanientia sapientia consultus—erró."

Well may such exclaim,

"I missed my mark and lost my way
By crack-brained wisdom led astray."

This same preacher imagined that his definition of the soul would demolish Dr. Lee and George Storrs.

I wish to sustain you, my dear Brother, as far as I possibly can, trusting that God in his unbounded love will abundantly bless you and yours, and prepare you for every good work, that you may be instant in season, and out of season.

Br. D. B. Eldred, Homer, Mich., writes:—

Br. Storrs:—I have more good news to give you relative to the spread of the truth. Some new ground has been broken up by the aid of a copy of the "Six Sermons" which I sent to a brother of my wife, in Nankin, Washtanaw Co. A Conference has been appointed there, which I shall try to attend, after which I will write you again.

Yours, waiting for the Restitution.

DR. TYNG AND THE TRUTH.

In a late number of the "Christian Observer," we find a report of a meeting "to evangelize the Jews," at which Dr. TYNG made the following pertinent remarks:

"Resolved, That the signs of the times are such as should rouse all who love the Lord Jesus Christ, and wait for his salvation, to renewed earnestness and enlarged effort in this holy enterprise."

"I have come, though not well, (said Dr. Tyng,) to show my interest in this cause—a cause than which, in my opinion, there is not another in the whole circle of Christian effort more dear to Jesus. The resolution refers to a specific connection between the conversion of the Jews and the coming of that peculiar time foretold in the Scriptures; and it speaks of an increase of effort demanded as that time draws nigh. There are those who think that the time referred to, is to be preceded by a long and gradual progress of light, intermingled with darkness; but the speaker saw nothing in history, nor in the language of prophecy, to convince him of the truth of this opinion. He did not believe that the harvest is to be gathered by instrumentalities now in use. He looked for a new dispensation, when the Sun of Righteousness shall suddenly beam forth, like the breaking out of the glorious sun from the zenith of the midnight concave. He looked for the return of the Divine Redeemer, when the Jew 'should look upon him whom they had pierced, and mourn as one mourneth for an only son.' In that day, Jerusalem shall take her stand of predicted glory, and become the metropolis of a magnificent empire. There surely comes a time when there shall be overturning and overturning, till he, whose right it is, shall reign, and the crown and the diadem return to him to whom they belong.

We now see all the prophecies coming to a conclusion. Babylon has been swallowed up by the Persian Empire, and that by the Macedonian, and that by the Grecian, and that by the Roman. Rome, too, has been divided into ten parts or kingdoms, each one of which is now heaving, and threatened with ruin. Every event that transpires, goes to fix the coming of the Saviour as near. Never were there such overturnings, as in these days. Soon he will come forth in glorious triumph, and set himself upon the mountain of his holiness, and reign upon the throne of his glory; and those nations that will not serve him, shall be trodden under foot. Surely the signs of the times are such as should arouse us to renewed earnestness and effort, in seeking the salvation of Israel. In conclusion, (said Dr. Tyng,) I will read, as embodying what else I may be expected to say on this resolution, those lines of Charlotte Elizabeth, each one of which contains a reference to some part of Scripture. The piece is entitled,

We invite the attention of Presbyterians, and all others influenced by the Doctor's authority, to the following items in the above extract:

1st. Dr. Tyng "did not believe that the harvest is to be gathered by instrumentalities now in use."

2d. "He looked for a new dispensation."

3d. He looked for the return of the Divine Redeemer, when the Jews "should look upon him whom they had pierced, and mourn as one mourneth for an only son."

4th. "In that day, JERUSALEM SHALL TAKE HER STAND OF PREDICTED GLORY, AND BECOME THE METROPOLIS OF A MAGNIFICENT EMPIRE."

5th. "We now see all the prophecies coming to a conclusion."

6th. "Every event that transpires, goes to fix the coming of the Saviour near."

The above points embody important truths concerning the Kingdom of God; and we cordially commend them to the attention of our readers.

A SECOND REJOINDER TO DR. THOMAS.

By HENRY GREW.

The essential importance to salvation of believing and obeying the Gospel of the Kingdom in respect to those who hear the Gospel, is as much my "impregnable position" as it is that of my friend; nor am I conscious of cherishing any more "love" or "charity," which is not in accordance with truth, than he has expressed. He remarks that "The truth belongs to God, not to me." True, but he must excuse me for not admitting that all his explanations of the truth belong to God. I trust that, by divine favor, it is my love to God's truth, or what I understand to be such, that I oppose some of his views. My inmost soul responds to his remarks on the importance of an inflexible adherence to the word of the Lord.

NO MEN DIE PENITENT WITHOUT FORGIVENESS.

On Matthew 12: 32, Dr. T., in a former article, remarked—"Does not this imply that there are some offences, whether of omission or commission, that will be forgiven in a future age?" Had I not reason to suppose that my friend thought that some dying in impenitence would be forgiven? He however now explains more fully, and without affirming, he thinks it to be according to "the scope of the word," that some men of "penitence" must wait for forgiveness till the "Future Age," because, forsooth, the committee of the church had not the power of forgiving their sins in this! It appears to me that this speculation is a violation of an important principle of the divine government, and of the plain teaching of the Spirit of Truth, that "he that confesseth and forsaketh his sin shall find mercy." It was necessary indeed for the reformed Corinthian to receive forgiveness from the Church, in order to be restored to their fellowship, but this was not necessary in order to his being forgiven of God. If a man in similar circumstances, as my friend's case to illustrate the subject supposes, truly repents, God waits for no committees or churches to pardon him. "Let the wicked forsake his way—and let him return unto the Lord who will have mercy, and to our God who will abundantly pardon." So the Publican found it without going to the Council or Sanhedrim. Churches and Committees may err through partiality or imperfect judgment. Our intelligent friend, admitting that men dying in impenitence are never forgiven, asks, "What has that to do with men of faith, dying in sins 'not unto death'?" Here is another anomaly! What prophet or apostle ever taught that men of faith die in sins? If men of dead faith were intended, it is perfectly correct, but I do not so understand Mr. Thomas. I would remind my friend that Paul directed the Corinthian Church and not a "Committee of brethren," to "deliver" the offender "to Satan for the destruction of the flesh," &c.

UNIVERSAL RESURRECTION.

I have now to examine the single passage adduced by Mr. Thomas to prove the "non-resurrection of millions." Isa 26: 14. Isa. 25: 11, and 26: 13 are quoted, but the 14 ver. is the only one that has any word on the subject of "non-resurrection." Who are the lords that "had dominion" over Israel, of whom it is said "they shall not rise?" Nations, as my friend justly remarks, "Egyptians, Philistines," &c. This is confirmed by the 15 ver. It is the "nation" that the Lord removed far unto all the ends of the earth, thus scattering and destroying it. This explains the subject of their death, or destruction, or non-resurrection. As nations "they are dead," as nations "they shall not live." As nations "they are deceased, they shall not rise." Such is the fact respecting those powerful nations which once "tyrannized over Israel." The connection of the passage thus teaches that it is in perfect harmony with the plain declarations of inspired truth, that "ALL that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth," &c. "there shall be a resurrection—of the just and unjust." "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God," &c. I object to our friend's comment on the word ALL in John 5: 28. Our Savior does not say, all that have done good or evil shall come forth, neither does the connection require us to limit his words to such. He says, "all that are in the graves shall come forth." All in the graves, whether "small" or "great," as John saw in prophetic vision, Rev. 20: 12, whether capable of moral action or not. The "all" in the 28 ver. therefore "is (not fully) defined in the next." The fact of those who are morally responsible for their actions receiving their due reward, is perfectly consistent with the resurrection of those who died too "small" to be thus accountable. The connexion consequently does not warrant the limitation. If it did, it would surely avail little to prove the non-resurrection of the lords over Israel, who did "evil" by wholesale. The word "all," if limited to those who have actually done good and evil, must include them.

Dr. T. remarks, "As to the Gentiles who had sinned without law," they perish. True, but when will they finally perish? "In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ." Rom. 2: 12 to 16. This proves their resurrection. It is equally evident from the 12 ver. and connection that those who "have sinned without law" (i. e. the written law) and those who have sinned in the law, shall be judged on the same day or period. By what authority does my friend connect the 16th ver. with a part of the 12th only? The apostle makes no such distinction as his remarks imply. He asks, "How would friend Grew judge Cossacks, Hottentots, Caffres," &c. "by Paul's Gospel, or Moses' law, who had never heard of the one or the other?"—"Where no law is, there is no transgression," and "without faith it is impossible to please God." These two principles decide the fate of millions. "Where there is no vision the people perish." Here I learn the source of my friend's error respecting the "non-resurrection of millions." It is a consistent inference from false premises. If indeed there is no other law given to man than the law of Moses and the Gospel, then have many no law by which they may justly be condemned. It is not so. "Cannot the reader see," and cannot Mr. T. see, that "the gentiles which have not the law (or the Gospel)" are a law unto themselves, which show the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the meanwhile accusing or else excusing one another?" Rom. 2: 14, 15. No rational men are without all law, "because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath showed it unto them. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse; because that when they knew God they glorified him not as God," &c. Rom. 1: 19—21.

I can assure Mr. T. that my vision is not at all bewildered by "that little monosyllable 'all.'" That it is often used in a limited sense, I am fully aware; nor is my belief that it is sometimes used in a literal sense, any proof to the contrary. Quoting Heb. 9: 27 from memory, I made a common mistake, inserting the word "all." I did not, however, give it in capitals, as my friend incorrectly quotes me. The passage is equally pertinent to my argument without that word as with it. My object was not to prove that all men die, but that all who do die are to be raised. "It is appointed unto men once to die; but after this the judgment." It appears to me that Paul teaches that death and subsequent judgment are appointed unto the same persons, at least to those who are morally accountable, which the "lords" who had "dominion" over Israel certainly were.

FAITH IN PROPHETIC TRUTHS NECESSARY.

Mr. T. observes: "Mr. Grew doth not like my position, that 'a man cannot be saved in any sense, unless he also believe the prophetic truths concerning the kingdom of God.'" This is not a fair version of the matter. This is not the position which I object to. I know that "the subject matter of these truths is the kingdom, and the kingdom is the subject of the Gospel." "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." The position I object to, is this, "we must believe the whole truth, or—be dashed to atoms." So affirms the Doctor. I have put the objectionable words in capitals. The two positions are vastly different, as every intelligent reader must perceive. No man can believe the gospel without believing prophetic truths. "He that believeth not (the gospel) shall be condemned." Millions, however, have believed and obeyed the gospel, who have died without a knowledge of "the whole truth." If my learned friend is an exception, I believe him to be the first, except "the faithful witness," since the foundation of the world.

I am happy to see him recede from this position as he does in his last article. To "believe the whole truth," implies, as I have wrote before, that we "discern accurately all things which all the prophets have foretold concerning the kingdom of God, and the true periods of their fulfilment," i. e. so far as these periods are recorded. Mr. T. himself says that "an incorrect belief of doctrine and facts is a belief of error." Mr. T. now says, "I am far from saying, that such a discernment is necessary to entitle a man to entrance in the kingdom of God." Very good. We will now hope that we shall not be "dashed to atoms," although we have not yet attained, neither are already perfect in the knowledge of "the whole truth." My friend will now have to furnish himself with an answer to such of his questions to me as the following: "Which of those particular truths have we authority to dispense with as unnecessary to salvation?" Most cordially do I join with him in saying "that illumination in the one thing is essential, not as a mere matter of knowledge, but that this knowledge may effect a renewal unto life through a participation in the divine nature." It will be in good time to call upon me "to adduce chapter and verse" to prove that men can "be saved without faith in the kingdom," when I affirm it. I respectfully ask my friend to exercise his rational powers sufficiently to discern the difference between having "faith in the kingdom," and having knowledge of "the whole truth;" also to discern the distinction between quoting the words of an author, as a happy expression of your own thoughts, and quoting him as "authority." No "Johns of any sect" will I "introduce," as authority, except the inspired Johns of the sect of the Nazarene.

IMMERSION NOT ABSOLUTELY ESSENTIAL TO SALVATION.

Dr. T. maintains that "repentance, immersion and holiness, are indivisibly essential to salvation in the kingdom of God." I object to this sentiment as unscriptural and absurd. I am, however, inaccurately represented in the following remarks: "The apostle Paul says: 'Repent and be baptised, EVERY ONE of you, in the name of Jesus Christ.' It is not absolutely necessary, says Mr. Grew, for 'the immersed are not excluded from the holy kingdom of God.'" Now I say that it is absolutely necessary, in order to stand complete in all the will of God, but not to salvation. With respect to those who know it to be their Master's will, I do not deny that it is essential to salvation. I deny that "the effect of such teaching" is to influence any not to conform to the commandment, except it be those selfish souls who have no right to the ordinance, until they have love for God sufficient to induce them to do something more for his glory than what they suppose to be absolutely essential to their own salvation.

Dr. T.'s distinction between being "weak in faith," and being "weak in the faith," is of no avail to set aside the proof from Rom. 14: 1, that we are bound by Christian law to receive those "who are in the faith" of Christ, who are weak or erroneous on the subject of immersion. To this law, which is as positive and important at least as that of immersion, there is no exception. A single exception would divide the body of Christ. The command requires the forbearance of all errors of judgment which are not totally incompatible with being in the faith of Jesus Christ.

So far from immersion being essential to being "in the faith," no man has any right to immersion who is not already in it. When the Eunuch declared his faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, Philip recognized him as a Christian and baptised him as such. It is true faith in Christ, which implies the principle of love, and willing subjection to Jesus, which constitutes us Christians. It is not necessary to "adduce a single case from the New Testament" of a person being recognised as a Christian who was weak or erroneous on the subject of immersion. It does not appear that there were any such. There was no occasion for it. The teaching of the apostles was perfectly harmonious, not diverse as that of the sects of later ages. The law of Rom. 14: 1 is just as authoritative now, as it would be if it had been applied to a thousand such cases in the apostolic age. The law itself is authority sufficient without any example. There is no way of evading it but by denying that the unimmersed are "in the faith." You may find "a white crow or a black swan" as easily as a single case in the New Testament of a person being recognised as a Christian who believed the Deity is three persons; shall we therefore deny the Christianity of all such? My argument from 1 Cor. 8: 11, remains unrefuted. It is indeed easy to say, "this is no case in point," and as easy for me to say that it is. My friend says of the person referred to in the 7th verse, "His 'views of the unity of God and of idols were' not 'incorrect.' I say that the apostle affirms that they were. Now for the proof. 'But to us there is one God, the Father of whom are all things and we in him; and our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him. Howbeit there is not in every man that knowledge; for some with conscience of the idol unto this hour eat it as a thing offered unto an idol: and their conscience being weak is defiled." Yet the Doctor says his views of the unity of God and of idols are not incorrect! Why then, I ask, was his conscience weak and defiled, any more than that of the apostle and others in eating such meat if he knew correctly, like them, "that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one?" I ask the reader to peruse the entire chapter and see whether or not the apostle does not argue the indivisibility of a correct knowledge of the unity of God and a correct knowledge of idols. It is manifest from the 7th verse that the person referred to had not a correct knowledge of idols; and from the whole connection it appears, that it was because he had not a correct knowledge of the unity of God, as the apostle most plainly declares in the 7th verse, the antecedent of which, is the unity of God in the 6th.

But "we all have knowledge" on these things, says Paul, my friend remarks, to prove that the views of the person referred to respecting the unity of God and idols were not incorrect. Paul shall explain himself how he uses the word "all" in this case. "We know that we all have knowledge—as concerning therefore the eating of those things offered in sacrifice unto idols, we know that an idol is nothing. Howbeit, there is not in every man that knowledge." &c. Such is the apostle's version of the word "all." Mr. Thomas contends for an exception in the word "all" in John 5: 28, where Jesus Christ makes none, but rejects one which the apostle here plainly and positively makes. Was it because "that he sees it dancing before his eyes like a will-o-the-wisp?"

BORN OF WATER.

Notwithstanding Dr. T.'s assurance, I am "rash enough to say" that this term does not necessarily mean baptism. As he excludes from salvation all the unimmersed, I hold him to adduce one passage which necessarily implies their exclusion from the kingdom of God. John 3: 5 is not such a passage. "Mr. Grew (does) regard Jesus as authority" in all cases; but not men's explanations of his words. I object to affixing the sense of literal immersion in water to this term "born of water" in this passage:

1. Because it is not according to the order of the Gospel to represent our being first baptized and then born of the Spirit, or to represent that these things are simultaneous. Men are born of the Spirit previous to their being qualified for baptism.

2. Because such a construction is a violation of those passages which connect salvation and inheritance in the kingdom of God with true repentance towards God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, which precede immersion in water, according to the order of the Gospel. It may be said that according to this reasoning the penitent believer may be saved without subsequent obedience to the commands of the gospel. It is not so. True repentance, is reformation, and necessarily implies obedience to all the known commands of God, but it does not necessarily imply the knowledge of, or obedience to, the ordinance of immersion. There are true disciples of Christ who could not be immersed without sin; for "whatsoever is not of faith is sin." On this subject they are "weak, (i. e., erroneous,) though in the faith.

3. Because the scriptures of truth furnish a better and more consistent construction. Compare Eph. 5: 25 to 27. "Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it: that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word," &c. Here the renewing and sanctifying influence of the truth on the soul is represented by the washing of water. In John 3: 5 the same blessed work of divine favour is represented by being "born of water." Nor is there any tautology. Mr. T.'s "perfect reductio ad absurdum," is a man of straw of his own creation. We are under no necessity of giving his version of our views; "Except a man be born of spirit and of spirit." The phrase "born of water," refers to the means by which the work of renewing is done; born of the Spirit to the agent that does it. "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth." The phrase born of water by the word, would be as proper as the phrase "washing of water by the word," found in Eph. 5: 26. Mr. T.'s positiveness respecting the import of the passage is the more remarkable, as he himself confesses that the word "born" is used as a "metaphor." Of what avail then is it for him to say that to be literally born, is "an emergence from a place in which the subject was previously out of sight." Does he not abandon this idea in respect to the term, born of the Spirit?

Surely he will not say that being born of the Spirit is "an emergence from (the Spirit)—in which the subject was previously out of sight;" but if a man may be metaphorically born of the Spirit without such an emergence, he may be metaphorically born of water, without such an emergence.

Finally, I object to the exposition because it involves the absurdity of the Almighty excluding from his kingdom those who love and serve him better than some whom he receives. It is in vain to deny that there are believers in the Gospel who, through false teaching, are in error on the subject of immersion, who, on the whole, are more like Christ, more devoted to the service of God, more obedient to his commands, more dead to the world, and better practical Christians, than some real Christians who are immersed. Surely we may demand something more than a "metaphor" to sustain such an incongruity in the divine government as this.

The fact of immersion being "a gracious privilege" is no proof that "it is not the duty" of the believer. It is both. Being a command, it is our duty to obey. Its being "worth nothing," if "submitted to as a mere duty," on the principle of selfishness, is no proof that it is not a duty.

I thank my respected friend for his caution. If, however, I am an "apologist" for error, ignorance and disobedience, because I deny the absolute necessity of a discernment and practice of "the whole truth" in order to be saved, the Doctor now is so likewise, for he remarks, "I am very far from saying, that such a discernment is necessary to entitle a man to entrance into the kingdom of God." If to oppose the magnifying of error beyond truth, is to be an apologist for error, I wish to be such. Let my friend also "beware" and listen to a caution of higher authority: "Why dost thou judge thy brother, or why dost thou set at nought thy brother?" The unimmersed believers are not to be excluded from the christian brotherhood.

I would suggest for serious consideration, whether we do not break (I do not say one of the least, but) one of the important commandments in breaking the law of christian forbearance? Rom. 14: 1—4; 15: 7. It is because I wish to "do and teach" all the King's commandments, that I am endeavoring to teach my friend this law, and save him from the evil of rejecting those whom Christ receives, Rom. 15: 7; and of offending the little ones who believe in him.

In conclusion, noticing that my dissent from the construction given to Isa 26: 13, 14 subjects me to the charge of being "no sane man," I beg leave to say, "I am not mad, most" modest Doctor, "but speak the words of truth and soberness."

HENRY GREW.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP—NO. III.

VI. HUMAN CREEDS PREVENT THE SPREAD OF THE GOSPEL—ROB GOD AND HIS POOR.

What is the greatest obstacle to the triumph of the Gospel among ourselves? It may be said—"The corruption of the human heart." But we ask, again, if the sectarian divisions, caused by the introduction of human creeds, as tests of our Christian regard, do not furnish the largest portion of the food by which the "corrupt heart" is nourished? Do not the unconverted find their strongest apology for neglecting religion, in the fact, that religionists cannot agree among themselves! He looks at the different creeds, conflicting as they do, and all claiming to be right, as so many proofs that Revelation is full of contradictions; and therefore unworthy his belief at all; and when he further sees the spirit, which these conflicting systems inspire, he concludes it is the natural result of the religion of the Bible, and so rejects that blessed book altogether, or concludes to have nothing to do with religion 'till its professors shall be more agreed among themselves. He says, it may be, I have peace with my neighbors, but if I become a religionist, I must take sides with some of these parties; this he resolves not to do; and, therefore, resolves not to have anything to do with a religion that must bring strife and contention where he now has peace. Multitudes, it is to be feared, are thus stumbling into perdition through the instrumentality of creed makers, and the divisions which are the result of these inventions of men. How many revivals have been prematurely brought to a close by beginning to creedise young converts, and even those under conviction, till their souls have been turned back to destruction.

Another way, in which human creeds prevent the spread of the Gospel, is, The different creedists spend much time and labor to prove that their opponent's creed is false and absurd. How much time is spent in this way it is impossible to tell; but, that very much is thus spent, none will deny. An aged minister once said, it was his opinion, that at least one half the time of ministers was taken up in this work. Perhaps he was not far out of the way, if we reckon private as well as public labor.

In consequence of the creed system, there must be two, three, four, or more, ministers employed in a field where one, with the assistance of experienced laymen, would be all that is necessary. Here, then, is a drawback to the spread of the Gospel, by taking the extra number from destitute places.

These extra ministers, in one place, not only prevent the spread of the Gospel, by being cut off from destitute fields, but absorb, for their support, the money that is needed to send the Gospel elsewhere. Nor is their support the only item; meeting houses must be built for each of them, and the people divest themselves of the means of sending the Gospel to the destitute, and perhaps involve themselves in debt and thus rob God, and cause their charities to the poor to be meagre indeed; and all for what? To keep up these man-made arrangements—human creeds and sectarian divisions.

Now, look at that country place, or small village where there are just enough, if they were left untrammelled with human creeds, to sustain an humble minister of Christ. The different creed-makers have corrupted their minds so that they cannot agree; and each party must content themselves with "occasional preaching." Each party, too, is jealous of the other, and if anything is preached by the occasional preacher that is opposed to the other's creed, their preacher, when he comes round, must spend his time, in his occasional sermon, in vindicating his own creed, and showing the absurdity of his opponent's. Thus neither party, in fact, is supplied with the pure preaching of the Gospel, or only in a very limited manner.

Let us see if this creed business has no effect in preventing the spread of the Gospel among the heathen. In the first place, by absorbing the funds of Christians, as stated above, and requiring more ministers than are necessary, were it not for these human creeds, the Gospel is hindered from being sent abroad.

In the next place, if you can raise funds, and find men to go, if they are of different sects, they must either lay aside their creeds, from the sight of the heathen, or be subjected to all the drawbacks and hindrances already mentioned, at home: and greater hindrances, too; because, the heathen must, and will, judge of the Gospel by the influence it has upon these missionaries; and if they see them divided, so that they cannot walk together, they must be led to doubt the reality and importance of a religion, professing to be a religion of love, which, as they suppose, inspires hostility among its votaries. If these missionaries do lay aside their creeds, on heathen shores, and labor together as brethren, in order that the cause may not be hindered, it is proof that these human creeds are not only useless but pernicious; and that men, while they have only one object in view, viz: the glory of God and the salvation of men, practically acknowledge the fact of their pernicious influence. Let them, then, be given to the "moles and the bats" along with all other "idols."

Once more—Suppose a missionary should go to a heathen land alone, and commence his labors by exhibiting the prayer of our Lord, in the 17 chap. of John, together with his "new commandment," and the Saviour's testimony, that "all men" should know his disciples by their "love one to another." A heathen, who is jealous of any new religion, begins to inquire, whether Christians in America, are all one, and do all love one another? The honest missionary must tell the truth, or remain silent. If he remains silent, would it not throw a suspicion over him that would be likely to destroy confidence in his cause? But if he tells the truth, would not the astonished heathen naturally conclude his religion was a deception? That it does not accomplish what it professes? That its professed votaries, so far from being one and loving one another, are tens, yea hundreds of parties? And would he not say, "Go home and carry out the principles your Bible professes, and then it will be time enough for you to ask us to embrace your religion."

LETTER FROM BR. P. M. WAY.

The writer of the following letter is a minister of the Gospel, of the Methodist persuasion, with whom we have had many pleasing interviews, and under whose ministry we often sat in 1836-7, when residing in the city of Utica, N. Y. We shall append some remarks on the closing part of his letter, and hope he will favour us with a reply.

BR. STORRS.—"I have considered the doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked, and believe I have gone deep into its investigation, and am frank to admit, if it be an error, it has more apparent support from the Bible than any error with which I am acquainted, and I probably should have embraced it as truth, had not light been thrown on my mind by reading some of the writings of Swedenborg. And yet I cannot adopt one peculiar sentiment of that author. I look upon his writings as the emanation of a great mind in ruins. Newman, in a little work on "Fascination," has probably given him a correct character. I confess to you, that, in my opinion, the character generally ascribed to God, as "A just God," dealing with sinners, by most preachers, is as dishonorable to God as the Alcoran is to our Lord Jesus Christ. I will merely say, without arguing the point, it appears plain to my mind, that it takes all of life to form a character for the future; and that character abides with us when probation ends. We may, or we may not, conform ourself to God's laws; and the result of either course is as certain as the laws of attraction. It is enough that "the reward of every man's hands shall be given him." To exclude the sinner from heaven is the best that God can do for him, and banishment from his revealed presence and glory is more tolerable than to dwell in its full blaze.

As it respects the unconscious state of the dead, between death and the resurrection, I am fairly at issue with your opinion. I need not say, perhaps, it is a pleasing hope that when this life of toil and suffering shall end, I expect to associate with my good brother Storrs, and all who love the Saviour, in scenes of blessedness. "Where we shall know as we are known," whilst the scenes of time are still being enacted, till earth's drama closes and Christ comes to reign. I readily call to my mind a number of passages that confirm this hope. "In my Father's house are many mansions. I go to prepare a place for you. Where I am there ye shall be also." "We know if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, eternal in the heavens." This hope inspires the suffering, toil-worn pilgrim with a "desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better." Texts like the above, and there are not a few, establish the doctrine beyond a doubt, in my mind, and no criticism, that I have seen, has raised even a question. If so plain a truth must be denied to sustain another theory, it certainly throws doubt on that theory.

Yours for truth,

P. M. WAY.

REMARKS ON THE FOREGOING.

We certainly shall not quarrel with Br. Way, nor any one else, merely because he does not see as we do as to the state of the dead. We are glad to have him express his "issue" with us frankly. We would suggest, however, that to cut down a tree we must lay the axe at its roots. The root of the whole subject lies in this one question—"Is man immortal by creation, or generation?" If he is, then the texts Br. Way has presented are good and valid in proof of his consciousness when dead: but if he is not, then those texts must have some other application than that he gives them. The sense of these texts all turns on this point. To prove man immortal by creation or generation, we must have some plain Scripture testimony—inference cannot do it. Here, then, we join "issue" with all who dissent from our views, and affirm—There is not a solitary text in the Bible that affirms immortality of man, except as the gift of God at the resurrection; and then only given to those who by patient continuance in well doing seek for it. Compare Rom. 2: 7, with 1 Cor. 15: 16-18, 53, 54.

The first three chapters in Genesis establish on an immovable basis the fact that man was not created immortal. To threaten an immortal being with death would surely be a very great anomaly, if not a palpable contradiction. The term immortal signifies "exempt from death;" "im" signifying "not;" thus prefixed to "mortal" makes "not mortal;" or "exempt from death." Such was not Adam by creation—such are none of his posterity by any law of their being. The plain declaration of the scriptures of truth, with respect to Adam, after he sinned, is, that God excluded him from the tree of life "lest he take and eat of it and live forever;" or, become immortal in sin. Here the evidence is clear, that man was not immortal by his creation, or he would not need the tree of life to perpetuate his life; and it is equally clear that his Creator determined on the death of the man he had made without the exception of any part of him; or, in other words, he determined to reduce man to the elements from which he came; and as he was unconscious before creation, so at his death he became unconscious again; or else Adam did not die, and the serpent told the truth.

If this position is correct, then we need and must have, in order to faith, a plain revelation of the fact that man has an immortal part, if such is the fact. Will any man pretend that we have any such revelation? Tell us where it is to be found. We again affirm, as our conviction, it is no where in the Bible. If it is, those who are at issue with us can show it: and we will give them ample room in the Examiner to do so.

We will notice at this time only one of the texts presented to us by Br. Way, in proof that the dead are conscious, viz: "In my Father's house are many mansions, I go to prepare a place for you. Where I am there ye shall be also." This text contains a delightful truth; and the only difference between Br. Way and myself, on it, relates to time. The connection settles that. "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself," &c. John 14: 3. Now the simple question is this—Does Christ come again at the death of his saints? To settle that point, we ask for a single text of Scripture that says so. But secondly. How did he go away? Was it personally—bodily—visibly, or otherwise? Let the first chapter of the Acts of the Apostles forever settle that point. As he goes up, or went "away" he is visible, and the "white apparel" men, or angels, that appeared on that occasion, testified in accordance with our Lord's assurance in John 14th, quoted by Brother Way and myself, "This same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Here, then, is the identical coming again of which Jesus spake: and it is not at death; for so he never did come at any man's death. Besides, it is clear, the disciples did not understand our Lord's promise of coming again to refer to death at all; for, when he said concerning John: "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" the disciples concluded, that John "should not die." But upon the common theory, had they believed it, they could not have come to any such conclusion.

The time, then, when Jesus will come again and receive his saints unto himself is, "at the last day," as may be clearly seen in John. 6: 39, 40, 44, 54, where our Lord four times declares, concerning those to whom he will give eternal life, "I will raise him up at the last day;" that is the time when he "will come again and receive" his people unto himself, that where he is they may be also.

The fact that "it is a pleasing hope that when this life is" ended, we shall at once "associate with" our "good" brethren "in scenes of blessedness, whilst the scenes of time are still enacted, till earth's drama closes and Christ comes to reign," does not prove that such hope is well founded. The apostle presented another and a very different

"hope" concerning Christians: 1 Thess. 4: 13. He there says: "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, [not associating in scenes of blessedness] that ye sorrow not even as others which have no hope." No hope of what? Clearly no hope of a resurrection, without which, he had declared, 1 Cor. 15: 18, they "are perished," or would have no future life; making it all turn on the fact of a resurrection—that was the apostle's "pleasing hope;" as the next verse shows; "for," he says, "if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him" from the dead; for, "the God of peace brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus." [See Heb. 13: 20.] But when shall this hope be realized, Paul? The answer is, when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God;" then "the dead in Christ" however long they have been asleep, "shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall be ever with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words." This is "the pleasing hope" that the Bible holds out to us; this is the glorious "association" to be realized when our Lord shall "come again and receive" all his loving followers unto himself, that where he is there they may be also. Blessed day; glorious hope. Soon may that day arrive. All other hopes of being with Christ we consider delusive hopes. But, some perhaps will say, "If it is a delusion it is a blessed delusion." We answer, not so; for the common hope of professed Christians causes them to lose sight of two of the most glorious doctrines of the Bible—doctrines too, which the apostles dwelt upon more than any other, and which the present churches seem to think less of than any other, viz: THE SECOND PERSONAL ADVENT OF CHRIST; AND THE RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD. Any doctrine which puts these two great events in the back ground, or causes them to be looked at as of little importance, cannot be a "blessed delusion;" but the doctrine of man's natural immortality, and, by consequence, consciousness when dead, does obscure and eclipse these two grand events, and makes the coming of Christ and the resurrection of no apparent importance, and substitutes another hope, viz: that of "going to heaven at death." But "the dead praise not the Lord," Psa. 115: 17; and "there is no knowledge in sheol"—the state of the dead. Eccl. 9: 10. All our hope, then, is in the coming again of Christ, at the last day, and the resurrection of the dead.

"TRUTH TESTED BY SCRIPTURE, In Six Letters to a Friend."—We have received a copy of this work from the author, Br. A. B. Magruder, Charlottesville, Va. It is a very well arranged Scripture presentation of truth, on the end of the wicked and state of the dead. We hope it may be widely circulated. If we can find room we shall give extracts from it. It is a pamphlet of thirty-two pages, octavo. The price is not stated.

THE EDITOR of this paper preaches every Lord's day at COMMISSIONER'S HALL, Third street, below Green, east side; at 10, A. M., and in the evening at a quarter before 8 o'clock.

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST, 1848.

ARE THE WICKED IMMORTAL?

"The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Bible.

CONTRIVERSY.—Some men think controversy a dreadful matter, and should be avoided. Such a cry we regard as the offspring of bigotry and sectarianism. When individuals or associate bodies become determined not to make any further progress, controversy to them is a ruinous matter! What truth was ever elicited without controversy? None, except by direct revelation, and then it never spread without it. The whole life of our Saviour was one of facts and controversy; nor were the apostles less favored in that respect. Martin Luther and the Reformers had to travel the same road; the Pope was greatly offended with it, as all bigoted sectarians have been ever since, and always will be. Controversy is essential to progress in knowledge, and the developement of truth: but, the spirit in which it is often conducted is not essential. Let men guard their spirit, but never cease controversy. Lazy drones, who hate the labour necessary to progress, and those who fear the light, lost their banding sect should be dissolved, may cry out against it, and glory that they "never change," and that they have not a new notion in their heads, but, he who would obey the divine injunction, to "grow in knowledge," must be wide awake to the work.

We are glad, in the discussion going on in the Examiner, between Br. Grew and Dr. Thomas, that we have two such able men engaged; and, especially so, that they are both believers in immersion as the only mode of baptism. It is not the mode of the ordinance that they discuss, but the importance of it. We have been repeatedly urged to give our views on the subject of baptism. We will do it in few words: "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." If we see a necessity to say more hereafter, we shall do so. If we can say nothing new we choose to keep silence. We are often astonished with the arguments some men use in advocating their peculiar views of the subject; but they satisfy their own minds, and we should not be likely to convince them of error. Dr. Thomas maintains that immersion is essential for admission into the kingdom of God, but that it is to be administered only to those who "believe the word of the truth of the Gospel." On the other hand, the "Christian Magazine," Nashville, Tenn., is just as strenuous for immersion as essential "for the remission of sins." The latter, probably, can tell us: we thus committed after immersion are to be pardoned without being immersed again, or, how the "penitent thief" obtained "remission of sins;" and the former, doubtless, can tell us how the dying thief is to enter "Paradise," if such a case ever occurs; or, how any other dying "believer," whose circumstances have prevented his immersion, is ever to enter the kingdom of God. It took a vision to convince Peter, even "after the day of Pentecost," that all salvation was not confined to the Jews; but, he was convinced and made his confession—"Of a truth, I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, [according to the light he hath] is accepted with him." For, saith our Lord, "This is the condemnation, that light has come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." It is rejecting light, and sinning against it, from love to gain, applause, power, or sinful indulgences, that will be the condemnation of men at "the Judgment seat of Christ."

We suggest to Brethren Grew and Thomas, if they choose to continue the discussion, that they take up one of the topics at a time, embraced in their controversy; so as to shorten, if possible, their articles, but still freely and fully examining all the points, though it may take them longer to accomplish their object. We ought perhaps to have stated, at the time, that we took the liberty of inserting the index heads through Br. Thomas' last article. We think such heads give more interest to lengthy articles; especially where several topics are embraced.
